While most of the questions were addressed to supporters of Vice President Al Gore, the Democrats were on the offensive, challenging Nader's candidacy. The Democrat representatives argued that Nader lacked the coalition building ability to be president. Brian Shephard, a sophomore political science major and Democrat representative said that because Nader has attacked and offended so many politicians he has demonstrated he would not be an effective leader.

"Nader has burned every bridge in Washington," said Shephard, "if he were to get elected president, there would be no base for coalition building."

The Green party representatives argued that the Democrat and Republican parties no longer represent the people, but instead represent the interests of corporations who fund their multi-million dollar campaigns. Nader's campaign, they argued, is more about building a coalition representing the people.

"The Nader campaign is an important representation of the opposition towards Bush and Gore's corporate agenda," said Green party representative Chris Masterjohn, a junior economics major.

Seth Adams, a freshman music education major and representative

MAUREEN MASSE/COLLEGIAN

Democrats vs. Green Party, Republicans...no show
UMass students debate in Campus Center Auditorium last night.

Turn to RALLY, page 2

Single-Payer ballot vote

By Jamie Jee
Collegian Correspondents

What is single-payer health care? That is the question some of the approximately 130,000 eligible voters in the Hampshire-Franklin state senate district may be asking themselves Tuesday. Question 9, sponsored by the Massachusetts Labor Party and endorsed by the Franklin-Hampshire Health Care Coalition, deals with the very issue.

The question calls on Assistant Majority Leader Stan Rosenberg (D-Northampton) to join those state legislators, including local state representatives Ellen Story (D-Amherst) and John Merrigan (D-Greenfield), whom have signed on to the existing single-payer universal health care legislation.

The legislation is known as the Health Care Trust Fund Bill (H.557, S.1947) and has been renewed each session for the last five years, maintaining about a third of state legislators' support, with many others apparently on the fence watching the political currents. A single-payer question was approved by an overwhelming majority in the same district in 1992, advising Rosenberg, but he has not forcefully advocated for its passage since.

According to the Massachusetts Campaign for Single-Payer Health Care (MASS-CARE), the legislation would guarantee every Massachusetts resident comprehensive health care coverage through the single-payer mechanism. It replaces the current public and private health care plans with a single public entity called the Health Care Trust.

MASS-CARE and other coalitions and groups are hoping to build on the past support for single-payer, noting that Massachusetts' voters have consistently supported a single-payer health care system. A 1986 referendum directing the state senator or Representative to vote for the single-payer health care legislation was approved by more than two-thirds of the voters in 305 Massachusetts cities and towns. A subsequent referendum in 1994 was approved by over half of the voters in eight voting districts. In 1998, the voters in three legislative districts overwhelmingly approved a referendum calling for single-payer.

The long list of organizations and groups that support single-payer includes Physicians for a National Health Program (PNHP), Massachusetts Nurses Association (MNA), League of Women Voters, Massachusetts Senior Action, the Green Party and the Labor Party. Incidentally, Ralph Nader is the only main presidential candidate who supports single-payer health care. The Labor Party has also actually itemized how single-payer could be financed nationally (www.igc.org/lpa).

State Ballot Question Nine

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) and General Accounting Office (GAO) have done studies showing single-payer could be implemented without spending more than we are currently spending. Supporters also point to reports commissioned by the Massachusetts Medical Society that showed it would cost less to run a single-payer system in Massachusetts, which has the highest per-capita health care costs in the world, but retains barriers to access.

There has not been much directed opposition specifically against Question 9 in large part because of its low visibility. Also, Question 9 is an advisory public policy question, unlike Question 5, which is one of the binding state initiatives, and calls for universal health care with strong single-payer provisions, including not spending more than ten percent of health care expenditures on non health care related items such as administrative overhead, marketing and exorbitant executive salaries.

Turn to BALLOT, page 2

ballot

continued from page xx

Still, many single-payer opponents worry about expanded bureaucracy and increased costs. Supporters though, point out that the existing bureaucracy would be streamlined, replacing insurance companies with a publicly administered trust fund, similar to Social Security on the federal level.

Opponents also speculate on the instability that a transition to single-payer might cause, recommending instead incremental and gradual steps to universal coverage – for example through the Children's Health Insurance Program (CHIP), although CHIP did not completely cover the three million of eleven million total uninsured children it was supposed to. Single-payer advocates point out the accompanying stability a single-payer system would provide, with federal/state financing, local administration and continued private delivery. They argue that the system would be more dependable, and based on health care needs, not ability to pay.

Other concerns revolve around choice.

According to Frank Fortin, communications director for the state medical society, "The pluralistic, multi-payer system has been the preferred policy . . . mostly because of the members' belief that patients should have a choice of health insurance options."

David Himmelstein, professor at Harvard Medical School and member of PNHP, has emphasized, however, that choice of doctors and other health care professionals, facilities, and services would increase with single-payer. "If you want to cover everybody at a reasonable cost, the only way to do it is single-payer."

Students in the Hampshire-Franklin voting district are uniquely situated to have a say on Question 9, and after Tuesday it may generate much discussion of its merits, workings, and possible steps towards implementation.

Marijuana ballot up for vote

By Ryan Halliday and Kevin Lazan
Collegian Staff

Question 8 on the Massachusetts 2000 ballot proposes a new way to use the fines paid and money and property forfeited from drug cases.

Currently, all forfeited money is divided between the prosecuting agency and police departments and used for law enforcement purposes. However, if Question 8 passes, that money would be diverted to drug treatment programs for the offenders.

The proposed law would also allow more people facing drug charges to argue in court that they are drug-dependent and that they would benefit from court-monitored treatment. Successful completion of the treatment program would result in a dismissal of criminal charges.

State Ballot Question Eight

This opportunity would be provided to low-level drug dealers charged with their first or second criminal drug offenses. Question 8 defines low-level drug dealers as those caught with between 14 and 28 grams of an illegal substance.

Proponents of this referendum call this "a smarter drug strategy."

"We now send thousands of drug-dependent offenders to prison, even though treatment is more effective," says a statement issued by the Coalition for Fair Treatment, the group that petitioned for this law. The Coalition for Fair Treatment is funded by philanthropists, including New York billionaire George Soros.

The ballot initiative is also supported by The League of Women Voters, Congressman William Delahunt and three former Democratic Massachusetts attorneys general: Scott Harshbarger, Frank Bellotti and James Shannon.

But the proposal also faces opposition from within the law enforcement community.

"Question 8 benefits only drug dealers because it cripples the ability of the police to investigate narcotics dealing," says Martha Coakley, district attorney of Middlesex County. "It deprives standard local law enforcement of virtually all of their resources to investigate major drug conspiracies."

Coakley also serves as president of the Massachusetts District Attorneys Association, which has joined the Boston Herald and Massachusetts chiefs of police in condemning this proposal.

Retraction

In a Nov. 2 Daily Collegian article, Amherst Police Officer Jesus Arocho was incorrectly identified as having knocked over a can of kerosene during an Oct. 27 fire at 57 Shumway St. In fact, it was one of the students living at the residence who knocked the can over. The Daily Collegian regrets the error.

U student campaigns for First District office

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

At the tender age of 21, University of Massachusetts senior Michael Froimowitz is running for the Massachusetts state senate in the First District.

In alliance with Carla Howell who is running for the U.S. senate and Terry Franklin who is running for State Representative, Froimowitz represents the Libertarian party.

Froimowitz, a member of the UMass Libertarian Club as well as the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition, explained his reasoning for running for the state senate.

"The main reason I decided to run for the state senate was to help educate voters. A lot of people have Libertarian views and people should have control over there own money and there own lives. I originally thought I would just get on the ballot, but then my campaign picked up momentum and it's exceeded what I ever thought it would be."

Much of Froimowitz's campaign has focused on ending the drug war and the prohibition of marijuana as well as lowering the drinking age to 18.

"People are generally harassed by alcohol and people, and by lowering the drinking age we wouldn't be so alienated from the police," said Franklin. "It's ridiculous that someone who's 20 is not treated as an adult."

Howell, Franklin and Froimowitz have been working closely to get their messages out.

"The reason we're working together is because we share common ground and believe in the same issues," said Froimowitz.

Froimowitz and Franklin gave the specific example at UMass of the newly installed video camera in Southwest. Both expressed concern over the fact that it is directly an act of control and authority.

"The camera in Southwest is a way to get the overall attention of people and exercise control and authority. It may catch some kid doing something stupid, but it gives other people the feeling of being watched," said Franklin.

In an effort to raise awareness of the Libertarian party, Froimowitz explained his position as running for senate as a statement to get his voice heard and notification of his party out to more people. In an effort to do this, Froimowitz has continued to campaign to the near by colleges and speak at various locations.

"We pretty much know what the outcome is going to be we just want to keep getting more votes," said Franklin.

Froimowitz added, "Any vote that I get is a victory as far as I'm concerned."

rally

continued from page 1

for the Democrat club said Nader wanted Bush to win because Nader would have a better chance running against Bush in 2004.

"How does Nader justify this race when it contributes to the election of a conservative government?" Asked Adams.

Masterjohn argued that the Gore campaign attempted to marginalize Nader during most of the presidential campaign, and only recognized him when he began to pose a threat to Gore's victory.

"If Gore is doing bad, it's because Gore is bad," said Masterjohn. "Voting for the lesser of two evils still gives you evil."

predictions

continued from page 1

Weinbaum went on to express her concern over the fact that in order for Gore to win this election, he would have to win Florida, Michigan and Pennsylvania.

"Gore will need all three states to win, but right now all of the information that is being presented is based on polls that have been done. I personally think that the use of polls is really overrated and should not be taken into consideration come election day," Weinbaum said.

In relation to the race for Congress, Weinbaum predicted that not a lot of changes would be seen. Weinbaum echoed Hannahan's prediction that the Republicans would keep the Senate and the House.

Political Science Professor Jeffrey Sedgwick shared his opinion on the campaign, in a recent UMass news release.

"The 'boutique' character of the Presidential campaign strikes me. Rather than running on large, national, unifying themes, the campaign is limited to a small number of 'battleground' states, where advertising and message is tailored to local themes and needs."

Sedgwick then added, "Late in the campaign, both Presidential candidates are doing big buys of radio time on small, neighborhood stations with limited signal strength. This allows them to air ads to specific demographic groups without the larger public hearing the message."

Sedgwick was unavailable for further comment as of press time.

While everyone has their own opinion, everyone also has their vote. It remains to be seen if Bush can fulfill the polls' expectations, or whether Gore will execute an Election Day comeback.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bersharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantа Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

www.dailycollegian.com

THE 51st ANNUAL GREAT UMASS SKI SALE
THURSDAY - SATURDAY
NOVEMBER 9-11
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM

SNO FORCE PRO SNOWBOARD TEAM
THURS- 12 to 9PM
FRI - 12 to 9PM
SAT- 11 to 6PM

* OVER $3 MILLION IN EQUIPMENT AND APPAREL!
* SAVE MAD CASH ON WICKED DEALS! (50 TO 75% OFF)
* FREE GIVEAWAYS AND MOUNTAIN PROMOS!
* SPECIAL GUEST APPEARANCES!
* EVERYONE WELCOME!

UMASS SKI 'N' BOARD CLUB
http:\\www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub 413-545-3437 434 Student Union

Lost cash.
One travel adventure you can live without.

Travel smart.
Carry American Express® Travelers Cheques.
They're safer than cash.

Whether you're surfing Baja, backpacking Europe, or just getting away for the weekend, American Express Travelers Cheques are the way to go. They're accepted virtually everywhere around the world — at hotels, stores, and restaurants. Simply sign the Cheques and use them as you would cash.

American Express Travelers Cheques never expire. And if they're lost or stolen, they can be replaced quickly — usually within 24 hours. Pick them up at any participating American Express Travel Service location, bank, credit union, or AAA office.

American Express Travelers Cheques. Don't leave home without them.®

© 2000 American Express TCST-00
Travelers Cheques

AIDS infections rise in world: UN concerned with Latin America and China

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Though Sub-Saharan Africa has been the focal point for recent AIDS prevention, the disease has spread throughout the Americas and Asia just as aggressively.

The United Nations is in the middle of conducting a regional AIDS conference in Rio de Janeiro this week to try and combat the spread of this deadly disease in Latin American and Carribean countries.

UN-AIDS executive Peter Piot has called for more prevention and treatment throughout the area, demanding that leaders begin to address condom distribution and gay sex.

The Caribbean and Latin America are facing a huge AIDS epidemic. The Caribbean has the second highest rate of HIV in the world after Sub-Saharan Africa. Five percent of all adults in Haiti are infected as well as four percent in the Bahamas. Many Latin American countries are not far behind.

1.6 million people are affected with the virus and an estimated 600 people are infected every day. Piot also reported that in some gay communities throughout the region, the death rate from AIDS is at fifty percent.

The only country within Latin American to have a dwindling infection rate is Brazil. Brazilian officials took a leading role in AIDS prevention after the country had the highest rate of HIV in the world in 1985. Since then, the government has worked with nongovernmental organizations and local communities to distribute appropriate funding for condoms and free drugs.

Brazil challenged the giant pharmaceutical companies when it began to manufacture antiretroviral cocktails at a fraction of the cost. In response to this move, competitive world drug companies have had to lower their costs by seventy percent.

The AIDS rate in the country has leveled off to between 0.5 and 0.6 percent since it began its anti-AIDS program. Brazil also runs ads promoting condom use and safety in gay relationships, which has attributed to the decline in AIDS cases.

Brazil spends millions of dollars on treatment and prevention of AIDS in all areas, but a decent portion of funds goes directly into the gay communities. The rest of the region has virtually ignored their gay populations. The average budget for AIDS prevention in gay communities in the rest of Latin America is only $50,000, which does not begin to reflect the size of the epidemic.

Latin American and the Caribbean face opposition to such campaigns from the Catholic Church, which refuses to recognize the condom as a tool to save lives. Officials attending the UN conference are beginning to agree that this conservative stance must be challenged in order to tackle this deadly disease.

Meanwhile, AIDS rates also steadily increase in China, Thailand, India and other Asia-pacific countries.

Though China has downplayed the figures, claiming that sexually transmitted diseases are a "western problem," there are already 500,000 cases of HIV in the country and eight million people infected with other STDs. Chinese officials cite the rise in prostitution, extra-marital affairs and horribly inadequate sex education as catalysts of the increasing epidemic. Also, patients are too shy to report their infections, and medical services are unequipped to understand, let alone treat the rampant syphilis, gonorrhea and HIV that are becoming commonplace.

Under Chinese laws, anyone who has an STD and engages in prostitution or other illicit sexual activity can be jailed for five years. However, this does not include HIV or AIDS.

AIDS, condoms, sex, and gay relationships all remain taboo within these developing countries. Arresting people is not the answer. More money has to be spent on prevention, treatment and social awareness throughout Latin America, the Caribbean, China, and the rest of the world.

In 1996-97, Thailand spent $74 million to combat the disease, while China only spent $2.75 million. Vietnam spent $4.5 million and $7.4 million was spent by India. The United Nations has not said anything about holding an AIDS conference in the asia-pacific region yet.

Philippines in trouble
Estrada impeached

By Jason Spears
Collegian Correspondent

Filipino President Joseph Estrada is one step closer to impeachment after the decision of a key committee on Monday.

Demands for Estrada's impeachment started early last month after the testimony of provincial governor Luis Singson. Singson testified that Estrada asked him to coordinate the collection of pay-offs from an illegal numbers game. Singson said he provide Estrada with more that $8.6 million in gambling payoffs and $2.8 million from provincial tobacco taxes.

A key committee of the House of Representatives decided Monday to refer the impeachment charges to a meeting of the whole House. The House needs one third, or 73 members, to vote in favor to have an impeachment trial by the Senate. In the Senate, two thirds of the 22 seats must vote for impeachment to remove the president from office.

It is likely the House will send Estrada to trial because of the mass defections of Estrada supporters. Over 50 officials have resigned his LAMP coalition including the Senate President and House speaker, weakening his government.

Ninety-nine Congressmen have already signed a resolution endorsing his impeachment. Vice president Gloria Arroyo, the country's Catholic Church leader and the Philippines Chamber of Commerce and Industry have called for Estrada to quit.

On Monday, 21 Cabinet members said they are still committed to Estrada's administration. However, they would "tarry not one minute longer in tending our resignations" if the Senate trial end with Estrada's removal.

Outside of Congress, anti- and pro-Estrada demonstrators throw coins at each other until riot police intervened.

The matter is likely to go to the Senate when Congress resumes its regular session on November 13, said House Speaker Manuel Villar. The rules of impeachment for the upper house are modeled after the United States impeachment rules.

The scandal has hurt the Filipino economy leading to calls for Estrada to resign to end the economic downturn. The national currency, the peso, fell to a record low last week.

On Monday, stocks and the currency improved with the expectations of Estrada's departure. The stock market rallied to the biggest single day gain in 13 years. The main index on the stock exchange went up to percent to 1,500.10. The peso rebounded from 51 pesos to the dollar to close at 48 on Monday.

Senior officials are said to be negotiating a possible hand over of power. Former President Corazon Aquino, said she has begun talks with one of the Estrada's chief aides, Finance Secretary Jose Pardo, to find "a very peaceful and graceful exit for the president."

Estrada denies he is looking for a way out and wants to a trial to prove his innocence.

"I am not negotiating for any deals and have no intentions of doing so to avoid confronting the accusations against me," he said in a statement. "I declare my steadfast commitment to defend my innocence against my accusers in the proper venue of our constitutional processes."

Three former presidents, including Ferinand Marcos, have faced impeachment charges but none have reached the Senate trial.

The information for this article was compiled from the New York Times and BBC websites.

ETA violence continues

By Matthew Wernz
Collegian Correspondent

Madrid, Spain-A car bomb exploded at 9 a.m. on Monday, 30 October, in a busy area of northern Madrid, killing a Supreme Court judge, his driver and bodyguard and wounding 64 other people. The explosion continued the recent wave of political violence attributed to the Basque separatist group ETA.

Jose Francisco Querol Lombardero, the 69-year-old Supreme Court Judge killed in the blast, was just one month away from retirement. After leaving the bakery that he went to every morning and riding off with his chuffeur and bodyguard, the three men were killed when the bomb was detonated via remote control at a crowded intersection.

The car was found to have been rigged with more than 30 kilograms (66 pounds) of dynamite. The explosion destroyed cars, shattered windows, sparked fires and covered the entire neighborhood with a thick cloud of white smoke. Querol's wife and daughter, who live just two blocks away from where the blast occurred, both heard and felt the explosion.

Madrid police confirmed that the car from which the bomb exploded had been reported stolen on August 17. Police also confirmed that the other two men killed in the blast were Armando Medina Sánchez and Jesús Escudero García, both members of the national police force.

The blast not only destroyed Querol's car but also a nearby public bus. The driver of the bus, Jesús Sánchez Martínez, suffered severe brain damage, and after being hospitalized in critical condition, suffered a brain hemorrhage Wednesday afternoon. A major tragedy was avoided only because the bus, which was rounding the corner as the bomb exploded, had just made the final stop on its run. Thus, there were few passengers on the bus.

Although no group has officially claimed credit for the blast, Spanish politicians have immediately blamed ETA. Since ETA ended its unilateral cease-fire last December, there have been 19 deaths attributed to the separatist group. Many of these attacks have been car-bombings, leading to the belief that this incident was also the work of ETA.

ETA, which stands for Basque Freedom and Homeland in Basque, has been fighting for a free homeland in northern Spain and southern France. The Spanish government's refusal to negotiate with terrorist groups has led ETA to resort to violence.

ETA has been attributed with more than 800 killings since its founding in 1968, and has been blamed for several bombings in the last month, including the killing of a prison guard on 22 October. ETA has detonated 25 bombs in the Madrid area over the years, killing 51 people and wounding 200.

Anti-terrorist groups, including Movement against Intolerance, conducted peaceful demonstrations in reaction to the bombing. There were also organized rallies in the Basque cities of Bilbao and San Sebastian, as well as demonstrations in Barcelona and Madrid on Tuesday.

More than 200,000 citizens of Madrid flocked to the Puerta del Sol Tuesday night, beckoned by political leaders of all parties, to show their opposition to ETA's violence. Demonstrators in San Sebastian carried signs that said "Pais Vasco Si, ETA No."

Another car bomb exploded on Thursday, 2 November, in Barcelona, wounding two people. This bomb was also blamed on ETA. King Juan Carlos I, commenting on the Madrid bombing, said, "Sooner or later, ETA will have to pay for their crimes."

WRITE FOR NEWS!

UMASS YOGA & MEDITATION CLUB
The Art of Living - Healing Breath Workshop
• 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, increased awareness and fun
• Brings the mind to the present moment and allows you to give your 100% !
• Held in about 100 countries - recognized by the United Nations & W.H.O.
• No experience needed. Everyone welcome!
When: Nov 10(starts @7pm) – Nov 15. 3 hour sessions. Where: UMass, LGRT 1634,
For more information: ☎ Durgesh 665-8635 ☎ Rebecca 549-0396
Email: durgesh@nova.astro.umass.edu Web http://www.artofliving.org/colleges/
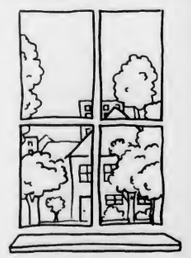
Free introductory sessions (optional) ! UMass Campus Center 7-8 pm
Wed Nov 1 Rm. 811 Tue Nov 7 Rm. 803 Thu Nov 9 Rm. 905.

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
Student Travel Services
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com
Josh @ 413-549-4514

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A Full Circle Adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day.
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com
Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Live and Work in Japan Next Year on
The JET Program
•Work in a Japanese public school or municipal office
•Share your own culture while learning about Japan
•Japanese Language is not required for most positions
•Applicants must hold a Bachelor's degree by June 30, 2001. Only US citizens may apply in the US.
•Applicants deadline for the next program session, which begins in July 2001, is December 6, 2000
Come to our Japan Exchange and Teaching Info Session:
Wednesday, November 8 at 4:30pm at Smith College Wright Hall Common Room
Questions ? Call the Japanese Consulate in Boston: 617.973.9772 x122



YOUR WORLD.
YOUR CHANCE TO MAKE IT BETTER.
WWW.AMERICORPS.ORG
1.800.942.2677 (1.800.833.3722 TDD)
AMERICORPS. GIVE BACK FOR A YEAR. SERVE YOUR COMMUNITY. CHANGE YOUR LIFE.
AmeriCorps and Peace Corps at UMASS, Wednesday, November 15th at 7:00 p.m. 504 Goodell Hall UMASS. Join former AmeriCorps and Peace Corps members for discussion about their experiences. Refreshments will be served.
For more information call 617-565-7002

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Elections finally arrive
so get out and vote

What would it take to get you to vote, America? Would it take a bribe? Would you be more likely to vote if you got a dollar for every ballot cast? Would you run to the polls if you got a Snickers bar when you entered the voting booth? In the days of free money giveaways and bonuses and free gifts, it is hard not to be apathetic toward a voluntary action such as voting that does not automatically come with some reward. So why vote? Why not sit at home and watch the rest of the political wonks vote for nothing while you sign up for magazine subscriptions or music clubs where you can get pre-paid phone cards or 12 free CDs? Why vote?

Because it is your duty as an American citizen.

When the French explorer Alexis de Tocqueville visited the United States in the 1830's, he made several observations regarding American democracy. He claimed that though we were a nation of excited entrepreneurs, we were inherently heading toward despotism: tyranny of the majority. Now most people then and even today don't see anything wrong with majority rule. But Tocqueville recognized James Madison's fears in Federalist Ten when he lamented the construction of factions that would inevitably squelch the voices of the minority. But what do there old guys have to do with you and your vote?

Both of these nineteenth century thinkers had a warning for this nation; it is very important to exercise your right to have your voice be heard. Even if you don't think that your single vote will make a difference, it is still important to participate in the political process. If you care to follow the majority, it just strengthens that position. However, if you have a minority opinion, no one will ever know it if you don't speak up. And speaking up means casting your vote.

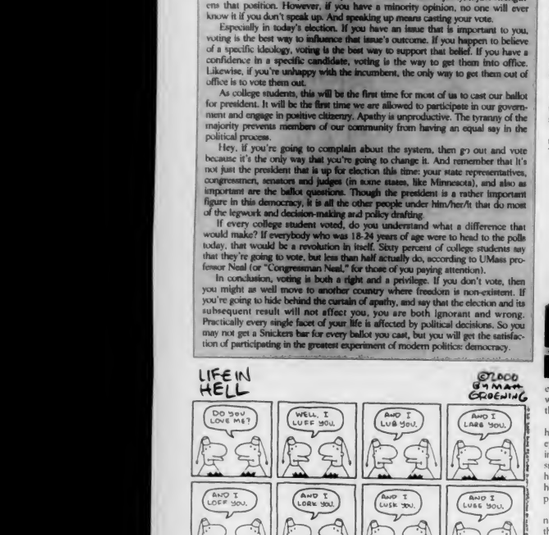
Especially in today's election. If you have an issue that is important to you, voting is the best way to influence that issue's outcome. If you happen to believe of a specific ideology, voting is the best way to support that belief. If you have a confidence in a specific candidate, voting is the way to get them into office. Likewise, if you're unhappy with the incumbent, the only way to get them out of office is to vote them out.

As college students, this will be the first time for most of us to cast our ballot for president. It will be the first time we are allowed to participate in our government and engage in positive citizenry. Apathy is unproductive. The tyranny of the majority prevents members of our community from having an equal say in the political process.

Hey, if you're going to complain about the system, then go out and vote because it's the only way that you're going to change it. And remember that It's not just the president that is up for election this time: your state representatives, congressmen, senators and judges (in some states, like Minnesota), and also as important are the ballot questions. Though the president is a rather important figure in this democracy, it is all the other people under him/her/it that do most of the legwork and decision-making and policy drafting.

If every college student voted, do you understand what a difference that would make? If everybody who was 18-24 years of age were to head to the polls today, that would be a revolution in itself. Sixty percent of college students say that they're going to vote, but less than half actually do, according to UMass professor Neal (or "Congressman Neal," for those of you paying attention).

In conclusion, voting is both a right and a privilege. If you don't vote, then you might as well move to Iraq or any country where freedom is non-existent. If you're going to hide behind the curtain of apathy, and say that the election and its subsequent result will not affect you, you are both ignorant and wrong. Practically every single facet of your life is affected by political decisions. So you may not get a Snickers bar for every ballot you cast, but you will get the satisfaction of participating in the greatest experiment of modern politics: democracy.



LIFE IN HELL
©1000 BY MATT GROENING
DO YOU LOVE ME?
WELL, I LUFF YOU.
AND I LUB YOU.
AND I LOVE YOU.
AND I LUP YOU.
AND I LOOV YOU.
AND I LUSK YOU.
AND I LUSE YOU.
AND I LUG YOU.
AND I LORE YOU.
THAT'S SO SWEET. I WILL I LOVE YOU TOO.
YOU DON'T LISTEN VERY CAREFULLY, DO YOU?

Gore gets Queened

BRYAN MCALLISTER

In the midst of this heated presidential race, in the middle of the attacks, the issues, the promises and the lies, one person in America finally got the real truth from one of the candidates: Queen Latifah.

I'm not making this up. This is not a story from The Onion, nor a preview of the Collegian's April Fools issue. Scarily – like the people voting for Bush or the current scooter trend – this really happened.

Two weeks ago, Al Gore stopped in Iowa (those damn corn people again!) to tape an episode of the "Queen Latifah Show" which will air today. First of all, how does Queen Latifah get her own show? And what exactly is she the Queen of? You can just imagine the network executives discussing this one.

TV EXECUTIVE: Let's see, we gave one of the "Cosby" kids a show, we gave Howie Mandel a show, and we're giving a show to Vanilla Ice, Pauley Shore, Tony Danza, Sandy Duncan, Webster, Screech from "Saved by the Bell," and Debbie Gibson. Why should we give you a show?

QUEEN LATIFAH: Well, um, you know, I had a cameo role on "Fresh Prince" and I made Set it Off. And I rap.

TV EXECUTIVE: That's an incredible resume. I haven't seen talent like this since we tried to give that kid who played "Boner" on "Growing Pains" a show.

So there it is – Queen Latifah gets to educate the masses, and I'm sure it's a pretty good show. Talk shows are addictive. And is there anything more appealing then having a presidential candidate try to act all hip? Remember when Bill Clinton jammed on "Arsenio Hall?" We love this stuff. And we want Queen Latifah up in Al Gore's face, talking face-to-face about the real issues.

The real issues. Especially issues like, "Do you prefer lace or leather on a woman?"

Again – I'm not making this up. Al Gore went on the "Queen Latifah Show" and was asked numerous random questions like this – whether he liked lace or leather, folk or funk music, action movies or dramas. She asked whether he had ever worn leather pants (he had not), or whether he had played drinking games in college (he had). Go Al Gore! Something tells me he was a mean-ass president in games of Asshole.

I'm not sure which image is more disturbing: Al Gore in leather pants, or Tipper Gore in lace. It's a tough call (hint: Tipper Gore in lace). But either way, as disturbing as these questions are, as ridiculous as they are, as offensive to the American election system as they are, there is a bit of relief here, too. Queen Latifah, of all people in the world, finally proved that Al Gore is, in fact, a human being.

Because really, I wasn't sure there for a while. As I watched all the debates in the past few weeks, I kept hoping to see a close-up of Gore that would reveal, somewhere behind his head or below his ear, a control panel, or wiring. Something that would prove he's really a robot. Can't you just imagine Gore as a puppet, and Bill Clinton his puppeteer, sitting up somewhere with a remote control, smiling?

I didn't have this impression before the debates. I had heard the "Al Gore is so boring" stories, but I always thought, "Hey, give the guy a break, he can't be that bad." And I was right – it's not that he's boring. It's that he's arrogant, self-involved, conniving, cold, and absolutely robotic. Did you see the last debate, the one where the audience asked questions? He couldn't take a joke if it was handed to him gift-wrapped by Santa Claus. Don't get me wrong – I'm still voting for him, but I was hoping for some reassurance, anything, that would tell me he actually belongs to the human race, and that we weren't getting C3PO for president. I kept expecting Gore to really get pissed off at Bush, and all of a sudden he would self destruct like Hal in 2001: A Space Odyssey, and yell into the camera, "I'm Al Gore! Listen to me! I'm Al Gore! I'm right and you're wrong! I'm Al Gore!"

And we would never have seen it coming. I think everyone was so pro-Al Gore in the early days of this race because of Bill Clinton. Bill Clinton was a little too human. We didn't want a president that would be so easily seduced again. But then we actually saw Al Gore, and wondered what we were getting into. We realized this guy isn't exactly a saint, either. Which explains the current resurgence of George Bush – at least he knows how to laugh and not sound really, really creepy; Al Gore sounded like he belonged in the next I Know What You Did Last Summer movie.

Hallelula, Queen Latifah! She finally got under his metallic skin a bit. She got him to tell a story about his old youthful days, when Al Gore loved motorcycles. Al Gore the Easy Rider. He told a story about running away from the cops. Al Gore the Rebel Without a Cause.

Now we know the truth – Al Gore likes girls who wear lace. He's been really drunk before. He likes action movies. He can hang with the Queen, the Queen Latifah. I'm definitely voting for Big Al Style – unless I decide at the last minute to write in "Boner" from "Growing Pains."

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian Columnist.

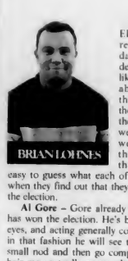
The candidates' fates



BRIAN LOHNES

Well, today is finally Election Day. The day of reckoning for the candidates we have grown to despise and generally dislike. We have learned just about everything about these men, their ideas, their grooming habits, and their mutual penchant for wearing women's underwear. Since we have all this background info, I think it would be pretty easy to guess what each of the candidates will do when they find out that they have either won or lost the election.

Al Gore – Gore already seems to know that he has won the election. He's been whining, rolling his eyes, and acting generally cocky for a while now, so in that fashion he will see that he has won, give a small nod and then go completely berserk. Tipper's hair may actually move when he grabs her, heaves her over his shoulder and takes her upstairs to complete his first "official act as president".

If Al loses the election, he will move back to his native Tennessee, and become a chicken farmer. All the chickens on the farm will be named George W. Bush, but when asked why that is Gore will say, "I invented that name." Tipper Gore will ban the cows on the farm from making "explicit" mooing noises because they are corrupting the smaller cows. Finally, his daughters will be exposed as high-profile call girls in a bust on Charlie Sheen's condo.

George W. Bush – Bush will act surprised on camera and then turn to his wife and ask where the 10 million dollar check is. After it is explained that he won the election not the Publisher's Clearinghouse Sweepstakes, Gore will immediately quit the position he just won and pen a best seller entitled, "Campaign Strategery".

If Bush loses he will return to Texas a bitter, beaten man. He will have his whole campaign staff arrested for crimes they didn't commit and electrocuted in the already very busy electric chair. Bush will then begin a practice he will continue on a monthly basis of requesting to be electrocuted, getting strapped into the chair and then calling the warden of the prison to pardon himself. This game continues for almost a year until Bush leaves his phone next to his bag of coke on the kitchen counter.

Ralph Nader – If Ralphie wins the election he will suffer a massive heart attack and be rushed to the hospital. He will be unconscious for several days and then regain consciousness. A staff member will show him a newspaper from the day he won the election, he will suffer another, more massive heart attack, which will kill him. He will then crusade to reform the funeral industry from the grave.

If Ralph loses the election, he will return to his work as a crusader for consumers. He will have production stopped on the Razor scooter, citing the fact that it is "unsafe at any speed." He will also continue to tour with the speed metal band he started on the campaign trail to "relieve the many stresses of campaigning."

Harry Browne – Harry Browne will fire up a doobie if he can win the election. Actually, Browne might do that anyway, but if he wins, he will use some of his "private stock." Browne will then begin to name potential cabinet members like, Willie Nelson, Secretary of Agriculture, Abbie Hoffman, Secretary of State and George Forman, Secretary of Education.

Browne would react in a very similar way if he lost the election. First, there would be some weed to be smoked, then there would be the sympathetic words from his supporters. Then there would be more weed to be smoked. Browne would then call the winning candidate and call him every name in the book. He would tell the candidate that he was John McCain. Browne would hang up the phone and laugh... for six straight hours.

Well, there's an idea of what may happen to each of the older, white males that we have running to represent our country. It is comforting to know that since our country is made up almost entirely of older white males we are getting a good representation of our populace.

Each of these candidates has worked hard, trying to suppress embarrassing information about themselves and trying to dig up information on the other candidates. I watched the debates with great intent and interest, that was until I heard the terms, "lock box" and "fuzzy math" used roughly 25,000 times a piece.

I think this presidential field isn't the weakest ever. It may be the wackiest ever but it isn't the worst. We have to remember that basically these guys all want the same thing, women and power. I mean, seriously, who would run for president because of a "sense of duty?" Give me a break, the job only pays 200K a year! These guys want the kind of booty only a president sees. Actually, all these guys except for Nader want that. Nader thinks sex is unnatural and inefficient, not to mention how it is controlled by the condom corporations.

Regardless of what you think of the candidates, get out and vote. I know you have heard it ten thousand times, but go do it! Go do your civic duty and help us elect a new humbling, middle-aged white guy to deal with issues they haven't even imagined yet! You say you don't like he guys on the ballot, write me in! Just go and vote and remember my last name is spelled L-o-h-n-e-s.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

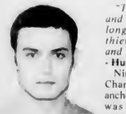
If Ralphie wins the election he will suffer a massive heart attack and be rushed to the hospital. He will be unconscious for several days and then regain consciousness. A staff member will show him a newspaper from the day he won the election, he will suffer another, more massive heart attack, which will kill him.

Fighting the decline of the media



MATTHEW DESPRES

"The Tv business is a cruel and shallow money trench, a long plastic hallway where thieves and pimps run free and good men die like dogs."
- Hunter S. Thompson

Nine months ago, at CBS Channel 2 in Chicago, news anchor Carol Marin decided it was time to challenge the state of local news broadcasts. Tired of the fluff and aimless banter that dominated newscasts, and wary of the growing emphasis on tabloid stories over legitimate news, she took to the air with "The 10'Clock News with Carol Marin." The show, which promised straight news and longer segments on the stories it covered, aimed to improve the long-suffering quality of local television. It delivered on all counts.

Nine months later, however, the show has been cancelled, replaced for the time being with a more traditional format. Viewers grew tired of Marin and her serious approach, shifting back in droves to the light fare that has come to pass itself as the news. They found her format dry and unwelcome, and simply stopped watching after the "novelty" wore off. The change was too much, too fast, for an audience raised on a steady diet of soundbites and glitz.

"[The broadcast] received overwhelming critical acclaim for its content, but the response from viewers told us that the style was one that they could not easily become accustomed to," said Walt Dehaven, vice president and general manager of the station.

In other words, a style they didn't want to become accustomed to.

Critical praise, in most cases, hardly ever translates into good ratings. Poor ratings turn off would-be advertisers, which in turn places serious limitations on how much money a station can make during a given block of time. This thought process, in theory at least, makes perfect sense: to remain functional and competitive, it's only natural that a station would want to fill its airwaves with enticing programming, something that will catch the eye of both the viewer and the advertiser. The news should fall somewhere outside this realm, however; its purpose is to educate the public on any number of pertinent issues, and not to make a station large sums of money. If it manages to turn a profit, so be it, as long as it can do so without sacrificing journalistic integrity. It's a shame that we've resorted to selling out one of our most basic rights in the name of making a dollar.

What happened to Marin in Chicago is representative of the direction in which our society has moved as a whole; how our collective attention span has shifted from something substantial to easy-to-digest, sound-bite-sized tidbits of information. Just as newspapers have largely given way to Internet news sources, our appetite for conventional television has decreased. This trend can't be blamed on television media alone; it's those of us at home that are calling the shots with our remotes. We're sending messages, and television is listening.

A number of stations across the country have taken steps over the past few years to cater to our evolving (or regressing, in this case) tastes. New sets are built, attractive anchors are recruited, and stories packed with crime and disaster lead off the broadcasts. Anchors are encouraged to converse and make small talk between segments, to promote a friendly atmosphere and make viewers feel at home. Producers at channel WMAR-Channel 2 in Orlando have recently made "high-tech weather maps that promise enhanced special effects" the prized feature of their 11 p.m. newscast.

Give this some thought. We're being baited with what is essentially a glorified video game system. Doesn't this bother anybody?

In Boston this past summer, a typical night on any of the three major stations was dominated by some mention of The Perfect Storm. The film, which was set locally and based on a true story, broke out of the entertainment portion of the newscasts as reporters found more excuses to do so. Night after night, viewers were subjected to reporters in front of restaurants where George Clooney "may" have eaten, or given exclusive interviews with somebody that had passed through town during filming. Producers tugged on the heartstrings next, offering us features on family members of those portrayed in the film. Night after night it was more of the same, as coverage of the film trumped actual news. Stories that should have led were instead relegated to the back of the bus and politely asked to wait their turn.

For further evidence, rewind yet another summer. John F. Kennedy Jr. had been killed, and local television (and I'm sure in some cases, national outlets as well) saturated the airwaves with coverage of the tragedy. We were provided "exclusive" shots of the Kennedy compound as reporters repeated the same facts over and over again. It's understandable that the media wanted this story: he was a public figure, and his death came in a tragic manner similar to his father. It quickly became the only story, however, as other more important headlines were passed by. A Kennedy death, after all, is a surefire ratings grabber.

There's nothing wrong with entertainment coverage, as long as it comes packaged differently. Often now it comes dressed up as actual news; The Perfect Storm is a perfect example. It had no real importance in any of our lives, and yet it was reported on as if our very existence depended on it. Programming such as "Entertainment Tonight" and "Extra" exists, and thrives, because of our desire to be entertained. Seeking out this entertainment should then become a matter of choice, of picking up the remote and deciding which channel to turn to. Our choice has virtually been eliminated, though, as this thirst has transcended specialty programming and found a home in the nightly newscasts that are supposed to enlighten us on matters that directly affect our lives.

The trend of "news as entertainment" is a disheartening one. They are separate entities and should be treated as such. We should have our options and be allowed to exercise them accordingly, rather than being spoon-fed something we may have no taste for.

Hunter Thompson was right: TV is a shallow money trench where good men die like dogs. Hopefully Marin (and others like her) can learn from her experience in Chicago, and bring her dreams to another market in search of success. Her admirable project was a return to what news broadcasts originally set out to be and what they should return to. It may be naïve to sit down and write about how the news should be left alone, but it's something worth fighting for. We're getting very little in the way of information today, and Marin's efforts will only be rewarded if we, the viewing public, wake up and take notice.

Matthew J. Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

A poet and a soldier: in search for peace

Remembering Yehuda Amichai

JANET BARR
Yehudit Heller, an Israeli poet and Commonwealth College advisor, brought Yehuda Amichai to Amherst several times.

By Sasha Senderovich
Collegian Staff

"I can stand on my balcony and tell my children: 'Over there I was shelled for the first time.' And over there, to the right, just beneath those trees, I was kissed for the first time'," said Yehuda Amichai in his 1994 interview. A poet of his country's ancient and modern reality, of its jumble of tragic and triumphant, Israel's national poet, Yehuda Amichai has passed away on September 22, 2000 at the age of seventy-six.

To many Israelis, Amichai has become a personal poet. "I think I first met him in words on the bookshelf – I was fifteen years old," remembers Yehudit Heller, herself a published Israeli poet, a former Associate Director of UMass Hillel, a current Commonwealth College advisor and a teacher of numerous literature courses at the University. "Later on, in high school, Amichai became the first contemporary poet to be included in the curriculum. That's when I became an Amichai freak," she adds.

Then, in 1975, Heller remembers taking books of Amichai's poetry to the army training with her. During that year of the war, recalls Yehudit, she lost friends within a month of fighting. Amichai has captured the loss, so some poems are hard to read because they are not simply extraneous words but rather capture an experience deeply personal in nature. "Rain comes down on faces of my living friends, to cover their head in a blanket," wrote Amichai, "and on faces of my dead friends who were not covering any more."

Heller returned from the army to Jerusalem, "jealous" of Amichai's words. Writing became a passion, and a desire to see the great poet – a motivation. "I learned that if I wanted to see Amichai, I would have to be at certain places at certain times," says Heller. "Like Yemen Moshe neighborhood, where Amichai lived. On Tuesdays, there are weddings, and he loved to watch. Couples would do photo sessions in Amichai's neighborhood. Bride and groom would come out, and their families with them, and they would take pictures with a famous windmill against the background of the desert. Many times he would stand there, watching the weddings. I decided to watch too."

"Many of us, dreaming to be poets one day, would walk in front of cafes, hoping that maybe our eyes would meet the eyes of the famous poets," remembers Heller. "But it was really when I came to Amherst that I actually had an opportunity and sit and talk to him. Putting together the first Jewish Arts festivals, I had an opportunity to bring in my friends and teachers. Between Amherst College and UMass, Amichai came here numerous times."

Yehudit remembers hearing Amichai speak for the last time on his abroad tour, at Williams College in 1998. Reflecting on that talk, she can point to a certain heaviness in his voice, guessing that the poet may have already known what the others did not – he was to be diagnosed with cancer. That night, at Williams, he spoke uninterrupted for two hours. "I don't think Amichai starts or ever stops being a poet – when he talked, every line could be an opening or closing line of a poem – ah! You know how you walk on the sand on the beach, and know that wherever you go it will be erased in seconds, but you want to leave a mark and put your feet in deeper?" questions Heller. "That's what I felt he was doing that night. He wanted to put heavier words in before they would disappear."

Yet, even with his passing, the words of Amichai are likely to disappear. His poetry became a part of the language that he himself helped create. Speaking of Amichai, Israeli Knesset (Parliament) Member Yosef Sarid said, "[He] released Hebrew language from it being a religious tongue, and brought it out to a secular life." Along with writing in the Hebrew of God, Amichai created a language that spoke of death, airplanes, tanks and soldiers. Heller suggests that Israelis talk in the Hebrew of Amichai, often not even realizing it. "Sometimes when we talk, we say sentences that already exist in his poetry without knowing it! He changed the direction of poetry, spoken language, making it a part of his poetry, and poetry – a part of language."

Heller specifically refers to Amichai's way of interweaving the experiences of Israel as a country with the lives of the individuals. Amichai wrote: "I even my loves are measured by wars, I say. 'This happened after the Second World War.' 'We met a day before the Six Day War.' I would never say 'before the peace of 45-48' or 'in the middle of the peace of 56-67.' Yet the knowledge of peace makes its way from one place to another like children's games, which are so much alike everywhere you go." This, points out Heller, is how a lot of Israelis talk, unable to separate experiences of Israel from their own lives.

Never having endorsed any politician, Amichai made an exception of Yitzhak Rabin, the late Israeli Prime Minister, by supporting his peace process. In 1994, Amichai was present in Oslo, Norway, when Rabin accepted the Nobel Peace Prize. In his speech, Rabin quoted Amichai's most famous poem: "God has pity on kindergarten children. He has less pity on school children. And on grownups he has no pity at all, he leaves them alone, and sometimes they must crawl on all fours in the burning sand to reach the first-aid station covered with blood. But perhaps he will watch over true lovers and have mercy on them and shelter them like a tree over the old man sleeping on a public bench. Perhaps we too will give them the last rare coins of compassion that Mother handed down to us, so that their happiness will protect us now and in other days." As Heller suggests, what Amichai teaches us in a poem like this is that "as cliche as it sounds, love is the only the solution" in the conflict. Then, it is not surprising that a poet like Amichai would walk along a peacemaker like Rabin.

Yehudit Heller translates from the obituaries published in Hebrew on the day of Amichai's death. Words of the writer Meir Shalev seem most all-encompassing: "With Amichai gone is a huge space, not exactly metaphorical this time. A space not only in the wall of Hebrew literature, but also in the head of his lovers. A woman bought Amichai's book for her lover, a father read him on the grave of his son, a soldier carried him in his backpack, a traveler took Amichai with him to the Middle East, a woman read Amichai before her sleep, a boy in love copied his words into his letter, a poet read him to learn his metaphors, every thirsty or hungry, whoever was hunting beauty, whoever searched for wisdom, whoever searched for comfort – these are who Amichai wrote for. He never preached, he never nominated himself as a prophet, but here and now in this country, in his city of Jerusalem, the loss of Amichai is even stronger."

It is Jerusalem that takes the center stage in all of Amichai's work. Jerusalem which Heller suggests is embedded in the consciousness of every Jew. "Every year we finish Passover Seder by wishing to spend the following year in Jerusalem. Jews exiled by Romans vowed to never forget Jerusalem." Heller suggests that "Jerusalem, like any other great love, always begins and ends with hope." In Amichai's poetry Jerusalem is no longer only a part of a physical landscape, but also a part of emotional scene. Amichai said, "I once saw two lovers embracing in Jerusalem. I told them to be careful because here, every love can turn into a new religion." Amichai transformed Jerusalem into a city of lovers, he made it a love song, and love song, as Heller points out, is universal. As Knesset Member Yosef Sarid remarked, "Amichai was the public relations man of Jerusalem. He succeeded in making it closer to everyone."

Deaths of outstanding people often mark the end of an epoch. When a person is gone, the time is gone with that person. With Amichai, gone is his poetry, but whatever he has done and wrote becomes a precedent for anyone who comes after him. "His poetry is like pebbles that you throw into the water," says Yehudit Heller. "Along with the stone's sinking – an image of death – immediately we see countless rings, circles in the water. Ocean touches and surrounds everything, so these circles go all the way to the other shore."

Five years without Yitzhak Rabin

JANET BARR
Yitzhak Rabin memorial across from Memorial Hall at UMass. November 4 marked the fifth anniversary of Rabin's assasination.

DAN YAGUDIN

In each generation there will be those who will rise up to try and vanquish you. And in each generation leaders will rise and will lead you in your fight against them. To which of those groups does Yitzhak Rabin belong?

This may be a question that is a bit hard to swallow for some. But back in October of 1995, many, if not most, Israelis thought Rabin to belong to the former group. He was returning the lands on which our brothers and fathers' blood had been spilled after expelling the country, and getting bombings in return from his Palestinian "peace partners." I was among those who thought this way, and I bet that many readers, if placed in the same situation, would think likewise. Polls showed that some 70 percent of the Israeli population has ceased to support Rabin. We were not ready for peace. Not so fast, not so soon. Not with the memories of wars, terrorists, infiltration, Iraqi scuds and Lebanese katyusha rockets so fresh in our minds. But since when has the hallmark of a great leader been his popular support? In every world war, for example, there have been strong voices in the United States for isolationism, for letting other countries deal with their own problems. The presidents of the time, however, heeded the call of history, intervened in the wars, and twice saved the free world. Rabin's greatness came in his vision for peace to the people of Israel. For forty-eight years we bought the right to our people's existence with wars and blood. Rabin wanted to buy it with an olive branch and an extended hand for peace partnership. One of Israel's most accomplished generals, Rabin has said that "this is the only battle which is a pleasure to wage: the battle for peace." Coming from a man who has accomplished one of the greatest military feats in history during the Six-Day War, that means a lot.

Some visionaries are so ahead of their time that they pay a dear price for it. Rabin, as is well known, paid for his vision with his life, and was assassinated by a right-wing Israeli who was opposed to the peace process, five years ago, in November of 1995. He was killed at a peace rally in Tel Aviv, his song of peace cut short by the stain of blood. His fate was the fate of two other great world peacemakers – Martin Luther King Jr. and Mahatma Gandhi. Perhaps such is the state of human affairs; perhaps we haven't yet reached a state where we can oppose those of differing opinions with words and not bullets. Until we reach that level the world will need to guard its visionaries more closely than it does its most precious diamonds, for it is the former kind of jewels that try to resolve the worlds' problems, not add to it like the latter.

What did Rabin do right? What did Rabin do wrong? What is the lesson that we take from his legacy? The most common answer to these questions is that Rabin's legacy is the peace process and that it must continue at any cost. I have heard talks of the "Rabin way," the "Rabin legacy," the "Rabin ideology," and many other phrases. Rabin has been turned into a tool to further the political aim of peace. But turning him into an icon is reducing his legacy.

Those who say that Rabin has fought for peace all his life are wrong. He fought with arms when his people needed him (in the War of Independence and the Six Days War) and laid down these arms when he saw the opportunity for peace ahead of the great majority of the population. What we can infer it from him is a sense of concern and responsibility for the well being of his country, the region, and human beings in general. In his Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech just one year before his death, Rabin spoke of the undemocratic process of birth. One cannot choose his or her own sex, religion, color, or country of birth. From the moment one comes into the world the truth is that much one's destiny is determined by one's nation's leaders. The responsibility of that country's leaders, in Rabin's words, is to "provide their peoples with the conditions which enable them to enjoy life: freedom of speech and movement, food and shelter, and most important of all life itself."

What is the most important thing, then, is for a leader to give his people these freedoms under the conditions as they exist at the time. When the Arab countries did not recognize Israel's right to exist it was not right to offer them peace – it probably would have meant destruction. Neither was it right to destroy the PLO in its weakest point, after its support for Iraq in the Gulf War, support for which its world backing (Arab and non-Arab alike) was waning. The important thing was to recognize the right thing for the right time, and Rabin chose it – but went about implementing it too fast. Out of the blue Israel was about to lose territories to someone it did not yet trust. Rabin's fault was no bigger than that of Copernicus, or Galileo, or Gandhi. He had his just visions, his visions for peace, which were slightly ahead of his time. He was the first to try and lead the fight of those who are against Israel in words. Both he and Arafat knew that it is in the natural condition of people to play soccer with each other (or in Arafat's words, to pick flowers) and not to fight, and they both took the first brave step in restoring this condition. For this Rabin shall be forever remembered.

Dan Yagudin is a UMass student

Peace in the Middle East: a first-hand account

Last week felt like one long dream that passed all too quickly. I spent three days in Israel. I participated in a whirlwind mission to express American solidarity with Israelis during this time of crisis. I had no idea what to expect of this trip. I gained a bigger picture of what is actually going on in Israel. Many myths were cleared for me. Additionally, I tried to understand the point of view of people living in Israel by talking to average Israelis and Arabs.

The first thing I want to emphasize is that Israel is not a war zone. Each person I talked to before leaving expressed their fear for me and my safety. Not once had I felt in danger. The media makes the situation appear different from the reality. This leads me to think about what I learned about the media, whose pictures and explanations are far from the truth. We were provided with a number of examples illustrating the misguided images provided by the media.

Eli Wohlgelernter, a correspondent for the Jerusalem Post, explained in other terms the weakness of media. Firstly, often media does not investigate the sources of information and relies on only one source, or one side. Secondly, they seek to provide captivating images, but lack the time or space to explain the context. Take for instance the well-known picture of the twelve-year old boy who was shot and died in his father's arms. There is a lot of background that was not presented. There are a number of conflicting reports explaining why he was there. Regardless of the reason, it is terrible that a young boy was caught in crossfire, but difficult to understand why a father would take his son into this fighting. Photographs of the site were released which pointed out seven Palestinian sniper positions in the very close area of the incident. Furthermore, evidence is going to be released soon proving that the boy was not killed by Israeli fire.

Another example is the picture of the teen bleeding on the ground with an Israeli Defense Force (IDF) soldier standing behind him. The caption alluded to the injury as being caused by the soldier at the Al Aqsa Mosque. However, there is a gas station sign in the background, and no such sign exists anywhere in the area. It was later told that the teen, Tuvia Grossman of Chicago, was injured and had run to the soldier for help.

REBECCA RUSSEL

Areyeh Mekel, a consul general from the foreign ministry, explained that the nature of the media is to support the underdog even if the weaker one is the aggressor. Thus, often the weaker is given more power via public relations. Gissem, the IDF spokesman said that it is also possible to manipulate the media, and this is being done. According to him, the Palestinians throw rocks and molotov cocktails during the day because it looks better on camera whereas the shooting is done at night so that it is not caught on tape. The overall theme presented is that the battle is fought in two places: on the ground and over the airwaves.

According to Ehud Yairi, a senior editor for the Jerusalem Post, 50 percent of the casualties have occurred in Nablus and Ramallah. These areas are under control of the Tanzim, a new group of terrorists. It seems that a great number of Palestinians do want to stop fighting and return to school and work, but the Tanzim are an enormous threat and have taken away any shred of democracy that the people had.

President Moshe Katzav explained the thinking of the Israeli government. He said that they "don't hate Arabs; [they] don't hate Palestinians." He went on to say that they "do not know if [they] have made a mistake in [their] policy, but [their] intentions are pure." He is not an advocate of force.

This seems to be a common idea. Most Israelis are against the use of force, but feel that they need to protect themselves and their neighborhoods. Colonel Tabone feels that force cannot solve the conflict; the two peoples must be humane, as the situation will only be resolved in negotiations. Israeli Government Minister Natan Sharansky explained that negotiations are impossible while the hatred and violence continue. President Katzav stated that if the Palestinians continue to use bloodshed, they will not achieve their aims; negotiations are the only way. A cease-fire is not peace. Benjamin Netanyahu, the former Prime Minister, illustrated this in saying that Arafat needs to do more than to put away the matches until later, he needs to throw them out.

It is only the use of negotiation that could possibly solve the fight for Jerusalem. Dore Gold, the UN ambassador from Israel, thinks that the notion of a shared Jerusalem is ludicrous. He explained that no other holy city or place is shared. For example Mecca, a holy city for all Moslems, is under the exclusive sovereignty of the Saudi Arabia. Many Israelis feel that, in a sense, Jerusalem is shared. It is open to everyone. Anyone, including Arabs from countries with no diplomatic relations, is allowed in the holy city, and to visit the Al Aqsa Mosque. However, more leftist opinions surely exist. I talked to a number of Israeli Arabs who are loyal to the Israeli government. Though they would not directly say that Jerusalem should be divided, they said that it is for everyone. A woman who sat next to me on the plane on my return flight said that though she does not want to give up control of Jerusalem, she feels that if it will bring peace, it is worth it.

With all that I heard, I cannot get rid of some of the images. The first place we stopped was at a forest near the Green Line. In an act of terrorism, the forest, along with many others, was set on fire. In a place where people spent so much time trying to establish the land, and so many people continue to fight for this land, it does not make sense to me that anyone could do that. An even more powerful image is that of the cousin of one of the lynched soldiers, the father of the other, and the brother of the one who was shot while on joint patrol. I cannot lose the picture of all the families, and their words and tears. It made everything so much more real.

After the trip, I am more confused than before I left. I still hold fast to my overall views, but I now see how many outside factors are involved. It is far from a simple situation. What I have shared with you is only a small fraction of all that was presented to me in three packed days. There remains so much to consider and contemplate and integrate, and once I have started that, more information comes along.

Rebecca Russel is a UMass student.

Type O Negative dazzles Avalon

TYPE O NEGATIVE
Avalon
Nov. 1

By Rob Schulze
Collegian Staff

BOSTON – Type O Negative knocked a full-size Avalon audience flat Wednesday with a stellar, fast-paced set spiced with humor and amazing energy.

From the time the band walked out onto the gothic-themed set (cemetery-like fencing, dark outlines of barren trees, pumpkins) to the last note of the encore the crowd was nothing less that worshipful. Almost entirely clad in black from the clothes to the nail polish, the audience was definitely hard-core into Type O, greeting the opening bassline of the first song, a cover of Black Sabbath's "NIB," with a roar that never really subsided for the rest of the show. During "Black No. 1," probably Type O's most popular song, singer/bassist Peter Steele's vocals were almost inaudible over the din of the crowd's singing. The band responded to this adulation by not only thanking the crowd numerous times, but also by getting visibly more energetic and into their set as the night went on and the frenzy continued.

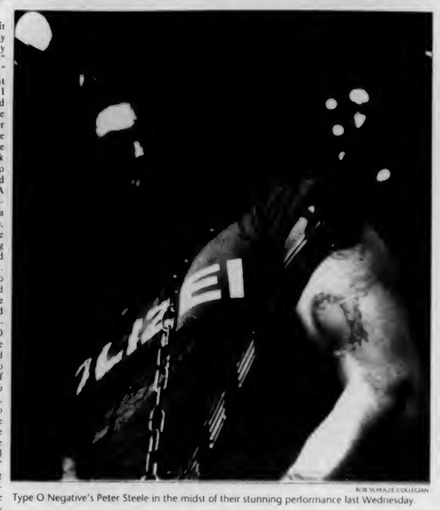
The band's famous sense of humor was also evident throughout the show. Steele introduced "Wolf Moon" by saying that it was a song "about a guy who only transforms into a werewolf when he performs oral sex on a menstruating woman. What's a little blood between friends, right? Hey, what's toast beef without the gravy!?" At various times, he invited the audience to sing along by following his "bouncing balls," warned the audience not to hurt each other with the bottle of red wine he gently tossed in because he already had about seventeen lawsuits against him and didn't need eighteen, and thanked the audience, not for being great but for paying his bills. Drummer Johnny Kelly played his entire set in a black minidress, and keyboardist Josh Silver, when his services were not needed at certain points in the songs, stood hands crossed in front of him, head down, facing the audience, as though he were attending a funeral.

As for the set, it was phenomenally chosen and perfectly played. After "NIB" and "Wolf Moon," the band cut right into "Everyone I Love is Dead" and "Black No. 1." Type O then made their only mistake of the night, choosing the play the title track off their last studio album World Coming Down. A slow, grinding, bass-heavy monster of a track on the album, it was even more slow and punishing live, and it seemed to go on forever. The crowd began to lose interest around the ten-minute mark, but snapped right back to attention when Type O cut directly from the end of "World Coming Down" into the opening notes of "Love You To Death." From there, they went back to the high-octane material, closing the regular set with the thrash of "Kill All The White People" (which was sung along with enthusiastically by the almost totally Caucasian crowd), a sped-up version of Neil Young's "Cinnamon Girl," and, finally, "I Know You're Fucking Someone Else." "Fucking" was the most emotional song of the evening from the band, and left the crowd almost breathless as the band walked off the stage to end the regular set.

The regular set contained only nine songs, but no one was disappointed, since all nine songs were played at full-length. "Fucking," for instance, was over ten minutes long, as was "Black No. 1" and "World Coming Down," and all the other songs except for "Kill All The White People" and "Cinnamon Girl" were damn close. All told, those nine songs lasted nearly an hour and a half.

Then, responding to lord chants of "You suck! You suck!" from the audience, the band came out Steele lectured the audience that yes, they did suck, but at least they sucked for free, while the crowd had paid to get in and suck. Then, because the audience had hurt his feeling so much by saying things like that, he informed them that he would do the worst possible thing that he could think of to get even: play more music. "This is a song about two girls, one gun – I like the odds!" Steele said as Silver jumped into the opening notes of "My Girlfriend's Girlfriend," and the crowd went absolutely insane. After playing a sped-up version of that, the band went into their last song of the night, and it was well chosen. "Christian Woman" is probably the best song Type O has ever recorded, and their perfectly played, beautifully sung version was the ideal way to end a fabulous show.

Simon Says and Spineshank opened, but no one really noticed.



ROB SCHULZE/COLLEGIAN
Type O Negative's Peter Steele in the midst of their stunning performance last Wednesday.

Charlie's Angels: a good, stupid time

CHARLIE'S ANGELS
directed by Joseph McGinty with Cameron Diaz, Drew Barrymore, Lucy Liu, Bill Murray playing at AMC Mountain Farms

By Jennifer Chasen
Collegian Correspondent

Every boy wants them and every girl wants to be them. They are the Charlie's Angels and they've migrated from the confines of Nick at Nite to the big screen, bringing their feathered hair and aviator sunglasses along for the ride. Aimed toward a primarily male audience, Columbia's Charlie's Angels is light-hearted and fun and combines just the right amount of action with mindless plot and hair flouncing.

A rough mixture of James Bond and Lesley Neilson, Angels is director Joseph McGinty's cinematic debut and pokes fun of the Aaron Spelling 70's sitcom. The undercover agents, blonde and bubbly Natalie (Cameron Diaz), upscale Ice princess Alex (Lucy Liu) and bad girl Dylan (Drew Barrymore) parade around in an array of designer outfits and hairstyles all under the guise that they are working for the illusive Charlie (voiced by John Forsythe), who communicates to them via speaker-phone in typical super hero fashion.

The girls, who work with the good-natured Bosley (Bill Murray), are hired to rescue a kidnapped millionaire and computer genius (Sam Rockwell) and recover the formula for his much desired voice recognition system, which was supposedly stolen by his enemy and rival tycoon (Tim Curry). Armed only with their cans of Aqua Net and Wonderbras, the Angels assault any potential foe with gravity defying karate kicks and Catwoman-like gymnastics. And along the way, each girl seems to find the time for romance and we are introduced to the eccentric Chad (Tom Green), the bar tender Pete (Luke Wilson) and the action movie star Jason (Matt LeBlanc). Just when you think the girls have everything under control, the film takes a Scooby- Doo like turn of plot, and identities are questioned.

Bill Murray and Tom Green proved to be the comedic high points of the movie, flaunting their characters' idiosyncrasies and just being generally outrageous. Quintessential "scary bad guy" is played by a much gothed-out Crispan Glover (of Back to the Future fame) and there is even a cameo with L.L. Cool J. The Angels themselves are also quite funny and there is even a disco dance segment featuring Cameron Diaz grooving to Tavares' "Heaven Must Be Missing An Angel" in the manner of Saturday Night Fever.

The outfits are something to gawk at and you can't help but laugh at the perfection of their hair and make-up at every waking moment, including through explosions and similar near death experiences. All it takes is one slow motion flip of the hair and the entire male populous is at their beck and call.

While three scantily clad girls coquettishly laughing as they whoosh through the water at the helm of a Donzi may be every pubescent boy's fantasy, Charlie's Angels is enjoyable for all and proves to be 90 minutes of cinematic amusement. The bottom line – Don't go expecting deep characters and a fabulous storyline and you won't be disappointed.

Miracle Orchestra shines

MIRACLE ORCHESTRA
Forks, Bends, & Spoons
Grapeshot

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Correspondent

The Miracle Orchestra's latest release, Forks, Bends, & Spoons, is quite an accomplishment, and something many jam-bands could and should, take note of. This is a wonderful and varied studio recording by a band whose strength has always been in improvisation and live performance. While many bands falter in their recordings, unable to separate the stage from the studio, the Miracle Orchestra has managed to record a tight album that showcases their complex sound, ranging from smooth reggae, to hard funk, to long and winding jazz compositions. In addition to their varied styles, M/O weaves seamlessly in and out of different time signatures, while maintaining a solid, danceable groove.

In "Forks, Bends, & Spoons," the groups third album, the four men solidify their style of establishing a groove, and then letting the music wander as they improvise, showcasing their ability to think and move together. The bottom line is held together by Bill Carbone on the drums and Garrett Sayers on the bass as well as vocals. Individually, each of the two is a singularly talented musician. Together, they comprise one of the funkiest rhythm sections on the jamband scene. Geoff Scott on guitar and vocals and Jared Sims on saxophone round out the ensemble, layering complex harmonies and multiple bizarre sound effects into each song. The bulk of M/O's songs are written by Scott, with a few by Sayers and some collaborative efforts.

The album opens with a heavy funk number penned by Sayers, "Bad Hair Cut," which demonstrates his skills on the fretless bass. Sayers is one of the most superb fretless bass players today, surpassed only perhaps by Marc Friedman of The Slip – a group that many recognize as brethren to the Miracle Orchestra. In addition to his funky side, one can check his tasteful, melodic solo on "Black Rock" to sample his diverse talents. "Bad Hair Cut" also gives Sims a chance to lay down what is his finest solo on the album. The energy continues through the album, with a variety of compositions such as the mellow, reggae-infused "Yes Alone," the acoustically driven and jazzy "Tides," and the loud, driving "Eurohaus" Destroyer. Leslie Helpert makes a notable guest appearance on "Half Asleep" and "Still Half Asleep" reading her poetry beatnik style over a free ranging M/O foundation.

"Forks, Bends, & Spoons," in the end, is defined by its diversity and experimentation – M/O is not afraid to challenge the listener with this release. Although much of "Forks, Bends, & Spoons" may not be "radio-ready" – be it too long, too eclectic, or simply too bizarre – M/O has definitely produced a worthy CD that will be sure to gain its audience among thoughtful music fans, college radio stations, and anyone else who dares to explore musical territory that may not be familiar to them. In addition, more pop-friendly tunes like "Black Rock" and "Yes Alone" will be sure to draw casual listeners to M/O. If this album is any indication, the future looks bright for the Miracle Orchestra, and we can look forward to the continuation of the groove.

Live Bruce Hornsby a mixed bag

BRUCE HORNSBY
Here Comes the Noisemakers
RCA Records

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

When I think of Bruce Hornsby, what comes to mind is my father's music collection. In it, you'd find music giants like Van Morrison and Eric Clapton. Alongside these big names, it may come as a surprise to see Hornsby (and his band The Range) as part of the assortment. However, one must consider that, similar to Billy Joel and other superstars that made a name for themselves by being prolific piano players, Hornsby has been a key contributor to light, pop-rock music for the past several decades.

Nowadays, however, his name is not as well known or revered as it once was. He still has a dedicated fan base, but somewhere over the past several years, he has submerged into the watery depths typical of a VH1 "Where Are They Now?" episode.

Perhaps because of his absence from popular music, Bruce Hornsby and The Range are now giving back to the fans. With their new double-set CD Here Come the Noise Makers they have compiled most all of their hits – along with several cover songs – into a compilation from a dozen live performances that were recorded over 1998, 1999, and the early part of 2000. The diverse talents of the Bruce Hornsby and The Range are clearly seen here, reaching as far back to a George Gershwin song from the musical "Porgy N' Bess" to their 1988 rockabilly hit "The Great Divide." Nonetheless, even though the effort and flair for appealing music is there, the outcome, unfortunately, cannot put the hand back on top where it once was when music of this type were embraced by the public. Through no fault of their own, it appears that Bruce Hornsby and The Range have outlived their time in the musical mainstream.

Live concerts have always been excellent selling points for record companies because not only are they cheap to produce, but most bands take these opportunities to extend their songs through further instrumental breaks, cover songs by other artists, or bring a new interpretation to an old hit. On Here Come the Noise Makers, all three elements are present and accounted for.

"The Way It Is," perhaps the song the band is most known for, goes on for nearly eight minutes, four more than the original studio recording. And while alterations like this are welcomed, in other songs it becomes extremely tedious. Is it necessary to hear an eleven-minute rendition of "Spider Fingers"? The recording from which that song came, 1995's Hot House gave way to only one truly memorable diddy, "Cruise Control." Yet neither this terrific tune nor 1988's "I Look Out An Window" are present, and their absence leaves a disappointing and questionable void. A variety of reasons could contribute towards these aforementioned songs being excluded, but why include two Garcia/Hunter songs when their own standbys are missing?

Just when the album is beginning to gather steam and rock out, it gets too calm for its own good. It is backed into by the George Gershwin song "I Loves You, Porgy." Followed by just Bruce on the piano playing a classical piece entitled "Nocturne." That's not to mention a traditional piece, "Blackberry Blossom," which has no relevance to the musical following Hornsby has acrewed over the years.

What is a treat, though, is to encounter songs that Hornsby wrote for other musicians, and now performs himself. Such is the case with "The End of the Innocence," made famous by Don Henley. Additionally, the brief dialogues Hornsby has with the crowd between each number, and his impromptu piano tinkering before many of the songs is a delight to his enthusiasts.

The best part from the album, though, is the Bob Dylan song "It Takes A Lot to Laugh, It Takes A Train to Cry." The bluesy, jazz-jam funk is addictively catchy and really captures the musical gift that Hornsby & The Range posses. They may not be master improvisationalists like the Grateful Dead, or, of late, Phish, but their coordination and ability to swing the effervescent beat is a pleasure when it falls upon the ear.

Even though Here Come the Noise Makers is an overall disappointment to music fans such as myself who yearn for this genre of music to return, it is still a valid and heartfelt effort by the band, which will hopefully continue to keep Bruce Hornsby and The Range in the public consciousness for some time to come.

COURTESY DANNY CLINCH
The (somewhat) legendary Bruce Hornsby.

Unleashed impressive but overlong

UNSUNG HEROES
Unleashed
75 Ark

By Casey Hayman
Collegian Correspondent

The list of artists featured on Unleashed, the British DJ/production duo Unsung Heroes' transatlantic hip-hop compilation, is impressive: US underground luminaries such as I-Live, Mr. Complex, J. Fudge, Siah and Yeshua DaPoet contribute their lyrical talents, along with UK acts such as Ty, The Visitors and The Phantom. And the idea of an album bridging the gap between the British and American hip-hop scenes is an exciting one. Despite the fact, though, that the Heroes, composed of producer Insite and DJ Shiver, present some indisputably hot tracks, Unleashed ultimately ends up as a slightly less than cohesive compilation. The production is of a generally high quality, as is the lyricism, but the album, at seventy-nine minutes, runs long and grows a bit repetitive.

This is not to say that there is not some truly excellent material on this album. Progressive Brooklyn duo Siah and Yeshua DaPoet contribute to a total of five tracks (two together, as well as two solo cuts for Siah and one for Yeshua), each of which is excellent, both lyrically and musically. Each of these tracks has a sound that is distinctively different from the others on the album. On "Transatlantic" and "The Norm," on which Siah and Yeshua collaborate, the beats are slow and bass-driven, a sharp contrast to the up-tempo, sample-focused tracks which comprise the majority of Unleashed. These mellow, haunting beats focus on the duo's intelligent, straightforward lyrics as they play off of each other brilliantly. It is Siah's two solo tracks, however, that are the album's standout moments. Siah effortlessly adjusts his flow to the catchy, up-tempo loops of "The Next Degree" and Work It Out," and the results are hot.

The rest of the album is by no means bad; in fact, the first forty-five minutes or so are consistently tight, especially the tracks featuring I-Live and a hot solo track by Canadian MC/producer Frankenstein. However, after about the first fourteen tracks, the album loses its momentum, and there are still eight tracks left to go. A major weakness of the latter portion of the album is the sub-par lyrical contributions of British MC's The Visitors and The Phantom. Their verses generally sound disjointed, weighing down on the beat. The only real inspired work by a UK rapper on the album comes from Ty, on his track, "Crushed Velvet." This song, the album's third track, is actually one of Unleashed's highlights; unfortunately, it is all we hear from Ty for the remainder of the album. Not that The Visitors and The Phantom were awful, but whenever they rhymed, I couldn't help thinking that perhaps Insite and Shiver were trying a bit too hard to blow up some homegrown talent.

Basically, I would say that had our Heroes left out four or five of the weaker tracks, they would have had a seriously tight hour-long album. However, the album they present runs just a bit too long, growing more than a little repetitive. Unleashed does show plenty of promise, though, for international collaborations, because although nearly eighty minutes of the Heroes is a little much, Insite has a very distinct, melodic style of production and Shiver is a seriously talented turntablist. The familiar American voices on the album, too often heard over the same old beats, would do well to enlist the production help of the Unsung Heroes in the future.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Swing/Salsa Dance Northampton Center for the Arts Wednesdays Lessons 7pm $10, $7/students. Dance 8:30 $5 for dance only (413) 259-2982 (Mark)

OFFcampus Antics Find Gore and Bush on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Great Location Near campus. 549-7599 for info

One room in 3 bedroom apt available. $337/month all inclusive. Located at Cliffside apts. in Sunderland. Contact Jyll Evens @ 397-9887

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $300/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

Colonial Vlg Apt open in Jan. 2Brd, hot water incld: $600/month. Call 256-1232 for more info

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Pontiac Firebird 126k miles. Power windows/locks. T-tops. New tires. 413-789-1149

Used car for Sale 1991 Mercury Sable ST Wagon. 6cy 3L, automatic, 118T miles. Asking for $900 Contact: Roland Weidisch phone: 413-659-2568 e-mail:roland_weidisch@yahoo.com

94 Cavalier 131k ABS, AC, PS, PW, PD, work car. $1650 Call Steve 256-3256

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

EMPLOYMENT

Don't Get a Job Next Summer, Get a Business! Earn Avg. of $8563/summer as The Manager of a University Painters Summer Business Must be SOPH, JR or SR. Information and application at: www.university-painters.com

Be your own boss this summer. Learn how to run a small business. Make more money than your peers. Call Steve 290-7161 leave message.

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Work From Home - $1200 to $5000 pt/ft 1-800-716-3528

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

EMPLOYMENT

Reliable and Reasonable dog care person wanted in Sunderland. 665-2779

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

Attention! Work form home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

FOR SALE

CATCH BEERPONG FEVER. BABY WE GOT YOUR TABLE DON'T YOU WORRY. 549-5950 ASK FOR CHAD FREE DELIVERY, CUSTOMIZED TO YOUR LIKING GOD AND THE BABY JESUS, CALL US

Book of CD's Found

LOST & FOUND

Sunset Ave. Columbus Day Weekend. Call and discribe 546-0610

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

To share Apt. with 3 other roommates for Spring 2001. Summer option available. Cheap rent! Great location! Please call 549-5570

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Your Ad Could Be Right HERE!

Moving out?

Selling things?

Signing over your lease?

Do it here!

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 2 Hartford
4 - NBC 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - WB56 NJ Spring/Fall
7 - WNEN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 20 Hartford
9 - WNEW New Jersey Channel
10 - FOX 25 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - WTXX 20 Hartford
13 - WSBC 22 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - TMC TV (Another Channel)
16 - WB 30 New Haven
17 - ESPN
18 - TNT/2
19 - USA TV (Another Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Guest or Cavel
22 - Vision
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Lifetime
26 - USA
27 - TBS
28 - TNT
29 - ESPN
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Discovery
32 - Nickelodeon
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Court TV
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Bloomberg Financial Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus NOVEMBER 7, 2000

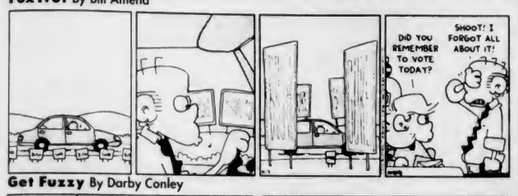
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N		Nova "The Diamond Deception"		After Lockerbie (In Stereo)		Election Returns (Live)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns		News	Election
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns (In Stereo Live)		News
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns		News	Election
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Cluetess	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "Guise Will Be Guise"		News		Friends	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns		News	Election
WTXX	20	7th Heaven "My Kinda Guy"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Third Watch "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence. (In Stereo)				News	You Decide	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns		News	Election
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)				You Decide		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)				Election Returns		News	Election
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Super Bridge" (In Stereo)				Election Returns (Live)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Election Returns (In Stereo Live)						Election Returns		News	Election
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Third Watch "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence. (In Stereo)				Fraser	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: New York Knicks at Milwaukee Bucks. (Live)					Inside NBA	"Boyz N the Hood" (1991)
A&E	53	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Discord"		Biography: Kurt Russell		American Justice: Prostitute		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "In Memory of...
CNN	29	5:00 Election Returns (Live)				Election Returns (Live)				Larry King Live		Election Returns (Live)
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	It's "Half Baked" (1998, Comedy) Dave Chappelle.				Daily Show (Live)		Daily Show
DISC	52	Wild Discovery: Tiger's Tale		Wild Discovery "Wild Asia" (N)		On the Inside: Air Force One		New Detectives (N)		FBI Files "Crime Spree"		Justice Files "Double Lives"
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		Billiards		PBA Bowling: World Tournament of Champions		Timber Series		Y'alls e Basketball Preview		Sportscenter
LIFE	97	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait: "Cheryl Ladd"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Babysitter's Seduction" (1996, Suspense) Kari Russell.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World	Real World (N)		Real World (N	Pirate Wrap-Up
NICK	36	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Pelswick (N)	Rugrats	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	45	Sliders "The Slide of Paradise"		Babylon 5 "Soul Mates"		Viper "Once a Thief...		"Journey to the Center of the Earth" (1999) Treat Williams				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	27	Secret World of Supermodels		Man vs. Microbes		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Science of Sex: Mating Game		Human Sexes		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	63	ER "My Brother's Keeper"		Pretender (In Stereo)		Movie "Vegas Vacation" (1997, Comedy) Chevy Chase.				Bull "One Night in Bangkok"		ER "Great Expectations"
USA	47	Walker, Texas Ranger		Movie "Hide and Seek" (2000, Suspense) Dakota Fanning.						"Chesapeake Murder" (2000, Drama) Naveen Andrews.		Fall Exposure: Inside
HBO	60	(5:30) "Strictly Ballroom" (1992)		Movie "Jack Knat" (1998, Fantasy) Michael Keaton. (PG)				Movie "Three to Tango" (1999) Matthew Perry.		Men of Honor		Curb-Entham	G-String Divas
MAX	59	(4:45) "Almost"		Movie "The Love Letter" (1999) Kate Capshaw.		Movie "The Deep End of the Ocean" (1999) Michelle Pfeiffer.				Movie "Marked for Death" (1990) Steven Seagal. (N		"Florentine"
SHOW	56	(5:45) "Superman II" (1980)		Christopher Reeve. (PG)				Movie "Dick" (1999) Kirsten Dunst. (PG-13)		Extras-5th Day		Beggars and Choosers
													"The Last Debate" (2000)

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

THE BIG DAY.
IF YOU'D LIKE TO SEE ABORTION BE CRIMINALIZED
IF YOU'RE FOR UNREGULATED LOBBYING AND DRILLING, AND FOR INCREASED AIR POLLUTION, CLICK HERE.
AND IF YOU FAVOR MORE SOFT MONEY IN POLITICS, THEN THE CHOICE TODAY IS CLEAR...
VOTE NADER.

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

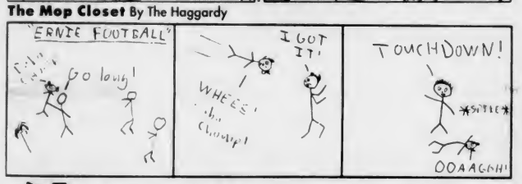
FoxTrot By Bill Amend



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

OK, GUYS, I SHOULD HAVE GOT TWO PIZZAS, BUT I ORDERED BEFORE I KNEW JOE WAS GONNA COME OVER SO BE GENEROUS, OK?
BE WHAT?
YOU MADE THAT WORD UP.
"GENEROUS". YOU KNOW, "GIVING". I MEAN SHARE WITH HIM. GOT IT?
OHHH. OK YEAH
NOPE SORRY. YOU'RE STILL NOT MAKING SENSE

The Mop Closet By The Haggardy



Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

THE SPECTER OF CLARA'S PARENTS DIVORCING IS REALLY BUMMING HER OUT.
THERE'S ONLY ONE THING LEFT DO...
RIGHT?... IT'S TIME TO STEP IN AND PUT MATTERS INTO...
THE LOVE DOCTOR'S HANDS.
HEY...
I THOUGHT I WAS THE LOVE DOCTOR!
YOU'RE THE LOVE MALE NURSE... I'M THE LOVE DOCTOR!
OHH ON LOVE BEDPAN TECHNICIAN'S ASSISTANT!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

OKAY... NOW!
BALLOT BOX
GO! GO! GO!
STUFF STUFF STUFF
...AND NADER WITH 5's AND BUCHANAN WITH 7's AND... SAMMY THE SQUIRREL WITH OOOOBS...
OHHHH
SO CLOSE.
I SHOULD'VE VOTED FOR MYSELF!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

CLEARLY THERE IS A REPRESSED TRAUMA IN YOUR PAST THAT FORMS THE BASIS OF YOUR NEUROSIS
MONTY...LET US GO BACK TOGETHER SO YOU ARE MUCH YOUNGER NOW. YOU ARE EIGHT YEARS OLD. YOU
NOOOO
WHAT IS IT, MONTY? PLEASE TELL ME WHAT DO YOU ?
NO!... NOOO! NOOOH! AHHHH!
IRONICALLY, IT TURNS OUT IN SECOND GRADE I WAS BEATEN BY TOMMY DINGLER USING HIS GRANDFATHER'S POCKET WATCH

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

AH.
SAY "AH."
HM. JUST AS I THOUGHT. GINGIVITIS.
WHAT?! THAT'S IMPOSSIBLE! I CAUGHT THIS FLU FROM MY ROOMMATE!
HEY, THAT'S NONE OF MY BUSINESS, SON.
THIS IS WHY I NORMALLY AVOID UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES.
ON THE OTHER HAND, WE HAVEN'T TESTED YOU FOR PREGNANCY YET.

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"YEAH BUSINESS HAS BEEN PRETTY GOOD... IN FACT, WE WERE FINALLY ABLE TO BUY THAT GIANT MIRROR WE'VE ALWAYS WANTED!" © 2000

www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may feel as though you have to look over your shoulder again and again to keep "them" from gaining on you or taking you by surprise. That's okay. We know where you live.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Beware of those who use biting sarcasm to make a point. You're likely to misunderstand what you hear and take it too much to heart. Your true friends know that you aren't a cross dresser.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Brainstorm today and you will hit upon one or two as yet unexplored options that only you know how to exploit to the fullest advantage. Unfortunately, Anthony's isn't hiring.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Let me tell you something Sweet Pea, focus on the matters of personal and material security today. Don't let yourself be swayed by the flashy advice a relative has to offer.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Strive to get all your ducks in a row today. Organization and a clear, uncluttered state of mind are essential to success at this time. Plus, ducks in a row are easier to shoot.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care you don't let your interest in others take you too far today. Remember, there are laws against stalking. Even if you are buying half price apps, you're still there for the waitress. That's just wrong.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Take in your surroundings today, and try to make full use of a new and brighter outlook. Take better advantage of something familiar. Some thing. Not someone. Leave your roommate alone.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – What seems most unlikely today may materialize before your eyes at the most surprising moment – though you can surely profit from it. After all, its not every day a kilo of coke falls from the sky.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Someone is likely to add fuel to your competitive fire today. Take care you don't get carried away in your attempt to reach the top. But then again, I'm just a psychic. What do I know?
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Take care to establish an energetic yet realistic rhythm today. Don't let your own eagerness get out of hand at this time. We don't need another incident like last Thursday, Jess.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Teamwork is sure to get you very far in any endeavor today – be it personal or professional. Travel with a friend as often as possible. Preferably a bigger friend. You'll look slimmer in comparison.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You have a choice today between romance and conflict – the decision may not be as clear-cut as it first seems. Okay, I'm lying. The choice is obvious. Watching Springer counts as both.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 38	HIGH: 62 LOW: 43	HIGH: 64 LOW: 43

Quote of the Day

"Show it all. Tell it all. Put it out."

–Sam Donaldson ABC News

ACROSS
1 Heaps
5 Extinct bird
8 Roast
12 Woodwinds
14 Shea Stadium cover
15 "Sphere" star
16 Luxurious house
17 Up above
18 Chilled
19 Revealing
21 Power problem
23 Pen contents
24 Barb
25 Standard
26 Scale
30 Invest in them
32 Jungle denizens
33 Radioactive element
37 Film director Kazan
38 Excursions
39 Cosby show
40 Airport interior
42 Place-setting part
43 Extra inning
44 City on the Danube
45 A Gershwin
48 Election winners
49 Pa
50 Petty
52 Aromatic bushes
57 Between jobs
58 Easygoing
60 Where Kathmandu is 61 Culture medium
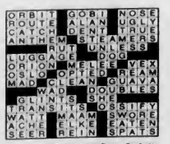
62 Dumbo's were big
63 Ms. Garbo
64 Lucy's partner
65 Like the Mojave
66 Pour

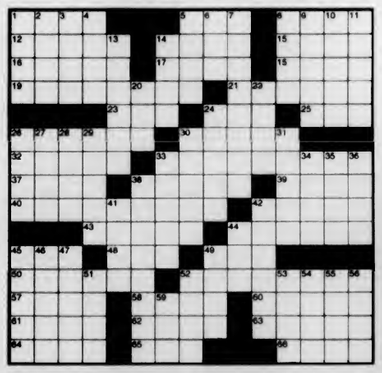
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



11-22-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 Cit.'s concern
2 Emmy's relative
3 Type of weevil
4 Auction off
5 Spouse
6 Gold, in Acapulco
7 Names
8 Voucher
9 Sum up
10 Alpha's opposite
11 Broader
12 Wedding-gown fabrics
13 Discussion
20 Too
22 Formal hairstyle
24 Ronstadt's "— No Good"
26 Novelist Waugh
27 Place to store fodder
28 Nickel or dime
29 Pass into law
30 Turn red
31 Marsh bird
33 Harbors
34 "The Heat —"
35 Current with
36 Chatty pet
38 Made an underground passage
41 Eye, in Quebec
42 House material
44 Moving truck
45 Homeric work
46 Hill
47 Book of maps
49 Clothes
51 Actress Garr
52 Judge's panel
53 Fresh
54 Fencer's sword
55 Price
56 Shut noisily
58 Put one's — in: meddle

Don't you love the comics page? I know I do!



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Mesquite Chicken Sandwich (B, F, H)

Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)

Tri Bean Casserole (vegan)

Teriyaki Beef (W)

Dinner

South Pacific Risotto with Chicken, Shrimp, & Cilantro (B, F, H)

Big Burger (B, F, H)

Seven Vegetable Stew (vegan) (B, W)

Grilled, Marinated Tofu with Black Bean Salsa (vegan)

Beef Brisket (W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor – Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician – Maureen Maske
Copy Editor – David Troupes
Production Supervisor – Mike Kulek, Adi Husenovic
Production Staff – Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, November 7, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Tragedy in Cincinnati

Xavier ends UMass' season in double-OT thriller

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

CINCINNATI— A classic game with a tragic ending. Such was Friday night's semifinal matchup of the Atlantic 10 tournament between the Massachusetts and Xavier women's soccer teams.

It was a game that neither team was willing to lose. After all, the club that ended up on the wrong end of the final score would have to face an off-season of pondering what could have been.

For 90 minutes of regulation, both teams battled feverishly to record the elusive go-ahead goal. Finally, as sudden-death overtime began, the first marker turned into a symbolic score – the determining factor as to who would move on to the A-10 final, and who would wake up on Saturday morning with the primary task of trying to mend a broken heart.

So, as Xavier forward Annette Gruber knocked the ball off the instep of her right foot and into the upper left corner of the goal, the range of emotions on the opposing benches at Corcoran Field told the entire story. While the Musketeers bolted out onto the pitch in jubilation, the Minutewomen were left stunned, wondering how a 1-0 double-overtime contest had slipped through their grasp.

"If we were going to lose, then I'm glad that we lost on an unbelievable goal than a fluky piece of trash goal," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "But it was really disappointing ... a crushing defeat. They [his UMass players] deserved better because they played well."

Added Xavier coach Dr. Ron Quinn, whose team went on to defeat Dayton on Sunday and win the A-10 title: "It was a goal that was unstoppable, a play that was perfect."

When all was said and done, the game turned out to be nothing more than a microcosm of the 2000 season. The Minutewomen gave all that they had to give for over 100 minutes and even seemed to have the game won when Erin Lilly found herself shooting into an open net early in the first overtime. However, on that play, Musketeers defender Liz Singer saved the day for her club by coming back to clear Lilly's bid off the goal line.

"Our team gave a lot," Rudy said. "Actually, we gave more than they did. Down the stretch we were fitter, and it was evidenced by the amount of fouls that they put on us. To me, that was the sign that they were dead. I thought that they were ready to fold."

But just when it seemed like Xavier was down for the count, Gruber

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

No. 17 Kara Ciocca plays hard-nosed defense for the last time in a maroon and white uniform. Her Minutewomen squad fell in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament to Xavier, 1-0 in double overtime.

haunted the Minutewomen once again. Two years ago on the same field, she also netted a dramatic overtime winner against UMass to claim an important regular season win.

This time, it was déjà vu all over again, but on a much bigger stage. The senior captain tallied arguably the biggest goal of her career to extend her team's season for at least one more game.

"Both teams had chances," Quinn said. "You know that they [the opponents] are going to get their chances, so you just hope that you can hang in there."

Said Rudy: "Fortunately, their defense helped them out until they could get a remarkable goal from a kid who's had a pretty remarkable career."

The Minutewomen put together a great defensive effort and received another sparkling performance from goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky, but it wasn't enough. On this night, Xavier had a bit of luck on its side in a battle of attrition and ended UMass' season in the process.

"Early on, our problem was that we'd leave up these freaky goals, and it took a while for the defense to get played in," Rudy said. "Down the stretch, they played pretty well. I thought that tonight they were just marvelous."

In the end, the setback was a bitter way to end the 2000 season. The Minutewomen finished the year with a record of 11-7-1.

"The best team wins, that's the way it works in the game," added Rudy. "But in this case, I thought that we played better than they did. We generated attack from the field, and they generated attack from throw-ins and free kicks."

Minutewomen Notes: Seven UMass players were honored at the A-10 awards banquet on Thursday night, with Podhrasky taking home the most hardware. The Dallas native was a first-team All-Conference pick, while also garnering the league's Defensive Player of the Year award. She was also named to the All-Tournament team for her efforts in the loss to Xavier.

Fellow classmates Sarah Cook and Brooke Bartlett were also first-team selections, while Bartlett was also named to the All-tournament team along with Podhrasky.

Other honorees for the Maroon and White included junior midfielder Martha Conover, who was a second-team All-Conference pick. Freshmen Erin Lilly, Michelle Luttati and Amy Mink were also recognized as members of the All-Rookie team.

V-Ball kills Duquesne; A-10 tournament looms

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

When a team is on the edge of making the playoffs, coming up with victories over the also-rans of a league is imperative. In this weekend's contest against the lowly Duquesne Dukes, the Massachusetts women's volleyball team passed with flying colors as it dropped its opponents in straight sets (15-12, 15-11, 15-4).

With the win, the Minutewomen improved to 12-12 overall on the season and 8-6 in conference play. Two matches remain on the A-10 schedule, and the Maroon and White finds itself tied with Dayton for the fourth spot in the conference. The top four teams advance to the championships at Xavier in two weeks.

Four Minutewomen recorded double-doubles in the match, with senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson leading the charge with 18 kills and 13 digs in the three games. Hasson leads the team in kills per game, averaging 4.30 kills per game for the season.

Her fellow co-captain, junior Lymarie Llovet, was also impressive in UMass' triumph as she posted her ninth double-double of the year with 14 kills and 12 digs of her own.

Junior Janeen DeMarte stepped up in the match for the Maroon and White, as she killed 12 balls on the night and pulled up a team-leading 17 digs.

Sophomore Jen Davis was the fourth spiker to notch a double-double, as she knocked down 16 kills on the night and picked 10 digs off the floor for the Minutemen.

Sophomore Clare Baxter also had a strong match, as her .333 kill percentage was tied with Davis for best on the team. She also had two aces on her serve and did her job at the net, notching a solo block and two assisted blocks.

But behind it all was the quarterback of the UMass offense, senior Jenni Drennan. Drennan tallied 59 set assists in the three games, well above her 11 per game average. She also tallied 10 digs on the defensive side of the ball for the Minutewomen.

As a team, the Maroon and White hit .297 for the match, posting an incredible .528 hitting percentage in the clinching game.

For the Dukes (14-14, 4-10 A-10), it was Sherene Lemonius leading the way via her 17 kills in the match. Also chipping in was Brooke Saunders, who threw down 11 kills and made 13 digs in the three game sweep.

The Minutewomen will not have any time off, though, as they are back in Amherst to face local rival Fairfield tonight at the Curry Hicks Cage at 7 p.m. in a non-conference matchup.

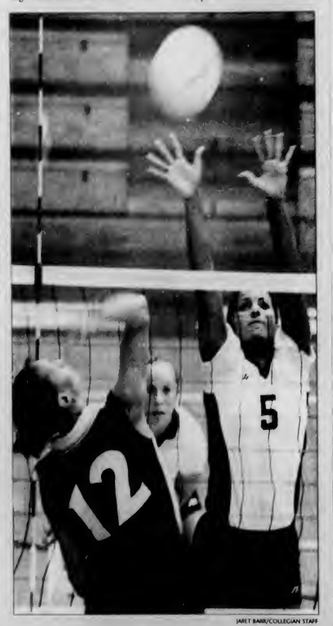
The Stags have just come off clinching their fifth consecutive MAAC conference championship by means of a 3-0 romp over Canisius University. They finished with a 9-0 in-conference mark and carry a 22-5 overall record into the match with the Maroon and White.

However, the Minutewomen have owned Fairfield in the history of the series, holding a 6-1 all-time advantage. Last year, UMass downed the Stags on their own court, winning a 3-1 decision.

Fairfield is led by senior Corrine Carlson, who has a 112-21 record in games she has played with the team. She is coming off a 17 kill performance with four blocks in the triumph over Canisius.

As for UMass' upcoming Atlantic 10 schedule, it will finish up its regular season in Philadelphia this weekend. On Friday night, it matches up with LaSalle, a team which it dropped in straight sets just three weeks ago at the Cage.

The second match of the weekend should prove more of a challenge for the Maroon and White, as it faces off against the Temple Owls. Temple stands at 12-2 in A-10 play with a 16-8 overall record. It defeated UMass in the earlier contest between the teams, putting down the home squad in a disheartening four set loss in which the Minutewomen put up a strong fight before succumbing to the power of the incredibly talented Owls squad.



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass outside hitter Lymarie Llovet attempts to block a shot back into the face of her opponent.

CCSU beaten by Minutewomen

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

As satisfying as a dominating performance can be for the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team, Saturday's victory over Central Connecticut State proved to be historic, as well as successful.

Senior leader Chris Arsenault set a new school record in the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 49.02. The senior broke the mark by over a second, shattering the old mark set by Greg Mention in 1994 with a time of 50.14.

Arsenault also holds three other Massachusetts varsity records. He and three other teammates broke both the 400-yard and 800-yard freestyle relay record in 1998. He also holds the record for the 200-yard freestyle, which he set last season with a time of 1:38.41.

Arsenault's record-breaking race helped UMass to a dominating victory. The Maroon and White outscored CCSU 175-83 at the Joseph R. Rogers Jr. pool. In fact, the performance was so commanding that the Minutemen were victorious in 14 of the 15 events.

The win coupled with a season opening victory over UNH, has UMass at 2-0 to start the year.

Arsenault added two more wins to his record shattering victory in the 100 fly, also winning the 200-yard freestyle and the 200-yard backstroke with times of 1:41.58 and 1:56.50 respectively.

Three other UMass swimmers, two seniors and one sophomore, won multiple events on Saturday. Senior Avon native, Mike Sabina, won the 100-yard breaststroke in 59.21 and the 50-yard freestyle in 21.53.

Another senior, native Californian Billy Brown, won both the 400-yard individual medley and the 200-yard breaststroke in 4:04.88 and 2:08.85 respectively.

Sophomore Rob Bellamy also stepped up for the Minutemen, winning two big events. The first, the 1000-yard freestyle. Bellamy won in 10:19.75. The Maryland native also took home the win in the 200-yard butterfly, clocked at a time of 2:04.50.

The Minutemen also got help from a freshman, Logan Alomar, who won both the one-meter and the three-meter diving events.

Other winners for the Maroon and White included Tommy Keane, who won the 500-yard freestyle in 4:50.29, and Ryan Zaucha, who won the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 53.14.

The men's 400-yard freestyle relay team also took home the spoils. The team of Sabina, Zaucha, senior Joe Martin and freshman Peter Mesavage won the race in a time of 3:18.43.

Massachusetts is on the road for the first time this season on November 11th. The Minutemen travel to Boston University to take on the Terriers in a 4:00 pm showdown.

CCSU takes long walk off short pier against UMass

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team improved to a perfect 2-0 this season with a 151-126 victory over Central Connecticut State this past Saturday afternoon. The Blue Devils came to Amherst looking to erase the memories of last season's 166-99 defeat at the hands of UMass, but were unable to do so as a result of a fine performance all around by the Minutewomen.

Junior Becky Hunnewell led the charge for the Minutewomen by securing two first place finishes. Hunnewell, a native of Sandwich, won both the 100 and 200-yard backstrokes with times of 59.72 and 2:08.74 respectively.

The win in the 200 was Hunnewell's second this season, while her time in the 100 was the best of the year so far for the Minutewomen.

This season Hunnewell looks to continue her dominance in the backstroke of a year ago, in which she garnered team leading times in the 100 and 200-yard events.

While Hunnewell was doing the job in the pool for UMass, the diving tandem of junior Alyssa Rooney and sophomore Kate Allery were leading the way above the water. Rooney notched her first victory of the year with a score of 206.55 in the three-meter diving competition, while Allery took the one-meter event with a score of 229.13.

Allery's win was her third of the year after taking both the one and three-meter competitions back on Oct. 21 against the University of New Hampshire.

Juniors Anne Dettloff and Andrea Kazanjian led a quartet of other UMass winners in the swimming competitions. Dettloff won the 200-yard freestyle for the second straight week with a season best time of 1:55.72, while Kazanjian took the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 59.25.

The core of this year's freestyle team is back in all events from a successful 1999-2000 campaign, primarily because Dettloff was the team leader in almost every event. She paved the way a year ago for the Minutewomen with team-leading times in the 50 (23.95), 100 (53.53), 200 (1:54.40), 500 (5:07.49) and 1000-yard freestyle (10:39.63).

Lizzy Boyle, a sophomore from Darien, Conn., chalked up her first individual win of the season with a time of 25.29 in the 50-yard freestyle. For the Maroon and White, only Kazanjian had recorded a faster split in the 50-yard free this season.

Freshman Christen Dexter rounded out the winners for the Minutewomen by taking the 100-yard breaststroke. Dexter recorded a time of 1:07.86 to notch her first solo victory of the season. Against UNH, Dexter teamed with Kazanjian, Dettloff and freshman Lauren Rowell to take the 200-medley relay, but her win on Saturday was her first individual triumph while at UMass.

Coach Bob Newcombe's Minutewomen return to action on Saturday afternoon when they head to Boston to take on the Boston University Terriers. Last season UMass defeated the Terriers here in Amherst by a score of 155-145.

"Law and Order" star Jill Hennessey went local at the NoHo film festival. To read the full review, peruse the Arts section.

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Marcel Shipp has racked up a host of records during his career for the UMass football team. To learn more about No. 5, check out Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 45 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 8, 2000

Race too close to call; circle the winner:

Gore or Bush?

By Sam Wilkinson and Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

As of press time, no clear winner has emerged in yesterday's presidential election and both candidates were desperately hoping to win Florida.

While the election was expected to go to Republican George W. Bush, votes waiting to be counted in Florida held up results. While Bush was certainly in better position to be named the forty-third president if he carried Florida, the election could swing to Democrat Al Gore just as easily.

The state of Florida became, as expected, the most important state for both candidates. Network television had originally declared Florida had swayed toward the Vice President, but after the Bush camp objected to claim, the Sunshine State became the focus of political analysis. At 10 p.m. Eastern Standard time it was returned to undeclared status.

Into the wee hours of the morning the race in Florida became closer and closer. As the night wore on there were talks of scandal brewing, missing ballot boxes and a mistake on the ballot in which Democratic supporters selected Pat Buchanan instead of Gore.

As expected, Bush won many of the Southern states – the Carolinas, Tennessee, Virginias, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri as well as Western states Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and the Dakotas.

Gore carried the Northeast garnering New York, Pennsylvania, Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island. He also fared well in the major Midwest states carrying Michigan, Illinois and Iowa.

The election, that was marked by continued negative rhetoric about both candidates throughout their campaigns, be it about Bush's supposed lack of intellect or Gore's lack of personality, both the Republican and the Democrat heaved more than their share of mud at one another. But once regularities are dealt with in Florida and Missouri, all the mudslinging will be forgotten.

Missouri, a state that was supposed to give its 11 Electoral votes to Bush, might end up being the epitome of American political controversy. The Show Me State had democratic voters lining up to cast their after a ruling by a city court declared that polling stations could remain open until 11:00 p.m. EST. A state appeals court then overturned the ruling and closed the doors to polling stations leaving perspective voters without a voice.

To add insult to injury, there have also been accusations by both Democrats and Republicans that the ballot boxes might have been tampered with.

With four states remaining, including Florida, the race to 270 was at a stalemate. Bush was ahead with 246 after winning Nevada while Gore languished with 242 Electoral votes apiece. Gore, however, was likely to win Iowa and Wisconsin, thus making Florida the most important state. Winning Florida wins the election for either candidate.

Vice President Al Gore took an early lead in the Electoral College race, winning key battleground states like Michigan, Pennsylvania and Florida...

... Earlier today, Florida was ruled too close to call, and at press time its 25 electoral votes had not been decided.

If Bush comes through to win the Presidency and Republicans hold control of Congressional elections, it will be the first time since 1953 (Dwight D. Eisenhower administration) that the GOP has held control of both the legislative and executive branches of the United States government.

At 1:25 a.m. EST, George P. Bush was outside in Austin rallying Texans to cheer for his uncle. Meanwhile, in Nashville, the atmosphere was tense as Gore had not been heard from as of press time.

No answer was expected, but Florida, clearly the key of the election at this point, had 92 percent of its votes tabulated. Bush held a slim lead but two of Florida's poorer counties were expected to bring significant voter numbers to Gore.

Network pundits were left only to wait as those totals were tabulated, they told stories of past elections. They spoke of the Dewey/Truman election in 1948, of the Reagan revolution, of Ford/Carter and most especially of David Brinkley in 1960, when he turned to the camera at a staggering 7:14 a.m. in the morning to announce that Kennedy had won the election.

Congressionally, Republicans are likely to control the House of Representatives, but Democrats may pull ahead in the Senate. Races were within hundreds of votes of one another.

Dog racing remains; Health care rejected

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts voters opted not to provide health care for all residents, and voted to maintain dog racing in the state by voting down ballot questions three and five at the polls yesterday.

Opponents of Question 5 claimed that passage of the initiative would have cost the state billions of dollars, would have raised average HMO health insurance rates and would have created an extensive new bureaucracy.

"This question would've cost billions and it also ran the risk of making more people uninsured due to enormous cost," said Jennifer Szoke, a campaign worker for the no on 5 coalition. "This question would've cost $1.5 billion in new taxes to maintain."

Passage of question would have created a council to recommend legislation that would ensure comprehensive, universal health care for all state residents.

"The whole point of this was to bring health care back to the individual and away from corporate bottom lines," according to Andre Guillemin, campaign director of the yes on 5 campaign.

Enactment of Question 5 would have required Health Maintenance Organizations (HMOs) in Massachusetts to spend 90 cents of every patient dollar on health care. Supporters of question five charged that HMOs spend excessively on administrative costs, marketing, advertising, and government lobbying.

"Over 25 percent of your health insurance dollars are spent on administration, advertising and exorbitant executive salaries," Guillemin said.

Question 5 also included provisions allowing patients to chose their own health care providers, get second opinions and appeal denials of treatment.

The Massachusetts electorate also rebuffed Question 5 yesterday, which proposed ending all forms of dog racing where the outcome was bet on.

Those in opposition to question three's passage

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Madeline Casey and "Mike" tried to sway voters in Amherst yesterday. Despite her efforts, Question 3 did not pass.

Turn to QUESTION 3, page 3

Question 8 fails, 7, charity pass

SAM WILKINSON / COLLEGIAN

Rachel Lesser, 16, of Amherst cannot vote but still expressed her political views in Amherst yesterday. "A vote for Nader isn't a vote for Bush in this state," she said.

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Voters struck down Question 8 last night, a motion that would have changed Massachusetts' policy in dealing with people convicted of drug related crimes.

The state ballot question would have used money seized from drug dealers to create a new trust fund designed to help treat people with drug problems. Under this new law, courts would have been able to sentence drug offenders, especially first time and lower level offenders, to treatment rather than strictly to prison sentences.

Massachusetts State Governor, Paul Cellucci was one of the questions biggest opponents and campaigned extensively against the motion. Cellucci argued that Question 8 would have weakened the state's fight against drugs and made it easier for drug dealers to escape punishment and continue practicing their trade.

"Question 8 would have benefited only drug dealers because it cripples the ability of police to investigate narcotics dealing," said Martha Coakley, District Attorney of Middlesex County in a statement made to the WBZ TV.

In a statement to the Boston Herald, Paul Walsh, District Attorney of Bristol County, added, "The most offensive part of it is the get-out-of-jail-free pass it would have given heroin and cocaine traffickers."

The bill's proponents argued that fundamental change was needed in the way that Massachusetts deals with drug offenders. Nancy Carapezza, one of the bill's supporters, explained that drug treatment was much better than simply putting convicted drug felons in already overcrowded prisons.

On the other hand, Massachusetts voters looked favorably on ballot Question 7, which allows people making a charitable donation to deduct the deduction from their income taxes. This measure was actually passed through the Legislature earlier this year as a part of the state budget, but was officially accepted by the voters last night.

Turn to QUESTION 8, page 3

Campus responds to close Presidential race

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Overwhelming emotion flew high late last night as University of Massachusetts student leaders watched polling numbers fluctuate intensely for the two party candidates.

Although ideas around UMass were extremely diverse, the one constant on Election Day was the intensity of voter anticipation. College student's appearance at the polls seemed to be very noticed. "I've never seen that many people turn up at my precinct," said Graduate Student's Education Office Secretary and Treasure Mary Robinson. "I went around 10:00 a.m. and the place was absolutely packed."

Colleen Gilchrist, the Student Government Association's (SGA) Secretary of the Registry said, "From what It seemed to me, the majority of people (at school) were voting."

Gabriel Tavarez, the SGA's Chief Justice of Student Judiciary felt that election was great. "I heard a lot of people talking about the candidates. It was really cool just because a lot people were discussing it. It sounded like there was a high voter turnout."

The Republican response to the election was very contingent on George Bush's unexpected victory in Tennessee. Patrick Decourcy, President of the University of Massachusetts Republican Club said, "I think Bush's victory in Tennessee is a very good indicator of what could happen around the country. Gore served 16 years there, and if he's not even competent enough to serve in his home state, it says something about his entire campaign."

Supporters of Vice President Al Gore also had some very strong arguments to boast. Gilchrist, who is a self-pronounced liberal said that she was extremely happy about Vice President's Gore in Massachusetts even though it was expected.

Rose Gonzalez, a member of the Steering Committee for the National Green Party, whose candidate Ralph Nader pulled six percent of Massachusetts votes said, "There's so much support in this state for him [Nader] and we're ecstatic." Gonzalez said she was not excited about either of the

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

A student casts her ballot in Hampden Dining Commons last night. The campus had a high voter turnout.

Turn to REACTION, page 3

In-state, Edward Kennedy and John Olver win; Democrats hold Mass' politcal base

By Kavan Peterson
Collegian Staff

Yesterday's election for Massachusetts State Legislature and U.S. House of Representatives and Senate was a large victory for incumbent candidates, all Democrats, and a loss for nearly every challenger.

Senator Edward F. Kennedy was re-elected to his seventh consecutive term in the US Senate, defeating challengers Jack E. Robinson, Republican, and Carla Howell, Libertarian, by a large margin. Congressman John Olver, D-Amherst, defeated Pete Abair, the Republican challenger from Holyoke, to win his sixth term as US Congressional representative for Massachusetts first House District.

The Franklin Hampshire district re-elected Stanley Rosenberg, D-Amherst, for State Senate, and Ellen Story, D-Pelham for State House of Representatives. Both candidates faced Libertarian challengers from Amherst – Jerry Franklin in Rosenberg's race and registered Independent, who was running a second time against Story on the Libertarian ticket, and Michael Froimowitz, University of Massachusetts senior in psychology and computer science, ran against Rosenberg.

With a lack of opposition for most of these candidates, their campaigns stand in contrast to the fiercely close presidential race and the battle to control the U.S. Congress and the Senate. By press time last night, control of Congress and the Senate had not been determined, but all 10 of Massachusetts' Democratic Representatives and Senator Kennedy were re-elected. Tracking polls yesterday on MSNBC indicated that the Democratic challengers around the country attempting to win back the House and Senate were ahead of their Republican opponents. But whichever party ends up in the majority, it will probably be by only a few seats.

Representative Patrick Neal, D-Springfield, ran uncontested for his seventh term in Congress and expressed his support for the Massachusetts Democrat candidates last night. From his campaign headquarters in Springfield, Neal said he expected Congressman Olver to receive a strong victory and that he was happy to see Senator Kennedy re-elected.

"The Congressional races in Massachusetts were obviously decided weeks ago," said Neal, "but it's great to see Massachusetts' Democratic delegation is still intact."

Neal said that controlling the House or Senate could be difficult during the next Presidency, but no matter who is elected the next president, he was sure the Democrats in Congress would be able to work in a bipartisan fashion.

"President Clinton had a lot of trouble getting many of his initiatives passed with a Republican controlled House," said Neal, "but working in a bipartisan way, we were still able to pass important legislation like the crucial deficit reduction bill."

Olver and Abair were unavailable for comment, but Olver's campaign manager, Adam Hinds, said this campaign had been a great experience and they were very optimistic right up to the election. Hinds said Massachusetts' voters clearly support the Democratic Party and are happy with their representation in Washington, D.C.

"I think it's great for Massachusetts," said Hinds. "It's wonderful for the working families of Massachusetts to be so strongly represented in Washington."

Local candidates Ellen Story and Stan Rosenberg both won by large margins. Rosenberg was not reached for comment last night but Story said she was pleased by her victory.

"I'm very grateful that the people in this district are so supportive of me," said Story. "I will do my best to promote the democratic process in the House of Representatives."

Story has represented Amherst, Pelham and Shutesbury since 1992 and has spoken in favor decriminalizing marijuana, supporting last spring's marijuana referendum in Amherst.

Story said she was greatly disappointed to see Ballot Question 4 pass, and that it would make her job as a legislature very difficult. Story said higher education like the University of Massachusetts would directly suffer because of this tax cut.

"This was a terrible mistake," said Story. "The University of Massachusetts alone needs over $400 million in building and structural repairs."

Franklin and Froimowitz did not campaign directly against their opponents and said they did not expect to win. Instead, they campaigned as a bloc on the UMass campus, focusing on student issues like marijuana reform, security cameras and drinking-age. Franklin, who helped pass the marijuana referendum last spring, has been active in Amherst politics and said he campaigned on the Libertarian ticket with Froimowitz to champion student issues and encourage students to vote.

Franklin said the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition, the Libertarian Party and the UMass Green Party contributed heavily to a large voter turn out among students.

"I saw lines of people voting at the South West Residential polling area," said Franklin. "It's important to get the message out that students were not apathetic this election."

Rosenberg was elected to the State Senate in 1991 in a special election to replace then Senator Olver, who resigned to take his current Congressional seat. Rosenberg is the Senate's assistant majority leader and has served for three years as chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The election results reflect the dominance of the Democrat Party in Massachusetts. Registered Democrats in the First District, which includes Amherst and nearly all of Western Massachusetts, outnumber Republicans 112,000 to 46,000. The Hampshire Gazette reported. These odds have made it hard for challenging candidates from any party to organize and raise enough money to mount significant opposition to the Democrat establishment.

Election seesaw dizzies experts

By Kristin Shrewsbury and Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

As predictions and projections based on exits polls and preliminary precinct reports poured in last night, the Presidential race between Governor George W. Bush and Vice President Al Gore reminded many of a horse race requiring a photo finish.

Pennsylvania and Florida, both key battleground states, were called early for Gore. Late in the night, with 56 percent of the ballots counted, Florida was returned to the undecided list. Returns showed Bush leading by a significant number of votes.

"It would be stunning if both Pennsylvania and Florida went to Bush after being called early and called wrong," Political Science Professor Jeffrey Sedgwick said.

"Florida has a heck of a lot of military personnel who vote absentee, and are overwhelmingly Republican," he continued.

Eve Weinbaum of the Labor Relations Research Center expressed her opinions on both Pennsylvania and Florida as well. As of 11 p.m. last night, she predicted her own thoughts on which way the electoral votes would lean to.

"Gore has both of Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, he [Gore] really made the difference in the cities and especially in states such as Pennsylvania. He's especially hit the rural areas of Pennsylvania, which tend to be more conservative," Weinbaum said. "It now all depends on Florida, if their predictions are right and Gore takes it, he'll win, but as I see it right now it's up for grabs. But without Florida, I don't think that Gore has a chance."

Sedgwick agreed with Weinbaum on Florida. "Florida is key. Without Florida, it is going to be very hard for Al Gore to win. And Bush is making it hard for Gore."

West Virginia and Tennessee, both considered strong Democratic states, both were predicted to vote Republican.

"Clearly something is going on in these places, a realignment of political views in these states," Sedgwick said.

Both Weinbaum and Sedgwick commented on the effects of turnout on the election.

"Turnout is everything, and the Democrats are better at it than the Republicans," Sedgwick said.

Weinbaum expressed some disappointment with the voter turnout when looking at the lack of minorities who decided to cast their votes in this election.

"I think more young voters voted than originally predicted which I think is great. But it's still not that high in relationship to where we have been in the past. There is a large percentage of people who still aren't voting, particularly those of minority."

In the past week, some experts had said that one candidate might win the popular vote, while another won the electoral vote. This raised questions over the accuracy of the Electoral College.

"It doesn't matter. If that happens they [the loser] won't contest it. The Electoral College elects the President, not the population. That's the way the Constitution sets it up. I think the winner will win both votes, but whoever wins will not be able to claim a mandate from the people," Sedgwick explained.

As of midnight, predictions gave Gore a slight lead, boosted mostly by the early returns from California, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Iowa, Oregon, Washington and Wisconsin were too close to call.

SAM DAVIDSON / COLLEGIAN

Brian Sandberg, senior STPEC major, campaigns on Amity St. in Amherst yesterday.

Local voters turn out, campaigns stay at home

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

While many residents lined up to vote at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst yesterday, they didn't bring the usual array of political signs and flyers.

Of the few signs scattered around the polling place, only one endorsed a candidate.

Brian Sandberg, a senior Social Thought and Political Economy major, stood at the corner of Amity Street and North Pleasant Street, and hoisted a Nader/LaDuke sign.

The lack of candidate supporters was noticed.

"It is very strange, for a Presidential Election. There were a few [signs] this morning, but they left," Betty Gagnon, Precinct Constable for the fourth, fifth and tenth precincts said.

However, while the signs weren't there, the voters certainly were.

"We've had a wonderful turnout so far. A lot of college students, a lot of first time voters. Precinct Five is the busiest of the three; it covers roughly the center of town."

The remainder of the election propaganda addressed the eight state ballot questions - both positive and negative. Signs urged voters to ban greyhound racing or support universal health care, reform prisoners' voting rights and support a tax cut.

Voters packed the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest, which covers Precincts 4A and 10A. In past years, on campus voter turnout was low. That hasn't been the case this year, explained poll workers.

"Over 400 people have voted," Cynthia Gargano, a volunteer, said. The number as of 6 p.m. was nearing 700.

"It's been very busy," volunteer Michael J. McCarthy, a junior Hotel, Restaurant, and Travel Administration major, added.

"This is our first Presidential Election at this polling station. We're very excited. There are a lot of first time voters," Jodi Bailey, a volunteer explained.

At another polling station, Sue Alward and Madeline Casey, of the organization Grey2K, came out in support of Question Three, which if passed, would ban greyhound racing in the Commonwealth.

They brought Mike, a former greyhound racer.

"Mike's been retired seven years now," Alward, Mike's owner, said.

Not everyone is in support of Question Three. A 'yes' vote would ban greyhound racing, which Grey2K, the Humane Society and the Massachusetts

Turn to TURNOUT, page 3

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 14 of 74

Everyone speaks English. Especially Russians.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from people like John Leguizamo (actor, Summer of Sam), Doug Liman (director, Swingers and Go), and Amy Heckerling (director, Clueless). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment cliches, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it.

nibbl@box.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

D.P. Dough
Delivers Calzones
256-1616

4 for $17.00
Save $3.00 on 4 Zones
One Coupon / 4 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

3 for $13.00
Save $2.00 on 3 Zones
One Coupon / 3 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

2 FREE Cokes
w/purchase of 2 Calzones
Coke or Diet Coke Only • One Coupon / 2 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

4 for $17.00
Save $3.00 on 4 Zones
One Coupon / 4 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

3 for $13.00
Save $2.00 on 3 Zones
One Coupon / 3 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

2 FREE Cokes
w/purchase of 2 Calzones
Coke or Diet Coke Only • One Coupon / 2 Zones
With this coupon • Exp 5/23/01
Must mention coupon when ordering
D.P. Dough • 256-1616

Atlantis
tue. SOFTER SIDE OF ELECTRONIC MUSIC WITH DJ BEN TAYLOR- NO COVER!
wed. WORLD RENOWNED DJ AND STELLAR PRODUCER, FOUNDER AND OWNER OF MINIMAL WAGE RECORDS, NYC
$5 DAVID HOLLANDS
thu. HIP HOP AND R&B WITH DJ
$2 SEMANTIK, NO COVER BEFORE 11
fri. HOUSE ON THE ROCKS WITH DJ
$2 HUSH & SIMI NO COVER BEFORE 11
sat. HIP HOP, R&B, REGGAE WITH DJ
$2 TRENDZ, NO COVER BEFORE 11
sun. B-SHIS BINS-GET DOWN WITH OLD SCHOOL FUNK & HIP HOP, NO COVER
DRINK SPECIALS!!
RED BULL AND VODKA $5.00
CORONA, HEINEKEN $2.50
BUD LIGHT 16 OZ DRAFT $1.50
BUD LIGHT PITCHER $5.00

ON FRIDAY OCTOBER 27, FIVE UMASS STUDENTS LOST THEIR HOME AT 57 SHUMWAY IN A TERRIBLE FIRE.
THE STAFF AND MANAGEMENT AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY WOULD LIKE TO OFFER ASSISTANCE BY DONATING 5% OF OUR SALES ON
WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 8
GROVE STREET WILL BE PERFORMING FROM 10:00PM TO 1:00AM
THERE WILL BE A $1.00 COVER CHARGE DONATED IN ADDITION TO OUR SALES.
THANK YOU FOR YOUR HELP.
co-sponsored by:
AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

■ reaction

continued from page 1

two major party candidates and was felt that the White House will be run the same way it has been during the past eight years. "They'll continue with the World Trade Organization," she said. "They'll the military budget, and it's really kind of sad."

Gonzalez said that the Green Party is not done with its conquest for recognition. "We'll continue on stronger than ever. We'll be working on state wide and national issues. We have a lot of support and people already. This office is filled with smiling faces and exciting people."

A smiling face was not what Mary Robinson displayed. She expressed concern about upcoming appointments to the Supreme Court, and how vital some of the swing votes would be. She pointed out that a Republican White House would certainly not be ideal, and she doesn't think that college students who vote conservative realize this.

"After Regan and Bush were in office, the damn economy collapsed," she said. "But your average 22 year old doesn't remember what it was like when he or she was six," she said.

Robinson said that though GEO (Graduate Employment Organization) is part of UAW (United Auto Workers), which is supporting Gore, GEO does not support him. "I think GEO members do not have a lot of expectations for either Bush or Gore," she said. "I don't agree with that."

Robinson showed contentment for Senator Edward Kennedy's reelection. She said he's a friend of labor, and a friend of higher education. "If you screw up higher education, you screw up everything," she said.

The expectations of a new presidential staff was quite varied. Gilchrist said she didn't know what to expect. While Robinson said she expects flowing in the economy.

On what he expects to see from our new president, Patrick Decourcy said, "I'd like to see a conservative cause." He wants lower taxes, more school choice and better foreign policy. Most of all, he wants unanimity. "I hope to see a staff that wants to unite America."

■ question 8

continued from page 1

"We supported the initiative because it will encourage charitable giving in Massachusetts," Vincent Loporchio, a spokesman for Fidelity Investments, told WBZ.

Opponents of the motion said that the proposal will allow rich people to set up their own charitable foundations and reap huge tax benefits by essentially donating money to themselves.

Underlying all three tax questions on yesterday's ballot (Questions 4, 6 and 8) was the concern that Massachusetts would have lost an estimated $2 billion in revenue if all three had passed. Some felt that this number would have put the state in fiscal jeopardy and started an economic downturn.

Question 4 passed and, as of press time, Question 6 was projected to be struck down by Massachusetts's voters.

■ question 3

continued from page 1

had alleged that passage of the question would have resulted in thousands of jobs lost in Massachusetts and over the state millions of dollars of revenue.

"Passage of Question 3 would've cost 12,000 jobs, and the state would've lose $290 million in revenues over the next ten years," according to Michael Muller, Press Secretary for the Massachusetts Animal Interest Coalition.

Muller also said that reports of the mistreatment of the racing dogs were completely false and that the dogs are continually monitored for health concerns.

"Never has there been a documented case of animal abuse in 65 years of dog racing in Massachusetts," Muller said.

"Veterinarians take care of the dogs and the State Police have a 10 person unit constantly surveying the dogs."

Supporters of Question 3 claimed that the greyhound racing industry admits to killing thousands of dogs each year nationwide, including in Massachusetts. And that dogs are killed when they stop turning a profit.

"The killing and cruelty of dog racing is now on trial, and the people of Massachusetts can vote directly on whether this form of gambling should be sanctioned by the Commonwealth," according to the yes on 3 website.

With 15 percent of voting precincts reporting results, 54 percent of Massachusetts voters had recorded a no vote on Question 3. With 39 percent of precincts reporting on Question 3, 33 percent of respondents registered a no vote.

JARET BARR / COLLEGIAN

Students turned out in great numbers to vote in yesterday's election at the Hampden dining commons.

All New. All Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt
Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
1 shirt per student
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Shop & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up.
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited

www.alltrue.com
watch search collect send score
Alltrue
Watch thousands of killer video clips at www.alltrue.com
made you look

Gay Jesus talk presented

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

The Stonewall Center is holding a panel discussion and open dialogue entitled, "Jesus Gay? Reactions to Corpus Christi," tomorrow evening from 6-8 p.m. in Campus Center 903. This event will focus on how gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender (GLBT) people can proclaim their identity as well as hold a relationship within their religious and spiritual beliefs.

During the spring semester of 1984, a series of homophobic incidents led to systematic research about heterosexism and homophobia at UMass. Through these incidents and research, the outcome was the creation of the Program for Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Concerns.

Established in the fall of 1985 as an administrative office in Student Affairs, this program was renamed the Stonewall Center: A Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay and Transgender Educational Resource Center. During the last 15 years the office has grown in size and serves the campus and surrounding community by providing cultural educational programming, video, audio, and text library holdings educational resources, referral, harassment and discrimination response, advocacy, training, support and community outreach through Blatant, the monthly newsletter and Queer, an activities and information list-serve for queer Western Massachusetts.

Through their programs and dedication, this program once being one of three, has helped open the doors to 92 centers now in existence on college campuses across the country.

On Oct. 21, the Hole in the Wall Players performed Corpus Christi, a play by Terrence McNally depicting the retelling of the 1990's play where Christ is a gay man, with 12 gay disciples, and the crucifiction illustrated as a hate crime. With an audience of close to 500 people, this play brought issues of hate and violence that confront GLBT people to the forefront of the public eye, and has inspired much of the reasoning for the panel discussion and open dialogue taking place tonight.

According to Jenny Martin, there is an extreme need for dialogue between religious groups and GLBT people on campus and in the community. A small aspect of the panel discussion will feature GLBT members of the community sharing their experiences, as people who identify with religion and spirituality in their lives.

"This program will be to bring an inter-campus dialogue on gay, lesbian and transgender issues within and among religious communities," said Martin. "We are hoping to extend this throughout next semester, and set up monthly meetings."

Because this will be an ongoing relationship between the religious community and GLTB, the hopes are high that this will stimulate conversation and bring to light many issues of concern. According to the Stonewall Center, every meeting will include the same groups, but the topics are still undecided.

Those attending the event will consist of students, religious community members, Religious Affairs Committee members, administrators, and religious student organizations.

Dean Meri Ryan, also views these subjects as essential to the greater understanding between GLTB and religious faith points of view. "We need to be as inclusive as we possibly can," said Ryan. "Some of the Chaplains in the religious communities have said that they look forward to this kind of dialogue."

Martin is confident that with the sharing of feelings and experiences revolving these issues, the GLTB and the religious community can find some solutions on how to go include all aspects of life.

"All ages will be attending, and we want to hear peoples experiences, and have the opportunity to think and find some kind of common ground that we can all work with," said Martin.

■ turnout

continued from page 3

Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals believe only benefits people at the expense of the dogs' welfare. Track owners and racing supporters point to the local economy that benefits from the presence of the dog tracks.

"My neighbor told me that he played the dogs' when I asked him to sign a petition," Casey recalled.

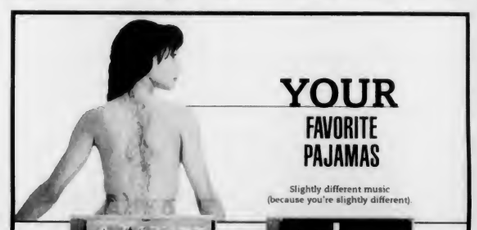
"I've seen some signs saying 'keep your rights.'" Alward described.

What they really doing is keeping their profits," Casey added in voicing her support of the motion.

Back in Amherst, Precinct Constable Betty Gagnon directed voters toward the right voter booths after determining which precinct residents lived in.

By mid afternoon more Nader/LaDuke and Question Three supporters had arrived.

"I voted [a greyhound] is eight and a half, rescued at two and a half," Midge Wyman, an Amherst resident, said as she paraded a greyhound with a 'Yes on 3' banner wrapped around its body.



YOUR FAVORITE PAJAMAS
Slightly different music (because you're slightly different).

AMEN
We Have Come For Your Parents
9.99

JUNIOR VASQUEZ
Twilo Vol. 1
13.99

MANTRA MIX
Various Artists
13.99

COVERED IN NAILS: A TRIBUTE TO NINE INCH NAILS
Various Artists
13.99

DANNY TENAGLIA
London
15.99 2-CD Set

JOHN DIGWEED
Sydney
15.99 2-CD Set

MINISTRY OF SOUND'S TRANCE NATION AMERICA
Various Artists
15.99 2-CD Set

SASHA
San Francisco
15.99 2-CD Set

MEDIA PLAY
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA. MediaPlay.com
Join Replay. The club that rewards your love of entertainment
Sale ends November 18, 2000
Cassettes available on select titles.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Election over
Action impeding

The election is over and all we can think to say is "Thank the Lord."

After witnessing two candidates, Republican George W. Bush and Democrat Al Gore, snipe at each other like a couple of junkyard dogs, while simultaneously being insulted by "Holier than Thou" Nader supporters and snickering at the sudden and extreme decline of the Reform Party, we're tired and we're ready to get this whole thing done with.

The sniping? Embarrassing.

The Nader attitude? Insulting.

The decline? Tremendous.

And while it's been a fun time for all of us, especially as a news organization, we're ready to get a fresh body into the White House in an attempt to keep this nation's wheels turning. Be it Bush or Gore, the next president isn't being given the key to a Corvair, he's getting a key to a beautiful Porsche. It's going to be his to wreck or steer into the clear blue open.

As for Nader and Buchanan - they had their time in the sun and Nader might have rounded up enough disenfranchised liberals to get his five percent and his matching funds. Buchanan brought his usual nastiness to the election, but thankfully got little press. And for both of them, it isn't the end of their political career. For Nader, it might just be the beginning and Buchanan will always have his hate-mongers attxious to hear his furious talk.

Yesterday's election also sent a message to our state legislators. Be it a clear message on the future of dog-racing or a clear message on the future of taxing, the residents of this state were given a chance to vote for what they wanted to see their government do.

But after all of this, after all campaigning and the advertisements and the rhetoric and the propaganda, it's so thankfully over. And now? Now, we can attempt to trust our government to carry through on the mandate that we've given it, be it the elimination of dog-racing or the need for a tax-cut or the founding of a statewide Health Care Council.

Because that's what all this discussion about issues, about character, about political platforms and about candidates comes down to: the duty of politicians to the people that elect them. Whether this duty is handed to Al Gore or George Bush or to Conrad Burns, a Republican State Senator from Montanna. They all have a duty.

It is absolutely incumbent for all politicians to work for the best interests of the people, to keep the people in mind throughout the political rhetoric of Washington and to try to uphold all of the promises they made to the people during this election year. If they don't, then all the campaign promises we've been hearing for months on end now will be nothing more than "talk." Talk doesn't get things done. Talk doesn't help people.

Lastly, it is absolutely incumbent on you, on the voters, not to stop your interest at yesterday's ballot box. It is important for you to continue your interest and involvement in the political process. Your voice, and others' like yours, can make a huge difference and it is your right to be heard by the people that represent you.

Your opinion
Issues and manners

To the editor:

Who is this Guillermo Fuentes and why does he think that the quality of entertainment is the essence of what's wrong with America?

I think that there are perhaps more poignant issues to discuss here than baseball team rivalries or which video games or cheesy 80s movies are the best. Who cares?

I think what's wrong with America is that thousands of people can spend weeks discussing and expressing their hatred for another city solely on the basis of a sporting event. Or that Nintendo had gripping and exciting games. Patience, my friends. The quality of our video games will improve eventually. As for our feelings toward the games of old: pure nostalgia. So you may have fond memories from your childhood, well, here are some creative ways to express your emotions without wasting space in a NEWS publication:

Dress up as your favorite Zelda character for Halloween.

Rent your favorite Karate Kid movie on a weekly basis. Or write a letter to Robert Zemekis begging him to shoot another installment (he won't).

Stop watching the Red Sox on TV and go down and fill up one of those seats there at Fenway Park and put some money directly into their pockets.

As for "What's wrong with America,' well, we'd have to actually look at some legitimate social and political issues to answer that question.

And if any of you really care about the land that you live in, get out and vote. Vote at every election, and vote for who you believe should win, not who the CNN or NBC polls tell you could win. You never know, if we all voted that way then perhaps who you think should win, could win.

Todd Hanaburgh
UMass

To the editor:

I get the Collegian mailed to me on a weekly subscription. I just finished reading the Oct. 26 edition. Anyway, a student in your article about the lack of fan support mentioned she might attend more games if she knew the schedule. The article also mentioned e-mail or voice mail may be used to distribute the basketball schedule.

Why don't you just put the schedule in the Collegian? And I don't mean once at the beginning of the season, I mean a summary of games for the next two or three days on a regular basis. Are the Collegian and the University at odds that much nowadays that they won't give you the schedules? Or would you refuse to print them? Unless things have drastically changed, a Collegian, either in print or electronic format, is close at hand to almost all UMass students.

Ed Dumas
Ch E '86

To the editor:

I am not normally one to write to a paper to complain about an editorial. As a writer and an advocate of free speech myself, but Sam Wilkinson's piece entitled, "Cheap rich kids" was so outrageous it demanded a response. Sam, your editorial was not entertaining – rather, it was a poorly written, disrespectful attempt to vent your own personal bitterness towards a large number of students who are obviously dedicated and intelligent enough to be where they are today.

What you seem not to understand is that individuals are accepted into universities, whether it be Amherst College or UMass, based on merit. In your ignorance, you disregard the number of students who are only able to attend Amherst College because of the financial aid and scholarships they receive, not because mommy and daddy have money growing on a tree next to the guest house. Since you seem to have been granted the authority to pinpoint two individuals' actions as representative of an entire university, who would you appoint as our UMass representatives? Maybe you'd choose yourself – an arrogant, whiney individual who is so dissatisfied with his own situation that he needs to criticize a group of absolute strangers in a desperate attempt to elicit a few laughs. Sam, a lot of hatred and criticism arises out of jealousy. Could that perhaps be the real issue here?

Keri Anestis
UMass

Fun with rivalries

DANA OPPEDISANO

The Ed/Op page is beginning to look more and more like a sports editorial section with each passing day, isn't it? In the past few weeks, you loyal Collegian readers have enjoyed (or not) countless pieces about the recently completed Subway Series, about how Boston fans hate New York sports and finally, about how UMass fans have no heart. In addition, you have read countless letters to the editor discussing the columnists and students who wrote those columns, calling them "Massholes," "jealous," and everything else in the book. I should take the opportunity here to note that, to my knowledge, there has never been a letter to the editor published in which someone has totally bashed something I have written. Feeling a little left out, I will now offer my opinion on the recent riots, as well as the war of words that is seemingly going on between Collegian columnists and readers, all the while completely aware that I am probably about to piss somebody off.

First of all, let me stress here that I love the Red Sox. I know, most of you Yankees fans are sitting there saying, "Oh god, here we go again" right now, and with good reason. Below the fold on the front page of last Wednesday's Collegian was a picture of the "riot" that followed the Yanks clinching 4-2 World Series victory over the Mets at Shea Stadium. I place the word "riot" in quotations because it seems to be of some debate as to whether or not you could actually classify the congregation of over 200 students at the pyramids in Southwest as an actual riot or not. UMass police chief John Luippold said that, "We haven't identified this as a riot. This was ta case of) students that were celebrating."

Riot or not, things did get a little out of hand. Two students were arrested, and accounts from others who were on hand "celebrating" said that students were crowd surfing, people were being hit with flying beer bottles and that Yankees towels and hats were being burned. The coverage in the Collegian said that the students were "chanting 'Yankees suck,' 'police suck,' and 'show me your tits.' "Now, anyone who may have seen me and my bos Rafael last summer at Woodstock '99 knows that I am in no position to chastise anyone for yelling "show me your tits!" (I was a little cocked at the time. I apologize to the women on campus who are now branding me sexist!, but towel burning and throwing glass bottles into a crowd? Either Yankees fans have a really strange way of celebrating, or my fellow Sox fans may have made their mark on this little celebration.

Now, I made sure to mention that I am a Sox fan earlier because, as such, I hate the Yankees. They are our rivals, and I wouldn't be a passionate baseball fan if I told you that I have ever liked a player wearing those damn pinstripes. Babe Ruth? Curse, my ass. I think Derek Jeter is the biggest pansy in baseball, and I don't give a damn how many years Roger Clemens busted his ass for the Sox, the day he said he would wear a Yankees uniform into the Hall of Fame was the day he may have sealed his fate as the biggest traitor in Sox history. I was just as pissed as anyone when the Yanks beat the Sox last year in the ALCS, and when Boston didn't get the wildcard this year, I instantly became an Athletics, Mariners and Mets fan (in that order, rooting for each to eliminate N.Y. from the postseason).

Needless to say, none of those teams did, and the Yankees went on to win their fourth title in five years, and their 26th overall. Now, you Yankees fans shouldn't be too offended by my hostile feelings toward your hatitude. Anyone who can honestly call himself an educated baseball fan understands the way we Sox fans feel about your beloved team. Likewise, I totally expect you guys to bash the Red Sox at every chance you get, and to relish in the fact that you have basically beaten our asses on a consistent basis (at least, when it matters) over the course of the past few years.

In short, I respect the Yankees. I hate them, but I respect them. You don't win four titles in five years without doing something right, and yeah, there is a tinge of jealousy in my voice there. Think about this for a second: if you're a Yankees fan, your 5 year-old cousin back home in Brooklyn has already seen more world championships than my grandfather has in his entire life. My grandfather is almost 80 freakin' years old! The man loves the Red Sox, and the closest he has ever been rolled between Buckner's legs back in '86. I'm only 20 years old, so clearly I don't understand the kind of frustration that builds after 82 years (1918, the last Red Sox title), but is it going to get any better? Sure, the Red Sox have been competitive over the past five years (one division title and two wild cards), but i'll bet my grandfather felt pretty good over the years watching Ted Williams, Yaz and Pudge Fisk, and look what it's gotten him.

Basically, we educated Red Sox fans respect the Yankees and admire what they've accomplished; but we still hate them. However, hearing about so-called riots, as well as reading a recent letter to the editor about a past Collegian column has got me shaking my head. This kid who wrote in said that "I even went to a party one time, and some guy said he couldn't talk to me anymore once he found out I was from New York. That kid is a real winner." Basically, I agree with that sentiment. I hate the Yankees, but I also think throwing a beer bottle off some kid who's wearing a Dave Justice jersey's head gives us Red Sox fans a bad name.

I remember watching Pedro throw a gem at Fenway against the Indians back in May, and halfway through the game (mind you, a little more than a month into the season, hardly enough time for a serious pennant race), hearing "Yankees Suck!" echoing through the bleachers. My friend, who's a die-hard Sox fan, said he couldn't believe it when, in the middle of the 2nd quarter of a Pats exhibition game back in August, the entire section busted out "Yankees Suck!" I think that chanting "Yankees suck" at a football game is going a little over the top, don't you? I'm curious to know whether Jets fans are sitting in the middle of a crucial division game against the Dolphins, and suddenly feel the urge to bust out a "Red Sox blow!" chant.

In short, the Yankees-Red Sox rivalry is probably the best in all of professional sports. Hearing a Sox fan blast the Yanks (or vice-versa) is part of what makes the national past time great, and we shouldn't be so quick to judge someone for talking a little trash. At the same time, if you're immature enough to steal someone's towel and burn it (and subsequently be arrested for pulling such an idiot stunt), or stop talking to someone because you find out they live a block from the Stadium, you're taking what's supposed to be a game just a tad too far. Yeah, that means you, the guy at halftime of last Saturday's football game against Nova who started the chant. I hope I haven't pissed anyone off too much, and I already can't wait for the 2001 baseball season to kick off. Bruins-Rangers just isn't the same, since they both suck, and besides, next year the Sox should kick some serious ass. After all, the Yankees do suck, hehe.

Dana Oppedisano is a Collegian columnist.

A polite death threat

RYAN BENHARRIS

At 3:30 a.m. on Friday Nov. 3, 2000 I received a death threat. It wasn't the first death threat that I've ever received. It has happened before. Nevertheless, it was a full-fledged, no holds barred, out and out threat on my life. It was not cool.

Much like Bubba said about shrimp in Forrest Gump, we have all kinds of death threats. There are mail death threats, phone death threats, e-mail death threats, barbeque death threats, death threat scamps. Barbequed death threats taste the best! If you don't think this can't occur, buy a bottle of Bulls eye. That stuff is hostile.

My death threat was old-fashioned style. As I mentioned before, it happened at 3:30 a.m. My phone rang while I was sleeping. I awoke from my dream about being married to Katie Holmes and owning a yacht on "Ryan's Creek", and attempted to answer it. Unfortunately, the mixture of my half awareness with my anger for not being married to Katie Holmes anymore, I couldn't get to the phone in time.

To the overpowering force who created voice mail, I salute you. Without voice mail, the wonderful death threateners would have had to try again another night. Thanks to the glory of technology, they were able to commit the heinous act without ever having to speak a word to me.

The message was verbatim: "(Person 1 with a voice that made me think he was Tone Loc) My roommate wants to talk to you. Hold on a minute please. (Person 2: Otherwise known as 'the whisper king') "Here's what I think of your reviews. They suck! Yeah, that's right. Kill, kill, kill you. Eminem. Eminem. Eminem, he wants everybody to kill. He wants everybody to kill. Rollin, Rollin, Rollin." (Tone Loc). "Limp Bizkit is the greatest music of this generation." (Heard in background) "Tell him." (Whisper King). "N'Sync and the Back-street Boys rule!" (Everyone). "I am whatever you say I am. If I wasn't then why would I say I am. I sit back with this pack of zig zees and the weed...WHAT?"

I guess you really can't get the full extent of how messed up the message actually was unless you hear it. Call me if you want, I've got it saved. It's brilliant.

First, I'd like to point how incredibly polite these gentlemen were. "My roommate has something to say to you please." Aww, he said please. His mommy raised him right. When I was young, I was also told never to threaten anyone's life without being a complete gentleman. I'm a big fan of manners, so I really appreciate your courtesy kind sir. I wonder if the Unibomber said "please" in any of his letter bombs.

"Limp Bizkit is the greatest music of this generation." Yeah, and Fred Durst is the greatest entertainer since Charlie Chaplin.

"Eminem wants everybody to kill." Then it should be a law dammit! I'm calling the Oval Office right now, and telling the president, "Eminem wants everybody to kill." So you need to put it right there in the Constitution. "Everybody must kill." If you need room, just white out that stuff about freedom of speech. Eminem's freedom of murder is so much more important. Of course, I'll remember to say "please."

"N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys rule!" When I first heard this, I figured that my fifteen-year old sister had payed off some idiots to deliver subliminal messages in my sleep. Well, it worked! I'm convinced Mr. Death Threateners that N'Sync and the Backstreet Boys do rule. They're so incredibly talented. Every time I hear "Quit Playing Games with My Heart," I get on my knees and pray that Elvis be allowed to come back to life just to enjoy the blissful delight that these wonderful musicians bring to us all. If I had to choose between donating money to feed a starving in Rwanda, and buying the new N'Sync album, all I can say is, "Buy, Buy, Buy!"

My point in a previous article was not to prove that Eminem or Limp Bizkit do not produce good music. I've said this a million times; I like Eminem and Limp Bizkit! Eminem's new album has been in my stereo since the day I bought it, and Limp Bizkit's Significant Other is one of my favorite albums from the past few years.

My argument was that it is not cool to call women "hitches" and homosexuals "faggots." For some reason, the nitwit crew interpreted it as "I don't like Eminem or Limp Bizkit."

I guess the most obvious fact to take into effect is that these guys were clearly intoxicated when they called. What frightens me is that they still had the functional ability to pick up a phone book, look up my name and threaten my life. Quite simply, that is scary. It may be something that they would not do if they were not under the influence, but as it was once said, "A drunk man's words are a sober man's thoughts." So I'm sure that this idea did not just come out of the blue.

The funniest part of the message came right at the end, while he was displaying an incredible amount of free-style rap talent with Eminem's "The Way I am." If you live on campus, you'll know that the voice mail system only lets you record for one minute. After around fifty seconds into the message, there are two consecutive beeps that signal the caller that it is time to shut up and hang up. This guy was so drunk that when the two beeps came, he was caught off guard, and the last thing you hear him scream is "What?!" The he gets cut off.

So why write an article? Well, that's what I do. I'm a columnist, and when something happens to me, I write about it. I probably will never know who did this, and I really don't care. A lot of people have encouraged me to call the police and file a report because it is clearly harassment of an obviously argumentative nature. I've got the message saved on the archives, just in case. I'm not going to file anything though. I guess all I can do is quote Lawrence Taylor from The Waterboy. This entire situation brings me to a very important point. "Don't smoke crack."

In all seriousness, this behavior is not okay. I guess that's what happens when I put myself in the public eye though. I'll take it with a grain of salt.

However, to the brainless alcoholics that called me at 3:30 a.m. I am sure of one thing. If you try it again, I'm calling the cops.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

BET is W-H-I-T-E

is African-American ownership of media possible in this global economy? The end of an era came about last Thursday as Robert Johnson sold Black Entertainment Television to Viacom for nearly $5 billion. Viacom, for those who do not know, is the multination media conglomerate whose assets include CBS, Paramount Studios and MTV. BET's founder, Robert L. Johnson, will remain the company's chairman and chief executive of operations as will BET president, Debra Lee. But ownership is now in the hands of Viacom. There are many factors that made this sale inevitable and many more likely to come.

BET is available in 62.4 million of the 75 million homes that have cable. Blacks are also 13 percent of the population. BET owns a jazz channel and a premium movie channel with Starz as well as its successful flagship station. This station is among the most influential in the music industry. With this said, a person would think that BET was making money hand over fist. But it is not, it is actually half a billion in the red. Here's why: A study by the FCC last year revealed that advertisers spend only a fraction of their revenue on black-owned media as it does for white-owned stations of comparable ratings and even similar formats. African-American entrepreneurs have to sell their media because advertisers avoid all that is black-owned.

What we can look forward to now is nothing more than "Corporate Blackface." White-owned media outlets with "black" programming. A white owner will decide what we want and what is best for us. If you think that elimination of minority-edited diversity pages is bad, this trend will bring you to your knees. Imagine a world like the one in Spike Lee's Bamboozled in which minstrel shows become the rage. Ask your grandparents about the days of "Amos N' Andy" and Buckwheat front the "Little Rascals." It is bad enough that the only representation that we receive is as five-talking sidekicks or on the sub-par programming on the WB.

It is debatable whether Robert L. Johnson is a sell-out or just plain desperate. Johnson is no stranger to being prostituted. Just months ago the BET founder allowed white businessmen to use him by making him "owner" of an airline so they could benefit from tax break for minority-owned companies. Of course, Johnson does not really own it, or even have much of a say. Johnson has spent his career trying to court whites and at times, even criticized black culture to do it. This deal is no different.

It is, however, traitorous for Mr. Johnson to have sold the only black-owned cable network to folks who will make it MTV3. Goodbye Cita, hello Daria. Carson Daly will probably take over Rap City for Big Tigger. BET will be as real as Jam'n 94.5.

Others are guilty of selling out our culture, too. Russell Simmons sold his stake in Def Jam to Uni Corporation and radio stations all across America have sold out to white radio chains. Sure there is financial pressure for the last buck, but at what cost? People of color need to come together and start acting like brothers and sisters. We need to support our networks, our radio stations, our authors and our diversity pages. There isn't a medium that we cannot denominate with our pure numbers alone. We should organize and boycott these racist advertisers if they don't want us then we don't want them. Let's keep our voices heard.

Anything Sound Funny to You?

TANEKA MILLER

• 70 percent of the people stopped on the New Jersey Turnpike are Black, but Black drivers only make up 10 percent of the motorists on that Turnpike.

• Cocaine is historically known as a "White" drug while crack is known as a "Black" drug. For powder cocaine, a conviction of possession with intent to distribute carries a five-year sentence for quantities of 500 grams or more. But for crack, a conviction of possession with intent to distribute carries a five-year sentence for only 5 grams.

• Approximately 2/3 of crack users are white or Hispanic, yet the vast majority of persons convicted of possession in federal courts are Black.

• As of 1996, Blacks and Latinos made up 25 percent of New York's general population, but constituted over 85 percent of the people indicted for drug felonies, and 85 percent of (6 overall prison population).

• Blacks make up 13 percent of monthly drug users. Whites represent 74 percent of users and Hispanics 9 percent.

• According to a recent study published by The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of more than 180 national organizations committed to the protection of civil and human rights in the United States:

• Blacks who killed whites were sentenced to death 22 times more frequently than blacks that killed blacks and seven times more frequently than whites that killed blacks.

• Although blacks and whites have approximately the same rate of drug use, blacks constitute more than a third of those arrested for drug offenses and 59 percent of those convicted of drug offenses.

• From 1986 to 1991, arrests of white juveniles for drug offenses decreased 34 percent, while arrests of minority juveniles increased 78 percent. Similar disparities appear in relation to non-drug-related crimes.

• A study conducted in the early 1990s by the New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services concluded that one-third of minorities sentenced to prison would have received a shorter or non-incarcerate sentence if they had been treated like similarly situated white defendants.

• Federal prison sentences overall, after implementation of the new federal sentencing guidelines are almost fifty percent longer for Blacks than Whites.

• Nearly one and a half million Black men have lost their right to vote because of felony disenfranchisement, further building minority cynicism in the fairness of both government and the criminal justice system.

• Nearly 74 percent of all those deported by the Immigration and Naturalization Service are of Mexican origin even though INS figures show that Mexicans are less than half of all undocumented people in the U.S.

• Hispanics represent the fastest growing group being imprisoned. Between 1985 and 1995, rates have more than doubled. And, the Asian American population in federal prisons has quadrupled in the past twenty years.

• Because crimes committed on Indian reservations often fall within federal jurisdiction, about 60 percent of youths in federal custody are Native American. There, they face penalties that are often far harsher than those meted out in state court. These are just a few interesting tidbits for everyone to think a little about.

Taneka Miller is a UMass student

This ain't a urinal fellas

Students showed up at the Hampden voting station to cast their ballots in yesterdays election

PUT UP OR SHUT UP!
TIME IS RUNNING OUT TO WRITE
FOR BLACK AFFAIRS.
FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL LENNY 545-1762
OR EMAIL BLACKAFFAIRS@YAHOO.COM

Did you vote?

Andrea Smith
John Adams
Graduate Student – Neuroscience

"I would have if you were a citizen. It's your freedom. If you don't, you don't have [freedom]."

Irene Shaikly
Off-Campus
Senior – Sociology

"No. I was too late to vote, but I would've voted for Nader, baby."

Toni Haskins
John Adams
Senior – Comm./English

"Yes, I did, because It's important for African-Americans to vote. Maybe then we can see some progress in our community."

Mary Donovan
Off-Campus
Senior - BA/Comm.

"I did. I didn't really like either candidate, but I voted for the lesser of two evils."

Hakeem Springer
Central
Sophomore – HRTA

"Yes. Everyone's lying, but I picked Nader. Bush and Gore are garbage."

PHOTOS BY TIBORA GRCEVIC-BLUM

BEST OF Y2G
Submit your favorite movies, songs and T.V. shows to BLACKAFFAIRS @YAHOO.COM.
SEE THE RESULTS SOON...

Noho Film Festival unearths humor, drama, and new talent

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

THE NORTHAMPTON FILM FESTIVAL
Sponsored by Mass. Smith College
Nov. 1-Nov. 5

Unique, eclectic, original: all words to describe Northampton and, fittingly, the annual Northampton Film Festival, which made things even more energetic in the buzz college town this past weekend.

COURTESY OF NBC-UNIVERSAL

Jill Hennessy, formerly of Law and Order, wrote and directed The Acting Class.

Shown Nov. 1 through Nov. 5, The Noho Fest champions independent films that may be a little different a little odd – but mostly just plain good. Take for instance Evil Bill (dir. by Ryan Schifrin), a film which imagines how Dr. Evil of Mike Myers' Austin Powers actually became evil. Straight out of the plot of Nutting Hill, he meets Marilyn Monroe in a book store one day in 1961. Hies strike up a loving affair, but she leaves him for John F. Kennedy and Dr. Evil is heartbroken and pissed off. The film retains all the bizarre humor of Austin Powers, but also adds a refreshing, beautifully sad aftertaste of unrequited love.

In fact, beautifully sad was the general theme of the films. There was Look Back, Don't Look Back (dir. by Randy Bell, Justin Rice), an adventurous documentary that follows two students' ultimately doomed efforts to interview Bob Dylan. Look Back, Don't Look Back has a distinctly amateurish, unfocused quality that works against it in the first 15 minutes. But in the last 15 minutes, it achieves a tremendous feeling of desperation that we've all sensed when trying to communicate with our heroes.

Perhaps the most powerful film of the festival – certainly the most haunting – was The Final Resolution (dir. by Gregg Simon, Brett Katz), filmed entirely without dialogue, only focusing on the precious body language of the main actors. The film involves a husband who sees a familiar face on the train, and has flashbacks to the Holocaust, when the mysterious man beat him and killed his lover.

On a lighter note, the big grandaddy, the unofficial opener to the Festival, was undoubtedly Disney's Unseen Treasures, a mammoth collection of old archived footage from Disney's library vaults. In three hours, patient viewers were treated to a plethora of old press conferences, deleted scenes, old training footage and abandoned projects in Disney's Golden Era of 1930-1950.

Some of these were absolutely breathtaking – the original trailer for Bambi, which marketed Disney's classic cartoon as an adult love story like Gone With the Wind; the gorgeous, quiet musical number Clair du Lune, based on Debussy, that was cut from Fantasia; an abandoned project between Disney and surrealist master Salvador Dali; and old cartoons and cartoon sketches that had never been seen before. One of the most interesting parts of this display were candid shots of Walt Disney himself – playing baseball, attending press conferences or practicing the voice for Mickey Rarely have we seen a celebrity more relaxed and unrehearsed.

For comedy, the NoHo film fest provided movies like The Acting Class (dir. by Elizabeth Holder and Jill Hennessy), a biting, frequently hilarious mockumentary in the tradition of This is Spinal Tap and Waiting for Guffman. The film follows two girls on their quest to find out the definitive genius of modern-day acting. They stumble upon Ken Lapoubelle, an acting teacher who wears a shirt labeled "Visionary," and verbally abuses his students in class. Ken, it seems, is kind of a legend – and the two students interview a variety of sarcastic former acting students of Ken's, as well as sit in on his see-it-to-believe-it classes. There are some great lines – one of Ken's former students, when asked what Ken has done for acting, replies, "That's like asking what God has done for the Earth."

Apparently, director Hennessy – who also does a brilliant job playing the sexually insane student Amanda Smythe – got the inspiration for the film from real life.

"I lived it," she said in the post film Q & A session. The film also included celebrity cameos that were actually funny from Alec Baldwin, Regina King, Benjamin Bratt and others.

Other highlights of the festival included Two Degrees (dir. by Sarah Burns), another silent film that looks at a cold day and a mistaken car. And Pop Gun (dir. by Scott Pittock), a flimsy but briefly funny parody of the French New Wave films.

COURTESY OF THE WALT DISNEY COMPANY

Walt Disney's Unseen Treasures were revealed to the public at the Northampton Film Festival.

Napster charter shifts in big money merge

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

Last Tuesday Bertelsmann CEO Thomas Middelhoff and Napster CEO Hank Barry announced a "Strategic alliance" in the works for the two companies.

And so it goes. Another merger. Crazy media giant picks up smaller company while it exhibits potential to make big money.

Their intentions are always suspect. But their public statements always ramshod, and with the best interest of users in mind.

Bertelsmann plans to "loan" Napster $80 million to help build its current platform into a more advanced program. The German born company wants to see Napster fly all it can be.

And why wouldn't? Since the program – arrived a little over a year ago, support for Napster has overwhelmed its opposition. From Chuck D to the poor college student, champions of the digital revolution have made Napster an Internet outlaw turned hero in the media's coverage of the ongoing legal debate.

Until now Napster hasn't seemed to mind wearing that mask. But the impending collaboration with Bertelsmann threatens it and the users of Napster.

But for now, all is well. These changes won't take place for at least a few months, as is the nature of such things. Until then, Napster's service is running and still free for all.

In the interim we need a Napster copy that has remained underground and unnoticed to surface. Now that the possibility to share MP3s on a platform as comprehensive as Napster's has been revealed, there is no turning back. The only trait that has made Napster remarkable among its siblings (Scour.com, Gnutella, etc.) is sheer numbers. The amount of people logging on daily and the RIAA and media's subsequent attention has created what it is today. Certainly not its incapacity to be replicated.

So now, before digital openness and the inevitable wave of change in how we buy and sell music is abated, another bored computer programmer must design a platform which guarantees all that Napster has established for us. Immediate, free, illegal, and widely embraced satisfaction.

Incidentally, owns BMG Music Company, one of five major record distributors that have filed a lawsuit against Napster through the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA).

Middelhoff has promised that once the Napster-Bertelsmann loveliest goes live, BMG will pull out of the RIAA's joint case. Although that doesn't put an end to Napster's legal woes, it does help. Middelhoff has also said that he plans to talk to his buddies Steve Case (AOL's man who will soon play a major in role in Warner music, another one of the RIAA's illustrious five) and Jean Marie Messier (who will soon run Seagram's Universal music, also in cahoots with the RIAA).

This reeks of corporate sponsorship. It's hard to not perceive this as Napster selling out to protect its copyright infringing little self from the big bad recording industry and the even bigger, badder legal system. The enthusiasm for the service is destined to decline in numbers as Napster T-shirts and stuffed animals spill out of corporate owned music stores.

Euphone's jazz, one more time

By Amanda Fazzone
U-WIRE [U-WIRE]

NEW YORK – Still mourning the Phish hiatus? Looking for another rock band with jammy jazz tendencies? You might want to check out Chicago instrumental band Euphone's sophomore effort, Hashin' It Out (Jade Tree Records).

Think of 6-year-old Euphone as the Traveling Wilburys of Chicago's indie jazz/art rock scene. Originally the solo project of drummer/multi-instrumentalist Ryan Rapsys, Euphone's permanent lineup now includes bassist Nick Macri. In concert and on the album, however, the band brings on some well-known kingpins of Chicago's indie music community: Jeremy Jacobsen of the Lonesome Organist and Sive Style, Tim Kinsella of Joan of Arc, Dan Fliegel of The Eternals, LeRoy Bach of Wilco and Sive Style and Dan Bitney of both Isotope 217 and reigning reconsters, Tortoise.

Though the album is an eclectic sampling of trip-hoppy vocalized tracks, Latin-influenced rumpshakers and vibe-heavy solos, their live show is as danceable as any jam band's. Lucky for you, Euphone's recorded tracks also capture the spontaneity of the concert setting, adding such varied instruments as clavinet, fariisa, alto sax, conga, talking drum and sleigh bells.

Kicking off with the eerie moonscape vocals of "Gyrations," a sort of prelude to the album, it doesn't take long to catch on to Euphone's unquestionable technical prowess. Drawing the listener in with the hoe-down-worthy jazz licks of "Press On," the band drives forward into a song-within-a-song, replete with a gorgeous vibes solo. Launching into a heart-thumping drum break, Rapsys proves that his masterful songwriting also translates to impressive performance.

In "Where's the B?" a spacey synthesizer and driving funk bass give Euphone a more mainstream edge. Rockabilly phobes may be put off at first by Latin-influenced jamboree "Bad Ascending." But Euphone, even at its most countrified, keeps the level of moody guitar necessary to maintain its membership in Chicago's emo-heavy indie rock clique.

We test our system: you get free therapy.

"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."

Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.

If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.

visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.

webtherapy.com

COURTESY OF THE MOUNT HOLYOKE DEPARTMENT OF THEATER

But I Didn't Use Your Toothbrush!

Mount Holyoke's Department of Theater brings Yerma to the Rooke Theater Nov. 9 through Nov. 12.

Hey, Kids!

Arts and Living is looking for writers interested in covering art galleries and Music and Dance department events.

Gain fantastic resume experience. Get clips for job interviews. Meet lots of interesting people. Eat Wings in the Collegian office every night.

Come down to our office in the Campus Center Basement and ask for Ryan or Kristi.

Fairfield U s net gains too much for Minutewomen

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

Sometimes when a team fights at a high pace, it runs out of gas before the match is over.

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team (12-13, 8-6 A-10) had exactly that happen to it last night at the Curry Hicks Cage, as it ran out of momentum in the fifth game of its five-set loss to Fairfield (7-15, 15-12, 14-16, 15-11, 6-15).

"I thought we hung in there really well until the fifth game," UMass coach Bonnie Kenny said. "Then Joanne Saunders took the match over all by herself."

The fifth game ended with Stags team leader Corrine Carlson combining with Becky Guess for a block of UMass attacker Jen Davis. Saunders had three kills in the final frame, notching 28 for the match. Carlson finished with 22 kills, 19 digs and four assisted blocks on the night.

The Maroon and White started rally scoring with two consecutive points, but it was pretty much all Fairfield (23-5, 9-0 MAAC) from that point on, the Minutewomen getting left in the dust of a five-point run that left them down 12-5 in the game.

The fourth game of the night saw the Minutewomen fall behind early, with a Saunders kill dropping them in a 6-1 hole. But after a timeout, the Maroon and White regrouped, and fought through multiple side-outs to tie the game up at 6-6. The two teams fought back and forth, but after a bump by Carlson that went into the stands, UMass took an 11-8 lead. They would turn away a Stag rally, winning the game on one of senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson's 17 kills of the night.

"[The Stags] haven't been challenged a whole lot in their conference and I thought we were right where we needed to be if we were to come out more aggressive," Kenny said.

Game three too saw the home squad fall behind early, this time by a count of 7-3. But they would hang tough, and after back-to-back kills by Hasson, they took the lead at 11-10. But with UMass up 14-13, Carlson took the game into her own hands, killing three consecutive points to win the game 16-14.

In the second game of the contest, the Maroon and White came out strong and worked hard to build an 11-6 lead. However, the Stags ran off four points in a row to narrow the gap to 11-10. The game ended when Fairfield's setter Meghan Mahaffy made an uncharacteristic error, as she was called for a carry. Mahaffy finished with 81 set assists on the night.

Jenni Drennan

The initial game of the night had the Minutewomen leading 6-5 early in the contest. But the big guns took over for the Stags, and they would allow only a block by Lymarie Llovet and Clare Baxter as they ended the game on a 10-1 run.

"They were good enough that we couldn't even contain them. They're a good balanced attack, a good team."

The win drops the Minutewomen back below the .500 mark, but the key matches will be this weekend, as the Maroon and White faces off A-10 foes LaSalle and Temple. UMass is now a half game behind Dayton for the fourth spot in the A-10, the spot that is the cutoff for the conference tournament. Dayton knocked off Duquesne last night and has a match against conference power George Washington this weekend.

"They're not going to let this wreck what we have to do in conference to take care of this weekend," Kenny said. "If we can learn from it we'll be OK."

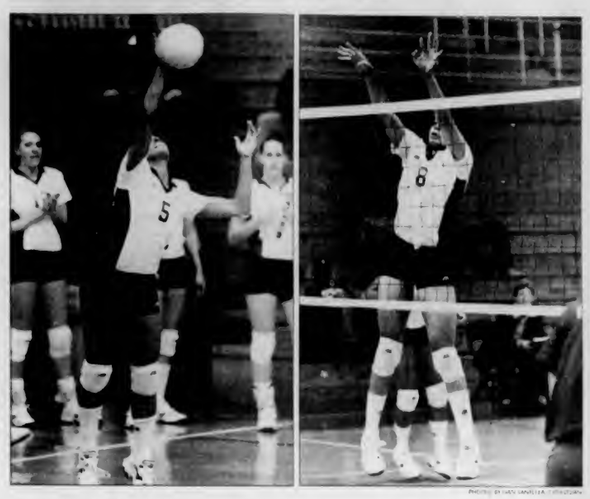

PHOTO BY DAN MARSTER / COLLEGIAN

Lymarie Llovet [left], Rebecca Hasson [right] and the rest of the UMass volleyball team took on Fairfield last night in a non-conference affair.

Miracle on Ice leads to homegrown success in pros

Over the dirt roads and paved highways, spanning the largest cities and the smallest towns, every man, woman and child had a voice, as an entire nation united in a mantra of U-S-A, U-S-A!

The hymn of a country was not only heard by the citizens of Lake Placid, New York but by the entire populace of the United States of America.

In the winter Olympics of 1980, a bunch of college kids from states such as Wisconsin, Massachusetts and Minnesota defeated the ice hockey machine from the Soviet Union. Bay State native Mike Eruzione scored the game-winner in a 4-3 semifinal victory for the Americans, immediately lifting U.S. hockey into the view of the public.

If there are any doubts about the importance of this game consider this – the Russians had not lost an Olympic game since 1964, they hadn't lost the gold medal since 1960, they had just recently beaten a team consisting of professional hockey's best players, and just 13 days earlier they had crushed the same American team 10-3 at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

This game is arguably the greatest upset in sports history, but what is not debated is how much it did for the sport of hockey in this country. Until 1980 there were only the big three – baseball, football and basketball. Now hockey is often if not always mentioned in the same breathe as this countries other athletic passions.

Due to this growing interest in hockey, spurned by the "Miracle on Ice," the United States is not just competitive, but a threat to take home the spoils in every international competition.

In 1996, professional players from eight different countries competed in the first annual World Cup of Hockey. The Americans made it to the finals where they would face Canada in a three game series starting in Philadelphia.

The Canadians took the first game in Philly while the Americans took the second in Montreal. In the rubber game, Canada went into the third period up two goals. The United States stormed back and won it on a goal by Tony Amonte that may or may not have went in off his foot.

The victory, although largely unnoticed by the public and the media, showed how far U.S. hockey has come since the stunning upset in 1980.

Once a largely Canadian league with Europeans scattered about, 15-percent of NHL players are now U.S. born. The United States is now a hot spot for some of the most talented and physically gifted hockey players in the world. A fact that can be clearly seen in any live game, box score or league leaders chart.

Jeremy Roenick has been one of the most productive U.S. natives in the last 10 years, as he is the only American player ever to tally 100 points in three straight seasons. Joe Mullen became the first homegrown American to score 500 career goals. Chris Chelios has been a perennial all-star and combined with Brian Leetch to set the standard for future blue-liners wearing the stars and stripes.

Leetch became the first U.S. born player to win the Conn Smythe Trophy for Most Valuable Player in the playoffs. He accomplished this feat in 1994 when he helped lead the Rangers to their first Stanley Cup in 54 years. Mike Richter and John Vanbiesbrouck have been stellar between the pipes, representing the Red, White and Blue in the Olympics and in the World Cup.

On a yearly basis, Americans take home some of the leagues most prestigious hardware, including the Norris Trophy for best defenseman, which has been won numerous times by both Leetch and Chelios. The Calder Trophy for Rookie of the Year has been won by Boston University product Chris Drury, as well as Bryan Berard. Tom Barasso has also taken home the Vezina Trophy for best goaltender.

Not only are Americans contending for postseason accolades, but they are regularly among the league leaders in every statistical category. As of today, three of the top 10 scorers are U.S. born, as are eight of the top 30. Doug Weight, Bill Guerin and Roenick lead the way with 19 points each placing them fourth in the league. Massachusetts native Scott Young leads the league with 12 goals at the outset of this young season. Leetch is presently first in the NHL in defensemen scoring with 17 points.

The increase in talent and quantity among the American hockey community shows no signs of slowing down, in fact all arrows are pointing upwards as younger players are stepping to the forefront. Drury and the Rangers' Mike York are having stellar beginnings to their young careers while the Blues' Brent Johnson is 5-0, and among the goaltending leaders in relief of all-star Roman Turek.

American born players have also done their share to change the game as many of the NHL's top players can be classified as the quintessential power forward. Philadelphia's John LeClair, a Vermont native, and Phoenix's Keith Tkachuk are commandeers of a new breed of player.

LeClair and Tkachuk represent the incoming generation of lethal forwards who can shred defenses with strength and finesse but also bang bodies with the league's biggest and toughest defenseman. These players are bred to survive in the trenches, as the power forward is almost immovable when their parking brake is put on in front of the opposing net. A good power forward can cause chaos in front of the net and can be a force in the corners; a good power forward characterizes the essence of American hockey.

It is evident that the United States is now capable of producing some of the best players in the world. Although they are not produced at the same rate of Canadian players, there is certainly no skill drop off as the brothers in the north now have some significant competition in the elite of the NHL, and they bleed Red, White and Blue.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

"The first thing I wanted to do was tell the student body that we're thankful for them coming out and supporting us," Cahoon said. "Now that we have numbers and interest [in the program], I hope there will be a unified effort by the student body and the families that attend the games].

"To feel the energy that the crowd creates is great. The fact that [the team] has that much support really helps."

Goals at a Premium

Last year the phrase "goals at a premium" would have been taken as, "any time that the puck found the back of the net it was a plus."

This year that phrase can be thrown away as the Minutemen have posted 26 goals through seven games. It took the Maroon and White 10 games to amass that total in the 1999-2000 campaign. Fifteen of those 26 goals last season came in games eight (7-4 win vs. UConn), nine (3-3 tie vs. Vermont) and ten (5-1 vs. Union).

Hail to the Band

Becoming more of a college hockey environment. That is one of the things that will make the Mullins Center a tough place to play. The first step has been put into place to make this possible – the introduction of the band.

For the first time in the program's history there has been a pep band that plays at games. The elite programs in the country have one, and that is where this team wants to be. UMass is taking the necessary steps into making this program a force to be reckoned with.

■ Shipp

continued from page 10

single game rushing total in UMass history.

"Our line did a Hell of a job against Maine that day," Shipp said. "I had an 80-yard run where I wasn't even touched once. We were out there having fun, and winning at the same time. That's always a plus."

The jewel in Shipp's sophomore year crown, however, came in the NCAA Championship game against Georgia Southern. Picked as underdogs to the mighty Eagles, the Minutemen came in with cool confidence and cruised to victory behind a 244-yard, three-touchdown showcase from Shipp.

"We went into that game with nothing to lose," Shipp said. "We had a great tone, approaching it like any other game. Then everything came together; the offensive line blocked great and opened up the passing game, and we had the running game going on from the beginning. We were ready to play."

Coach Whipple is nothing short of blunt when it comes to assessing Shipp's part in UMass' Cinderella season.

"Nobody would be wearing rings around here if it weren't for Marcel," Whipple said.

Shipp picked up right where he left off once the '99 campaign rolled around. He started every game of the year, and stockpiled 1,853 more rushing yards and 25 touchdowns on his way to a sixth-place finish in the Payton Award voting. The two most memorable outings of the year, a home victory over UConn and a first-round playoff win at Furman, gave Shipp a wealth of satisfaction even as he padded his stats.

"It felt great to beat UConn," said Shipp, who pushed the Huskies around for 150 all purpose yards and three scores. "We knew going in that they'd beaten us the two times before, so we were really up for that game. We just took it to 'em."

Shipp's rampage against Furman (170 rushing yards, 2 TD's) put a literal exclamation point on his season, as he plunged in from one yard out with the winning score in overtime. Again he credited his line, the whole of which garnered A-10/I-AA UMass Player of the Week honors following the game.

"A lot of people look at it like I did all that on my own," Shipp said. "But my linemen are the ones who open up the holes for me. I just run through them."

This season Shipp has experienced a bittersweet mix of excellence and injury. He has continued to put up the numbers (seven games with triple-digit rushing yards), but a high-ankle sprain has hampered both his practice time and his game output. According to his coach, how he has handled his health problems is a true testament to No. 5's mettle.

"Marcel has been hobbled all year and he hasn't complained once. I think that speaks volumes about his character," Whipple said. "But he's gotten a little better each week, and 60 to 70 percent of Marcel Shipp is better than most other backs. I wouldn't trade him for anybody."

Luckily, this Shipp is docked at UMass for the long haul. On at least until he can get another taste of sweet postseason victory.

"I'm just concentrating on getting this team back to the playoffs," Shipp said. "I'm all about getting wins for this team; that's it."

...write for Collegian Sports

Start saving for Spring Break!!

Work for the ...PVTA

Drive a bus

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
Student Travel Services
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com
Or-sample contact Josh @ 413-549-4514

haircuts ★ colors ★ highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
perms ★ tanning ★ facial waxing

Burton Forum K2 Santa Cruz
A SNOWBOARD SHOP
Gear-up to Get Down
THIS WINTER
Rt. 5 Easthampton
(413) 586-4766
Oxygen Four Square Bonfire

Never Summer Ride
See us at the UMass Ski n' Board Club Sale in the Student Union Ballroom
Thu 11/9 12-8
Fri 11/10 12-8
Sat 11/11 11-5
Rt. 83 East Longmeadow
(413) 781-5142
Special Blend Salomon

FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
LIVE, STUDY AND WORK ABROAD WHILE EARNING COLLEGE CREDIT
• Year and semester-long programs in JAPAN, CHINA, ISRAEL, INDIA, ENGLAND OR COSTA RICA.
• Year-long program in Comparative Religion & Culture in TAIWAN, THAILAND, INDIA and ISRAEL
Experiential learning through cultural immersion, academic seminars, and independent field study makes Friends World the educational experience of a lifetime.
(631) 287-8474
e-mail: fw@southampton.liunet.edu
www.southampton.edu/fw
FRIENDS WORLD PROGRAM
LONG ISLAND UNIVERSITY
239 Montauk Highway • Southampton, NY 11968
GLOBAL EDUCATION FOR SOCIAL CHANGE

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

OFFcampus Antics
Find Laura cooking dinner on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 Bedroom Great Location Near campus. 549-7599 for info

One room in 3 bedroom apt. available. $337/month all inclusive. Located at Cliffside apts. in Sunderland. Contact Jyll Evens @ 397-9887

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $300/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

Colonial Vlg Apt open in Jan. 2Brd, hot water incld: $600/month. Call 256-1232 for more info

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Suzuki Sidekick exc condition. New tires, Tune-up, 50k, 5sp, $7500 obo Dana 253-0540

99 Saturn SL manual, air, 25,500mi, Yakima Rack $9500, 545-1998

1991 VW Passat 5spd, CD player, sun roof, spoiler. Must sell $2695 obo 546-3114

91 Pontiac Firebird 126k miles. Power windows/locks. T-tops. New tires. 413-789-1149

89 Volvo Stationwagon. Mechanically: runs absolutely mint! Body: Tan, no rust, very solid. Loaded: AC, sunroof, leather, etc. Milage 181k, 4 new snow tires included, family owned, dealer maintained. (Book value $6060) asking $5700 or B/O Jim (413) 628-4789

Used car for Sale 1991 Mercury Sable ST Wagon. 6cy 3L, automatic, 118T miles. Asking for $900 Contact: Roland Weidisch phone: 413-659-2568 e-mail:roland_weidisch@yahoo.com

94 Cavalier 131k ABS, AC, PS, PW, PD, work car. $1650 Call Steve 256-3256

CHILDCARE

Mothers Helper 2 children - 4pm-7:30pm Tues +Thurs After Dec 15, Mon-Fri. Cook light dinners. $8.00/hr. Call Michelle 256-8632

COMPUTERS

Printer Multipass C3000 Bubble Jet Fax Machine/Color Printer/Scanner. Great for school. New! Hardly used $280 or B/O Julia 586-9552

EMPLOYMENT

Mail Boxes Ect. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Center, Amherst)

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

EMPLOYMENT

Reliable and Reasonable dog care person wanted in Sunderland. 665-2779

Be your own boss this summer. Learn how to run a small business. Make more money than your peers. Call Steve 290-7161 leave message.

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

EMPLOYMENT

Attention! Work from home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR RENT

CATCH BEERPONG FEVER. BABY WE GOT YOUR TABLE DON'T YOU WORRY. 549-5950 ASK FOR CHAD FREE DELIVERY, CUSTOMIZED TO YOUR LIKING GOD AND THE BABY JESUS, CALL US

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, housebroken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

LOST & FOUND

Black Peugeot (white letters) 10speed taken form CC on 11/6 between 4-8:30pm. 26" frame, gemerator, rack, worn red cable tubing & black handle cloth wrap, new rear tire. Owned for 20yrs & redden over 20k mi, sentimental value. REWARD! 413-467-3420 Joe

Book of CD's Found Sunset Ave. Columbus Day Weekend. Call and discribe 546-0610

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

To share Apt. with 3 other roommates for Spring 2001. Summer option available. Cheap rent! Great location! Please call 549-5570

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

TRAVEL

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Montreal College Party Weekends Nov. 24 + Dec. 30. From $119. Includes round trip motorcoach. 3 days 2 nights Hotel Downtown full Breakfast + Dinner. Departs Boston, Springfield, + Hartford. Call 1-617-567-0062 Global Tours

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 Class Notices
4 CNN Radio
5 ABC 40 Springfield
6 PBS 57 Springfield
7 HSCN Special Programs
8 HSCN New Student Channel
9 WNE 31 New Britain
10 WGBY 57 Springfield
11 WTIC 61 Hartford
12 NBC 30 Springfield
13 International Channel
14 UMATV Channel Guide
15 WCBB New Haven
16 ESPN
17 UMASS
18 WWLP 22 Springfield
19 WGBY 57 Springfield
20 WSBK 38 Boston
21 C-Span
22 WTBS
23 CNN Headline News
24 Learning
25 CNN
26 TNT
27 Discovery
28 Nickelodeon
29 Cartoon Network
30 Nick at Nite
31 TV Land
32 Comedy Central
33 BET
34 Cartoon
35 Shopping Channel Network
36 College TV Network
37 MET
38 MTV2
39 VH1
40 The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 8, 2000

		C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Living Edens (N) (In Stereo)		Napoleon. "To Destroy Marketing Luck" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)				American Byzantine
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Betts (N)		Welcome-N.Y.		"Jackie Bouvier Kennedy Onassis" (2000) Joanne Whalley.		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Betts (N)		Welcome-N.Y.		"Jackie Bouvier Kennedy Onassis" (2000) Joanne Whalley.		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N) (Spin City		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity "One Ball, Two Strikes"		News		Friends	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Titans "Bad Will Hunting" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Standoff" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "Boyfriends"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days (N) (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		9	News	NBC News	Extra		Hollywood		Titans "Bad Will Hunting" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Standoff" (N)	News
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Malcolm-Mid.	Normal, Ohio	Street "Prophesting on Losses"		News		Friends	Tonight Show
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Titans "Bad Will Hunting" (N)		West Wing (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order "Standoff" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Living Edens (N) (In Stereo)		Napoleon. "To Destroy Marketing Luck" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	12	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wanta to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (N) (Spin City		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News	Nightline
WSBK	13		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	7 Days (N) (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	22		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Friday's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	11		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Purple Heart"		Biography: George Foreman		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order
CNN	20	21	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	10	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show		"Love Potion No. 9" (1992, Comedy) Tate Donovan.				South Park	Battleboats	Daily Show	Stein a Money
DISC	22		Wild Discovery "Tiger Territory"		Wild Discovery "Wild Asia" (N)		X-Creatures				Ultimate Guide "Mummies"		Egypt Uncovered	Justice Flies "On the Run"
ESPN	14		Sportscenter		NHL Hockey: Philadelphia Flyers at Pittsburgh Penguins. (Live)								Marshall Football Plane Crash	Sportscenter
LIFE	15		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Linda Evans"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"When Andrew Came Home" (2000, Drama) Park Overall.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	17		Direct Effect	Jackass	Little Nicky	Diary	Say What? Karaoke Moments (N) (In Stereo)						Jim Carrey Uncensored (N)	Truth (N)	Undressed
NICK	15		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Told by Ginger Rugrats		Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	16		Sliders "Genesis" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Viper "Pilot"				★★ "Journey to the Center of the Earth" (1999) Treat Williams.		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	23	24	Wild Weddings		Outbreak		Greatest Space Explorer		Star Fleet		Asteroid Impact		Greatest Space Explorer
TNT	25		ER "A Bloody Mess" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Someone to Trust"		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at San Antonio Spurs. (In Stereo Live)					NBA	Hercules: Legendary Jrnys.
USA	12		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Soul Searching"		Nash Bridges "Mystery Dance"		★★½ "Separated by Murder" (1994, Drama) Sharon Gless.				Martin	Martin
HBO	31		(5:30) ★★★½ "Green Card" (1990) PG-13			Royal Diaries	★★ "Wilma's Protection" (1998, Drama) Tom Sizemore. "R"				Oz (In Stereo)		Chris Rock	Legend
MAX	32		(5:00)		★★★ "All the Right Moves" (1983) Tom Cruise. "R"		★★½ "Toy Soldiers" (1991, Drama) Sean Astin. (In Stereo) "R"				★★★½ "Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt. (In Stereo) "R"
SHOW	30		★★ "One Summer Love" (1976, Drama) Beau Bridges. "PG"				★★½ "Notting Hill" (1999, Romance) Julia Roberts. "PG-13"				Soul Food	Resurrection Blvd. "Chollas"	"The Hot Spot"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

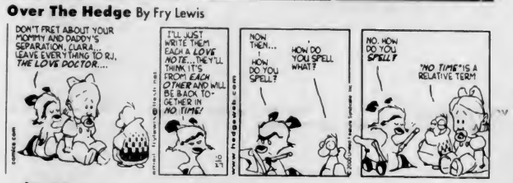
UNCLE DUKE? IT'S OVER.
WHAT DO YOU MEAN?
WELL, IT WAS RIGHT DOWN TO THE WIRE. NO ONE CAN RECALL SUCH A NAIL-BITER.
WHO WOULD HAVE THOUGHT THAT.
CUT TO THE CHASE. HOW DID I WIN?
UM...
I DID, DIDN'T I? I WON! HOT DAMN!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO THIS MORNING, BUCKY RUFFED MY SUIT, BROKE 14 LIGHT BULBS, AND COUGHED UP IN MY SHOE BEFORE I EVEN LEFT FOR WORK.
DUDE, THAT'S LIKE THE CAT TRIATHLON. IN "CAT WORLD" HE'S NOT "DESTRUCTIVE." HE'S AN "ATHLETE!"
NUMBER ONE!

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

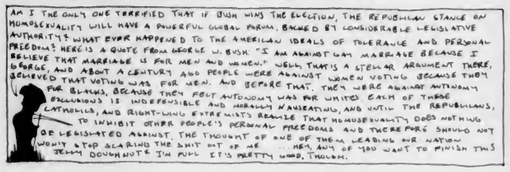


DON'T FRET ABOUT YOUR MOMMY AND DADDY'S SEPARATION, CLARA. LEAVE EVERYTHING TO RJ, THE LOVE DOCTOR...
I'LL JUST WRITE THEM EACH A LOVE NOTE... THEY'LL THINK IT'S FROM EACH OTHER AND WILL BE BACK TOGETHER IN NO TIME!
NOW, THEN... HOW DO YOU SPELL WHAT?
NO, HOW DO YOU SPELL?
"NO TIME" IS A RELATIVE TERM

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO LYDD AND I ARE SORT OF BACK TOGETHER BUT THINGS AREN'T MUCH DIFFERENT THAN WHEN WE BROKE UP.
I STILL SENSE AN UNDERLYING HOSTILITY IN HER AND I DON'T THINK SHE REALLY PAYS ATTENTION WHEN I'M TALKING.
ANNETTE, WRONG WITH ME, DOCTOR? WHY DO I ALWAYS END UP IN THESE DYSFUNCTIONAL RELATIONSHIPS?
DOCTOR?
HMMM? OH, UMMM... I WOULDN'T BE OVERLY CONCERNED BECAUSE THINGS IS NOT SO CRAZY!

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas



AM I THE ONLY ONE TERRIFIED THAT IF GWB WINS THE ELECTION, THE REPUBLICAN STANCE ON HOMOSEXUALITY WILL HAVE A POWERFUL GLOBAL FORUM, BACKED BY CONSIDERABLE LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY? WHAT EVER HAPPENED TO THE AMERICAN IDEALS OF TOLERANCE AND PERSONAL FREEDOM? HERE'S A QUOTE FROM GEORGE W. BUSH: "I AM ABSOLUTELY AGAINST GAY MARRIAGE BECAUSE I BELIEVE THAT MARRIAGE IS FOR MEN AND WOMEN." THAT'S A STELLAR ARGUMENT THERE, GEORGE! AND ABOUT A CENTURY AND A HALF AGO PEOPLE WERE AGAINST WOMEN VOTING BECAUSE THEY BELIEVED THAT VOTING WAS FOR MEN, AND BEFORE THAT, THEY WERE AGAINST AUTONOMY FOR SLAVES, BECAUSE THEY FELT AUTONOMY WAS FOR WHITES. EACH OF THESE EXCLUSIONS IS INDEFENSIBLE AND HORRIBLY HUMILIATING, AND WITH THE REPUBLICANS, CATHOLICS, AND RIGHT-WING EXTREMISTS REALIZE THAT HOMOSEXUALITY DOES NOTHING TO INHIBIT OTHER PEOPLE'S PERSONAL FREEDOMS AND THERE'RE SHOULD NOT BE LEGISLATED AGAINST. THE THOUGHT OF ONE OF THEM LEADING OUR NATION WON'T STOP SCARING THE SHIT OUT OF ME. HERE, ANY OF YOU WANT TO WATCH THIS JERRY SPRINGER IN FULL? IT'S PRETTY WEIRD, THOUGH.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

A GAZILLION DOLLARS FOR THE GAS BILL. A GAZILLION DOLLARS FOR THE ELECTRIC BILL.
A GAZILLION DOLLARS FOR THE PHONE BILL. SEVERAL GAZILLION DOLLARS FOR THE MORTGAGE.
CAN I HAVE A MEASLY $50 TO BUY A NEW VIDEO GAME CARTRIDGE?
WELL, IT SEEMED LIKE A GOOD TIME TO ASK

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

COME ON, SATCHEL! GET YOUR COSTUME ON! WE'RE GONNA BE LATE FOR THE PARTY!
WHAT THE HECK ARE YOU? A VACUUM CLEANER?
YEAH, IT WAS THE SCARIEST THING I COULD THINK OF.
EXCELLENT COSTUME DUDE. VERY SCARY.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Avoid crowds. Seek higher ground and do what you can to rise above those who are caught in any kind of personal rut. For instance, put all those old campaign signs on and walk around town. Sure people may look at you funny, but the real intelligent people will flip you off. Kamal's willow's peak will triumph over all today. You wish you had one, but hey, we all can't be Kamal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may find yourself doing what is unorthodox, surprising or even forbidden today simply to win reactions from a new audience. But telling people who didn't vote that they suck is perfectly acceptable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You're thinking of things in a far too grand and lofty manner at this time. A more down-to-earth, realistic perspective is advised. Start small. Run for Congress fest. The White House can wait a few years.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – It's a good day to let others know precisely what you want – in no uncertain terms. An intimate encounter after dark holds a valuable surprise. All those people who voted are going to trash your car if you didn't. What's that? You did? Then how did you vote on Question 10? HA! There was no Question 10, you liar. That's it. Say goodbye to the Honda.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Something undefined may be tugging at you today. A careful search of those hidden corners of your mind may reveal something surprising. Oh wait, that's an erection joke; not an election joke.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You can learn a great deal from remaining in the background for a time and watching others at work. Today, you can avoid many simple mistakes. Like telling people that Massachusetts went for Bush. That's a simple mistake idiot.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may feel somehow hemmed-in and restricted today. It may be time for you to reach out to someone who wants to lead you in a new direction. It's a real estate representative. The office above the ABC will be closing soon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may have to think fast and be quick on your feet today. There is no way to prepare for what lies ahead, but every skill is on call. Hear that Mr. President?

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You mustn't allow yourself to stoop to the unusual or distasteful today. Stick to tried-and-true methods. The conventional can work well. After all, Nader tried to do that whole "I'm different thing" and look what it got him. A buncha hippies stalking him. Now do you really want that?

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You're scattering your energy and trying to do too many things at one time. Focus in on one goal today, and see if you can't reach it. Set a simple goal. The phone call conceding defeat doesn't take all that long. You could do it and still catch South Park.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – A surprising memory may offer you more than mere pleasure today. You may well be inspired to recapture a past glory and surge ahead! But seriously George, little George wouldn't appreciate it if you tried to run again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – An important decision is likely to be made quite late in the day – just before it is too late. Surround yourself with the best. Hey, look! Buchanan signs! You don't see those everyday.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 55 LOW: 40	HIGH: 52 LOW: 46	HIGH: 57 LOW: 38

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"WELL," BILL THOUGHT, "AT LEAST IT'S BETTER THAN BEING EATEN BY SIGFRIED AND ROY."

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"If you watch TV news, you know less about the world than if you drink gin straight out of the bottle."
–Garrison Keillor

Ohh, bebe, No! No!

Le bebe ne pleure pas.

Le Collegian Poison Protectione

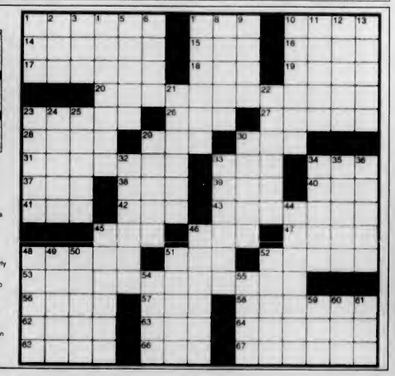
ACROSS
1 One-celled animals
7 Can. province
10 Moby Dick's foe
14 Loose robe
15 Vexation
16 Brook
17 Certain grad
18 — Pan Alley
19 Elm or maple
20 Some Audubon Society members
23 Martinique volcano
26 Ventilate
27 Deposes
28 Manchurian river
29 Nipped
30 Bobby of the NHL
31 Retiree's concern
33 Bled, as a color
36 Schwa's notation
37 Energy unit
38 "90210" role
39 — out, stretch
40 Baseball stat
41 Cereal grain
42 Kind of humor
45 Pupil
48 Rescue
49 Brooch
51 Poet Millay
54 Women's shoe
57 Kind of neckline
58 Valuable item
59 Speedby
60 Together, in music
61 Limb
62 Type of cake
63 Buffet's cousin
64 "— Got a Secret"
65 Antenna
66 Perfect pace
67 Beetly of fems

DOWN
1 Police-blotter abbr.
2 Wire measure
3 Clerichine bird
4 Wanderaxe
5 Writer Dillard
6 Fly high
7 Scatterbrain
8 — Tuck Robin Hood's man
9 Fender-bender result
10 Legendary sing
11 Charters
12 Wide-awake
13 React to a sneeze
21 Delicate
22 Eye part
23 Gift wrap
24 Mancunian's board
25 Fencing move
29 Plank
30 "The Old — Bucket"
32 Blue
33 "Wheel" feeling
34 Transmits
35 Castle or Cars
36 Jeweler's concern
44 Work with antiques
45 Of Pan's mountains
46 Like some curly hair
48 Embarrass
49 Took on cargo
50 Occupied
51 Vitality
52 Rocky Mountain ski resort
54 Concealed
55 Writer Dinesen
59 Zero
60 Four qts
61 Overhead trains

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

GOBS MOA CROW
OBOES TARP HEMI
VILLA ALEE USED
ELSE SALE DOUAGE
INK TYIP PARR
ASCENDICON
LIONS PLUTONIUM
ORA ARIOSO SPY
CONCOURSE SPOON
ELENTHEVIENNA
ORAL BORA
ADAR BARGRETA
SEEM EMEM

11-23-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

BBQ Pork Sandwich

Baked Ziti (B, F, H)

Ratatouille w/ Ricotta Cheese & Fresh Basil (vegetarian)

California Chili (vegan)

Dinner

Leapin' lizard Chicken Thai Meatloaf (B, F, H)

Spinach Tortilla Casserole (vegetarian)

Sirloin Tips (W)

Death By Chocolate Desserts

Today's Staff

Night Editor — Adam Martigneth
Photo Technician — Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor — Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor — Brian McDermott
Production Staff — Kara Stokes, John Zawislak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, November 8, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Shipp running his way into the record books

UMass' most explosive tailback wants to leave campus a champion

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Thanks to the help of a solid offensive line, Marcel Shipp has become the most prolific tailback in the history of the UMass football program.

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Marcel Shipp may as well have carried the football in one hand and a pen in the other during his four years at Massachusetts; he spent as much time rewriting the record books as he did powering the pigskin.

The senior tailback is preparing for the stretch run of a glorious career with the Minutemen, as arguably the greatest player ever to put on shoulder pads for UMass. He holds virtually every school record possible at his position, and entering this weekend's clash with Delaware needs only 181 yards to break the Atlantic 10 mark for career rushing yards.

But even as he has rolled up the statistics, the New Jersey native has kept his sights on things more important than numbers. Despite a whirlwind of hype around his chances of winning the Walter Payton Award (given yearly to Division I-AA's best offensive player), the tri-captain has maintained a personal quest to bring nothing short of perfection to the UMass backfield.

"I'm most proud of being a four-year starter," Shipp said. "I'm leaving here as a complete back, and that's what I've always been working toward. [The Payton Award] would be nice to have, but it's not really that big of a deal to me."

Shipp's humility is all the more admirable when considering just how good he has been for the Maroon and White. Since taking over the tailback spot in his freshman year, Shipp has topped the century mark a staggering 32 times and the 200-yard plateau five times en route to 6,013 career rushing yards. He is also the inaugural member of the University's 1,000-1,000 club, having amassed 1,060 yards receiving so far.

"If he thinks about the numbers, I don't see it," Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "All I ever hear him say is that he wants to win. We pay more attention to his numbers as coaches, and that's something I've never done for anyone. But I make sure he gets his 100 yards, because for this guy I feel it's that important."

Prior to suiting up for UMass, Shipp had already racked up some jaw-dropping numbers at Passaic Technical High School in his home state and the Milford Academy in Connecticut. His pre-collegiate resume consisted of 3,239 rushing yards and 42 touchdowns, with an average carry of 7.8 yards. Shipp's prowess would run right over into college ball, where he started the last nine games of his breakout campaign and set the school record for freshman rushing yards with 756.

But even as he tasted success, Shipp was feeling the heat brought on by the team's one-dimensional offense.

"When I first came here I just fit in well with the system, but there was no passing game," Shipp said. "To stop UMass, you only had to stop one thing – the run."

With Shipp's second season came an absolute explosion from the 6-foot, 216-pound back. After moderate showings in the first two games of the year, Shipp bombed Buffalo for 221 yards rushing and never looked back; he would reach triple digits on the ground in the next 18 games that he dressed for.

"What happened was that we developed a passing game to set up the run," Shipp said. "Instead of sneaking up the safeties all the time and playing the run, teams had to be honest. We had a more balanced attack, and that opened up a lot of things."

What it "opened up" was a floodgate of highlight-reel performances from Shipp. In one incredible two-week span late in the '98 campaign, Shipp torched Maine for a career-high 270 yards rushing and for an encore, bulldozed arch-rival Connecticut for 257 more. He credits his second family – the offensive line – for his unbelievable outing against Maine, the fourth-highest

Turn to SHIPP, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

A revamped passing offense bolstered by Richard Lucero has opened holes for Shipp and the ground attack.

Marcel Shipp's UMass Records

Single season carries – 428 (1998)
Single season rushing yards – 2,542 (1998)
Single season rushing touchdowns – 24 (1999)
Single season all-purpose yards – 3,032 (1998)
Single season touchdowns scored – 25 (1999)

Career carries – 1,154 (1997-)
Career rushing yards – 6,013 (1997-)
Career all-purpose yards – 7,465 (1997-)
Career touchdowns scored – 58 (1997-)
Consecutive 100-yard games – 19 (1998-99)

Marcell Shipp

Minutemen on a roll as duo receives accolades

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

For their efforts last weekend, the Hockey East conference honored sophomore forward Jim Turner and senior goalie Markus Helanen as Player of the Week and Defensive Player of the Week, respectively.

Turner scored three goals, including the game-winner with 14 seconds remaining in overtime against Lowell, and recorded an assist. With his four points versus the River Hawks and New Hampshire, the Saginaw, MI native has posted 10 on the season. His point total ranks him seventh in the league.

Helanen recorded his second shutout of the season, and fourth of his career, against No. 3 UNH. The senior stopped 28 Wildcat shots in the victory. Both times that Helanen has kept opponents off the scoreboard have been at the William D. Mullins Center. The Vantaa, Finland native has a current scoreless streak of 133:45 on home ice.

First Time in School History

UMass and UNH have played in 67 contests over the years, but until Nov. 4, the Minutemen had never shut out the Wildcats.

Gone Polling

In this week's U.S. College Hockey Online Poll, the Minutemen received two votes. Last season, the Maroon and White picked up in the first vote in the school's history after sweeping Providence College, 2-1 and 3-1, on Jan. 7 and 8 respectively.

Tough Schedule

The Minutemen have played five of their first seven games against teams ranked in the top 12 in the country. In those games, the Maroon and White have posted a 1-3-1 record. The three losses have all been on the road (two at No. 2 Wisconsin and one at No. 2 Boston College). The win and the tie have both come at home (New Hampshire and Colgate, respectively).

The schedule does not get any easier for UMass as it will continue to play, at the very least, 11 more games against teams that participated in the 2000 NCAA playoffs.

Hot Start

For the first time since the 1995-96 season, the Minutemen have opened their Hockey East campaign at 3-1. That year, two of the three wins came against Merrimack, while the other was versus Lowell. Eventually, the Maroon and White only mustered one more conference win and finished Hockey East play at 4-14-6.

For its efforts that season, UMass earned its first trip to the Hockey East playoffs. The Minutemen were swept by UNH in their first shot at an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

Turner-ound the Offense

Last season Jeff (34 points) and Tim (26 points) Turner finished the season with a combined 58 points. This season the brothers have collected 20 points through the first seven games. Jeff has two goals, including the game-winner against No. 3 UNH, and eight assists, while Tim has netted six goals. Jeff's eight assists lead the team, while Tim's six tallies pace the offense.

Saluting the Fans

During the first intermission of the UNH game, Head Coach Don Cahoon saluted the Mullins Center faithful. Cahoon urged the fans to work in unison with the band to make the home of the Mass Attack "the toughest place in the nation to play."

Since he arrived on the scene in April, 'Toot' has tried vigorously to spawn more involvement in the UMass hockey program. His salute to the fans let them know that all that they do does not go unnoticed.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

After a stellar weekend in which the UMass hockey team won a pair of Hockey East games, including an upset over No. 4 New Hampshire, senior captain Jeff Turner will lead the Minutemen into Omaha, NE this weekend to take on the Mavericks in a pair of non-conference games.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

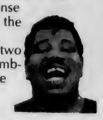
The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 46 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, November 9, 2000

Arts points out some cool places to investigate on the World Wide Web. Also, read one of the most intense battles of the century between two of the dumbest people alive.



ARTS p. 5

The UMass volleyball team has gotten four solid years of service out of Golden State native Jenni Drennan. Read about her odyssey in today's sports.

SPORTS p. 12

Scott addresses SGA; Cevallos' job debated

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Last night, Chancellor David K. Scott made a cameo appearance at the Student Government Association meeting in search of "advice."

Scott presented the issue of rowdiness during the 2000 Commencement ceremony and what the SGA thought might be the answer to resolve this situation.

The issue of student behavior during commencement has been an issue voiced by Scott not only the to SGA, but to the Faculty Senate as well.

"I'm not against students being happy and crazy, but the trouble lies with the rudeness displayed toward those on the commencement block," Scott said. "The question lies as to what people think of our University because of the rudeness in behavior."

Scott then went on to ask the SGA a question on the rights of the administration in taking action during commencement to prevent further inappropriate behavior.

"Do you feel that we have the right to remove students who are acting inappropriate from commencement and take away their graduation rights," Scott asked.

"Absolutely not!" Senate member Sal Shamapande said. "Who is going to decide what is appropriate or not? Commencement is for the students, and as far as I'm concerned we have paid for this institution and have more of a right than any of the speakers."

Senate members went on to further question Scott and voice their concerns on a variety of topics. One issue that played a key role in the evening was Scott's failure to perform a national search upon the hiring of Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Javier Cevallos.

"There is an option at the University and any organization that using a justifiable waver of normal such procedures and that is something I can't do as the Chancellor, and it's not something that I can do automatically. I do have to make a case to the Office of Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity [OAAEO], as to why I want the wave the normal search procedures," Scott said.

Scott made such an appeal to the OAAEO and the office said that such a search was not necessary. This, in part, lead to Scott's decision to remove the Interim title from Cevallos' Vice Chancellor position.

Scott continued by explaining to the body members his reasoning behind not having a national search. He claimed that wavering the search was done based on the lack of time as well as an effort to increase diversity on campus.

"In both cases that I have done this, it has been because of special opportunities, and a special opportunity that exists in a small window of time," Scott said. "Javier Cevallos reflects diversity and I think he's an outstanding administrator, not only by me, but others in this institution."

Questions and concerns continued on the topic of motion 2000-F13, a motion to be enacted that Scott rescind his offer of permanent Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs from Cevallos until an appropriate search is conducted.

Scott's explanation did not stop heated comments and questions from senate members. Questions as to why the SGA was not involved were just one of the key issues brought up.

"I felt that I had a national validation apart from my own experiences and observations and I also had two national validations and two national searches by two other outstanding institutions as well. I decided that I would move this University forward by advocating an outstanding administrator to advance this University," Scott said. "If I had not done this, we would be looking at another two years until the position would be filled."

Senate members went on to question Cevallos' leadership role within the senate as well as for the student body. Questions were raised as to if Cevallos' position has been weekend because he was not recognized by students before being appointed. Scott responded by stating that he had included students, staff, faculty and the administration in his decision.

"You always have to rely on the judgments and insight of students, but this particular situation was different," Scott said. "I was trying to get a feel from some of the issues, and from that hopefully call the shots. It was the best I could do in the time that I had available."

Scott also brought up the issue of diversity and the overall response given by students who claim that diversity is a major aspect to strive for at UMass.

Turn to SGA page 2

COLLEGIAN/ SAM WILKINSON

Stuck Between a Rock and a Sunset

There's little question about the source of this blazing honzon, thanks to this informative sign.

Amid debate, 1 and 2 pass

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Questions No. 1 and 2 on this year's state ballot both were approved in Tuesday's election, despite controversy.

Question No. 1 proposed changing the State Constitution to allow earlier redistricting for State legislators and Governor's Councillors. Because this was passed, the "yes" vote means that the Constitution will be amended to require the periodic redrawing of district boundaries for state legislators and governor's councillors using the new census data two years earlier than under the current system. If a "no" vote had passed, there would be no change to the current four-year redrawing of district boundaries.

This question, for the most part, garnered the support of politicians around the state with very little being said against it. The question proposed amending the state constitution to require that district boundaries take effect before the 2002 election. Under the current system, the 2002 election would use districting data that is outdated and could possibly yield incorrect results. If the old system had remained in place, many legislators argued, it would have lead to potential lawsuits.

State Representative and Assistant Minority Whip Thomas Petrolati (Ludlow-D) gave information in support of the question in an official argument explaining, "A 'yes' vote would ensure equal representation for every citizen of the commonwealth and avoid needless delays in using the most recent census figures for determining state representative, state senate and executive council districts."

He went on to explain that the passed amendment would ensure that the 2000 census figures would be used in the 2002 elections. Had this amendment not been adopted, he explained, the state could have been using redistricting information that was up to 14 years out of date.

Although no official argument was made against the proposed amendment, there was some concern that gerrymandering might occur with redistricting. Gerrymandering is a practice in which population boundaries are skewed in order to allow a particular political party to have an advantage. Some fear that this might occur with the redistricting plans, causing them to end up in court.

The second question on the Massachusetts State ballot was a proposed Constitutional Amendment to limit the voting rights of incarcerated convicted felons. The "yes" vote will prevent prisoners from having the right to vote. Previous to this decision only Massachusetts, Maine and Vermont had allowed incarcerated citizens to vote in elections. There was debate both for and against this proposed amendment, with most of the disagreement coming from civil rights groups and activists for inmates' rights. Opponents argued that prisoners have always been able to vote and that the Constitution guarantees that right to them. An argument was also made that less than five percent of inmates vote and that they have very little effect upon state and presidential elections. John Roberts, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Massachusetts, made the argument in a statement to the press that the felons should be given the right to vote in order for them to become more productive citizens in society.

"It is in our interest that [felons] return fully prepared to participate in community life as productive, responsible citizens. Our prisoners should not only punish, they should rehabilitate. Denying rights of citizenship to prisoners is counterproductive and will stigmatize our reputation as the cradle of liberty," Roberts said.

However, there was a great deal of support for Question 2 from the politicians within the state with all 27 members of the Republican caucus supporting it. Many argued that the rights of prisoners should be taken away as a form of punishment. They explained that the amendment would not affect paroled criminals.

According to State Representative Francis Marini (R-Hanson), "This change discriminates against no one except jailed criminals. A yes vote will protect democracy's greatest gift – the right to vote, by reserving it for the law abiding."

It's Alpha week

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Incorporated, the first historically black intercollegiate fraternity, kicked off Alpha Week 2000 Monday night with the first event of their awareness week. Monday's event was held in the New Africa Houses (Benjamin Banneker Lab), and was an HTML workshop, which taught attendees how to begin and maintain a basic web page on the popular BlackPlanet.com.

AW2K consists of several events throughout the week on campus. Each of the days is named respectively after one of the Seven Jewels or founders of the fraternity. Sessions include an overview of the Kaplan system of test taking, a presentation and forum on the history of ALANA students on campus, a movie night, a party and a Social Informational Session where interested men can learn more about Alpha Phi Alpha.

One of the highlights of Alpha Week is Kelley Day, where the movie School Daze directed by Spike Lee will be shown followed by a discussion. The discussion will be focused on popular myths about Black Greeks and to show the unity that National Pan-Hellenic Council, comprised of the major Historically Black Greek-Lettered Organizations, or the "Divine Nine" share with both amongst themselves and the other ALANA Greeks. On Murray Day, the Alpha's will be hosting a table on the Campus Center concourse where they will be collecting canned goods and contributions for the Salvation Army.

Currently there is only one active undergraduate member of the Alpha Kappa Chapter. The low numbers are mainly due to the fact that Alphas don't "rush." There are many criteria set by their national headquarters that an interested male must meet prior to beginning the "intake" process of joining the fraternity.

The fraternity, founded in 1906, chartered the Alpha Kappa Chapter in October 1922, making it the oldest historically Black Greek chapter and organization in the Western Massachusetts area. The organization was founded on the precepts of service, leadership, scholarship and the continued advancement of the African American male.

Usually Alpha Week takes place in the Spring Semester; however, it was moved to the fall in hopes of attracting interested men earlier.

– Jamie Loo

Earth-friendly utensils arrive at UMass

By Ed Mubarek
Collegian Correspondent

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust and cornstarch to compost: Earthfoods and the Office of Waste Management (OWM) have teamed up to bring compostable eating utensils to campus.

The utensils are made from cornstarch rather than plastic polymers and break down completely between 150 and 180 days. Earthfoods and OWM hope to divert approximately one ton of plastic waste from the Amherst landfill this sear through use of the utensils.

"It won't be plastic going to the landfill one was or the other," Lorenzo Macaluso, special projects coordinator at OWM, said.

Soil analysis has shown that the utensils do not leave any toxic by-products upon decomposition. Success of the utensils here could mean widespread use throughout the country.

"It is important to note that this is a pilot program," Macaluso said.

He went on to explain that this pilot program will have a much greater chance of success at a student business like Earthfoods.

"How do people at Earthfoods like them?" Macaluso stated. "How can we handle it in our composting operations? Doing it at Earthfoods, you're going to have a clientele that is more receptive than anywhere else."

Macaluso hopes that other campus facilities, like the Dining Commons, will start using compostable utensils. However, cost can be a factor in using the utensils.

"They are quite expensive," Macaluso commented. "We subsidized Earthfoods to purchase these. They are four or five times the price of plastics. But you have to look at how you're saving at the other end. A significant amount of petroleum resources are going to plastics."

The new utensils are manufactured in Europe by Biocorp. Fred Scheer, president of Biocorp, agreed that while the purchase price is higher, the savings come further along the line.

"The cost of landfilling is higher than composting," Scheer said. "The average use for a disposable plastic utensil is less than one hour, and plastic will decay in a landfill for 60 to 100 years. This is complete environmental nonsense."

"The cost of our utensils is due primarily to R&D [Research and Development] over the years," Scheer said.

In comparison, Mr. Scheer added that the cost of plastic was 12 times higher than standard materials when it was first introduced.

"Ours is only three to four times [standard materials]," he stated.

Over-seas shipping also contributes to the higher price.

"We would love to manufacture them in the USA, but unfortunately the market for biodegradable and compostable is only emerging and would not justify an investment into a plant just for the North American market," Scheer explained.

The utensils are currently used in McDonalds in several European countries, and were the official utensil of the Sydney 2000 Olympic Games.

"Most people say, yeah, I want to pay more," Steve Markarian, co-manager of the 28 member co-operative Earthfoods said. "We figure if a person takes all three utensils it costs 15 cents more."

Markarian then noted that most people do not even use all three utensils.

"There will be an [overall] price increase next semester, but that's with the Massachusetts minimum wage increase," Markarian commented. "We're trying to have no trash barrels by next semester."

Making sure the utensils end up in the right place, though, has been difficult.

"We started with a couple of signs," Markarian said. "It was very confusing. If one person throws a plate into the compost, everybody else does. It's been a tough couple of weeks. Some people just don't pay attention."

Markarian judged customer reaction to the new utensils to be favorable so far.

"I think one of every hundred people say that they taste like something, but I think that's when people use them again," he said. "They're only meant to be used once. I think people get attached to them."

COLLEGIAN/ SAM WILKINSON

Take me to your biodegradable leader

Earth-friendly cornmeal utensils are the latest step taken by Earthfoods in becoming environmentally conscious.

Police Log

Annoying Behavior
Oct. 2
Offensive letters were received in the mail at Bartlett Hall.
An individual was struck by an egg outside of the Fine Arts Center.
Individuals were reported throwing eggs at pedestrians on Eastman Lane. This is not connected to the above incident
Oct. 6
Staff requested assistance with a past incident involving offensive behavior in Melville Dormitory.

Breaking and Entering
Oct. 2
There was a case of breaking and entering in lot 44 outside of Sylvan Dormitories
A vehicle was broken into in Lot 11. The faceplate on a stereo was stolen.
Oct. 3
Illegal charges made on stolen credit card in Webster Dormitory.
A computer valued at over $500 was stolen from an unlocked room in Dickinson Dormitory.
A vehicle was broken into in Lot 11. Speakers valued at over $250 were stolen
A vehicle was broken into in Lot 44. A kicker and an amp valued at over $250 were stolen.
Oct. 4
Video games, a leather jacket, and CD's were stolen from the lounge area of a suite in Brown Dormitory

Disturbance
Oct. 2
A noisy group was reported outside of Macnamara Dormitory
Oct. 4
A group was reported throwing tennis balls at Macnamara Dormitory
An individual discharged a fire extinguisher in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.

Domestic Disturbance
Oct. 6
There was a verbal argument between two students in Washington Dormitory.

Fire
Oct. 3
There was a fire in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
There was a fire on Fearing Street. Christopher DiCarlo, 19 of Wilmington was arrested for burning personal property, attempt to disorderly conduct, and possession of liquor for a person under 21

Hazmat Spills
Oct. 3
There was an oil spill in Lot 44. Environmental Health and Safety was dispatched.
There was a gas alarm in Lederle Graduate Research Tower. Amherst Fire and Environmental Heath and Safety were dispatched. The building was evacuated.

Larceny
Oct. 2
There was an incident of larceny at the Tillson Farm Building.
Oct. 3
There was cash stolen from a backpack in the Fine Arts Center.
There was a past report of two PA systems stolen from the Campus Center.
Individuals stole state property. Court action will be sought.

Motor Vehicle Theft
Oct. 5
A motor vehicle was stolen out of Lot 33.

Noise Complaint
Oct. 3
There was a noise complaint in Brown Dormitory.

Traffic Stop
Oct. 5
Richard Connell, 23, of Scituate, was arrested for failure to stop for a police officer and driving while intoxicated.

Vandalism
Oct. 1
There was a case of vandalism in Baker Dormitory.
There was a case of vandalism in Lot 44 North of Sylvan Dormitories.
There was a case of vandalism in Lot 13 on Olympia Drive.
Oct. 3
A soap dish was smashed in a bathroom in Mackimmie Dormitory.
There was a case of vandalism in Mackimmie Dormitory.
There was damage to a vehicle on Stadium Drive.
There was homophobic graffiti written on a message board in Johnson Dormitory.
Oct. 5
There was homophobic and offensive graffiti written on two doors in Mackimmie Dormitory.

Various crimes plague UM

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

During the past week, the University of Massachusetts Police Department dealt with scores of vehicle break-ins, a spattering of complaints of hate graffiti and also arrested two individuals.

A student observed two white males break a rear window on a white vehicle in lot 44 on Sylvan Drive around 1 a.m. on Sunday. The student reported the crime to the UMass police, who discovered burglary tools at the scene. The perpetrators allegedly stole personal items from the car, but the exact inventory of stolen material has not yet been determined. Police estimated the costs of the theft and damage at greater than $500 dollars.

"Because a person called us when they saw the crime we were able to prevent more serious damage, and also prevent more things from being stolen," Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMPD, said. "This is a good example to let students know to call us if they see anything suspicious."

A second car was broken into, also in lot 44, on Friday night around 11:30 p.m. The burglar broke the driver side door's lock, cracked the rearview mirror and tore the seat before making off with an amplifier and a speaker box. Police valued the stolen items at over $250 dollars.

A custodian working in MacKimmie residence hall discovered homophobic graffiti written on a resident's door early Saturday morning. The custodian reported the vandalism to an Assistant Residence Director (ARD) who subsequently called the UMPD and informed them of the episode.

"No matter how many complaints of hate graffiti we find, we always treat them very seriously," Lyons said. "That's why we've turned the incident over to our detectives to investigate the crime."

Later the same morning, students in MacKimmie found homophobic graffiti on two other residents' doors. They then reported the vandalism to the UMPD. The incidents in MacKimmie followed a report of homophobic graffiti written on a bulletin board in Johnson residence hall late Friday night.

UMass police arrested Christopher Decaro, 19, of Wilmington, when an officer observed him trying to set a lawn on Fearing Street on fire. Police arrested Decaro at approximately 2:30 a.m. Sunday morning and charged him with disorderly conduct and attempting to burn personal property.

An officer on patrol early Sunday morning watched as a vehicle ran into a curb several times on Infirmary Way before pulling the car over. The officer then arrested Richard Connell, 23, of Scituate, and charged him with drunk driving and failing to pull over for a police officer.

A UMass employee alleged that hate mail had been sent to them last Thursday. The reporting party claimed that the mail contained anti-Semitic content.

"We've forwarded the letter to our detective unit to determine the exact nature of the mail," Lyons said.

■ SGA

continued from page 1

"You've stressed the importance of having diversity within the administration over the years. Now we have diversity of all kinds with in our administration," Scott explained. "Yet, I find it ironic that people will now criticize me for selecting who I believe was an outstanding administrator, furthermore what other institutions believe is an outstanding administrator, and advancing the diversity of my administration. It's paradoxical that I'm now being criticized for it."

When asked about his reaction to a potential passing of Motion 2000-F13, Scott responded, "Will I rescind the offer? No."

Other topics of interest were the issues of graduation and the fact that many students, 64 percent in fact, graduate in five years and only 38 percent in four.

Scott brought up a prospective idea to include four credit classes within the curriculum as well as three credit classes. He then asked the senate for their opinion on the idea, the senate unanimously responded by stating "Yes."

Motion 2000-F13 went to debate as senate members stressed their views on the topic.

"I can't believe this motion is even being accepted," said senate member Jeff Bazydlo. "After Cevallos showed up last week for over an hour to answer any question we asked. It takes someone who wants to be involved with us to do that. I believe he has acted in the best interest of the student body."

However, others disagreed with this statement and argued that if the senate did not take action now, respect would not be given to the SGA in the future.

"It's not a motion against Cevallos, but the fact that the Chancellor didn't bring it before the SGA," Shamapande said. "He broke the leg of the SGA in this case."

The motion, which would rescind Cevallos from his position, failed to pass with a role call vote of 42 nays and 9 yeas.

An amended motion 2000-F22, a motion similar to 2000-F13, was also moved to vote. The motion resolved that the SGA censure Scott for not involving the SGA in the selection process of Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, in violation of the Wellman Document.

Motion 2000-F22 passed with a

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tremkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

For area employers to find you appealing, they first have to find you.

www.masslive.com/careers

MassLive is ready to take your job search to the next level.
Grab the cutting-edge tool that uses the power of the Internet and manage your career.
At Advance Careers on MassLive, simply post your personal profile and you'll be on your way to exploring thousands of new opportunities. You will even have your own Personal Message Center. It directs you to the positions of employers who have matched their opportunities to your profile and want you to apply for that job online. So take the first step in really managing your career and let MassLive start working for you.

mass LIVE
www.masslive.com
IN AFFILIATION WITH THE UNION-NEWS / SUNDAY REPUBLICAN

Students meet to bridge gap between religion and sexual identity

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A group of both concerned students and community members gathered in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts yesterday to address the issue of hate crime prevention and the role of the church in these endeavors.

In attendance at the event were members of the Stonewall Center's speakers' bureau serving as panelists, parishioners of area churches and interested students.

The group was asked to ponder issues such as how individual religious groups addressed GLBT issues and related hate crimes and how religious communities could come together on these issues. The discussion led to discovering what common ground there was in addressing GLBT hate crime issues in different religious sectors. The 20 people in attendance were then asked to share their thoughts, feelings and personal experiences in both a polite and respectful way.

"We want to give everyone a chance to speak without anyone feeling as if they are being attacked," the moderator and facilitator said at the beginning of the discussion.

Some speakers from the community gave their personal views about faith and to better explain aspects of some religions. Bill Ashley, a Christian and member of the Unitarian Church, explained to the group that the Unitarian religion sought to include all people regardless of sexual inclination and that they supported free meetings that were open to all people.

"We are open to all seekers, regardless of sexual orientation," he said.

He went on to explain that same sex marriages were also a topic of controversy amid many church communities. He explained that the issue had reached a state level as well.

"It [same sex marriage] is a very strange dichotomy that the state of Vermont has had to deal with for the past year," he explained.

Two solutions were presented within the meeting as a way of dealing with differences in certain religious views surrounding the GLBT community.

Aaron Shelton, a senior psychology major, admitted that although some religions do not fundamentally agree with homosexuality, they do accept and care about people. He explained that many people were directly affected by their religions in both positive and negative ways.

"A lot of stories that I have heard are from people who found out that their religious group did not support homosexuality and they left the community," he said. "Some found that they did accept a homosexual lifestyle and they stayed."

He went on to say that in the case of Catholicism, many within the religious group accepted the GLBT community but did not necessarily agree with their sexual choices, while others went against the dictations of the religion and felt that homosexuality was an acceptable practice.

"I believe that there can be a balance between communities that feel that homosexuality is wrong but that will not hate and are willing to welcome people into the religious community," he said.

These statements were met with some dissatisfaction, as others within the group advocated a more accepting connection between religion and views on homosexuality.

Mary, a Christian community member and mother of a gay son, commented that she judges individuals on the basis of who they are and not by their sexual orientation.

"When I think about my gay and lesbian friends I do not think of what they do in the bedroom," she said. "I think about who they are."

She went on to explain that within her religion the message of Jesus Christ says nothing about gays, lesbians, bisexuals and transsexuals but instead preaches that each parishioner should, "love thy neighbor as thy self."

Jenny Martin, from the Stonewall Center, commented that they were all seeking answers on how to end hate within the community and how to prevent hate crimes and that type of violence from occurring.

"I think that we are all seeking a way in which we are completely accepted," she said. "Where do we go from 'we are against hate' to 'we are against violence?'"

Other issues that were addressed within the session were the need for support from religious groups in the incidents of pride marches and for overall support. One member of the community commented that more often than not there were signs that were less than supportive of the gay community at some marches.

"When I am marching in parades I do not see the message 'God is Love.' I see the message 'God Hates Fags'" he said. "This helps lead to hate crimes."

The group broke up agreeing to continue to try and work on bridging the gaps between religious groups and the GLBT community.

At current time, there has been one hate crime incident on campus this year and a series of incidents of vandalism. Homophobic graffiti was found over the last week in three separate incidents in Mackimmie Dormitory and one incident in Johnson Dormitory. Homophobic graffiti was also found several times in Perpont Dormitory. These incidents are still under investigation by the UMass Police.

Campus Perspectives

Compiled by Adam Martignetti • Photos by Caitlin Winkworth

Was yesterday's Presidential Election, with the forecasting and retracting of results, a bad example of American democracy?

"No. I don't think so now. What happened was just speculation by the news organizations, not a reflection of democracy."
– Paul Kitchen, junior history major

"You probably don't want to ask me that. My whole standpoint on the election is that I didn't vote because I'm uneducated."
– Amy Pantano, undeclared freshman

"No."
– Andrew Yao, sophomore computer science major

"I don't think it is a democracy. I think it's corporate greed. It's a bunch of propaganda. There's no way it could have been that close. We don't know who's counting the votes."
– Wile, HRTA

"It was probably a bad example of statistics. With their numbers and their margin of error, they should have realized that they shouldn't be saying things like that."
– Dan Lass, Professor of Resource Economics

Interested in getting an Internship or Co-op?

Take the first step!
Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

Mondays		Wednesdays
1:30 - 2:10pm	114 Stockbridge	2 -2:40pm	1322 Lederle GRT
3 - 3:40pm	103 South College	3 - 3:40pm	13 Isenberg SOM
		4 - 4:40pm	274 Bartlett
Tuesdays		Thursdays
10 - 10:40am	1334 Lederle GRT	11:15 - 11:55am	274 Bartlett
1 - 1:40pm	114 Stockbridge	3 - 3:40pm	103 South College
2 - 2:40pm	8 Isenberg SOM	3:35 - 4:15pm	211 Marston
4 - 4:40pm	15 Marston

You are invited to...
An afternoon that could change your life!

TODAY!
Thursday, November 9th
Isenberg SOM Room 116
from 4 - 6 pm

Come hear representatives from:
IBM
FILENE"S
GENERAL ELECTRIC
ARTHUR ANDERSEN and FIDELITY INVESTMENTS
talk about their semester and summer opportunities!

Find out how YOU can earn top starting salaries, obtain expereince in your field of study as well as professional references BEFORE you graduate!

For more information, call the Field Experience Office at 545-6265 or see our website
www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...

- ❒ A. Contracting an STi.
- ❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
- ❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education,
A 2 semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Election Debacle a national embarrassment

Palm Pilots, DVD players, pagers and flat screen TV's: they are all part of the digital revolution in industrialized nations around the world.

At the forefront is the United States, the country that brought the world the Internet but can't accurately count votes in its own presidential election.

Some supporters of Vice President Al Gore flooded the Palm Beach County elections office with calls last night and this morning, fearing they had accidentally cast their votes for Reform Party Candidate Pat Buchanan. It seems that the country with computers in every household is still using an archaic method of tallying the votes for its very leader.

The confusion apparently arose from the way Palm Beach County's punch-card style ballot was laid out for the presidential race. Candidates are listed on both sides of the vertical row of holes where the voters punch their choices.

The top hole was for Bush, listed at top left; the second hole was for Buchanan, listed at top right, and the third hole was for Gore, listed under Bush on the left. Arrows linked the names with the proper hole, but some voters feared they had missed the arrows and punched the wrong hole.

When ballots in Palm Beach County are placed in the slide for voting, Al Gore and Joe Lieberman were the second names on the ballot, but the third hole to punch. It should amaze and dismay the electorate that in a society of such advanced technology, the simple act of punching a ballot could become so difficult.

With missing ballot boxes, absentee ballots, pending legal challenges and the general recount in Florida, the President Elect of the United States may not be known for some time.

Isn't there some manner of tallying votes electronically?

The instant fear is, of course, that electronic failure would sabotage an electronic vote tally. But if the people in charge of the individual polling stations are driving around aimlessly trying to deliver the ballots, can it possibly get any worse?

Even the television coverage of the election seemed over-simplified, as if the networks were afraid the American public couldn't comprehend anything more complicated that huge numbers and brightly colored maps.

The commentary on NBC, consisted of Meet the Press' Tim Russert excitedly referring to a dry-erase board covered with crudely scrawled numbers, looked more like a local-access sports talk show than a major network's coverage of a presidential election.

In fact, the entire race seemed more like a sporting event than the decision of who would lead our nation for the next four years. Florida became the touchdown that would end the election in sudden death overtime, and judging by the collective droop of UMass today, a large number of us stayed up all night waiting for that decisive final score.

The ESPN network even went so far as to post the vote count on its running ticker, among sports scores from a variety of sports across the nation.

Has a Heisman vote ever taken three days?

We have technology that can buy you gas with the simple wave of a keychain, but not one to accurately count votes or even vote itself. With the future of this nation at hand, this country must find a better way to vote.

Diary of a political madman

SAM WILKINSON

The election was a few days ago. I'm a high stress person and a Democrat party-liner so my day was just about as stressful as it gets. I wrote these hour-by-hour diary entries as Tuesday went on.

This was my day.

9:45 (AM) – George W Bush won some sort of small tiny New Hampshire hamlet earlier this morning. With all due respect to our brothers and sisters to the Northeast, I don't care. I'm getting New York, but I'm on my knees with the rosary in my hands pleading: "Please God, deliver me Florida and Pennsylvania and all of their sweet electoral votes."

As for Nader and his people, so help me God if he loses me states, each and every one of his numbingly stupid supporters will hopefully figure out what they've done to the American public that they claim to care about.

The Congressional races are looking decent for Democrats to take back one chamber, maybe two, I hope.

12:47 (PM) – No results anywhere. Nothing. I still only have these stupid New Hampshire towns. The Naderites are promising to party, but I don't care what happens to him as long as he doesn't lose me Washington, Oregon and Minnesota.

Fox News, archconservative as all get out, is now claiming that Gore's got a two-point lead. Two points don't really matter, but I'll take it right now.

And please don't tell me that Bush is doing well in California. I have to have California.

4:41 (PM) – I'm still without results. I've been all over the area and voting areas seem to be bustling. Of course things are going for Gore and Nader around here. It's too skewed for me; I know we're doing well in this traditionally democratic state, but what about the biggies, the states that really count?

Still no information about Pennsylvania and Florida, even though I heard Florida was definitely going Gore. That's going to make it hard for Bush. I need anything to make it hard for Bush. Nader's people are being cautiously optimistic. Maybe they'll get their five percent, and wouldn't that be a change for all of us political hacks?

6:02 (PM) – Indiana and Kentucky both went to Bush. He's up by early votes. Indiana, no concern, they're, as MSNBC's Chris Matthews said, "ethnically Republican." But Kentucky? Well damn, they went Clinton twice. Not ready to give up.

But please God, deliver me Pennsylvania and Florida.

6:50 (PM) – Huge voter turnout isn't even a question at this point; it seems to be a guarantee. Florida's turning out huge. I need results.

7:18 (PM) – Florida's too close to call. Gore got his first three electoral votes (Vermont) but he's down by 38 to Bush. But the dumb Texan isn't picking up any states that he wasn't supposed to and we're betting quarters in the office that he's going to lose Florida. I took another quarter on Georgia. They kept Zell Miller didn't they?

7:47 (PM) – I was wrong. Georgia crushingly goes Bush, Florida's threatening to go Bush, and I'm going to lose quarters like crazy at this point. It's not looking good for people. With Shrubbery in office, this country's gonna suffer.

8:17 (PM) – West Virginia's gone to Gore I think. We got our Democratic governor too. I couldn't be happier for state politics, but Florida and Illinois and Michigan and Delaware and New Jersey have gone to Gore.

Deliver me Pennsylvania and I think I'll be happy. Please deliver me that state. The Republicans are maintaining that Bush has won Florida. I'll be interested to see what happens, as I'll obviously have a massive coronary if it changes back to Bush.

Side note: Television news is so goddamned stupid. Just for the love of God, could people be anymore stupid when they get on television? MSNBC has trotted out white guy after white guy and pundit after pundit who tells us absolutely nothing. Quote of the night: "They'll whither like squash vines at wintertime." Allan Simpson. Second best quote? "We'll learn what we know and pass it on to you." Brian Williams.

Could these people be anymore stupid?

9:07 (PM) – Clinton crushed Lazio in New York by a margin of thirty. Thirty! It was three percent in the polls. Damn.

Meanwhile, Florida is still being weird, no call on Pennsylvania yet. C'mon, gimme Pennsylvania. It's the crux of this election. The crux.

9:35 (PM) – It's getting tight now. We're thinking Gore wins Wisconsin, Washington, California, Iowa, and Oregon. I was delivered Pennsylvania. I was handed Florida.

God I'm asking, right now, for Wisconsin. Please, please, please. I know I've asked for a lot, but I think you can do it. And meanwhile, the Democrats are winning seats in the Senate and the House of Representatives. I'm still saying that it's tight, but we're doing so much better that we might have been. It's tight. I'm nervous.

10:00 (PM) – Florida has gone back to undecided on CNN.com. Well, this is a dangerous development. What kind of change is that? C'mon. Give it back to Florida. Please? Please?

10:35 (PM) – Curse Nader. I hope that son of a bitch gets gonorrhea, dies and rots in Hell. He almost gave West Virginia to Bush. He's threatening to lose Wisconsin to Bush. I hope he and all of his smug supporters are pleased with themselves. I hope he's pleased that Nader is now harming all of the people that he said that he wanted to help. By not helping Gore, Nader has hurt the working class, women, minorities and gays.

I hope he's proud to hurt the people he claimed to want to help.

11:05 (PM) – Gore gets California. Hillary is celebrating her New York win. Gore has 230 votes. Bush has 217. If Gore wins Iowa, Washington, Wisconsin and Oregon, Gore wins. So c'mon Gore, pull it out. Please lord.

And my threats against Nader are genuine – I'll end him myself.

11:45 (PM) – Screw it. There's no easy answer. Bush or Gore can win at this point. They're both within 45 electoral votes. Florida's key, but so is Wisconsin and Washington. I can only wait and watch.

12:15 (AM) – They haven't said it, but Bush wins. I'm ready to cry because Bush is going to win. Unless hell itself freezes over and Florida really swings back at us, I don't know, I think it's over.

Damn it.

1:30 (AM) – Florida is everything. There's nothing else to say. Democrats take Iowa, maybe Wisconsin and then look at the Republicans and see who can pray harder for a win in Florida.

2:19 (AM) – Florida goes to Bush. Damn. That's the end of our rights. Oh, and that sumbitch Nader took all the votes that would have gone Gore's way. Don't tell me he didn't cost the Democrats the election.

Wednesday – Well, apparently, nobody won. Whew. Please get to a recount and Gore might win. Get to a revote and Gore crushes as long as Nader's people are smart and don't vote for that fool.

Everything is screwed up down in Florida, but whomever wins that state gets to drive our national car. Please God deliver me Florida.

I prayed Tuesday morning and I'm praying now; give me Florida.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist

My Post College Days

LIFE IN HELL
©1997 EDWARD GORELIN6
I'VE BEEN HAVING THE MOST AMAZING DREAMS ALL THIS WEEK!
EACH DREAM IS EXACTLY THE SAME. I'M LYING THERE IN BED, DYING PEACEFULLY WHEN SUDDENLY I'M BATHED IN A WARM GOLDEN LIGHT
AND I HEAR AN ANGELIC VOICE
NO, I BACK IN THE SOUP. EVERYBODY COME ON, THE GOLDEN LIGHT IS HERE AND ANGELIC VOICE
THIS VOICE, SO PURE AND SWEET, GENTLY URGES ME TO SHED MY EARTHLY BODY AND MOVE ON TO THE NEXT WORLD.
AND I'M NOT AFRAID OF ALL I KNOW IS JOY AT DEATH WITH ALL ITS MYSTERY
THEN I SAY THAT IF YOU DO NOT SHUT THE @#$% YOUR DOG BARKS YOU WILL BRAIN HIS @#$% SKULL WITH A SHOVEL
I WELCOME IT
IN FACT, I THINK I'LL GO TO BED RIGHT NOW!
COME TO THE LIGHT
COME TO THE LIGHT

DAVID KATZOFF

The revolving doors spin in a clockwise revolution behind me as I step to the congested streets. Above me, the golden glimmer of October's late afternoon bounces with effervescence from the towering, picture-glass buildings. Beneath my strident footsteps, the granite embroidered pavement sparkles from the westward sunlight and the northbound 4 train screeches to a halt at its platform. As every business day concludes, the newspaper wars commence and red-aproned, red-capped youths politely shove the hot-off-the-press Free Daily News Express towards the waistline of by-passers, while print proprietors sling The Post by the stack-full and aimlessly scream "It's ONLY a quarter!" The perseverance of pace and ignitable brashness runs as frenetically through the anatomy of New York City as yellow cabs in rush hour. And to say that this Island is constantly immersed in the spirit of competition and unique attitude is like saying tech stocks have been sluggish investment vehicles on Wall Street. In the midst of the car honking, cell phone twittering and taxi waiving, I bustle along on my uncertain path. Opting for the Free Daily News Express, I glance down at the headlines and a smile is submerged beneath my jaw. The gaudy, bold-faced type reads: C'Mon Yanks, Give Us Our Subway Series and I can't help but gloat over the arrogance and exclusivity of such a tabloid banner. Of course, as a life-long Yankee fan, baseball devotee and Gotham day-tripper, the possibility of an all-New York World Series would be a mind-numbing occurrence, but it is the word "us" that particularly captures my grin. The specific intimacy of this objective case pronoun, in this circumstance, affectionately embraces the entire five-borough populace it envelops. Thus, the city is unified with the amalgamated hope that if somehow the erratic Yankees can clinch Game 6 against the Mariners, they will meet the Mets for a dance on the big diamond stage. Drama this alluring doesn't broker itself often, even in a town famous for its Broadway theater, but what makes it even more captivating is that aforementioned element of Big Apple competition. New York vs. New York for all the marbles and bragging rights; a full-fledged civil war waged between the avenues, along the train tracks, in the airwaves, within the living rooms and dinner-tables, on the printed headlines and among all the sport-crazed lunatics associated with this fair city.

This called for a snack but I couldn't decide between a Turkish Kabob or a Kosher Knish, so I choose the obvious default option... Starbucks. With the newspaper tucked under the arm of my suit jacket, I had no my brisk strides. Yet after passing the fourth Starbucks in as many blocks, my fodder hunkering subsided and I ducked into an alcove to answer my cell phone. At that moment the deities of recollection and reflection invaded my consciousness. Pensively, I stepped outside myself and warily glanced back. Only five months matriculated and suddenly the contemplative and ever so meaningful "do-enough and glide by" days of college was vacant in the developing perspective of this individual. And on the surface, the contrast is stark. It is truth that things and people change but me, the cynical scholar from a years past, would have hardly fathomed the corporate-looking statue on his wireless device searching for the Microsoft of coffee-shops to satiate a post-workday craving. Moreover, that same kid would have certainly pointed his critical pen directly at me in one of his Collegian rants about lionized capitalism in America or shallow party scenes in Amherst. A special friend of the past argued that I should turn that criticism towards myself a bit more because I am undoubtedly part of that flock of capitalistic sheep and social pigeons by my own standards. Only now, under the alcove, do I understand the merit of that argument. As the herds of people pass, I realize that I more aptly embody the formation of a pliable, green twig growing into birth lumber to fuel the bonfires of Babylon, a proverbial system I repeatedly vilified just a short time ago. As a student/columnist it was exceedingly easier (and a lot more pleasurable) to criticize government, business, society and media than it is to actually participate as a staff member in the professional hierarchy of "the real world." However, I am neither surprised nor disheartened by my participation. I am immodest to be walking the streets of the world hub for crass, class and sass. I am zealous have to participated in the lunacy of a Subway Series. I save all the gaudy tabloid headlines and even order "the usual" at the Starbucks next to my office building.

As the cool glow of evening is cast upon the metropolitan sidewalks, the skyscraper lights begin to illuminate from the horizon. Unhurriedly I find myself gravitating to a bar to watch the game. Contemplating a revisit to the ole' college town for homecoming, I remember when each of the metaphorical revolving doors and clockwise revolutions were in front of all of us.

David Katzoff is a UMass graduate

www.dailycollegian.com

To choose or not to choose

Life is filled with complex choices. I do not intend in coming lines to tell you how or why to live your life a certain way. I cannot lead, I can only merely advise. This article is more of a review, a taking stock of your choices and by stopping and looking back, perhaps with luck, some insight into why we select some choices over others.

Everyone has a moment. The moment where the idea of who you are changes due to your beliefs and actions no longer matching up. This is a moment of spontaneous transformation, as you climb out of bed or pick your head up from the sink, and someone else is wearing your skin. A stranger stands in the mirror and over time, we all come to know this outsider. You know when your moment is; you may have never spoken of it, but that is unimportant because you realize it. Why do these moments happen, the instances when heart and head are in combat and heart comes out victorious, leading to the destruction of your safe, perfect, simple world. From these moments on, life is never that simple again. When you are a child, the biggest thing to worry about is what you will get for Christmas and learning to tell time so you don't miss "The Thundercats." Choices piled on top of choices form who we truly are. Many cannot accept the reality and weight of decisions, so lies become common and a fabricated person takes over. This fabricated person can face the reflection because in a world of lies there is no responsibility. I know this first hand; lies are easy, lies are fluid and facing the truth is not. Facing yourself in the mirror and accepting the responsibility for all your faults and errors takes intestinal fortitude. At times, life is ugly and dirty. These negative experiences give us insight into who we are, and whether you made the right or wrong decisions is less important, what is important is that you are learning. I defy any person to cast the first stone. You know your moment, what was changed you, how are you different? The gift of life is the ride and the path of the ride is determined by the choices we make.

Why do we make our choices? I was on Rodeo Drive the other day and I watched and listened to the people, if you can call them people, discuss their lives. The conversations ranged from New Years Eve plans to who was wearing what to where and with whom they where seen with. At the time I tried tremendously hard not to judge them because I have not been involved in the choices that created who they are. About an hour later, when I was driving through downtown L.A., I took a turn that opened my eyes. On a street not two blocks from a posh West Coast Starbucks, there was poverty the likes of which I thought only existed in other countries. People were spilling out in the street waiting for a car to venture in so they could beg for their survival. People passed out in their carriages, others choking down regurgitated alcohol in their desperate hope to drown out the pain of existence. As I stopped at a red light in the middle of what looked like Beirut, a woman limped over to my car. She put her face in the window of the car and spoke in a voice ragged and broken "Please, please, please, help me, help, help, a dime anything, please, please help." The choices this woman has made are some that I cannot imagine, open sores distorted her face and her skin went in all directions; as if it was trying to escape her tormented frame. I tell this story to illustrate the point that suffering is ongoing, choices that are made allow this to be an issue that is popular as long as the public opinion polls say as such. Choices are made by those on Rodeo Drive to spend thousands of dollars on designer whatevers while ten blocks away people are suffering. People chose the superficial over the real because the superficial is easier and clean. If someone chose to get their hands dirty and dig into the problems of their country, as men such as Martin Luther King Jr. and Mahatma Gandhi had, lives could be changed. But that's to much work for us now. The choices the rich make are infuriating. Their choices have a direct effect on the well being of other humans, and our generation has the power to make the choices to change the reality created by the conservative 80's if only we can be bold. Choices, I swear it's choices we make.

By now your tired of the theme and lecture, so here is a personal note on choices. As I write this I sit in a computer lab in Southern California. I have made certain choices on this trip that will effect my life for some time to come. The only thing that I am certain of was that I came here with a plan in mind and my choices have caused that plan to go horribly off track. My head during the composition of this article has been spinning and throbbing with the sheer weight of the last week. I have gone from emotional release to psychological prison in just under 5 days. How's that for talent? However, if this has taught me anything, it is that we all have paths to choose and we all have infinite choices and decisions to be made. This is the best part of life, if you desire something or someone, there are choices that can assist you to achieve your aim. However, the price is often high. It all depends on how badly you want to make a change. I hope that you have enjoyed this review of choices we make. It is my wish to be of service to you, because after all, you chose to read my article.

Ethan Bergeron is a Collegian Columnist

www.Arts and Living.com

Photo Collage and Layout by Jasmine Trabelsi

By James Schoffer
Collegian Correspondent

With the Internet no longer being for pocket protector nerds, many people find themselves lost in the giant web. There are so many sites out there to pick from, it becomes nearly impossible to find interesting and fun sites. You depend on your friends. Instant Messages and emails with URL's with that one site they claim you "must check out." So forget those emails and messages, because this week we are gonna give you low down on what's hot on the net, and what's not.

With Napster selling its soul to BMG, the Godfather of free digital music will soon be making collection calls, and breaking legs if it doesn't get its cash. Yes people, your beloved Napster is taking a freefall to hell out hell. So if there is the possibility of Napster slapping a monthly fee on its wonderful service, us poor college students will need to find another parasitic source. With the creation of Napster, a zillion smaller copycats such as Gnutella, Freenet, Imesh, Scour and the even more rare Ohaha and Tripnosis servers have sprouted up. Out of this list, Imesh and Scour are the best quality, deep in content, and relatively user friendly. To download these babies for your Windows platform check out www.scour.com, and www.imesh.com. Along with mp3's, this servers contains loads of movies, and images that will keep you busy when you should be studying.

With all the trading of digital music, many bands are putting together websites to promote their material, such as Pop Rock sellout band Creed and the mullet, Napster hating boss of Metallica. However, one band that has an incredible web page quite on the mainstream front due to their refusal to sellout is 311, www.311music.com. This site is one of the most open, and fan friendly sites, sharing almost every aspect of the bands life, and music. This is one of the most energetic bands of our generation and it shows with an electrified page jammed full of information. 311's web page makes sure not to overlook anything, including; live 311 Radio, concert info with set lists, detailed personal biographies on each band member, and concert footage from their rocking shows. This is a must see for any 311 fan, or for those wondering what the band has been up to since their multi-platinum sell titled album.

Besides music, the Internet has a lot more to offer, especially for sports freaks. Fantasy sports are the latest craze, spreading like wildfire across the net. Sites like ESPN.com, Sandbox.com, and Snallsworld.com offer you a computerized and organized Fantasy league system with cash and prizes for the winners. With both the basketball, football, and hockey seasons well underway, many of these fantasy leagues are locked out till the beginning of the baseball season, but alas there is one final option.

The people of Sandbox.com offer online sports trading. Yes, the stock market. Combining a love for sports with the power trip of the stock market www.wallstreet-sports.com is born. You too can be the next day trading Gordon Gecko, owning pieces of Pavel Bure, Shaq, and Vince Carter. Using fake "Sandbox" dollars you can invest your free one million dollar budget on almost every known athlete. Whether it's a blue chip player, or a rinks IPO stock, this site is downright fun. If you want to challenge yourself against all 600,000 plus players you can, or just enroll yourself in a smaller league, playing against friends and co-workers. This school has a league named, UMASS Amherst, and the password is sankeesuck). Depending on how well you do, you can become the next Charles Schwab immortalized in their hall of fame, and loaded with all kinds of prizes, fail, and you're the next sports dork targeted by all sour friends.

Nothing goes better with sports than alcohol. It happens every weekend, and you never know what to do. There is one bottle of Popov, some OJ, and a little of the Captain living around, and you ask, "What can I make with it?" The solution my friend is, www.webtender.com, your own digital bar back (and the best thing is you don't have to pay it). Using the "In My Bar" link, you can just pop in the ingredients and click away to cocktail bliss with an extensive drink list. This site can access almost every drink known to man, and if they don't have it, propose it. If the guys at the site like it you can have your own drink roaming the digital realm and maybe even in a couple bars. If you plan to take up the magic of bartending this site lists information on books and a bartenders handbook. Along with this simple and easy to use site, there is a list of drinking games that are organized by type, and what they call buzz factor. This weekend when your armed only with the Captain and fruit juice, hit this bad boy up so you too can sound, and act like Tom Cruise from "Cocktail." If the lists here don't quite meet your standards or you would like to see a little more kick to your site, check out the excellent San Francisco based vodka company www.skyy.com for over 2000 vodka mixes.

On a more serious note, the site www.98six.com provides a great insight to social and health issues facing college students. They cover everything from the Greek scene to Sports health. You can learn how to cure the common cold and prevent further infections in the disease rampant dorms. This site also focuses on the issues of sexuality, and the interaction with the gay community with articles such as "Your Telling Me You're Gay?" and "Roommates: The Unmistakable Sound of Humping." This site is not a flashy mess, filled advertisers, but instead a serious and informative textual based page. After searching through and hopefully reading a couple articles, you will gain a perspective on many different problems facing college students today.

Once you have taken your daily dose of serious issues, check out the mindless immature comedy of Joe Cartoon, www.joecartoon.com. This is the pinnacle of moronic humor and perfect evidence of the effects of crack cocaine. His site includes cartoon images and movies, along with downloadable flash programs designed to make any member of PETA drop a load in their pants. With cartoons entitled "Jesse Brothers NASCAR racing, you gotta be nuts to go that fast" you wonder how low will Joe go for a laugh, and to be honest, he goes very low. He makes Willy E. Coyote look like a mama's boy with the abuse his colorful little critters go through. His artwork is bright, chill, and incredibly well done. To enjoy every aspect of this site will take some time, and with all the additions Joe is adding to it you will never find something you have not seen.

If you prefer to watch more realistic pop culture humor instead of cartoons, check out www.adcritic.com. Almost every major commercial can be found here, even the ones from way back in the day, from Ridley Scott's 1984 Apple computer, to the mindless screaming of the "Wassup" Bud boys. This site also contains many of the not suitable for television ads we don't see here in America. The best feature of the page is the top ten lists that never fail to make one laugh. So if your loaded up with the latest Apple Quick Time plug in, and need to burn a little time, check this video filled site out. Also, make sure to watch the "The Mission" by Nike. This commercial is one of the best in years, and was never aired in America. A must see.

With the sites listed you should be able to fill your vacant time periods before class with some meaningless Internet based entertainment. Just make sure to use the newest browser available, get Macromedia's Flash, and the Apple QuickTime plug in, so you can maximize your browsing pleasure.

ARTIST PROFILE

Faculty creates art you can drive down

By Bryan McAllister
Collegian Staff

Names:
Copper Giloth and Michele Turre
Position:
Faculty, Academic Computing Office
Art:
Visual design and photography

You've probably never put any deep thought into your driveway before, despite the fact that you've walked up and down it numerous times, shoveled two feet of snow from it, played basketball on it and helped your mom have a tag sale on it. But it's part of your child hood, your home, and your identity. To Copper Giloth and Michelle Turre, two UMass faculty members in the Academic Computing department, that's exactly what makes the American driveway important and artistic.

Giloth and Turre were part of a recent exhibition called "Earth Bound: Visual Books About the Landscape," that ran in the Hampden Gallery in Southwest from October 16th to November 9th. The exhibit was an interactive collection of visual representations of our culture – pictures of driveways, road signs, buildings and landscapes. It focused on how modern culture has changed the landscape, how iconic images like road signs can tell us about ourselves.

Giloth and Turre collaborated on "Come In/Keep Out: The American Driveway" – they took a plethora of pictures of driveways in Massachusetts, Maryland, New Orleans, Chicago, and Long Island, and put them all together in a series of books with text included.

"There are a lot of interesting things about driveways," said Giloth. "The driveway is a way to talk to people. Most everyone can talk about their driveway. It's a cultural connection."

It's also a way to see inside people and get a quick, teasing glimpse of their lives. Different driveways and the things they hold – from basketball hoops to old junk to motorcycles to the family caravan – show the different hopes and dreams of families across America.

When they started their collaboration, Giloth and Turre wanted to do something that would show how "Man" has introduced certain patterns and images to the landscape, and made them a part of the natural background. They focused on the human tendency for straight lines and patterns.

Said Turre, "We tried to think of places of transition between nature and culture: human spaces."

Giloth and Turre set out across America, looking for these places. Turre at first started collecting things with "caution" tape, but it ended up not fitting into this project. They found that driveways fascinated them. They noticed how in the 20th century, driveways became the passageway into people's homes, and thus, their lives.

"When we were researching this project, we found that in the 1800's there was the idea of the alley way. The alley led to everything. It's where people walked to get to their homes, it was the entrance to people's homes. In the 20th century, with the advent of the car, and the invention of the suburb, you have driveways and garages; the streets are not for people but for cars. And the driveway now gives that sense of entry."

Some of these entryways are terribly revealing; one picture showed how a family had actually cut off the entrance to their driveway, seemingly on purpose, or blocked their garage. Some driveways were pristine and well-kept; others were broken, dirty, and sometimes, completely abandoned.

"There was one driveway that even covered the entire front lawn," said Giloth.

From these differing photographs, text was eventually added to complete the story. But unlike previous work by the two artists, this text came from literal sources.

"We never saw it as personal text," said Turre. "A lot of our other stuff has personal narratives, but this text is very literal."

Speaking of previous works, this is not the first time the two have collaborated. Their other project was the highly successful Aesop Fable website (www.umass.edu/aesop), which they started with their students in 1994. The website lets browsers log on and give two different interpretations of the fables, one modern and one classical, with illustrations and text.

This kind of web-based, interactive art is something that appeals greatly to Giloth and Turre. Both have extensive experience with computers and cutting edge technology. Giloth, in fact, was a video game tester in the early 80's and originally built her art on video game software. Turre has produced art with computers since 1980. Both believe that the web is a great tool for expanding the horizons of art. With the web project, "people don't have to come to the gallery to experience the art," Giloth said.

In fact, the two hope to continue this project, making a website out of it, allowing people to interact with the drawings. If the feedback from the current exhibit is any indication, this idea will be another big success.

"At first [people] found it amusing, and then they get a deeper understanding of it, how it represents culture, makes them look at things more deeply," Giloth said. "It's a very accessible topic."

"It doesn't pretend to be fancy art," added Turre. "It's more a populist approach. It cuts across a much wider audience."

Political side of television with Nick Pizzolato

To quote Tom Petty, "The waiting is the hardest part." And that is exactly what is happening right now. After seventeen months of hard fought battle to gain any type of lead in the race for president, it has come down to one state. At the time that this article is being written, Florida, the Sunshine State, is shining more brightly than ever before, as the eyes of the country are fixed on it, so we can all learn whom the next president will be.

I stayed up late on Tuesday to write something witty about the next president elect, and I went to bed thinking that George W. Bush would be our next president. When I woke up I had come up with some good jokes, mostly about his cocaine use and his ability to make up words that sound good but have no actual meaning. When I finally got around to turning on CNN (after my rerun of ER on TNT) I found that by some miraculous turn of events, Gore was now ahead of Bush by winning Wisconsin and all the Networks taking Florida to the "I have no idea column."

But what I can comment on, being the self-nominated king of television of the Collegian is the best ads, parodies, and coverage.

The Best Parody

Without a doubt, "Saturday Night Live" is the best place to see presidential nominees get trashed. Within the last five weeks I've been watching SNL to see what they would do with not only the debates but also any other big news made by either of the candidates. Last Saturday was by far the best as "Saturday Night Live" predicted the future for the country if Bush, Gore, or Nader were to be elected. Bush as president showed the great lakes on fire, Mexico's border crossed to Colorado and Texas being controlled by the U.S.S.R. Gore as president reprimanded us all for not doing our homework and passing in such poor quiz grades. Pigs flying and a snowball fight between two devils surrounded Nader as president. Darrell Hammond has been fabulous since the departure of Phil Hartman as President Bill Clinton, and his Gore has gotten much better since the beginning of the season. In my opinion, the only good thing about Bush becoming president would be Will Ferrell's impression for four more years. It's not the fact that Ferrell resembles Bush, but his actions and movements are just as good as Chevy Chase was as President Ford. In fact, my mantra Tuesday night to calm myself down upon hearing that Florida was given to Bush was "Will Ferrell."

Best TV Spots

Now, I know what you are thinking, "TV ads!! Come on Nick, they are all the same. The same empty promises. There are no such things as good TV spots. Normally, I would say the same thing, but I saw the ads of one presidential candidate known as Pat Buchanan. Before I continue, let me say outright, I have no respect now or ever for Buchanan. His politics are racist and bigoted and remind me of the school bully. However, Pat Buchanan is not afraid to air his opinions. His commercials I only saw two or three times, and I only saw them late at night on the Cartoon Network and Sci-Fi channel. One ad ends with the proclamation that Mr. Buchanan will make America great, and ends with an image of the Boy Scouts and the headline from earlier this year about the issue of homosexuals in the Boy Scouts. To me, and I might be mistaken, this ad is anti-gay. But wait, his ads don't stop there. Another spot takes place in an auction house where other countries are represented by stereotypical figures (i.e. a man from the middle east decked out in a Turban and robes) are "buying" America. Pat Buchanan, being the diplomat that he is, comes out of the shadows and says that he will not sell America, but keep it as the greatest country ever. My favorite Buchanan spot is where a man is choking and his friend dials 911. What we hear is the operator say "Habla Espanol uno.... Parle Francais deus.... spreaken deuatesche trios", and it continues until the voice over of the great leader Adolph...ooops I mean Pat Buchanan saying that he's sick of America not having English as its official language, and his first act as President would be to make English the official language.

I think Pat Buchanan knew he didn't have a chance in hell in just beating Nader, so he went all out, and unfortunately this will not be the end of his campaign.

Best Coverage

It's tough to call what the best coverage was. Dan Rather proving that not only is he the oldest anchorman, but also allowed the most leeway in his commenting on the election. Tom Brokaw and the very liberal NBC News without a douht had the best map and were very optimistic that Gore was close to winning by refusing to slate Nevada as a Bush state until one in the morning. Peter Jennings and ABC were very similar to NBC in announcing Nevada late and they were the last station to report that Bush was predicted as being the winner. FOX news was a joke; ESPN online was more accurate in the electoral vote count than FOX. In fact, at about midnight, the local affiliate gave up and went back to it's regular schedule of "Friends" and "Caroline in the City". It's no surprise that CNN was the winner in the coverage of the Election. Not only following the presidential race, but also thanks to Wolf Blitzer's report every hour I knew who had control of the house and senate. CNN proved once again that it is the kings of all news and was honest and frank with its viewers.

Another election is over and for the next two years we will be free of national campaigning. Voting is important and it is also important that you are not influenced by television when you make your decisions. TV stations always influence views and it is important for you to make your own decisions on topics. Don't make assumptions and stick with what you believe in. just because you watch television, never let anyone tell you that you are influenced. Only you know what influences you, and no one should make you feel bad for your own personal views and opinions. So the moral is be respectful to others and make others be respectful for you.

Nick Pizzolato is a Collegian Columnist

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COMWWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COMWWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COMWWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COMWWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WRITE FOR ARTS!!!

Four Seasons
CONVENIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS
WINE & LIQUOR
YOU WANT IT!!! Red Bull ENERGY DRINK WE HAVE IT!!!
353 Russell St. (RTE 9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon – Sat 9am – 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. ID's checked by Legal Age Software.

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
BEER • WINE LIQUOR
Cigarettes • Lottery
Phone Cards
Convenient Location
EASY FREE PARKING
LOW, LOW PRICES!
THIS WEEK'S SPECIALS
Jim Beam 750 $9.99
Canadian Club 1 liter $16.99
Pete's Sampler 12 pack $9.99 + dep.
Saranac 12 pack $8.99 + dep.
Honey Brown 12 pack $7.99 + dep.
Canada Dry Ginger Ale, Tonic, Club 1 liter 80 cents + dep.
9 University Drive · Amherst · 549-5758

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849
www.statravel.com
On-campus contact: Josh @ 413-549-4514

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe .com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships
Applicants must be full-time junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Office no later than December 1, 2000. Winners will receive up to $2,000.00 and will be recognized at a ceremony in April.
For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317 or jag@admin.umass.edu
UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Point-Counterpoint: Wesley Willis vs. Bobby Gaylor

By Ryan Benharris and Scott Newport
Collegian Staff

The time has come for worlds to collide. With heartfelt and meaningful poetry, and wonderful audacity, two men have tried to conquer our minds like no duo ever before. Quite simply, the genre of spoken word is not big enough for two people like Wesley Willis and Bobby Gaylor.

Ryan Benharris, the champion of Boston hardcore will attempt to defend the local Bobby Gaylor, a king of New England spoken word.

Scott Newport, defender of ironic American hip-hop will take the side of Wesley Willis, America's undisputed hero of comedic lyrics.

(Benharris) – Bobby Gaylor has a song in which he promotes suicide. Allow me to quote. "If you don't like your place in this world, you can check out any time you like."

(Newport) – Wesley Willis has such several modern classics in which he advocates the assault of Batman and man's best friend. A sample of which, " Batman was getting on my nerves, he was running at the mouth, so I knocked him to the floor."

(Benharris) – Scott, though I do agree that "knocking Batman to the floor" is a noble political strategy. I have to point out that Bobby Gaylor also is a big fan of the assault. Let me point out a little tune called "Tommy the Frog Killer." Tommy is a disturbed gentleman who takes frogs into the woods and bashes their heads against trees. Clearly Bobby Gaylor knows more about the proper way to "knock someone to the floor." Until Willis agrees to bash Batman's head against a tree, I will never be convinced that he is really that tough.

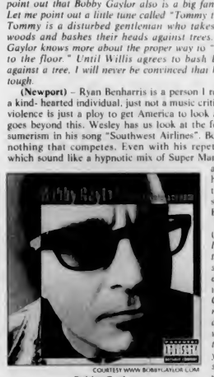
(Newport) – Ryan Benharris is a person I respect for being a kind- hearted individual, just not a music critic. Willis' use of violence is just a ploy to get America to look at itself. It even goes beyond this. Wesley has us look at the foul side of consumerism in his song "Southwest Airlines". Bobby Gaylor has nothing that competes. Even with his repetitive melodies, which sound like a hypnotic mix of Super Mario Brothers and a B-grade porn, he makes you think. Can you say the same for Bobby Gaylor?



COURTESY WWW.BOBBYGAYLOR.COM
Bobby Gaylor

(Benharris) – I'm very glad that consumerism has entered this conversation. Bobby Gaylor has a much better approach to the world of production. "If you kill yourself," he says in his international smash hit, "suicide." "You'll never get to be the one-billionth customer served at McDonalds." See, he doesn't want McDonalds to continue as the corporate seed of Satan. Move over Bob Dylan. Music has a new inspirational activist.

(Newport) – We should not even talk about album sales, as we know Wesley Willis is not only huge in the United States but even rivals David Hasselhoff's popularity in Germany and Japan. International sales of songs like "Cut the Mullet" and "I Killed your Daddy after Midnight," have pushed him to platinum. The man transcends all musical boundaries. His covers of every band under the sun show that he has not only has a wide range of musical ability himself, but that he also has a deep found respect for the work of others.

Wesley Willis

(Benharris) – Oh, you want to bring killing into this conversation. "Hit a Guy with my Car" is Gaylor at his very best. Not only does he hit a guy with his car but that guy is no longer alive. Gaylor is so sick about the murder he convinces the Boston police officer that it's not that big of a deal anyway. "That guy's probably an asshole," the cop says. One thing I can give you is that Willis definitely has respect for other artists. Willis' songs like "Kurt Cobain ... Nirvana" "Lake of Fire," "Two Fighters," and "Countries I Love" show the obvious sick addiction he has towards a certain Seattle band.

(Newport) – Profanity? Is that all that sells? "That guy is probably an asshole," you think Wesley can't play that game, too? "Suck my dog's d--k," and "Fick mu Doberman Ass" are far more pop culture than Gaylor can ever hope to be. Willis is hip, he's with it and Bobby Gaylor just can't compete. However, in the spirit of mutual admiration, I will nod my head towards Gaylor's harsh realism. "Hit a guy with my Car" and " Business End of a Gun" do seem to truly encapsulate the American experience.

We know that no one has actually heard of these guys. No one has, trust us. Truthfully, we're amazed that we have, and if it weren't from some drunken Napster searching, these great figures of American verse would have gone unpublished. So if you are ever bored, turn the lights down low, find that special someone and relax to the soothing sounds of Gaylor's "Masturbation," or Willis' "Cut the Muller." You won't be disappointed.

Sting gets a funny friend

STING
"My Funny Friend and Me"
from Soundtrack to the Major Motion Picture
Disney's Emperor's New Groove

Apparently making those Compaq commercials wasn't embarrassing enough for Sting, and his continuing quest to ruin his credibility as an artist has led him to record a song for the new Disney animated feature, The Emperor's New Groove.

"My Funny Friend and Me" is the sort of song that threatens to put muzak artists out of business, from the soft keyboards to the synthetic strings to the characterless background vocals, this song exudes boredom with every EZ listening moment. The shifts in dynamics are few and shallow, and the lyrics are just the sort of inoffensive and meaningless tripe you'd expect on a Disney soundtrack. And, perhaps worst of all, the song lacks any sort of driving bass line, a Sting staple.

Ultimately, this isn't a Sting song. Sure he sang and wrote the lyrics, but by God it's not a Sting song. Sting makes engaging and textured music, and there's none of that here. (David Troupes) significant others

LISA ANGELLE
self titled Dreamworks Records

The realm of country rock currently ruled by such glossy, middle-of-the-road acts as Shania Twain and the Dixie Chicks, has a strong new contender in Lisa Angelle, and every discriminating patron of contemporary pop music has another album not to buy.

Lisa's self titled debut offers 11 tracks penned by herself (often collaborating with co-producer Andrew Gold) all of which fall cleanly into the mix established by her would be rivals, whether or not Lisa manages to attract the attention of listeners (and the numerous flattering photographs of her in the liner notes are sure to help), she is certain not to stretch anyone's ideas of what country rock should or could be, and in doing so she virtually guarantees this album a short shelf life.

Shania Twain achieved success by straddling genres in a way never attempted before, but her success has since established its own genre, and Lisa Angelle's music feels so defined by that genre as to make originality and musical expansiveness impossible. Rock elements are present, but never with the sort of abandon that they require, and the country elements, while stronger, and perpetually reigned in the name of wide audience appeal. Lap steels and twangy guitar work are tossed about, but never given the attention they deserve, especially in later songs such as "Daddy's Gun" and (snicker) "Midnight Rodeo."

Lisa's vocals are similarly solid but typical, and the songwriting is merely serviceable. Shania fans aching for more should give Lisa a listen, but otherwise she's not worth the time. (David Troupes)

SCENIC
Spheres
Independent Project Records

Trance music enjoys a self-sustaining (if snubbish) underground within the larger world of electronica, one which most radio listeners never encounter, but listening to their limited pressing, three-track LP, Spheres, it is not inconceivable that Scenic might attract the attention of a larger listening audience.

All of the qualities of trance are here, seemingly endless repetition, a general lack of interest in melody, and a slow escalation of force across lengthy tracks. Their music also, however, offers an organic appeal that more hardcore trance and techno artists often intentionally avoid. Drums, bass, and guitars are all authentic, not synthesized, and although the songs are undeniably processed and digitally manipulated (especially the keyboard foundations most of the songs are built upon), we seldom lack the clarity of an actual guitar, the ring of an actual snare drum, and the substantial metallic thump of an actual bass.

Scenic has two full length albums available, Incident at Cima and Aquatica (the albums are composed around the admittedly gimmicky idea of soundtracking certain regions of earth), and even casual fans of the genre should give the band a listen. (David Troupes)

www.dailycollegian.com

YOUR WORLD.
YOUR CHANCE TO MAKE IT BETTER.
WWW.AMERICORPS.ORG
1.800.942.2677 (1.800.833.3722 TDD)
AMERICORPS. GIVE BACK FOR A YEAR. SERVE YOUR COMMUNITY. CHANGE YOUR LIFE.
AmeriCorps and Peace Corps at UMASS, Wednesday, November 15th at 7:00 p.m. 504 Goodell Hall UMASS. Join former AmeriCorps and Peace Corps members for discussion about their experiences. Refreshments will be served. For more information call 617-565-7002

It's Sweater Time.

ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe .com
IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676
Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zurich Istanbul

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00

The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

DR. FAUSTUS
Based on the text by Christopher Marlowe

Nov. 9, 10, 11 and 16, 17 and 18 at 8 p.m.
Rand Theater
Tickets: $7
$4 for students and seniors
545-2511
www.umass.edu/theater
UMASS theater

La Comunidad Hispana de
Santa Brígida en Amherst te invita a celebrar con nosotros
MISA en ESPAÑOL
todos los domingos a las 12:15 pm
St. Brigid's Hispanic Community invites you to join us in our Mass in Spanish every Sunday 12:15 pm.

St. Brigid's Church
122 North Pleasant St.
Amherst MA
Para mas informacion pueden llamar al 253 28 29 ext 3
(por favor dejar un mensaje)

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

Nov. 12 marks the opening of a new show at the Central Gallery Featuring the works of painter Jim Allen, Blue will run through Dec. 12. Allen, a recent student of artist Pheoria West, has explored the collage. His paintings bring together various images from his experiences growing up in New York City and Monroe, NC. In Blue, Allen aims to evoke a sense of memory distilled in imagery. His paintings border on abstraction, but also include vignettes of clear narratives.

The exhibit's opening reception will be held on Nov. 12 from 2-5 p.m.

ART

ArtsyMagazine: Magazine for Female Artists, meeting Nov 14th at 7:30pm in Amherst Center at Rao's

Eartbound: through Nov. 6 Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen: through Nov. 9 Central Gallery

Blue, Paintings by Jim Allen Nov. 12 – Dec. 12 Opening reception: Nov. 12, 2-5 p.m. Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies: through Nov. 21 Augusta Savage Gallery

MUSIC

Giacomo Gates Nov. 9, 8 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Faculty Recital: Jon Humphrey, Laura Klock, Nadine Shank and Dorothy Ornest Nov. 12, 3 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Faculty Recital Stephen Walt, Fedric Cohen, Michael Sussman, Laura Klock And Marlene Walt Nov. 14, 8 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Trombone Choir Nov. 15, 8:15 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

THEATRE/DANCE

Open Studio/Open Dialogue: The 2050 Project" Featuring writer Carl Hancock Rux And Prof. Loius Priscock III Nov. 9, 7:30 p.m. Martin Luther King Community Center 3 Rutland St., Springfield

Dr. Faustus Nov. 9-11, 16-18, 8 p.m. Rand Theater 545-2511

Romeo and Juliet Nov. 9-11, 15-18, 8 p.m. Hallie Flanagan Theater, Smith College 585-ARTS

Davinchi and the Wrong Crowd Nov. 10, 9 p.m. Hadley Pub

Sydney Dance Company Nov. 14, 7:30 p.m. Concert Hall 545-2511

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4 Call for listings: (413) 584-9153 Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters Call for listings: (413) 586-0935 Northampton

Academy of Music Call for listings: (413) 584-8435 Northampton

Tower Theaters Call for listings (413) 533-3456 South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party Nov. 9, 9 p.m. Skybox

Quintessentially Queer Café Nov. 9, 7-10 p.m. Grad Student Lounge

Comedienne Lisa Lampanelli Nov. 10, 8 p.m. Bluewall

Mission Improvable Nov. 11, 8 p.m. Campus Center Rm. 163

ATTENTION:

The Source is always looking for area events to include in its weekly calendar. It's free AND it tastes good with peanut butter. Send your submissions to soucesubmissions@hotmail.com or bring your information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Local jam band overruns Northampton as Pearl Street livens things up with soul

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

SOULIVE
Pearl Street Nightclub
Nov. 2

On Thursday November 2nd, the band Soulive brought their unique brand of soul groove jamming to the Ballroom at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. Playing for their first time at the much larger Ballroom, after a long stint at the Iron Horse and at the smaller Pearl Street Clubroom, Soulive packed the house with a mostly college-aged crowd drawn from the local jamband and jazz communities. The high spirited 30th Congress, a similar funky jazz band from San Diego, opened up the show. Interestingly, two of the members of the 20th Congress played with Alan Evans, the drummer for Soulive, with the Greyboy Allstars. This fact made for an interesting jam session later on in the show.

Soulive's set began promptly a few minutes past ten o'clock with the first song of their debut CD Turn it Out, "Stepping" which showcased the smooth guitar licks of guitarist Eric Krasno. The trio, comprised of Krasno, a graduate of Hampshire College here in Amherst and the talented Evans brothers: Alan on drums and Neil on the Hammond B3 organ, next played a song set to be included on their new album to be released by Blue Note Records this winter. To my surprise they then broke out an old cover of Marvin Gaye's classic "What's Goin' On" with a guest appearance by beautiful vocalist Ebony. This is one of the only songs that Soulive covers, besides a few John Scofield songs and one from Miles Davis.

They continued through their performance with a few more grooved up songs before playing the song that started it all called "So Live!" They than ended their set with "It's Your Thing," one of my favorite songs which is extremely difficult to stand still to. They came back for the encore and played a great "Jesus Children" before finally calling it a night. This is a great band to watch as their passion for music is omnipresent for their entire performance. They are captivating the jamband scene with their unique, room filling sound. They are going on tour with fellow Blue Note performers Charlie Hunter and Jazz Mandolin Project for the remainder of the year, but be sure to catch them when they come back to the area after the New Year.

COURTESY SOULIVE

The members of Soulive came fully dressed up to Northampton last week to deliver an incredibly jazzy show.

COURTESY NOTHING RECORDS

.....like an animal

Nine Inch Nails' Trent Reznor will be on the radio soon to promote the new upcoming album.

YOU'LL FIND A HARVEST OF GREAT SAVINGS AT ... LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING

1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 +DEP

1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, ICEHOUSE, LITE $45.99 +DEP

1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 +DEP

1/2 KEGS BUDWEISER, BUDWEISER BREWING CO. ALL PLAYERS $82.99 +DEP

BUD & BUD LIGHT 30 PACK $16.49 +DEP

COORS EXTRA GOLD 30 PACK $10.99 +DEP

SAMUEL ADAMS ALL SEASONS BOSTON 12 PACK ALL TYPES $8.99 +DEP

HEINEKEN & AMSTEL LIGHT 12 PACK $10.99 +DEP

MILLER LITE, GENUINE DRAFT 16 PACK $9.99 +DEP

JACK DANIELS COUNTRY COCKTAILS 4 PACK $4.49 +DEP

WINES OF THE MONTH

MERIDIAN VINEYARDS CALIFORNIA WINES CHARDONNAY MERLOT PINOT NOIR CABERNET SAUVIGNON $7.99

Rosenblum $6.99

FOXHORN WINES CHARDONNAY MERLOT CABERNET SAUVIGNON $6.49

MELINI CHIANTI BORGHI D'ELSA $5.99

SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL $6.99

FETZER EAGLE PEAK MERLOT $7.99

POPOV VODKA $12.49

BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99

SAPPHIRE GIN $15.99

BLACK VELVET CANADIAN WHISKEY $12.99

INVERHOUSE SCOTCH $12.99

KAHLUA COFFEE LIQUEUR $14.99

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA

HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor. Ask For Details.

SALE PRICES THURS. 11/09/00 THRU WEDS. 11/15/00

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP

968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Win A D'arby Makeover!

1st Prize – A complete outfit highlighting this seasons hottest trends, and a haircut and blowout provided by Hair East.

2nd Prize – A full manicure provided by the Nail Company.

3rd Prize – A full make-up session at Avicenna Skincare Studio.

Just stop by and fill out an entry form

d'arby

Downtown Amherst (next to CVS) Drawing December 1, 2000

Minutewomen finish fall races

Crew team shows impressively in trip to Philly

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's crew squad returned to Philadelphia last weekend to compete in its final race of the fall campaign. The Atlantic 10 championship race took place on the Schulykill River on Saturday, Nov. 4th. Although the Minutewomen had raced on the Schulykill the previous weekend, the course had been made longer and the conditions changed during the week from the forceful winds that they struggled against earlier.

UMass had five boats racing, with each showing great promise for the spring season. Head Coach Jim Dietz had his team split into four class boats, by senior, junior, sophomore and freshman rowers. Along with the four class boats was a quad, with Heather Walker, Mary Neubecker, Julie VanderPloeg and Anna Talucci. Not surprisingly, the women came in first, just nine seconds ahead of St. Joseph's.

Being split by class gave the women a more relaxed setting for the weekend. The senior boat, coxed by Sarah Pragluski, was pulled by Kristen Boyle, Kelly Tianks, Melanie Laur, Kate Tynan, Alicia Conway, Walker, VanderPloeg and Neubecker. The seniors raced to an expected first place finish, but the shock of the day came from the Minutewomen sophomore boat that trailed the seniors to second in just 35 seconds.

"The sophomores went above and beyond what the coaches thought they could do," said Assistant Coach Greg Kruczynski.

The sophomores have taken a big step up this year. Just last year all nine women, eight rowers and the coxswain rowed for the women's novice boat. Each second year rower, Laura Kramer, Anna Talucci, Rena Brown, Colleen Banfield, Jess Cook, Jessi Averill, Kim Roy, Amy Fuller and coxswain Megan Mastropolo, gave both coaches an exciting spring season to look forward to. Both Dietz and Kruczynski acknowledged that the sophomore boat was strongly led by Mastropolo, who has also been a strong force for the fall season.

Another great finish was turned in by the juniors, who pulled to a sixth place finish. In this boat were rowers Danielle Smith, Erika Earl, Kary Bredenburg, Erin Cook, Bonnie Suart, Ekatia Prokopenko, Amanda Wing, and Missy Gorey. Lee Stanish, a sophomore rower, coxed the eightman of juniors. A great highlight for the day was that three of the four UMass boats racing came in to finish before all other A-10 team's second boats.

The freshman boat was the last to come in for Mass, but they had a strong race, placing tenth in twelve boats. The team of novice women included Maura Fury, Lindsay Hayward, Shannon McFee, Hailey McGrath, Katie O'Brien, Lauren Cromwell and Kristen Keller. Sophomore Mila Gorzkowski raced in the freshmen boat to make up for the absence of Kristen Wakefield who was out with an injury. Cleo Buster, usually a rower, was the coxswain for the freshmen, and was also being plagued with an injury.

The Maroon and White's top competitor, George Washington University, blew off the fall A-10 Championship for the second year straight. UMass was able to see their other top competitors last weekend. That included Temple, Fordham, and Rhode Island.

Women's Crew has finished racing for the fall preseason, but with the weather complying, early morning practice is not seeing an end anytime soon.

"We're making great technical gains everyday," said Dietz.

Still, being on the water, there is less pressure for the women since they will not be racing on the weekends. A goal for each of the women on the team is to make the top two varsity boats.

When the snow finally does fall and the water starts to freeze, sixty women of crew will head down to the tropics of Tampa, Florida. The annual January training is recognized for bonding the team together. The boats start to get together and really flow as a team, although the Minutewomen have already shown great promise.

"We had a productive fall. It really showed we have potential on this team to do really well. This is what the off season is for," said Kruczynski on the close of the season.

The Minutewomen look to take a strong stride into the spring, where they are looking to hold on to their Atlantic 10 Championship Title.

The tale Bush kept under wraps

JUSTIN PEARSON

The headline on yesterday's Collegian could not have been simpler. "Gore or Bush?" In one of the closest elections of all-time, the American people were forced to choose between the son of a former President and the son of a former Senator. The two candidates avoided most major issues during their series of debates and instead asked us to make our decision without knowing all the facts.

It's too late to go back and change your votes now, but there is one fact that I think all of you should know. A fact that is so dark and twisted that it would surely have lost the election for the Texas Governor. No hidden ballot boxes in Florida would have mattered in this election if the American people knew…George W. Bush traded Sammy Sosa.

That's right, Slammin' Sammy Sosa, the exuberant right fielder for the Chicago Cubs, who in the last three years has hit 179 homers (almost one for every person executed during Bush's reign as Governor) and singlehandedly made the Cubs not the worst team in baseball, was traded by the same man that some of you want to be our next President.

At the tender young age of 16, Sosa, a native of the Dominican Republic, was signed as a free agent by the Texas Rangers. Less than four years later, after helping his father's successful Presidential campaign, Bush assembled a group of investors to buy the Rangers. In 1989, Bush took control as the managing general partner of the team, a position in which he oversaw all the team's business dealings. That same year, Sosa made his debut in a Ranger uniform, playing in 25 games with just one homer and three RBI's.

This was enough for the future Texas governor, who agreed to trade Sosa, along with Wilson Alvarez and Scott Fletcher on July 29 to the White Sox for Harold Baines and the immortal Fred Manrique in a failed push to make the playoffs. Is this what you want on your conscience, to know that you voted for a man who decided Fred Manrique was the man to get him into the playoffs? I didn't think so.

Let's break this deal down piece by piece just so we can see the stupidity of it all. First, while the Rangers did get Major League Baseball's version of the Energizer bunny in Harold Baines (he just keeps going and going and going), they only had him for less than a year before he was jettisoned off to Oakland (another good move there Georgie, getting rid of one of the best designated hitters in the prime of his career. Real smooth.)

Also staying in a Ranger uniform for less than a year was Manrique, a slick-fielding middle infielder from Venezuela. I am willing to bet that if Manrique could have voted on Tuesday, it would surely have been another tally for the Democrats.

Now that we have established that Bush and the Rangers got pretty much nothing for Sosa, let's see what they gave up; a former All-Star (1994) in Alvarez, a solid utility infielder in Fletcher and a potential Hall-of-Famer in Sosa. Oh yeah, that was a good deal Mr. Bush. Next thing we know, he will be trading the Secretary of Defense and a few battleships to French Guyana for a few sharp sticks.

Bush's rule over the Rangers was short-lived as the players strike of 1994 ended the season in early August (the Rangers were 10 games under .500 at the time) and in November he was elected Governor of Texas, thus ending his involvement with the team. In a little more than five years under Bush's watchful eye, the Rangers were only eight games over .500 and not once did they make the playoffs. Those aren't exactly Oval Office worthy numbers if you ask me.

In the six years since Bush took residence in the Texas Governor's mansion, the fortunes of the Rangers have drastically improved. In 1995, the Rangers successfully hosted the All-Star Game at their new stadium, the Ballpark at Arlington and the very next year, after not winning a division title since their inception back in 1972 the Rangers won the American League West. Three times in the next six years, the Rangers were crowned AL West Champs and were a whopping 96 games over .500 in that same six year stretch.

The Texas Rangers were clearly better off without George W. Bush as their managing general partner and I believe that the United States will be better off without him as our President. If only Vice President Gore had gotten this information out to the voting public, the race would have been a cakewalk. If Governor Bush wins Florida later today and you want to reach me to comment on this piece, tough. I'll be on my way to French Guyana and going), they only had him for less than a year before

Justin Pearson is a Collegian columnist

Celtics off to an average start; could sneak into playoffs

FULL COURT PRESS with Matt DeNoble

The last time the Boston Celtics and their fans tasted the post-season was during the Dino Radja era in 1995. That year, they squeaked into the playoffs with a sub-.500 record to the dismay of many fans who had anticipated a lottery pick. The Celtics ended up bowing out of the first round to the eventual Eastern Conference champion Orlando Magic. This marked the beginning of Boston's quick decline in the ranks of the National Basketball Association.

Since 1995, there has been a shortage of wins and a surplus of criticism for the organization. It started with the M.L. Carr era that caused unrest amongst fans and media.

In all fairness to the towel waving legend, this was a time of rebuilding and he ended up taking one for the team. Remember, he did draft Antoine Walker and somehow managed to get a first round draft pick for the immortal Eric Montross, so his time here wasn't entirely insignificant.

Finally, Carr gave way to the Celtics' present coach and vice president Rick Pitino. Pitino, heavily pursued by the club, was expected to be the savior. He's now had three full seasons at the helm and not much to show for it.

At this point, even the fans have grown tired of rooting for high lottery picks every year. Before the 2000-2001 NBA campaign began, Pitino stated that he would resign after the season should the Celtics not make the playoffs. That brings us to the real question: are the Boston Celtics capable of making the playoffs this year?

With the Heat's Alonzo Mourning out for the season, and teams like Indiana and Detroit falling apart at the seams this off-season, there proves to be a lot of parity in the Eastern Conference. That may allow the mediocre Celtics to grab one of the lower seeded playoff spots.

Paul Pierce and Antoine Walker are about as good a one-two tandem the league has to offer. If their supporting cast can find them throughout the season, things will begin to look very optimistic for the Green and White. Only time will tell as to whether or not the young Celtics (averaging 26 years of age) will be able to finally put together a successful NBA season.

Thus far, Boston is 2-2 on the young campaign with a couple of early home victories followed by two straight road losses. In order to compete in the East this year they need to learn to win on the road, which will be an even tougher task without point guard Kenny Anderson, who suffered a broken jaw last Saturday against Cleveland. Doctors say he'll be out for 4-6 weeks.

His absence was immediately felt Tuesday night as Vince Carter and the Toronto Raptors destroyed the Celtics in a 105-75 debacle. Aside from shooting a dismal 33 percent from the field, Boston also got outrebounded and out-hustled. Coach Pitino fit into his team after the game in an extra long post-game meeting. He knows that a playoff caliber team doesn't look the way his club did Tuesday night.

In the meantime, Anderson's backup Randy Brown and the rest of the Celtics look to get things back on track this Friday at the Fleet Center versus the Knicks.

Matt DeNoble is a Collegian correspondent.

Make no mistake, Jagr is in control; Leetch is back

MATTHEW F. SACCO

Who runs this team anyway?

One of the main reasons Ivan Hlinka was hired as head coach of the Pittsburgh Penguins was his perceived ability to blend well with the omnipresent European faction in the locker room. With some of the team's best talent rooted overseas, Hlinka offered something that other coaches simply could not. At the present moment however, it seems that Hlinka is no longer in control. One man leads this team, namely Jaromir Jagr.

Jagr has single handedly shouldered the burden of the club's offensive struggles. The Czech captain is implementing his own system, relegating his coach to simply "the guy in a suit, behind the bench." Jagr's coup probably seems strikingly familiar to another important figure in the organization; partial owner Mario Lemieux. Lemieux took it upon himself to set the style of play for his two Stanley Cup teams, even when legendary coach Scotty Bowman was behind the bench.

As incredible as it sounds to have control of the team virtually out of the coach's hands, if Pittsburgh makes a deep run into the postseason, may the critics remain mute.

Thirteen lucky in valley of the sun

I know that everybody in Phoenix has heard this all before, but for now, indulge me. I am aware of the Coyotes and their annual journey from first half powerhouse to second half doormat to first round bye for whoever their opponent is in the playoffs. But trust me: this year's squad is different, I swear.

As usual, Jeremy Roenick is among the top scorers in the league, and linemate Keith Tkachuk looks like he has recovered well from last year's injury riddled season, but the most important reason for a 12-game unbeaten streak (7-0-5) is balance.

The Coyotes entered Detroit last night boasting seven players with nine points or more and only one regular with a plus/minus rating in the negative.

Probably the most satisfying notion about hockey in Arizona is the stellar play of Sean Burke in net. Burke has put up some unreal numbers with a record of 7-1-4, a .945 save percentage and a 1.62 goals-against average. What cannot be measured in numbers however, is the big saves he has made when the team needed them most. With Burke in net, Phoenix visited the Red Wings last night, with a 13 game unbeaten streak in mind.

No 'C'. No Problem, Fleury on Fire

Coach Ron Low is taking an interesting approach in New York: the more you take away, the better they play. Although Low did not directly remove the captaincy from Brian Leetch, playing with the 'A' on his chest instead of a 'C' has infused new life into his game. Leetch has seemingly rediscovered his all-star form, and through 13 games he has tallied two goals and 15 helpers for 17 points. He has finally retaken his rightful position as No. 1 in the league in defenseman scoring. Conclusion: Leetch's favorite letter is 'A not 'C'.

Low had another stroke of coaching genius a week ago when he demoted lethal sparkplug Theo Fleury to the fourth line. Even though Fleury refuses to admit to the media that it is in fact the fourth line that he is playing on, the results have been more than favorable. Fleury has lit up faster than a brush fire as he put up six goals and eight points in the four games since being demoted. Conclusion: keep Theo angry, keep fans happy.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian Columnist.

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Through the five hole

Darcy King and the Minutemen hit the road this weekend for two contests at Nebraska-Omaha.

Basden signs on with UMass

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Head Coach James "Bruiser" Flint of the University of Massachusetts basketball team announced yesterday that Greenbelt, MD native Eddie Basden has signed a national letter of intent to compete for the Minutemen next fall.

Basden is a 6-5 shooting guard who is rated as one of the top 50 prep stars in the country. He is seemingly the heir to Monty Mack's throne at the two-guard spot for UMass.

Basden is a product of Eleanor Roosevelt High School, where he played under the tutelage of coach Glen Forello. His numbers are impressive as he averaged 19.3 points, seven rebounds, four assists and five steals as a junior in high school. Other top-notch programs recruited Basden, but he chose UMass over traditional Big East powers Georgetown and Villanova.

The shooting guard spent the majority of his time last summer competing in various competitions and tournaments that would raise his stock among nationally recognized programs.

Through stand out performances in the Adidas ABCD camp, the D.C. Pro-Am league and the AAU national tournament, Basden turned heads on the national stage.

"We're very excited that Eddie has decided to come to UMass because he is a tremendous player," Flint said.

Flint also noted the importance of signing a two-guard to replace Mack. "I felt it was important that we find a shooting guard, and we've signed a top 50 player to take over that spot when Monty (Mack) moves on after the season," Flint said.

We Sell BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS

12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only

12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours

MONTAGUE MINI MART

We accept Visa & Mastercard

367-9551

60 Main St. Montague Center

10 Mins. from Campus

Route 63 North, Route 47, Junct 47, N. Pleasant St, UMass Campus, Map not to scale

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

2 A great place to get contact lenses

3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions

4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases

5 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office

6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Special Offer! $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UMass Student Legal Services Office

CALL TODAY

FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!

545-1995

CENTER FOR HUMAN DEVELOPMENT, INC.
Internal Notice of Position Opening

The Center for Human Development is requesting your active assistance in recruiting qualified candidates for the following position

Program: The Bridge Home Program- (Female Adolescent Home)

Job Title: Full-Time Residential (2nd shift)- Awake Overnight & Weekends(11p-7a)

Salary Range: 20,000 plus excellent benefits

Job Description: Day to day care of the adolescents; implementation of treatment plans; good writing skills; remaining awake during overnight shift.

Qualifications Desired: Experience with children who have been victims of neglect or trauma related experience. Residential experience, valid driver's license and vehicle. BA in related field also a plus.

Procedure Applying: Send resume and cover letter to: CHD/45 Willow Street/Springfield, MA 01103 Attn. Bridge Program

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

Nov. 12 marks the opening of a new show at the Central Gallery. Featuring the works of painter Jim Allen, Blue will run through Dec. 12. Allen, a recent student of artist Pheoria West, has explored the collage. His paintings bring together various images from his experiences growing up in New York City and Monroe, NC. In Blue, Allen aims to evoke a sense of memory distilled in imagery. His paintings border on abstraction, but also include vignettes of clear narratives.

The exhibit's opening reception will be held on Nov. 12 from 2-5 p.m.

ART

ArtsyMagazine: Magazine for Female Artists, meeting Nov 14th at 7:30pm in Amherst Center at Rao's

Eartbound through Nov. 6 Hampden Gallery

People I've Never Seen: through Nov. 9 Central Gallery

Blue, Paintings by Jim Allen Nov. 12 – Dec. 12 Opening reception: Nov. 12, 2-5 p.m. Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies. through Nov. 21 Augusta Savage Gallery

MUSIC

Giacomo Gates Nov. 9. 8 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Faculty Recital: Jon Humphrey, Laura Klock, Nadine Shank and Dorothy Ornest Nov. 12, 3 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Faculty Recital Stephen Walt, Fedric Cohen, Michael Sussman, Laura Klock And Marlene Walt Nov. 14. 8 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

Trombone Choir Nov. 15, 8:15 p.m. Bezanson Recital Hall 545-2511

THEATRE/DANCE

Open Studio/Open Dialogue: The 2050 Project" Featuring writer Carl Hancock Rux And Prof. Loius Priscock III Nov. 9, 7:30 p.m. Martin Luther King Community Center 3 Rutland St., Springfield

Dr, Faustus Nov. 9-11, 16-18, 8 p.m. Rand Theater 545-2511

Romeo and Juliet Nov. 9-11, 15-18, 8 p.m. Hallie Flanagan Theater, Smith College 585-ARTS

Davinchi and the Wrong Crowd Nov. 10, 9 p.m. Hadley Pub

Sydney Dance Company Nov. 14, 7:30 p.m. Concert Hall 545-2511

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4 Call for listings: (413) 584-9153 Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters Call for listings: (413) 586-0935 Northampton

Academy of Music Call for listings: (413) 584-8435 Northampton

Tower Theaters Call for listings (413) 533-3456 South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party Nov. 9. 9 p.m. Skybox

Quintessentially Queer Café Nov. 9, 7-10 p.m. Grad Student Lounge

Comedienne Lisa Lampanelli Nov. 10, 8 p.m. Bluewall

Mission Improvable Nov. 11, 8 p.m Campus Center Rm. 163

ATTENTION:

The Source is always looking for area events to include in its weekly calendar. It's free AND it tastes good with peanut butter. Send your submissions to soucesubmissions@hotmail.com or bring your information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Local jam band overruns Northampton as Pearl Street livens things up with soul

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

SOULIVE
Pearl Street Nightclub
Nov. 2

On Thursday, October 2nd, the band Soulive brought their unique brand of instrumental jamming to the Ballroom at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. Playing for their first time in the much larger Ballroom, after a long stint at the Iron Horse and at the smaller Pearl Street Clubroom, Soulive packed the house with a mostly college-aged crowd drawn from the local jamband and jazz communities. The high-spirited 20th Congress, a similar funky jazz band from San Diego, opened up the show. Interestingly, I noted the members of the 20th Congress played with Neal Evans, the drummer for Soulive, with the Greyboy Allstars. The fact made for an interesting jam session later on in the show.

Soulive – set began promptly a few minutes past ten o'clock with the first song of their debut CD Turn it Out, "Steppin'," which showcased the smooth guitar licks of guitarist Eric Krasno. The trio, comprised of Krasno, a graduate of Hampshire College here in Amherst and the talented Evans brothers, Alan on drums and Neal on the Hammond B3 organ, next played a song set to be included on their new album to be released by Blue Note Records this winter. To my surprise they then broke out an old cover of Marvin Gaye's classic "What's Goin' On" with a guest appearance by beautiful vocalist Thony. This is one of the only songs that Soulive covers, besides a few John Scofield songs and one from Miles Davis.

They continued through their performance with a few more grooved up songs before playing the song that started it all called "So Live!" They then ended their set with "It's Your Thing," one of my favorite songs which is extremely difficult to stand still to. They came back for the encore and played a great "Jesus Children" before finally calling it a night. This is a great band to watch as their passion for music is omnipresent for their entire performance. They are captivating the jamband scene with their unique, room filling sound. They are going on tour with fellow Blue Note performers Charlie Hunter and Jazz Mandolin Project for the remainder of the year, but be sure to catch them when they come back to the area after the New Year.

COURTESY SOULIVE

The members of Soulive came fully dressed up to Northampton last week to deliver an incredibly jazzy show.

COURTESY NOTHING RECORDS

.....like an animal

Nine Inch Nails' Trent Reznor will be on the radio soon to promote the new upcoming album.

YOU'LL FIND A HARVEST OF GREAT SAVINGS AT ... LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive

EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS COORS, COORS LIGHT $39.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LIGHT, MICHELOB, MICHELOB LIGHT, ICEHOUSE, LITE $45.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS NATURAL LIGHT & ICE $37.99 + DEP
1/2 KEGS BERKSHIRE BREWING CO. ALL FLAVORS $82.99 + DEP

BUD & BUD LIGHT 30 PACK $16.49 + DEP
Coors EXTRA GOLD 30 PACK $10.99 + DEP
SAMUEL ADAMS 12 PACK ALL TYPES $8.99 + DEP
HEINEKEN & AMSTEL LIGHT 12 PACK $10.99 + DEP
MICHELOB ULTRA 16 PACK $9.99 + DEP
JACK DANIELS COUNTRY COCKTAILS 4 PACK $4.49 + DEP

WINES OF THE MONTH
MERIDIAN VINEYARDS (CALIFORNIA WINES) $7.99
Mondavi $6.99
FOXHORN WINES $6.49
MELINI CHIANTI BORGHI D'ELSA $5.99
SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL $6.99
FETZER EAGLE PEAK MERLOT $7.99

POPOV VODKA $12.99
BACARDI LIMON RUM $9.99
SAPPHIRE GIN $15.99
BLACK VELVET CANADIAN WHISKEY $12.99
INVERHOUSE SCOTCH $12.99
KAHLUA COFFEE LIQUEUR $14.99

Discounts Available On Cases Of Wine & Liquor Ask For Details

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 11/09/00 THRU WEDS. 11/15/00

IT'S YOUR BODY

If your car has an accident, don't let the tow truck drag it wherever. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.

DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass. 586-7250

Win A D'arby Makeover!

1st Prize – A complete outfit highlighting this seasons hottest trends, and a haircut and blowout provided by Hair East.
2nd Prize – A full manicure provided by the Nail Company.
3rd Prize – A full make-up session at Avicenna Skincare Studio.

Just stop by and fill out an entry form

d'arby

Downtown Amherst (next to CVS)
Drawing December 1, 2000

Minutewomen finish fall races

Crew team shows impressively in trip to Philly

By Katie Landers
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's crew squad returned to Philadelphia last weekend to compete in its final race of the fall campaign. The Atlantic 10 championship race took place on the Schulykill River on Saturday, Nov. 4th. Although the Minutewomen had raced on the Schulykill the previous weekend, the course had been made longer and the conditions changed during the week from the forceful winds that they struggled against earlier.

UMass had five boats racing, with each showing great promise for the spring season. Head Coach Jim Dietz had his team split into four class boats, by senior, junior, sophomore and freshman rowers. Along with the four class boats was a quad, with Heather Walker, Mary Neubecker, Julie VanderPloeg and Anna Talucci. Not surprisingly, the women came in first, just nine seconds ahead of St. Joseph's.

Being split by class gave the women a more relaxed setting for the weekend. The senior boat, coxed by Sarah Pragluski, was pulled by Kristen Boyle, Kelly Tianks, Melanie Laur, Kate Tynan, Alicia Conway, Walker, VanderPloeg and Neubecker. The seniors raced to an expected first place finish, but the shock of the day came from the Minutewomen sophomore boat that trailed the seniors to second in just 35 seconds.

"The sophomores went above and beyond what the coaches thought they could do," said Assistant Coach Greg Kruczynski.

The sophomores have taken a big step up this year. Just last year all nine women, eight rowers and the coxswain rowed for the women's novice boat. Each second year rower, Laura Kramer, Anna Talucci, Rena Brown, Colleen Banfield, less Cook, Jessi Averill, Kim Roy, Amy Fuller and coxswain Megan Mastropolo, gave both coaches an exciting spring season to look forward to. Both Dietz and Kruczynski acknowledged that the sophomore boat was strongly led by Mastropolo, who has also been a strong force for the fall season.

Another great finish was turned in by the juniors, who pulled to a sixth place finish. In this boat were rowers Danielle Smith, Erika Earl, Kary Bredenburg, Erin Cook, Bonnie Suart, Ekatia Prokopenko, Amanda Wing, and Missy Gorey. Lee Stanish, a sophomore rower, coxed the eightman of juniors. A great highlight for the day was that three of the four UMass boats racing came in to finish before all other A-10 team's second boats.

The freshman boat was the last to come in for Mass, but they had a strong race, placing tenth in twelve boats. The team of novice women included Maura Fury, Lindsay Hayward, Shannon McFee, Hailey McGrath, Katie O'Brien, Lauren Cromwell and Kristen Keller. Sophomore Mila Gorzkowski raced in the freshmen boat to make up for the absence of Kristen Wakefield who was out with an injury. Cleo Buster, usually a rower, was the coxswain for the freshmen, and was also being plagued with an injury.

The Maroon and White's top competitor, George Washington University, blew off the fall A-10 Championship for the second year straight. UMass was able to see their other top competitors last weekend. That included Temple, Fordham, and Rhode Island.

Women's Crew has finished racing for the fall preseason, but with the weather complying, early morning practice is not seeing an end anytime soon.

"We're making great technical gains everyday," said Dietz.

Still, being on the water, there is less pressure for the women since they will not be racing on the weekends. A goal for each of the women on the team is to make the top two varsity boats.

When the snow finally does fall and the water starts to freeze, sixty women of crew will head down to the tropics of Tampa, Florida. The annual lanuary training is recognized for bonding the team together. The boats start to gel together and really flow as a team, although the Minutewomen have already shown great promise.

"We had a productive fall. It really showed we have potential on this team to do really well. This is what the off season is for," said Kruczynski on the close of the season.

The Minutewomen look to take a strong stride into the spring, where they are looking to hold on to their Atlantic 10 Championship Title.

The tale Bush kept under wraps

JUSTIN PEARSON

The headline on yesterday's Collegian could not have been simpler. "Gore or Bush?" In one of the closest elections of all-time, the American people were forced to choose between the son of a former President and the son of a former Senator. The two candidates avoided most major issues during their series of debates and instead asked us to make our decision without knowing all the facts.

It's too late to go back and change your votes now, but there is one fact that I think all of you should know. A fact that is so dark and twisted that it would surely have lost the election for the Texas Governor. No hidden ballot boxes in Florida would have mattered in this election if the American people knew…George W. Bush traded Sammy Sosa.

That's right. Slammin' Sammy Sosa, the exuberant right fielder for the Chicago Cubs, who in the last three years has hit 179 homers (almost one for every person executed during Bush's reign as Governor) and singlehandedly made the Cubs not the worst team in baseball, was traded by the same man that some of you want to be our next President.

At the tender young age of 16, Sosa, a native of the Dominican Republic, was signed as a free agent by the Texas Rangers. Less than four years later, after helping his father's successful Presidential campaign, Bush assembled a group of investors to buy the Rangers. In 1989, Bush took control as the managing general partner of the team, a position in which he oversaw all the team's business dealings. That same year, Sosa made his debut in a Ranger uniform, playing in 25 games with just one homer and three RBI's.

This was enough for the future Texas governor, who agreed to trade Sosa, along with Wilson Alvarez and Scott Fletcher on July 29 to the White Sox for Harold Baines and the immortal Fred Manrique in a failed push to make the playoffs. Is this what you want on your conscience, to know that you voted for a man who decided Fred Manrique was the man to get him into the playoffs? I didn't think so.

Let's break this deal down piece by piece just so we can see the stupidity of it all. First, while the Rangers did get Major League Baseball's version of the Energizer bunny in Harold Baines (he just keeps going and going and going), they only had him for less than a year before he was jettisoned off to Oakland (another good move there Georgie, getting rid of one of the best designated hitters in the prime of his career. Real smooth.)

Also staying in a Ranger uniform for less than a year was Manrique, a slick-fielding middle infielder from Venezuela. I am willing to bet that if Manrique could have voted on Tuesday, it would surely have been another tally for the Democrats.

Now that we have established that Bush and the Rangers got pretty much nothing for Sosa, let's see what they gave up; a former All-Star (1994) in Alvarez, a solid utility infielder in Fletcher and a potential Hall-of-Famer in Sosa. Oh yeah, that was a good deal Mr. Bush. Next thing we know, he will be trading the Secretary of Defense and a few battleships to French Guyana for a few sharp sticks.

Bush's rule over the Rangers was short-lived as the players strike of 1994 ended the season in early August (the Rangers were 10 games under .500 at the time) and in November he was elected Governor of Texas, thus ending his involvement with the team. In a little more than five years under Bush's watchful eye, the Rangers were only eight games over .500 and not once did they make the playoffs. Those aren't exactly Oval Office worthy numbers if you ask me.

In the six years since Bush took residence in the Texas Governor's mansion, the fortunes of the Rangers have drastically improved. In 1995, the Rangers successfully hosted the All-Star Game at their new stadium, the Ballpark at Arlington and the very next year, after not winning a division title since their inception back in 1972 the Rangers won the American League West. Three times in the next six years, the Rangers were crowned AL West Champs and were a whopping 36 games over .500 in that same six year stretch.

The Texas Rangers were clearly better off without George W. Bush as their managing general partner and I believe that the United States will be better off without him as our President. If only Vice President Gore had gotten this information out to the voting public, the race would have been a takewalk. If Governor Bush wins Florida later today and you want to reach me to comment on this piece…tough, I'll be on my way to French Guyana.

Justin Pearson is a Collegian columnist

Celtics off to an average start; could sneak into playoffs

FULL COURT PRESS with Matt DeNoble

The last time the Boston Celtics and their fans tasted the post-season was during the Dino Radja era in 1995. That year, they squeaked into the playoffs with a sub-.500 record to the dismay of many fans who had anticipated a lottery pick. The Celtics ended up bowing out of the first round to the eventual Eastern Conference champion Orlando Magic. This marked the beginning of Boston's quick decline in the ranks of the National Basketball Association.

Since 1995, there has been a shortage of wins and a surplus of criticism for the organization. It started with the M.L. Carr era that caused unrest amongst fans and media.

In all fairness to the towel waving legend, this was a time of rebuilding and he ended up taking one for the team. Remember, he did draft Antoine Walker and somehow managed to get a first round draft pick for the immortal Eric Montross, so his time here wasn't entirely insignificant.

Finally, Carr gave way to the Celtics' present coach and vice president Rick Pitino. Pitino, heavily pursued by the club, was expected to be the savior. He's now had three full seasons at the helm and not much to show for it.

At this point, even the fans have grown tired of rooting for high lottery picks every year. Before the 2000-2001 NBA campaign began, Pitino stated that he would resign after the season should the Celtics not make the playoffs. That brings us to the real question: are the Boston Celtics capable of making the playoffs this year?

With the Heat's Alonzo Mourning out for the season, and teams like Indiana and Detroit falling apart at the seams this off-season, there proves to be a lot of parity in the Eastern Conference. That may allow the mediocre Celtics to grab one of the lower seeded playoff spots.

Paul Pierce and Antoine Walker are about as good a one-two tandem the league has to offer. If their supporting cast can gel them throughout the season, things will begin to look very optimistic for the Green and White. Only time will tell as to whether or not the young Celtics (averaging 26 years of age) will be able to finally put together a successful NBA season.

Thus far, Boston is 2-2 on the young campaign with a couple of early home victories followed by two straight road losses. In order to compete in the East this year they need to learn to win on the road, which will be an even tougher task without point guard Kenny Anderson, who suffered a broken jaw last Saturday against Cleveland. Doctors say he'll be out for 4-6 weeks.

His absence was immediately felt Tuesday night as Vince Carter and the Toronto Raptors destroyed the Celtics in a 105-75 debacle. Aside from shooting a dismal 33 percent from the field, Boston also got outrebounded and out-hustled. Coach Pitino lit into his team after the game in an extra long post-game meeting. He knows that a playoff caliber team doesn't look the way his club did Tuesday night.

In the meantime, Anderson's backup Randy Brown and the rest of the Celtics look to get things back on track this Friday at the Fleet Center versus the Knicks.

Matt DeNoble is a Collegian correspondent.

Make no mistake, Jagr is in control; Leetch is back

Who runs this team anyway?

One of the main reasons Ivan Hlinka was hired as head coach of the Pittsburgh Penguins was his perceived ability to blend well with the omnipresent European faction in the locker room. With some of the team's best talent rooted overseas, Hlinka offered something that other coaches simply could not. At the present moment however, it seems that Hlinka is no longer in control. One man leads this team, namely Jaromir Jagr.

Jagr has single handedly shouldered the burden of the club's offensive struggles. The Czech captain is implementing his own system, relegating his coach to simply "the guy in a suit, behind the bench." Jagr's coup probably seems strikingly familiar to another important figure in the organization; partial owner Mario Lemieux. Lemieux took it upon himself to set the style of play for his two Stanley Cup teams, even when legendary coach Scotty Bowman was behind the bench.

MATTHEW F. SACCO

As incredible as it sounds to have control of the team virtually out of the coach's hands, if Pittsburgh makes a deep run into the postseason, may the critics remain mute.

Thirteen lucky in valley of the sun

I know that everybody in Phoenix has heard this all before, but for now, indulge me. I am aware of the Coyotes and their annual journey from first half powerhouse to second half doormat to first round bye for whoever their opponent is in the playoffs. But trust me: this year's squad is different, I swear.

As usual, Jeremy Roenick is among the top scorers in the league, and linemate Keith Tkachuk looks like he has recovered well from last year's injury riddled season, but the most important reason for a 12-game unbeaten streak 17-0-5 is balance.

The Coyotes entered Detroit last night boasting seven players with nine points or more and only one regular with a plus/minus rating in the negative.

Probably the most satisfying notion about hockey in Arizona is the stellar play of Sean Burke in net. Burke has put up some unreal numbers with a record of 7-1-4, a .945 save percentage and a 1.62 goals-against average. What cannot be measured in numbers however, is the big saves he has made when the team needed them most. With Burke in net, Phoenix visited the Red Wings last night, with a 13 game unbeaten streak in mind.

No 'C.' No Problem; Fleury on Fire

Coach Ron Low is taking an interesting approach in New York: the more you take away, the better they play. Although Low did not directly remove the captaincy from Brian Leetch, playing with the 'A' on his chest instead of a 'C' has infused new life into his game. Leetch has seemingly rediscovered his all-star form, and through 13 games he has tallied two goals and 15 helpers for 17 points. He has finally retaken his rightful position as No. 1 in the league in defenseman scoring. Conclusion: Leetch's favorite letter is 'A not 'C'.

Low had another stroke of coaching genius a week ago when he demoted lethal sparkplug Theo Fleury to the fourth line. Even though Fleury refuses to admit to the media that it is in fact the fourth line that he is playing on, the results have been more than favorable. Fleury has lit up faster than a brush fire as he put up six goals and eight points in the four games since being demoted. Conclusion: keep Theo angry, keep fans happy.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian Columnist.

JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Through the five hole

Darcy King and the Minutemen hit the road this weekend for two contests at Nebraska-Omaha.

Basden signs on with UMass

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Head Coach James "Bruiser" Flint of the University of Massachusetts basketball team announced yesterday that Greenbelt, MD native Eddie Basden has signed a national letter of intent to compete for the Minutemen next fall.

Basden is a 6-5 shooting guard who is rated as one of the top 50 prep stars in the country. He is seemingly the heir to Monty Mack's throne at the two-guard spot for UMass.

Basden is a product of Eleanor Roosevelt High School, where he played under the tutelage of coach Glen Forello. His numbers are impressive as he averaged 19.3 points, seven rebounds, four assists and five steals as a junior in high school. Other top-notch programs recruited Basden, but he chose UMass over traditional Big East powers Georgetown and Villanova.

The shooting guard spent the majority of his time last summer competing in various competitions and tournaments that would raise his stock among nationally recognized programs.

Through stand out performances in the Adidas ABCD camp, the D.C. Pro-Am league and the AAU national tournament, Basden turned heads on the national stage.

"We're very excited that Eddie has decided to come to UMass because he is a tremendous player," Flint said.

Flint also noted the importance of signing a two-guard to replace Mack. "I felt it was important that we find a shooting guard, and we've signed a top 50 player to take over that spot when Monty (Mack) moves on after the season," Flint said.

We Sell BEER & WINE on SUNDAYS

12 NOON - 9 PM -SuperBowl Sunday Only
12 NOON - 7 PM -regular hours

MONTAGUE MINI MART

We accept Visa & Mastercard

367-9551

60 Main St. Montague Center
10 Mins. from Campus

MasterCard VISA

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames

UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244

Special Offer $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UMass Student Legal Services Office

CALL TODAY

FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!

545-1995

CENTER FOR HUMAN DEVELOPMENT, INC.
Internal Notice of Position Opening

The Center for Human Development is requesting your active assistance in recruiting qualified candidates for the following position

Program: The Bridge Home Program- (Female Adolescent Home)
Job Title: Full-Time Residential (2nd shift)- Awake Overnight & Weekends(11p-7a)
Salary Range: 20,000 plus excellent benefits

Job Description: Day to day care of the adolescents; implementation of treatment plans; good writing skills; remaining awake during overnight shift

Qualifications Desired: Experience with children who have been victims of neglect or trauma related experience. Residential experience, valid driver's license and vehicle. BA in related field also a plus.

Procedure Applying: Send resume and cover letter to: CHD/45 Willow Street/Springfield, MA 01103 Attn. Bridge Program

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

OFFcampus Antics Find Laura singing Karaoke on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublease 2Bedroom Apt. $775/month including everything. Call 665-0969

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $300/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

2 Badroom Great Location Near campus. 549-7599 for info

One room in 3 bedroom apt. available. $337/month all inclusive. Located at Cliffside apts. in Sunderland. Contact Jyll Evens @ 397-9887

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

99 Saturn SL manual, air, 25,500mi, Yakima Rack $9500, 545-1998

AUTO FOR SALE

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

96 Suzuki Sidekick exc condition. New tires, Tune-up, 50k, 5sp, $7500 obo Dana 253-0540

1991 VW Passat 5spd, CD player, sun roof, spoiler. Must sell $2695 obo 546-3114

91 Pontiac Firebird 126k miles. Power windows/locks. T-tops. New tires. 413-789-1149

Used car for Sale 1991 Mercury Sable ST Wagon. 6cy 3L, automatic, 118T miles. Asking for $900 Contact: Roland Weidisch phone: 413-659-2568 e-mail:roland_weidisch@yahoo.com

89 Volvo Stationwagon. Mechanically: runs absolutely mint! Body: Tan, no rust, very solid. Loaded: AC, sunroof, leather, etc. Milage 181k, 4 new snow tires included, family owned, dealer maintained. (Book value $6060) asking $5700 or B/O Jim (413) 628-4789

CHILDCARE

Mothers Helper 2 children - 4pm-7:30pm Tues +Thurs After Dec 15, Mon-Fri. Cook light dinners. $8.00/hr. Call Michelle 256-8632

COMPUTERS

Printer Multipass C3000 Bubble Jet Fax Machine/Color Printer/Scanner. Great for school. New! Hardly used $280 or B/O Julia 586-9552

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Mail Boxes Ect. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Center, Amherst)

Last Chance Legal Assistants Wanted November 9, 2000 is the last day to apply to the Student Legal Services Office for the Spring, 2001 internship! Get hands-on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys and clients. Earn up to 15 undergraduate credits. No experience in the legal profession required—training is provided. Contact Student Legal Services today: 545-1995, 922 Campus Center

Attention! Work from home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

EMPLOYMENT

Reliable and Reasonable dog care person wanted in Sunderland. 665-2779

FOR SALE

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

CATCH BEERPONG FEVER. BABY WE GOT YOUR TABLE DON'T YOU WORRY. 549-5950 ASK FOR CHAD FREE DELIVERY, CUSTOMIZED TO YOUR LIKING GOD AND THE BABY JESUS, CALL US

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

LOST & FOUND

Black Peugeot (white letters) 10speed taken form CC on 11/6 between 4-8:30pm. 26" frame, gemerator, rack, worn red cable tubing & black handle cloth wrap, new rear tire. Owned for 20yrs & redden over 20k mi, sentimental value. REWARD! 413-467-3420 Joe

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Share Apartment with 2 female roommates. Spring 2001 summer option available. Cheap rent! On bus route. Needed ASAP please call 256-0912

To share Apt. with 3 other roommates for Spring 2001. Summer option available. Cheap rent! Great location! Please call 549-5570

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

TRAVEL

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Your Ad Could Be Right Here!! Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Hearing Services Cable Network
2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
4 - CBS/4 Boston
5 - PBS/57 Springfield
6 - PBS/57 Springfield
8 - UPN/30 Hartford
10 - NBC/30 New Britain
12 - PBS/24 Hartford
14 - International Channel
16 - WB/59 New Haven
18 - FNN/
20 - Weather Channel
22 - C-Span
24 - CNN Headline News
26 - USA
28 - TNT
30 - Sci-Fi
32 - Nggtn
34 - Nick at Nite
36 - TV Land
38 - Comedy Central
40 - Univision
42 - Discovery Channel
44 - College TV Network
46 - MTV2
48 - VH1
50 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 9, 2000

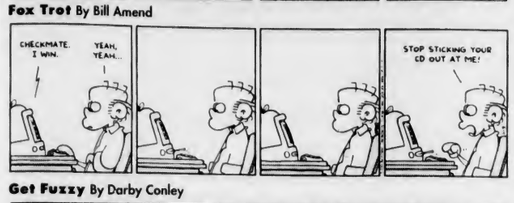
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(12) Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Scenic Rail Journeys		Mystery: Hetty Wainthropp		Being Served	Keeping Up	Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	(3) News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours: Col. Maracek-Honor		City of Angels "Straight Flush"		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	(4) News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours: Col. Maracek-Honor		City of Angels "Straight Flush"		Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	(5) News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Gilmore Girls (N) (In Stereo)		Charmed "Primrose Path"		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		Friends (N)	Cursed (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Flight of Fancy" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "...And Girlfriends"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News		NBC News	Extra	Hollywood		Friends (N)	Cursed (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Flight of Fancy" (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Battle of the Child Geniuses: Who Is the Smartest Kid?				News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)	Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "Flight of Fancy" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Dra. on Call	Mystery: Hetty Wainthropp		Grafters (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Hits "The Running Man" (1987, Science Fiction) Arnold Schwarzenegger.						½ "Rocky IV" (1985, Drama) Sylvester Stallone.
A&E	90	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Big Bang"		Biography: André the Giant		Murder One "Chapter Nine"		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Wedded Bliss"
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	½ "The Road to Wellville" (1994, Satire) Anthony Hopkins, Bridget Fonda.					Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	70	Wild Discovery: Tiger		Wild Discovery "Wild Asia" (N)		21st Century Airliner		Hospital (N)		Science Mysteries		Justice Files "Out for Justice"
ESPN	31	Sportacenter		2-Minute Drill	Coll. Football	College Football: Virginia at George Tech. (Live)						Sportacenter
LIFE	69	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		 "Without Consent" (1994, Drama) Jennie Garth, Jill Eikenberry.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	53	Direct Effect	Jackass	Real World (In Stereo)		Real World IX Finale Wrap-Up		Jim Carrey Uncensored		Cribs (N)	Making-Video	Truth (N)	Jim Carrey
NICK	63	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Rugrats	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	35	Sliders "Prophets and Loss"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	27	Edward and Sophie: Love		Great Epidemic		Paramedica (N)		Secrets Forensic		Secrets of Forensic Science		Paramedica
TNT	62	ER "Gut Reaction" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Betrayal" (In Stereo)		NBA Basketball: Philadelphia 76ers at Minnesota Timberwolves. (In Stereo Live)				NBA		½ "Bad Boys" (1982)
USA	59	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Yeah, Baby" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Shoot the Moon"		½ "Death Warrant" (1990, Drama) Jean-Claude Van Damme.				Martin	Martin
HBO	66	 "Victory" (1981, Adventure) Sylvester Stallone. 'PG'				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		½ "Soldier" (1998) Kurt Russell. 'R'			Men of Honor	G-String Divas	Inside the NFL
MAX	65	 "The Package" (1989, Drama) Gene Hackman. 'R'				 "When the Sky Falls" (2000, Drama) Joan Allen. 'NR'				½ "8MM" (1999, Drama) Nicolas Cage. (In Stereo) 'R'
SHOW	67	 "The Return of Swamp Thing" (1989) Louis Jourdan. 'PG-13'				 "Stepmom" (1998, Drama) Julia Roberts. 'PG-13'				Rude Awaken.	 "Species II" (1998) Michael Madsen. 'R'

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

I WON'T I WON'T WELL, OF COURSE I WON. THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AREN'T COMPLETE IDIOTS!
I KNEW IT! I KNEW THEY LOVED ME! THEY MAY HAVE LIED TO THE POLLSTERS, BUT THEY COULDN'T LIE TO THEMSELVES! I'M THE MAN!
WHY DOES BEATS ME. BUT LET HIM ENJOY HIS LITTLE DELUSION FOR A WHILE.
GET ME THE PANTAGON! TIME TO INVADE FRANCE!
OKAY, THAT'S LONG ENOUGH!

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

EVERY LIGHT BULB? BUCKY BROKE EVERY BULB IN THE HOUSE?
YUP. BULBS ARE JUST ONE OF THOSE THINGS THAT DRIVE HIM NUTS. LIKE BRAKES
WELL, MAYBE ON SOME LEVEL, HIS MIND FIGURES--
"LEVELS"? YOU'RE GIVING HIM TOO MUCH CREDIT, MAN. HIS MIND IS A COZY, LITTLE RANCH.
YOU GUYS EVER SCRATCH YOURSELF SO LONG YOU FORGET WHAT DAY IT IS?

Mop Closet By The Haggardy

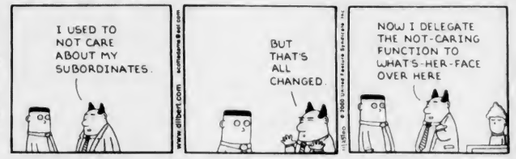
Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

CLARA SEEMED SO BUMMED BY HER PARENTS SPLITTING UP, THAT I HAD TO GET DESPERATE...
YOU DIDN'T...
ONE MORE TWIST! GO! GO! GO!
RJ, YOU KNOW BETTER THAN TO START ANYONE ON FULL STRENGTH SAMPIYE
I'M SORRY, HONEY... HE'S ONLY HARMFUL TO HIMSELF.
QUARREL!
AND THAT DUCK.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

MMM... MY FAVORITE POTATO CHIPS -- WHAT
DON'T BUY PRINGLES, SCOTT! THEY'RE HIGH IN FAT! FAT IS IMMORAL!
REALLY? BECAUSE I--
DON'T LISTEN TO HIM, SCOTT! HE'S ON THE WHEAT THING FAYROLL!

Dilbert By Scott Adams



I USED TO NOT CARE ABOUT MY SUBORDINATES.
BUT THAT'S ALL CHANGED.
NOW I DELEGATE THE NOT-CARING FUNCTION TO WHAT'S-HER-FACE OVER HERE
www.dilbert.com

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

VERNE?... VERNE?... VERNE?!...
VRRRM! WAP! WAP! WAP! BWUMP
WHAT?
ARE YOU ABSOLUTELY FINISHED?
YOU KNOW I CAN'T MIGRATE WITHOUT MY SHRINE TO TIPPER!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HEY, BUCK. DID I GET A PACKAGE TODAY? I'M WAITING FOR A NEW PALM ORGANIZER FOR -- AW, MAN! WHAT ARE YOU DOING?
THIS ISN'T WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE
YOU'RE SITTING NEXT TO AN OPEN PACKAGE WITH AN ORGANIZER IN YOUR DIRTY LITTLE PAWS. HOW COULD IT NOT BE WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE?
OH. YOU BAN THE ORGANIZER? OK. THEN YEAH. THIS IS WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Avoid insistence in any scenario today. Gentle persuasion can work wonders for you – particularly when it's a matter of changing someone's mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Saying the right thing at the right time may win you limited rewards, but such a conscious effort to please may eventually backfire on you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You can drive your self forward without asking too much of yourself today. Avoid thinking that you have everything all at once.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – You have no reason to feel guilty today. Others can be held responsible, as well, and you have held up your end of the bargain to the letter. So bask in your glory by sipping a martini next to the pool.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're likely to be quite keenly attuned to what your body is telling you throughout the day. Trust your instincts to direct your course. Word to the wise: stay away from the dining commons.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – It's time to stop showing off and get down to business today. You've let your honest intentions slip by the wayside lately. Get back on track.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Take care that your expectations do not set you up for disappointment today. Make sure your passions remain cool and under control. Charles Dickens was right.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may find yourself in a race against the clock today – not because you have to, but because it is more fun that way! Enjoy the challenge.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You may get a card or letter from someone who has slipped through the cracks. Like it or not, he or she is doing much better than expected.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You'll receive an important piece of information today which will allow you to put the finishing touches on a plan currently in the works. So the plan to fix the election is a little too late.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You're not likely to react well to even the slightest failure today. In the end, you're sure to think it's someone else's fault! And you're right, it is someone else's fault. Blame your roommate. It's usually their fault anyway.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your personality is likely to clash today with those who differ in taste and expectations. A compromise may be impossible to strike by the day's end. When the day ends, take your party to the nearest bar and discuss the day's issues over a nice frosty mug.

Amherst Weather

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 56 LOW: 45	HIGH: 51 LOW: 40	HIGH: 55 LOW: 34

Quote of the Day

"She's about as serious as a lapdance"

–Colin Quinn's take on Hillary Clinton running for Senate

ACROSS
1 Actress Cheryl
5 "— Ha?"
9 Graceful horses
14 Jar
15 Discharge
16 Maui's island
17 After-tax amounts
18 Dry off
19 Fry
20 Expressionless face
22 Healthy snacks
24 Baseball's Hank
26 Can neighbor
27 Heifer, e.g.
30 Cordial fruits
35 — out: making ends meet
36 Where Cambodia is 37 New Zealand bird
38 Hang back
39 Downiest
42 Not strict
43 Aunt Bee's nephew
45 Fixed the table
46 Happening
48 Ranger's concern
50 Vitality
51 Admin. head
52 Makes a scene
54 Fan
58 Bliss
62 Twist
63 Othello's foe
65 Member of an Andes empire
66 Shell
67 Two of a kind
68 Act like a beaver
69 Type of cheese
70 Facilitate 71 Merit

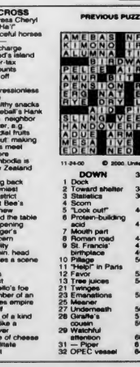
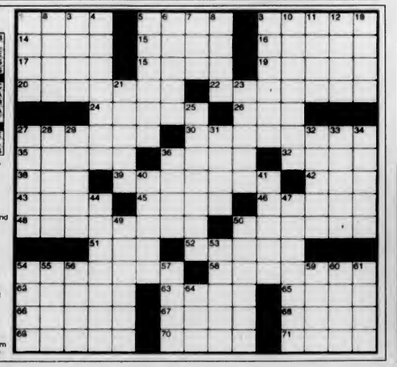
DOWN
1 Dock
2 Toward shelter
3 Statistics
4 Scorn
5 "Look out!"
6 Protein-building acid
7 Mouth part
8 Roman road
9 St. Francis' birthplace
10 Pillage
11 "Hello" in Paris
12 Favor
13 Tree juices
21 Twinges
23 Emanations
25 Meaner
27 Underneath
28 Giraffe's cousin
29 Watchful attention
31 — Piper
32 OPEC vessel
33 Longbow's sound
34 Threescore
36 From a distance
40 — Oyl
Popeye's friend
41 Temporary homes
44 Borders
47 Trace
48 Counterfeits
50 Audience's demand
53 Sponsorship
54 Leather-working tools
55 Nancy —, girl detective
56 Skirt length
57 Mellow
59 Governess in Siam
60 Blemish
61 Show boredom
64 Motorists' grp.

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



11-24-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Cutlet Sandwich (B, F, H)
Taco Bar (B, F, H)
Eggplant Parmesan (vegan) (B, F)
Veggie Bean Taco (vegan) (B, H)
Kielbasa Ginder (W)
Spanilopita (veggie) (W)
Tomato, Macaroni, & Lentils (vegan) (W)

Dinner

Fried Chicken (all)
Cheese Lasagna (veggie) (B, F, H)
Meat Lasagna (B, F, H)
African Veggies Stew (vegan) (B, F, H)
Cheese Calzones (W)
Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan) (W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor: Awam White
Photo Technician: Jarett Barr
Copy Editor: Matt Despres
Production Supervisor: Alan Basque
Production Staff: Sarah Wingardner, Jasmine Trabelsi

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, November 9, 2000 | 12

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Cornerstone of the Minutewomen

Drennan's career ending for Maroon and White

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Sometimes it's the person behind the scenes who gets the least amount of credit while being responsible for most of the work.

For the past four months, senior Jenni Drennan has been setting the ball while her teammates have been making the kills – and the team is on the verge of qualifying for post-season play. For the past four years, Drennan has been a dedicated piece of the Massachusetts women's volleyball team and sits on the verge of ending a four-tok volleyball career.

Injuries Drennan came to UMass to play volleyball and to "see something new." But she would never have followed this path if she hadn't chosen to try something new in her freshman year of high school. Going into high school as a soccer player Drennan was offered a new opportunity in athletics through volleyball and, coincidentally, she wasn't half-bad.

By love, she knew it, she was a senior in high school Drennan was playing in a volleyball tournament in Las Vegas when two big time east coast volleyball coaches arrived to recruit her. Ironically, rival program Temple came to lay claim on Drennan while UMass Head Coach Bonnie Kenny was plotting some sweet-talking of her own.

"The Temple coach and [Kenny] were recruiting me at the same time, and I thought, 'I'm not going to Philadelphia,'" Drennan said.

The decision to attend a school about 3,000 miles east of her hometown of Long Beach was a no-brainer. "I definitely wanted to get my scholarship on the east coast. I wanted to see something new. My parents told me, 'If you want to do it, go ahead.'"

Eastward came the young lady, on a quest to begin a volleyball career in the small town of Amherst where she knew virtually no one. Unlike most freshmen, Drennan arrived knowing what she wanted to do, and that was to become a nurse. The UMass nursing program posed another time management challenge on top of v-ball.

"There's academics and volleyball and then, basically, no social life … maybe a little during spring. Plus, the nursing major is to demanding it's ridiculous."

Thankfully, the Minutewomen welcomed the setter into their family, because volleyball and nursing didn't leave much time to socialize. "My first semester freshman year, I knew no one but my teammates," Drennan said.

Thanks to her fellow Minutewomen, when the going got tough, she had people to count on. While her family provided comforting advice over the phone, she was forced to find solace in person amongst her teammates. "I wasn't really homesick until I started getting in trouble with coach; then I started getting homesick and wanted to get home."

If nothing else concrete has come out of her volleyball career at UMass, Drennan will walk away with strong friendships with her teammates, especially junior Lymarie Llovet and fellow senior Rebecca Hasson.

Drennan came to Amherst with this season's kill leader, Hasson, and the duo has been a 1-2 punch against opposing teams all season. Drennan's other strong friendship is with Llovet, who coincidentally ranks second on the team in kills. Drennan and Llovet and teammate Lauren VanderVeen spent spring break together last March in Llovet's homeland of Puerto Rico.

"I'll be friends with Lymarie forever and probably Rebecca, too," Drennan said. "My teammates will always keep in touch. My teammates have been the most important relationships I've made here."

In her senior year of high school, it was Kenny who brought Drennan to Amherst, and both will agree that UMass and Drennan have benefited from each other. "[Coach] made me look at the way people treat other people and how you want to be treated," Drennan said. "[She] made me a stronger person."

And if anyone has been able to watch Drennan grow into an adult during these past four years, it is Kenny. "She's grown and matured; she's always been a very good kid, and done what she was supposed to do," Kenny said. "She's always wanted to be a nurse, she's a nursing major now, and that's obviously something not a lot of student athletes can handle."

The question of whether or not Drennan will be rooting for her old teammates next year in Curry Hicks Cage is a no-brainer. "I'm definitely going to come out to the games. I want to keep it a part of my life," Drennan said.

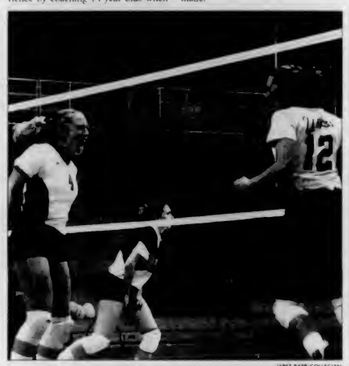
The Californian doesn't plan on returning home right away. She has a fifth year in store, a year without athletic responsibilities. Drennan may find herself with a wealth of free time, but the nursing program should be able to help her find something to do with that.

An assistant coaching position at the collegiate level isn't in the cards next year, but Drennan won't count it out for the future. She is gaining experience by coaching 14-year olds when she goes home. "If I have time, I would love to do that, but nursing, that's my big priority," Drennan said. After her undergraduate career is finished off with a bachelor's degree, it's off to graduate school for the future nurse.

But how do you replace a player of Drennan's capabilities? "You have to replace people," Kenny said. "How do you replace Jenni and Rebecca? They're two big pieces of our puzzle this year."

For the next year at least, UMass will be blessed with the presence of not only a hard worker, but also a wonderful individual.

"She'll be missed; she's a very good kid. It's sad when it's over," Kenny said. "I think she and Rebecca can feel proud of the contributions they've made."



JARET BAER/COLLEGIAN

Senior setter Jenni Drennan (left) turned in her soccer cleats early in life to hit the volleyball court. What resulted was an incredibly successful four-year career for the Long Beach native.

Minutewomen hit court; Captain Smith sidelined

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

There are a number of ways to start a season, but there aren't many that are worse than this.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team suffered a setback of immense proportions this past weekend when junior center/power forward Nekole Smith stopped short during practice. With the routine jump-stop, her season came to a crashing halt.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Nekole Smith

The 6'2" Detroit native dislocated her left knee and subsequently will be forced to watch her teammates from the sidelines for the rest of the season. The long ride of rehabilitation will begin after her surgery on Tuesday.

Although losing a projected starter would cripple most teams, UMass can savor the fact that it is returning four starters from last year's squad. Headlining the 2000-2001 campaign is senior point guard Kathy Coyner, who will bring a wealth of experience and leadership to the court. Coyner, a dependable contributor, started 25 of 28 games last season and led the team in assists.

Returning in the frontcourt is sophomore Jennifer Butler, the leading rebounder from last year's team. The 6'3" forward averaged over 10 rebounds per game last year as a freshman, while netting almost nine points at the same time. Both Butler and Coyner were named to the Atlantic 10 pre-season all-conference third team.

The first test of the year will come tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center when the University of Latvia invades the Pioneer Valley for a pre-season contest with the Minutewomen. UMass will have to show an ability to adapt to life without Smith quickly if it wants to start its regular season on the right foot.

Expected to step up in Smith's absence is junior Caroline Nehls. Nehls, a forward/center, started in all 29 of the Minutewomen's games last year and brings a big shot blocking presence to the court.

Sophomore swing player Amber Sneed may be seeing more time at forward now than at the guard position which she was projected to play before Smith's injury. The Cincinnati native fought in all of the Maroon and White's battles last season and brings a dangerous and reliable jump shot to the hardwood.

The return of sophomore Stasia Robinson from injury provides Head Coach Joanie O'Brien with a strong post player in reserve for the Minutewomen. Robinson, who was projected by O'Brien to have the opportunity to play a key role off the bench this season, will be forced to utilize her 6'3" frame on the court immediately.

Four newcomers will hit the Mullins Center hardwood wearing maroon and white uniforms for the first time tonight. Siiri Liivandi and Glamora Maeweather both provide a degree of depth for the Minutewomen at the post-position.

Liivandi, a junior college transfer, averaged 19 points and 14 rebounds on the Florida courts.

Maeweather averaged over 20 points and 10 boards a night as a senior in high school, and brings with her, as O'Brien put it, "a little attitude" that will benefit the team.

Frosh Cleo Foster climbs on board as Coyner's prodigy. Foster possesses solid ball-handling skills and a knack for dishing the rock.

"She and Kathy will complement each other very well, which will sometimes enable Kathy to slide to the off-guard position," O'Brien said.

Paige Harris arrives in Amherst touted as "probably the best shooter UMass has ever had," according to O'Brien. A main reason for the team's struggles last season was its inability to put the ball in the hoop, and an offensive player like Harris should pose as an outside threat for the Minutewomen.

Mancini and Depontes head south, turn heads in W&M tournament

By Alison Sciamanna
Collegian Correspondent

The fall season ended for the Massachusetts women's tennis team this weekend at the ITA East Regional Championships held at William and Mary University in Virginia. The Minutewomen sent two of its youngest players, Francesca Mancini of Milan, Italy and Jafra Depontes of Hawaii, both freshmen, who returned to Amherst with some promising results. Although both Mancini's winning streak in singles and Mancini and Depontes' winning streak in doubles were broken, the freshman duo turned a few heads in Virginia.

According to Mancini, things were unsure for her going into the four day tournament.

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN

Francesca Mancini posted a 12-1 record in the fall schedule. She and doubles teammate Jafra Depontes went 7-1 on the year.

"I didn't really know what to expect. I had no idea," Mancini said.

Her teammate Depontes, however, was quite confident going into the tournament.

"I thought we would do really well," Depontes said.

Seeded 17th, Mancini received a bye in first round singles action, but the duo of Mancini and Depontes picked up an 8-3 victory over St. Bonaventure's team of Kearney and Pesono in first round doubles action.

Mancini got her 12th straight win of the season in the second round by defeating her opponent (6-1, 7-5) in straight sets. The second round also proved to be the most exciting for the young UMass doubles team. Mancini and Depontes silenced the home crowd by beating the number one seeded Buis and Troch, of host school William and Mary, 8-3. Buis and Troch are also ranked 12th in the region.

"The way they walked on the court and saw us from a small tennis school, they thought it would be a walk in the park, but we went out and showed them," Depontes said.

"They had a really cocky attitude," Mancini said. "It was exciting."

In the third round, Mancini was dealt her first loss of the season as Hampton's Alena Mitackova beat her (6-1, 7-5) in straight sets. This left Mancini with a 12-1 record for the season. However, Mancini was able to bounce back in doubles action as she and Depontes beat the ninth seeded team of Broughton and Magvera of Harvard 8-3 to put them into the semi-finals.

In semi-final action, Mancini and Depontes were beaten 8-4 by the fifth seeded duo of Dalton and Puppo of James Madison. Dalton and Puppo went on to capture the ITA East Regional title.

"We did better than people expected. We lost in the semis, but the team we lost to ended up winning the tournament," Depontes said.

That was Mancini and Depontes' first loss as a doubles team all season. They finished with a 7-1 record on the season. Part of their success has been their off-court relationship as roommates.

"We play really well together and we get along really well," Mancini said.

As for the spring season, which begins on February 12th against Yale in New Haven, the Minutewomen are quite excited.

"I'm looking forward to playing the more challenging teams," Depontes said.

The Minutewomen's spring schedule has the team playing away matches until the last four of the season, all of which will be played at UMass on the Upper Boyden Courts.

From Phuket, Thailand to Walmart; news from around the sports world

This is the fifth week of "dritte und vierzig acht über den Zuständen," better known as "Third and 48 across the nation." Quotes were harder to find than usual this week. In one attempt, we tried to call David Nelson Genders to get his opinion on who he would choose for Indiana's "Bowler of the week." Instead, we were stuck listening to his very informative answering machine. "You've reached the Genders," the machine said, "And we must be out doing something because we're not here to pick up the phone."

We've tried hard to keep 3rd and 48 as your crucial, up to the minute reports on nationwide sports. Unfortunately, we were unable continue the pace. So, hold on to your jock straps: 3rd and 48 is going international.

Fobissa Secondary Games 2000

First off, we would really like to apologize for not reporting this earlier. We got tied up in minor events like the NBA Championship and the World Series, and for some reason completely ignored the major athletic competition of the century.

The Fobissa Secondary Games 2000, held at Dulwich International College in Phuket, (yes you read that correctly) Thailand demonstrated some of the most prominent displays of athletic ability ever seen. More than 14 of the top international schools of the region were represented in such specific sports as "athletics," "swimming," and "netball."

Around 3,000 medals and trophies were handed out during the event, which culminated with a closing ceremony viewed by over 1,200 psychotic fans.

The games had an array of sponsors. Participants had the opportunity to consider purchasing a new pool for their home. "The swimming pool," Desjoyaux Swimming Pools declares, "The true art of life."

There was the K-Hotel Phuket, which claims to be, "your home away from home." The rival Sheraton Grande Laguna Phuket offers "total immersion in private pleasure."

We're not quite sure what sponsor Phuket Fantasia does, but we're pretty confident they produce films with a big mouse in a sorcerer's hat praising his hometown by yelling, "Phuket! Phuket! Phuket!"

Table Tennis

To the delight of adoring fans all over the country, the national collegiate table tennis rankings have finally come out. As expected, Yi Yong Fan from Washington has maintained the top spot on the chart. The next four were a shock. Maryland's Yinghua Cheng jumped in the number two spot, well ahead of David Yong-Xiang Zhuang who finished in third. Khoa Dinh Nguyen placed in fourth, while Texas' Eric Owens came in fifth.

In the attempt to find the real Eric Owens, we unknowingly called the house of the wrong Eric Owens in Texas. We were however fortunate enough to speak to the "wrong" Eric Owens' mother who was overwhelmingly delighted when she found out that a newspaper was looking for her son. But when she found out that we were looking for a different person, she said, "He wishes he was [that] Eric Owens."

We are currently on a mission to find the real Eric Owens.

While we tried to find out more information about the validity of ping-pong tables from the local Walmart, we discovered that Walmart could not comment without obtaining the proper knowledge from their media consultant. Apparently the art of table tennis is so top secret that our small college newspaper does not have the adequate authority to go seeking data about it. Let us never speak of table tennis again.

Mascot Training

Anyone interested in becoming a school mascot can contact Kenny Glenn of Game Operations international. Glenn is responsible for Sky Hawk, the flying bird from the Atlanta Hawks, and the Gorilla for the Phoenix Suns. Glenn comments on the difficulty that surrounds being a mascot trainer. "When I was an employee of the Phoenix Suns, I spent countless hours sifting through applications watching video tapes of gorilla hopefuls. Not one stuck out from the rest though."

Honors

Alan Phillips from Emory University was awarded with "Player of the Week" honors after he led his college's golf team to a sixth place finish at the Gulford College Invitational.

WRTV, Channel 6 in Indiana announced that it will be giving away an award for the "Indiana Bowler of the Week." One of the many perks that come with this miraculous tribute is a chance to be interviewed by local sports god Ed Sorenson. Channel 6 isn't looking for just any bowler. "We are looking for bowlers with all skill levels," they explain. "The youngest bowler, someone who's bowling a personal best, a long term league bowler, a bowler with a unique style, etc."

Eric Soderstrom and Ryan Benharris are Collegian Columnists.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The Theater Department brings good versus evil to the Rand Theatre this weekend in their production of Dr. Faustus.

ARTS p. 5

Field hockey head to Chapel Hill to compete in NCAA tournament finals. Read about it today in Sports.

SPORTS p. 8

Volume CVII Issue 47 | www.dailycollegian.com | Friday, November 10, 2000

Congressman Frank talks economics at UMass

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Free trade increases overall wealth but concentrates that wealth in the hands of a few and creates economic inequality, according to Congressman Barney Frank.

Barney Frank, the Congressman from the fourth Massachusetts district, spoke about the excess of unregulated global capitalism and suggested solutions that could improve the world's economic situation in a speech delivered at the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

"We must find a way to reap the benefits of globalization while at the same time rectifying some of the inequalities inherent in the free movement of capital globally," Frank said.

Frank compared the present world economic order to the economic situation of the United States just prior to the Great Depression, with free movement of capital concentrating wealth in the hands of a few. Frank suggested that some degree of public control over the flow of capital could alleviate financial imbalance in the world, as Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal did in the United States during the depression.

"We are generating wealth at a pace unparalleled in human history," Frank said. "But capitalism leaves a lot undone; we need a public sector to regulate the private sector."

Frank compared advocates of free trade with trickle-down economists, claiming they both believe that prosperity at the top of the economic ladder will "trickle-down" to the rest of us.

"John Kennedy first popularized trickle-down economics with the metaphor 'a rising tide will lift all boats'," Frank said. "But if you're too poor to own a boat the tide goes up your nose."

Frank pointed out that prosperity may hurt those who don't share in it.

"One need only to look at the housing crisis in Silicon Valley, where housing costs have jumped due to a general prosperity, and many blue-collar workers can no longer afford housing because of rising costs," Frank said.

Congressman Frank criticized those in the United States who oppose signing the global warming treaty, suggesting that the United States should sign it and require other nations to approve it as well if they want to trade with the U.S.

"We should require nations seeking access our markets to meet certain criteria on the environment, and on worker's rights," Frank said.

Frank spoke favorably about a recent trade agreement between Jordan and the United States which granted Jordan complete, tariff-free access to U.S.

Turn to FRANK, page 2

SCOTT SUNDQUIST/COLLEGIAN

U.S. Representative Barney Frank speaks at the Mahar auditorium.

Classics teacher wins award for lesson plan

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Anne Starkey, a Master of Arts in teaching in the Classics department at the University of Massachusetts, received a bronze chalice award from AbleMedia, for her submission "Roman Living."

The selection is a five-day lesson plan for the use of beginning Latin students. Her program instructs teachers through a daily lesson plan on how to explain to students where the people of Rome lived, and how individual citizens of Rome centered their lives around their homes.

On her plan's website Starkey includes links to additional essay questions for students, additional readings and several pictures that can be used to facilitate conversation and give information. In her lesson plan, Starkey also includes the Internet as a source for student learning, suggesting it as a resource to teachers interested.

"Teachers might find it useful to assign the website to be viewed for homework," she suggested.

Starkey explained in her lesson plan that the goal of the teachings was to introduce students beginning in Latin, the history of the Romans by tracing the development of housing and living situations. Included in the housing plan are also issues surrounding water supply and heating and how Roman engineering compares to the modern engineering of today.

She also emphasized that teachers can help their students analyze differences in class structure by looking at differences in privileges within the society.

Students are able to learn how Romans lived and then actually participate in their lives themselves through role-playing and through projects to enhance teachings.

"When in Rome do as Anne says in her thorough introduction to how and where the ancient Romans lived," said Wendy E. Owens, CTCWeb Editor-in-Chief in a statement on AbleMedia.

All of the information from Starkey's lesson plan is available on the Classics Technology Center Web (CTCWeb) a division of AbleMedia. CTCWeb is an online organization that serves educators, students and up to 65 countries. The website is often used as a tool to enhance classes and web coverage of issues in Classics Departments. On the website people are encouraged to exchange educational materials, systems and applications by individuals and organizations involved in the Classics community through their outreach program.

Lessons included on the site span through a variety of issues and give suggestions to educators on how to teach the material in a creative way. Some of the topics of the board that are discussed include ancient weddings, ancient Olympics, figures of speech in Rome, The Iliad and many others.

As a way of rewarding particularly outstanding submissions the website offers awards monthly and yearly. Gold chalices are presented to educators for the best submissions of the year; silver chalices for the best submission of the month and bronze chalice awards are presented for the best submissions of the week.

"I am delighted to have Roman Living available on CTCWeb," Starkey said in a statement to the press.

Ski and Board Sale continues

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

The 32nd annual UMass Ski and Board sale is well underway. The event, which takes place in the Student Union Ballroom, runs today from noon to 9 p.m. and tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. The club boasts it as one of the biggest ski sales in New England.

Consumers can find over $3 million in equipment and apparel. Sales of ski and snowboard gear as well as cross-country and winter clothes can be found at 50 to 75 percent off regular prices.

The University of Massachusetts Ski and Board club is a student run registered organization founded in 1969. They offer trips to places as far away as Quebec and as close as Killington, VT.

Meaghan Wilk, senior Exercise Science major and president of the Ski and Board Club commented on this year's sales. "So far, so good," she said.

Ryan Mahoney, treasurer for the club chimed in, saying, "It's the biggest fundraiser of the year, which helps reduce costs for trips."

Wilk gave a lot credit on the sale to the retailers "The vendors are great, and they make this place fun. We really try to find vendors who are student friendly."

Big name vendors have been the key to getting the sale off the ground. Stores such as Ski Inn, Ski House, and Hardy Company are some of the more popular sellers of equipment and clothing.

Bruce Hardy, the owner the Hardy Company may be the person most familiar with the annual event. "I started this ski sale years ago," he explains. "It began in a small room in the commuter lounge, and since then I've participated in 25 of them."

Hardy also said that the sale got out of hand a while ago and became too big for its own good. He said that this year's event is much smaller and more controlled than it has been in the past. He also said that vendors from the past hinged too much on quantity, and sacrificed quality. "Vendors here have good quality and fair prices," he said. "It's much better that way."

JARET BAER/COLLEGIAN

Ben Webber, a junior English major, buys skis at the UMass ski sale from Craig Hollis.

Hardy is one of the few dealers who does not include himself in the world of snowboarding. He said that it is a separate entity that requires extra attention. Each year he attends 31 sale shows, and said that UMass is, "stronger and bigger than the others."

As for business at the sale, it has been moderate so far. Brian Harding, the former president of the club, the self proclaimed, "Yoda" as a consultant said, "Business has had a pretty good flow. Overall it's working out good. Everyone moved in well [yesterday] morning, and I would really like to say that sales will end up above last year. We're really hoping to get a lot of people from other towns."

Rob Guerin, owner of Ski House has been here before, and explained why a University is a good place to sell products. "We do four or five of these a year," he said. "Students have plenty of disposable income, and are a good market." He comes to UMass in particular because, "The Ski and Board Club does a good job." Guerin feels that they are one of the most organized Ski Clubs around. He also explained that hoarding has become very popular for college students.

Richard Gernux from Ski Inn also had quite a bit to comment on students as a market. "You can always tell when classes are changing," he said. "Sales will increase and decrease [accordingly]." He said that the sale is always a fun event.

One part about the event that the Ski and Board Club takes very seriously is protecting their vendors from theft. Volunteer club members control all precautions. "Security is good," explains board member Ryan Connolly. "We catch people from time to time, but it's never anything big. We'll usually catch them before they get too far with anything."

Gary Kennedy, whose family owned business Competitive Edge and Phat Trax is a partner with his brother Jim. He said clothing is much bigger among students than hardware. "This show goes up and down every year, but right now it is one of the strongest shows around," he said. "This year's show is like the [presidential] election, though. It's hard to predict what's going to happen."

Islam Awareness Week concludes with social event

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

Today marks the conclusion of Islam Awareness Week, an event sponsored by UMass Muslim Student Association (MSA).

MSA president, Navid Khan, a junior biochemistry major, said, "The purpose of the activities held during the week was basically to raise awareness about Islam among the student body, and also to bring Muslims on campus together to interact and promote unity."

Islam Awareness Week officially began on Sunday with a Potluck Community Dinner. Monday, the movie The Message was shown, which is an educational film about the origins of Islam.

Dr. Ali Hazratji from West Springfield spoke at a forum on Tuesday, leading a discussion entitled "Peace though Justice, Justice through Peace" in which he analyzed the hostility currently taking place in the Middle East through the Palestinian perspective. Aiding him in discussion was former Palestinian resident, Brother Ahmed.

Ahmed said about the talk, "We defined justice, injustice, persecution and oppression."

Possible solutions to the problem were examined with the help of audience participation. According to Khan, accounts of the violence given during the talk left some audience members in tears.

Wednesday, club members and advisors facilitated interactive workshops on Salah (Prayer) and Sawm (Fasting), followed on Thursday by a forum, entitled "Love in the context of Modern Day Islam," given by local Muslim VIP, Mohammad Lazounni.

The events planned for the week conclude this evening with an ice-skating social.

The MSA has been a club on campus for 14 years.

"Our main goal this year," said Khan, "was to get the club more active. There are about 350 Muslims on campus right now, and that's a significant minority."

Club member Ahmed Barabih, a second-year mechanical engineering major, is also the fix-e-college coordinator for SMA. He only became involved with the club this year.

"The purpose of the club," he said, "is to bring Islamic students together and help them discover the beauty of their religion."

This week, he has been involved in managing the information table set up in the Student Union where he answered question and handed out information on Islam and MSA. He said he is enthusiastic about the progress the club has made so far this year.

"We've already brought nearly 100 Muslims students together. God willing we will bring in the other 200," he said.

President Khan says that he will be glad to answer any questions or concerns that students have about Islam and encourages them to drop by the club office, room 321 in the Student Union building.

Fighting for women's rights globally, locally

Working conditions poor for women in sweatshops

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

In a discussion about the globalization of the economy and the role women play in it, students and faculty gathered last night in the Campus Center to discuss the importance of bringing global issues to the state level.

The open forum was sponsored by the UMass Students Against Sweatshops Outrage, the Everywoman's Center, the Graduate Employee Organization and other student organizations.

The evening discussion featured panelists from the Everywoman's Center and the Labor Center. After the discussion, a video was presented that focused on sweatshops in Thailand and the impact they have had on the women who have been subjected to low wages and long hours on the production floor.

Stephanie Luce, assistant professor of Labor Studies, said that CEOs of multinational and management companies use cheap labor to produce products that are then sold to the consumer at a higher price.

According to her, women are more often the target of CEO's labor force because "they believe women are more docile and less likely to protest bad conditions," according to Luce.

Many women in third world countries are working in conditions that are not paying them a living wage, and risking their safety and health and sometimes their lives," Luce said.

But these practices aren't only occurring in the third world, they are also taking place in the United States. According to Luce, around 80 percent of women in the U.S. earn less than $10 per hour, a wage she said isn't enough to support a family.

Michael Burns, a graduate student in the Labor Studies Department, said comparable to white men, women are making 75 cents to every $1 a white male makes.

"If a white man teaches and makes $40,000 a year, a white woman in the same position will make $30,000 a year," Burns stated.

Comparably, black women make 63 cents to every $1 and 53 cents for Latino women. According to Luce, the products are then being sold in advertisements using women as sex symbols.

"Women are making the products, they are being used to sell the product and then they are often the ones purchasing the product," Luce said.

For Burns, the overall purpose of the forum was a kind of "reality check" for women who are going out into the workplace.

"Underneath all this prosperity, the reality is there's a huge disparity between men's working conditions and wages and those of women," Burns said.

According to Burns, women can do two things before entering into the work field.

"A woman can seek to unionize," Burns said. "If they can sign a contract with their employer, they can fight for improving things for women on the job, like child care for instance. Women should consider their political candidates' stance on things like labor, international labor policy and making unions easier to organize."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Pass it man!

Sophomore Paul Schmitt, junior Lou Soracco and Sophomore Shawn Clark kick around in front of Wheeler Dormitory while the weather stays nice.

■ frank

continued from page

markets. Only Mexico, Canada and Israel enjoy equivalent trading status with the U.S.

"This is the first trade agreement where certain criteria must be met by another nation, allowing workers to unionize and requiring respect for the environment, for the agreement to remain in effect."

Congressman Frank criticized the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for insisting that nations must deregulate their markets in order to trade globally.

"The IMF should not be penalizing nations for non compliance with the destructive adventure unregulated flow of capital," Frank said.

Frank also proposed that some form of an international bankruptcy plan be implemented to prevent economic disaster.

The Center for Public Policy and Administration invited Congressman Frank to speak at UMass as part of its distinguished lecture series.

Voters in the Fourth Massachusetts Congressional district re-elected Congressman Frank to the House on Tuesday where he has served since 1980. Frank has written extensively on the subject of globalization including an article published in the Boston Globe last May on U.S. trade relations with China.

High student turnout at U. Florida due to tight race

By Sarah Myrick
Independent Florida Alligator (U. Florida)

(U-WIRE) GAINESVILLE, Fla. – More than 50 percent of registered voters turned out in four voting precincts dominated by University of Florida students – a result of what experts say is largely because of a competitive party system and a spine-tingling tight race.

The election – which still has no clear winner – has come down to the line, with the results from Florida determining the winner. Turnout at the American Cancer Society Winn-Dixie Lodge, 2121 SW 16th St., was reported at 53.52 percent by the Alachua County Supervisor of Elections Office on Tuesday night. First Baptist Church, 425 W. University Ave., reported 53.35 percent, compared with 54.34 percent at the Reitz Union and 60.05 percent at the Samuel P. Harn Museum of Art.

The Alachua County voter turnout was reported at 71.15 percent Tuesday night. The student turnout was considerably lower than the county turnout, but most officials said the turnout was good for students. Compared to the 1996 presidential election, student-dominated precincts had an average turnout of 52.5 percent, according to an Alligator article in 1996.

Florida had been labeled one of the key battleground states in the 2000 presidential election, which brought candidates and their supporters to the state often during the campaign. Last week, Jesse Jackson led a rally through downtown Gainesville to encourage citizens to vote, and Green Party candidate Ralph Nader spoke at the University of Florida last month. UF political science professor Michael Martinez said the visits probably encouraged a few more students to get involved or vote.

"I think some students were energized by the events in the last few days of the campaign," said Martinez, who recently has published articles on voter turnout.

"There were several events on campus and in town," he said. "Jesse Jackson's visit and George P.'s visit might have mobilized some students."

Richard Conley, a UF political science assistant professor who studies presidential elections in Florida, said the voter turnout is partly because of the competitiveness of the two parties and the closeness of the race.

"I think certainly all the media and high drama with Florida ... does (have an effect)," he said. Conley said the commotion surrounding the tight race encouraged people as well. "It makes people realize their votes count, especially in a close election."

Tuesday at the Harn Museum – a voting precinct laden with registered student voters – poll deputy Steve Wiebeld described the afternoon scene as "fast and furious."

"We even had people waiting outside for the polls to open at 7 this morning," Wiebeld said. "That kind of turnout is unusual for this poll. I've never seen students show up like this before."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Index Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Binitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bernharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniavsky Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Your advertisement could be here, why not call and bid on this beautiful space! 545-3500

We can give you the opportunity to change the world.

GENUITY.

903 Campus Center
Tuesday, November 14
6:00pm-8:00pm

Genuity offers an exceptional salary and benefits package, as well as an intellectually charged, creative environment with an outstanding opportunity for professional growth.

For a complete listing of employment opportunities, please visit us at www.genuity.com. Please forward resumes to: college@genuity.com, or Genuity, Attn: University Relations, 130 Cambridge Park Drive, 9D, Cambridge, MA 02140 or Fax: (617) 873-5676.

Diversity gives us the strength to lead. Equal Opportunity Employer M/F/D/V.

Genuity is the leading Network Services Provider for businesses changing the world. Genuity is the only company in the industry to offer a Network Services Platform (NSP) that combines a Tier 1 network with a full portfolio of managed Internet services, including dedicated, remote and broadband access, Web hosting and Internet security, to create a platform for creating scalable and repeatable managed eBusiness solutions. With 1999 revenues of $706 million, Genuity (NASDAQ: GENU) is a global company with offices and partnerships throughout the U.S., Europe, Asia and Latin America.

You can do anything with a Black Rocket. The world's first Network Services Platform.

Introducing a company you may never have heard of, but already know

What's in a name?

In the case of United Technologies, a lot of other names:

Carrier
Hamilton Sundstrand
International Fuel Cells
Otis
Pratt & Whitney
Research Center
Sikorsky

Our products fly you, warm you, cool you, elevate you. Which means even if you don't know our name, you know our products — products that brought us $24 billion in revenue last year.

Now that we've been introduced, come to our information session and really get to know us.

United Technologies
NEXT THINGS FIRST
www.utc.com

United Technologies Corporation is an equal opportunity employer

Influenza vaccine deliveries delayed around country

By Caroline Chen
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Last November, Syracuse University sophomore Christine Kyriacou went to the doctor's office in her hometown, Kingston, and rolled up her sleeve. She then observed a needle pierce her skin, injecting the flu vaccine.

"I like to watch it go in," said Kyriacou, a sophomore English education major. "I'm morbid," she added, with a laugh.

Kyriacou said she gets shot each year to prevent influenza – commonly called the flu. Most of her friends also get flu shots annually, she added.

Health care providers usually begin giving the vaccine, which takes up to two weeks to work, in October. But this year, manufacturing problems and a new, slower growing flu strain are delaying delivery of the vaccine nationwide.

The flu is a viral respiratory tract infection. In an average year, the flu contributes to more than 20,000 deaths nationwide and more than 100,000 hospitalizations, according to the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Common flu symptoms include the sudden onset of fatigue, fever, severe muscle aches, joint pain, loss of appetite, a dry cough and chills. The virus is spread from person to person by coughing or sneezing into the air. Each year, the virus mutates, so the vaccine must be updated to fight the current strain.

SU will probably not receive its shipment of vaccines until late November, said Kathy VanVechten, director of nursing in SU's Health Services.

"We've been unable to get that supply as of yet," she said. "What's happened this year is that one of the strains that is in this year's flu vaccines grows more slowly, and therefore, there's been delays in ability to get vaccines."

About the same number of vaccine doses are expected to be distributed this year as last year – about 75 million – but the supply will not be available until later than usual, according to the CDC's Web site.

Vaccine doses are usually available by October, with 99 percent available by December, the Web site said. But this year, the CDC expects 18 million doses to be distributed in December.

When SU offered flu vaccines in mid-October last year, about 1,500 students and another 100 faculty and staff lined up to face the needle, VanVechten said.

SU ordered 3,500 doses of the vaccine in the spring – the usual time it orders – to prepare for this year's flu season, she said.

Although the main shipment has not arrived, SU received 500 doses last Thursday from another supplier, VanVechten added.

The CDC urged health care providers to vaccinate patients at high risk for complications from the flu and their caretakers first. People at high risk include those with chronic illnesses such as asthma, the elderly, young children and pregnant women.

Others are encouraged to wait until December to be vaccinated.

Citing the CDC's recommendations and guidelines from the New York State Department of Health, VanVechten said people at high risk have priority over SU's limited supply of vaccines.

"The residence halls are at high risk for having infection, but the students aren't at high risk for being (unable) to combat the infection," she added.

In some areas of the United States, vaccine prices have jumped nearly 200 percent to as much as $100 a vial, according to an Oct. 30 CNN report.

SU will charge customers $10 each for the shot – the same price as last year – although it had to pay more for the special order, VanVechten said.

Preventive measures

Despite widespread flu activity in New York state last year, the SU campus experienced relatively few flu cases, VanVechten said. This year, she added, she has not seen any flu cases on campus so far.

To avert catching the flu in the first place, VanVechten suggested that people get a flu shot, wash their hands and stay away from crowded places.

"If you haven't had it yet, it's still going to prevent you from having it," she said of the vaccine. "Prevention is always the better course of action."

The vaccine proved effective in 70 to 90 percent of healthy, young adults who received the shot, according to the CDC.

Because the flu season usually runs from November to April, vaccinations can continue through February if the vaccine is available, VanVechten said.

"We keep on giving as long as we have it and as long as we keep seeing flu," she added.

But if the flu breaks out before the main vaccine shipment arrives, an epidemic is possible, VanVechten said.

"If we have a bad flu season, but we can't get our vaccine, then you're increasing your likelihood of seeing influenza on campus," she said.

"It it does, it does," VanVechten added. "There are other ways of treating it."

In addition to fluids and rest, the flu is treated by medication such as Tylenol, which the Health Center has on hand, she said.

Coughs and sneezes

Nearly every October, sophomore magazine major Melissa Auman said she starts feeling tired and achy all the time.

"It's the weather change that does it to me," she said.

Despite feeling under the weather, she added that she usually goes to class, except for an occasional morning class. To relieve her symptoms, Auman said she takes over-the-counter medication, but has never gotten a flu vaccination.

"I don't like getting shots," she added quickly.

VanVechten urged people who think they may have the flu to [illegible] soon as possible.

Jeff Bastar, a junior [illegible] at a pre-medicine track, [illegible] go for the annual flu vaccine – [illegible] out of laziness. Although [illegible] symptoms usually [illegible] a few days, he said.

"I've had the [illegible] the flu," Bastar added.

He, [illegible] around last year, [illegible] concerned enough [illegible]

"I figure one [illegible] I'll go get the vaccine."

Reflections

Holly Goguen, a Senior Animal Science major, takes some time off in the Durfee Conservatory.

Just Log On
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
Respond to Stories Online
dailycollegian.com

CENTER FOR HUMAN DEVELOPMENT, INC.
Internal Notice of Position Opening

The Center for Human Development is requesting your active assistance in recruiting qualified candidates for the following position

Program: The Bridge Home Program- (Female Adolescent Home)
Job Title: Full-Time Residential (2nd shift) -Awake Overnight & Weekends(11p-7a)
Salary Range: 20,000 plus excellent benefits

Job Description: Day to day care of the adolescents; implementation of treatment plans; good writing skills; remaining awake during overnight shift.

Qualifications Desired: Experience with children who have been victims of neglect or trauma related experience. Residential experience, valid driver's license and vehicle. BA in related field also a plus.

Procedure Applying: Send resume and cover letter to: CHD/45 Willow Street/Springfield, MA 01103 Attn. Bridge Program

CHD is an AA/EOE
Thank you

Food Science
The Major where it's OK to play with your Food!!!

Recent UMass Food Science majors are developing products for food companies like Kraft, Coca-Cola, General Mills, and Ocean Spray.

Great Jobs...Great Salaries.

What will you be doing after you graduate?

The Department of Food Science
Phone 5-2276, e-mail <dept@foodsci.umass.edu>
or Visit our web site: www.umass.edu/foodsci

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Diversity coverage: still absolutely essential

Two nights ago, a cross-section of the student population here at UMass gathered to discuss the future of diversity coverage within this newspaper.

Currently, the Collegian has a plan to eliminate the diversity pages that remain (the Black, GLBT and Jewish Affairs Pages) in favor of incorporating such coverage into the newspaper itself. There are two main reasons for this.

The first is that we believe that news happens more often than the once every two weeks that those pages are printed. Stories warrant timely coverage, regardless of the ethnicity, religion or sexual preference of those involved in them. Holding a story for a week because of characteristics of those involved, to reserve them for their respective diversity page, is discriminatory.

The second reason is that the content for these pages has steadily declined over the past two years, to the point where we commonly accumulate no more than two or three stories over a two-week period between pages. Despite the desperate recruiting efforts for the respective diversity editors, most sections have no more than three writers per cycle from which to cull those stories. The Black Affairs page has had a total of eight people write for it this entire semester, including the editor. Yes, the pages have been published. But they have been alarmingly devoid of content.

Hence, the integration of these stories into the Collegian is not an attempt at downgrading our diversity coverage, as some have claimed. This is our attempt to create an atmosphere of inclusion rather than one of exclusion in our office and in our newspaper.

Our pleas for writers and help in covering these issues have been met with silence from the campus community, yet our integration plan has resulted in nothing short of an uproar.

Is it that the student body values the existence of these pages more than the quality of the content they provide? We sincerely hope not. The irony is that this plan was intended to improve diversity coverage.

News does not happen at this University to certain groups or at certain times; rather, it happens all the time to everybody. Furthermore, the content of those pages can easily be placed in other sections where they are more applicable (news stories in the News sections, editorials on the Ed/Op page or CD reviews in the Arts section).

We believe that those pages have served their original purpose, to promote diversity in the newsroom, but are grossly negligent when it comes to furthering that cause. They have ended up being the solution for a lack of diversity coverage, not the stepping stone to something better.

But we think that now is the time to take a step toward something better, toward a newspaper that covers a diversity of news without having to have spatial pages to do it. Those pages are, quite frankly, a limit on what this newspaper can cover. Why?

Because if we cover, as we attempt to do now, a diversity of groups on campus in the News section, there will be no more news for those pages. If we review a diversity of CDs, as we try to do now, in the Arts section, there will be no reviews for those pages. And if we run a diversity of editorials, as we attempt to do now, in the Editorial section, there will be no more editorials for those pages.

And then what will be on those pages?

Which brings up a good point. While the Collegian will proudly cover a diversity of news on this campus, we still must bring our standards to that coverage. There can be no conflicts of interest with our writers, there can be no opinions weaved into stories, there can be no set of different standards for the coverage.

Those who suggest otherwise not only ask for our newspaper to embarrass itself ethically. They display a blatant disregard for journalistic standards.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian can, and will, succeed where we claim to. We will have a diversity of coverage about a great number of topics on this campus. And while we most definitely want to do things in a different way, we want diversity in this newspaper.

Taking the fall, lover

EMILY VACANTI

Don't worry, this won't be another column about the presidential race (as you probably guessed by the title). I was sick of it before the polls even closed.

"Falling in love is such an easy thing to do, but there's no guarantee that the one you love is going to love you. Oh, oh, oh, loving even cannot see. A certain person could never be. Love runs deeper than any ocean, clouds your mind with emotion. Everybody plays the fool."

– Aaron Neville

You guessed it. This column is about falling in love. I've been there. I've even been there more than once, but not many times. I've also loved without being in love. I've had my heart broken. More descriptively put, I've had my heart torn out of my chest with a dirty pitch-fork, ripped in two, and lit on fire. It's called being cheated on during a hard time by someone that you love.

This column is dedicated to my friend Martin who truly believes that you can only fall in love once in your life, and all other extremely strong feelings are infatuation. His reasoning for this is actually pretty good, but not convincing enough for me. When I told him that I've been in love more than once, and that I've also loved more than once, he asked me the question, "How can you measure love?"

I replied with, "If you've been in love more than once, or just loved more than once, you know what I'm talking about. And how can you judge what another person feels?"

We continued to debate about this for a couple of years (I've known him for more than three years) until I recently told him that I would no longer debate about him. It's a personal feeling and belief. How dare either of us judge anyone else, or speak for anyone else, for that matter.

Back to falling in love. Many of us have been there. You know what I'm talking about. He/she's that person that you can't stop thinking about. You smile every time you think about them and that little quality that makes them extra special. Whether it's their smile and the way it lights up a room; their eyes and the way they make you feel when you talk to them; like they're listening so closely that they won't miss a breath; their hug and how much like home it feels when you're in their arms; or even just their presence.

There was someone from a while back that every time I saw him my heart skipped a beat. Being friends with him was one of the happiest times of my life. I would see him approaching me from a ways away. He would yell out my name and ask, "what's up?" When he was around, I never stopped smiling. I admit that I did love him. My favorite thing about him was when he would hug me. I would melt in his arms. Since him there has only been one other person that makes me as happy when he hugs me.

Now I'm not saying that there haven't been a lot of special people in my life. What I'm saying is that there are only two men who have had this effect on me when hugging me. Most of my friends squeeze the life out of me; they hug me so hard. Many of them twirl me around in their arms. But these two hug me just right so I melt into their arms.

The first time that I truly fell in love, I didn't realize it until I was deep. One minute I was thinking about him and how great he was, and the next minute it hit me. Most people can feel it happening. For my first time, it just hit me.

I've fallen in love twice. The second time it happened, I knew it was happening as it happened. I just let it happen. I can't even describe it. All that I can say is he is wonderful. What some of my friends get a kick out of is that he's not the typical guy that they can see me with. I have very specific tastes, and his physical appearance did not fit that. But that's not what caught my attention about him. He was just so kind to me. If you know me, then you know that I'm a mess. He helped clean me up quite a bit. I can't say why I loved him. I still don't know the exact reasons. I just did.

One of the reasons that I'm writing about falling in love is because I have a number of friends that are in love. They either recently fell, or they are currently falling, and they asked me how to approach it with their boyfriend/girlfriend. Let me ask you all one quick question: Why the hell does everybody think I know about this? Everyone thinks that I have experience that I don't. I know I'm blunt and open, but I do not have all of the answers. When it comes to love, I don't even have many. I can only tell you how it happened to me, and how I finally (after two years) approached the first and told him. The second kind of figured it out on his own and told me that he knew. His timing was actually quite perfect.

When I was seventeen I fell in love for the first time. He was six months older than myself, and perfection in the form of a male. I met him and knew right away that he was something special. We worked at the same job for a year and a half. He told me all of his wild stories, and I would listen like a puppy adoring her master. One of my friends once played a joke on me where she pulled him into the room, and a smile naturally appeared. Then she pushed him out of the room, and the smile disappeared. She did this a couple of times just to prove, even more concretely, how I felt about him. He got a kick out of it.

I finally told him that I loved him two years after we met. I was home for some break (I think Thanksgiving, but I that's not important). We were hanging out and I knew that he had broken up with his flavor of six months about a month before that, so I decided to just spit it out and be honest. Boy, was that hard.

When the second guy approached me about it, he was quite gentle. He said he knew, and then enveloped me in a huge hug. That was one of the happiest moments of my life.

Honestly, if they don't know, and most men are blind so they don't, though most women do know, tell them, but wait until you find the right moment. Timing is crucial! Different men have told me that they loved me, and it just freaked me out. The timing must have seen right for them, but it was just way too soon for me.

All in all, falling in love is an experience that I hope everyone gets to partake in someday. And as Sandra Bullock said in Practical Magic, "Fall in love as much as you possible can."

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian columnist.

Stop the insanity?

Whoever coined the phrase, "stop the insanity," must have been a very dull person. Can you even use this phrase if you are under the age of thirty? I think that I deserve more craziness in my life. Think about the perfectly dull and predictable world that I share with approximately 20,000 undergraduates.

EMANUEL NAPOLI

Maybe there have been some riots, etc. but that does not give me a daily fix. Everyone seems a lot more prepared for their immersion into a cubicle than they are interested in living life.

This brain fart that you are experiencing is the direct result of a quick reflection on the linearity that has been brought to all of our lives through consumer culture. As I was walking through Walmart with my father in search of an anniversary card for my mother, I realized how routine his task was for the evening, and how comical it would be to do something totally inane as opposed to what is expected. I considered getting my mother the most ill fitting card that I could find in the store.

Imagine sitting around the table at that anniversary, and seeing your family members stare blankly at you as your get well soon" card is opened and read my your mother (that's the same face I'll be seeing from just about everyone that reads this column across campus). If you are strong enough to not break down emotionally at this very moment, you would return to school with a memorable series of events. All of a sudden you would be the center of attention, and for the rest of your life you family members would never ask you to do anything stressful because of your "condition." Instead of doing that, everyone just goes through the protocol thoughtlessly.

Protocol sucks. I vets time I do whatever is expected out of me. I grow vets bored with the activity that I am engaged in. Whenever I am not having a good time at a party, it is very likely that I am not cutting loose. At any occasion, I can slap everyone on the ass and bust freestyles that suck and my night will be complete. Having a good time, and not worrying about others is always a path worth considering.

Certain activities hurt others, and I can't endorse those, but a little craziness only hurts others about 70% of the time, so try not to worry about it.

Am I a bad person for: breaking records in the hallway, breaking vases in Walmart, or thrown those plastic numbers of items cards around JCPenney? Probably, but sometimes that is the type of person you want to be around: someone that simultaneously embarrasses you, but indulges you with their buffoonery. Is it wrong to subvert classes to the point that they return to high school level, or to shout inane things at random people (sometimes in foreign languages)? Yes, but the world is so bland now that I often don't care about pleasing others.

If you don't like the methods I've described then there are still many alternatives out there. Many people enjoy pretending like they have to Tourets Syndrome. Others leer at perfectly normal people intentionally making them uncomfortable. I planned on joining in on protests with signs that only detracted from the efforts. It would be rather comical to join a rally wielding sign that are similar to the ones found in wrestling events, or at episodes of Battlebots (imagine an anti-WTO rally wielding a "Know your role and shut your mouth" sign, or the ever popular "Just bring it").

I know that everyone reading this column has been offended or outraged by now, so I decided to cut out my section of outlandish claims. I decided to minimize the chances of being attacked on campus (the outlandish claims that I was going to make were: that I am the greatest Ed/Op columnist of all time, that I am the most charismatic UMass student since Bill Cosby, that I am the greatest physical specimen to have descended from the island of Sicily and that I could defeat any woman in basketball and anyone in four squares). Of course, given the second to last comment I could count on never being spoken to by a female for the rest of my stay at UMass (not to mention whatever harassment I would receive from a few liberal groups). My first claim would guarantee that this article and of my future article never get printed, so for everyone's benefit I decided to cut that part of my article. If you want to taker me up on these claims that I never made you can contact the Daily Collegian for my e-mail address.

Thank you.

Emanuel Napoli is a UMass student.

The myth of the goddess

"I think that explaining why the Goddess types get the pick of the crop, why some girls get dirty old men, and others don't even get noticed."

MARYAM DIMAURO

They are short, fat, tall, skinny, black, white, Hispanic, Asian, quiet, loud, pretty, ugly, and some don't appear to have anything in common with the other. So what do they have that causes men to swoon, to write love poetry, to cry over their doorsteps, and then become embittered that "All women are the same?"

It takes only a glance, a slight pouting of the lips, a swav of the hips, and the men are around them like, as we say in Spanish, "Como miel a las abejas." Like honey to bees. I could never really understand WHAT they all had.

I have never had "It." Well, truth be told, I've never wanted it, but I am in awe of those who have it. Although I have never had it, I have witnessed it manifest itself to the people who are closest to me.

Yes, for some strange reason, me — of all people — have had friends or people around me who grab me as their eternal confidantes, and I have heard their complaints: "You don't understand, Maryam, I don't DO anything." They mock-complain to me, although I can see the playful glitter in their eyes. I don't know why they choose me to be their listener, but the truth is they get tiresome with their told-too-many-time stories and crumpled letters. It is always a selfish kind of friendship. Of course, why shouldn't the world revolve around them? Perhaps they choose me to listen to their "woes" because I am not particularly interested in competing with them. I guess, being one of those girls who hated the attention or the art of the chase, they felt no threat towards me.

I have witnessed their many admirers and seen their pathetic tear splotched faces. I wonder and scoff at how stupid they can be when clearly the girl is just using them as a launching pad for their ego. I have seen the way they pout and whimper; how these girls get them to fight for her admiration.

And none of the girls that I have met have been particularly dazzling or amazing. The truth is, I don't get it. If I hadn't witnessed some of the things that these girls go through I would not entirely believe it. I guess there are two categories of the Goddess: the innocent, and the seductress; although I don't know how innocent any Goddess is.

One of the best examples of the genuine type goes back to my childhood friend Evelyn. She had black curly hair, and brown coppery skin, but she wasn't particularly pretty. But she had something: a quality of her which men felt drawn to the moment she went into the room. Maybe it was the quality of a hurt, lost child, or hell, the fact that she had a curvacious body. I have no idea. But she opened her wide innocent (or not so innocent) eyes, and men would come running.

Then there is the Goddess who have the air of a seductress — that magnetic air which men feel drawn to. Unlike the other one, they do things to lure men in. I used to think my close friend Ariel never did anything for men to call her and vie for her attention. But I have realized that there is a method to the apparent effortlessness. She knows just when to lure them in and when to stop seeming desperate. She gets them to phone and she pretends interest, but at the same time, coldness. She smiles when appropriate. She has that Something, and lord knows she knows how to use it.

All the girls around me, and I only gave two examples, were all spoiled, and most were the only girls in the family. Ultimately, I think, we send vibes to people, and the moment we enter a room, people perceive it. I think that explains why the Goddess-types get the pick of the crop, why some girls get dirty old men, and others don't even get noticed. We emanate these vibes, and how we want to attract or what we want to attract, and people feel eminently drawn to it.

They were all told from the day they were born that they were amazingly beautiful, and learned that they liked to extend their egos over that. I find it sad in a way, because they focus so much on attracting men that they don't grow within themselves, or develop a sense of independence — until the day comes when they are old, and scorn at the new crop of Goddesses that come in.

These Goddesses, I hope, are a dying breed. Then again, you never know when they are going to crop up.

Maryam DiMauro is a UMass student.

Sandler screens Little Nicky and fields questions in NYC

COURTESY OF APPLES AND ONIONS

Patricia Arquette and Adam Sandler star in Little Nicky.

COURTESY OF APPLES AND ONIONS

The irrepressible Beefy the dog and Adam Sandler chat it up.

LITTLE NICKY
Directed by Steven Brill
with Adam Sandler, Harvey Keitel, and Rodney Dangerfield
Playing at Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

On an early Monday morning, Adam Sandler saunters into a posh screening room on Manhattan's Avenue of the Americas, where an advanced showing of his new comedy Little Nicky has just been uncovered to a group of college journalists from all across the Northeast. Decked out in a pair of sweatpants and a button-down shirt that he informs the audience is new, the former NYC student and Saturday Night Live star takes a seat in the front of the room, ready to field any questions the eager reporters may have about his new film or his career in general. Many with Sandler are three of the film's co-stars: Rhys Ifans, Robert Smigel, and Allen Covert, as well as the director, Steven Brill. The room falls silent as they are all introduced, awe coming over the young crowd. Like many of my fellow cohorts present at this exclusive engagement I was in shock that I was in the same room with these Hollywood heavyweights, and the thought of having a Q&A session with them was icing on the cake.

With coffee in hand, the down-to-earth Sandler seems just like a regular guy, not the megastar of recent films like Big Daddy. Nonetheless, all were still in astonishment that we could cross-examine the same guy who beat up Bob Barker in Happy Gilmore and penned the penultimate holiday paean "The Hanukkah Song." It will come as no surprise to anyone that Sandler's latest outing, Little Nicky, is just as outstanding as his previous works. In fact, it may be his most witty and entertaining film to date, and will undoubtedly reside among all his other movies as comedy classics to my generation.

Making Little Nicky though was no easy task. Sandler first got the notion for the film while watching Robert DeNiro's Angel Heart, and then later pitched it to his colleagues who helped iron out the idea to make it work. Unlike other Sandler films, this one proved more work due to the extreme amount of special effects needed in creating both worlds of Heaven and Hell, and animating a pug dog to talk, like he is from the south Bronx. But despite the long hours, it's obvious while watching the film that the actors are having a helluva good time.

In Little Nicky, Sandler plays the title character that must journey from his home sweet home in Hell to New York City and bring back his two rebellious brothers before they put Hell on Earth. It Nicky is unsuccessful, his dear old Devil of a Daddy (Harvey Keitel) will literally fall to pieces and lose his throne as the Prince of Darkness. Helping Nicky along the way is a dog named Beefy (voiced by Robert Smigel) and a love interest (Patricia Arquette) that both teach the spawn of Satan what life on Earth is all about.

The stellar supporting cast is led by Rhys Ifans as Nicky's brother Adrian. Best known for playing Hugh Grant's goofy scene-stealing roommate in Notting Hill, Ifans says he was excited to be in this movie since he finds Sandler "truly hilarious." The Welsh actor also enjoyed the stretch the role required because there are "so many Englishmen in Hell." But Ifans was not the only co-star that Sandler shared a large amount of screen time with.

"The dog would run away a lot," Sandler said of his canine co-star Beefy. "Even when he was present he would get lost in dog world." Sandler, too, would get easily distracted from the trainers whispering things to the dog during their scenes, but even so, they are among the funniest parts of the movie. A specific side-splitting moment is when Beefy begins to defecate on a New York City sidewalk, with Nicky following suit.

The rest of the cast are Sandler regulars. Allen Covert who was also seen in The Wedding Singer and Happy Gilmore here portrays Nicky's effeminate roommate. Todd Louiso (High Fidelity) admits that he has become recognized by fans as "the gay guy" and likes the fame it has given him. Another long-time collaborator is director Steven Brill, who also directed the Sandler vehicles The Wedding Singer and Big Daddy. With a dynamic team like this, it's no wonder the movie is bound to be a blockbuster.

Like his other films, Little Nicky delivers on the laugh, to let humor we've come to expect from Sandler. Among the bawdy moments is when Satan thrusts a pineapple up Hitler-ass on a regular basis, and peeping tom Joel Gray being chased around Hell by literally a horny bird. Little Nicky also has its fair share of inside jokes, such as Chubbs from Happy Gilmore meeting up with Sandler in Heaven, and a memorable dedication to Sandler's departed friend and SNL co-star Chris Farley. Cameo appearances by Dan Marino as the latest NFL star in Hell, Rodney Dangerfield as Grandpa Lucifer, Dana Carvey as a possessed NBA coach, and Quentin Tarantino as a blind soapbox preacher are all inspired comedic moments, only to be topped by the manifestation of Ozzy Osbourne as God.

Sandler acknowledges that the film may be offensive to some, but the overall theme of good versus evil is nothing to be laughed at. After all, how can you not love a guy like Nicky? Sandler says that Nicky is among his favorite roles to date, but is quick to add, "I'd like to hang out with Bobby Boucher [from The Water Boy]. I'd let him lay on my lap as I put him."

Always the comedian, Sandler said he is still addicted to the stand-up world where he got his start. Between that, writing music, and making movies, he's keeping himself busy. Someday, though, he said he may like to have kids, and wouldn't want his film career to interfere with that. The possibility of doing "real acting" in serious films has crossed his mind, too, expressing interest in a script by P.T. Anderson (Boogie Nights, Magnolia). Not to worry, though, because he said he has a lot to do before he settles down for good. For the time being, he couldn't be happier with the profession he's chosen, and the life he's leading. And neither could his fans.

Travolta and Kudrow drown in shallow Numbers

COURTESY OF PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Lisa Kudrow strikes it rich in Lucky Numbers.

LUCKY NUMBERS
Directed by Nora Ephron
with John Travolta, Lisa Kudrow, and Bill Pullman
Playing at Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

Poor, poor John Travolta. For a while there in the mid-90's it looked like he had overcome his Look Who's Talking days and was back on his way to becoming Hollywood's strongest representation of a comeback kid. But after runaway successes of mainstream movie fare like the mob comedy Get Shorty, the sentimental Phenomenon, and the testosterone-inclined punch of Face/Off, Travolta began to flex his acting muscles by taking on racier and more daring projects. Bold steps into acting, as seen with the indie films She's So Lovely and White Man's Burden, were attempts, however miscalculated, for him to prove he is not a Hollywood playboy – that he can actually act. It worked for him in Pulp Fiction, but this time around his cries fell upon deaf ears. When he re-entered the ring of big-budget movies, not even A-list co-stars like Dustin Hoffman in Mad City or winning projects such as A Civil Action could save Travolta's floundering career. When he was seen last summer in the ridiculously inane sci-fi nonsense of Battlefield: Earth I would have placed good money on the fact that Travolta was fully aware of his career's downward spiral and had thrown in the towel.

Now he returns in Nora Ephron's Lucky Numbers, an awkward and uncomfortable comedy that further adds to Travolta's resume of disturbing career moves. Ephron, who directed him in 1998's Michael, casts him here as likable Pittsburgh TV weatherman Russ Richards, who despite his local fame (he has his own table at Denny's) is down and out on his luck and his money. His snowmobile business on the side has failed to flourish due to the unending warm winter weather, and his sports new car has just been repossessed. In a last ditch effort, Russ gets into cahoots with his TV station lottery girl Crystal (played to annoying new levels by Lisa Kudrow) to rig the lotteries and make off with the moolah. But no one watching this insipid film is so naïve to think that Russ and Crystal will get away clean with the cash. The crux of the film lies in numerous scenes coming out of the woodwork, somehow extorting both parties for some share of the money. This theme, which has been done many a time before, has no luck here, only having Barry (Bad Travolta's number in Hollywood may, in fact, be up.

I've only left one movie in my entire life, and even then I felt that I didn't give it a chance. Throughout Lucky Numbers, I kept fidgeting in my chair, hoping that the bombardment of moronic one-liners and the stale acting would somehow give way to a moderately pleasurable film. I could not have been more mistaken.

Looking his most uncomfortable in years, Travolta's sudden weight gain adds unbecoming bulk to his otherwise attractive physique, and the Regis Philbin-suits he wears can't conceal his newfound heftiness. It's hard to tell whether the bullets he's sweating during the film are on purpose or because he's so uneasy with the film he's making. Similarly, Kudrow's ostentatious wardrobe and garish "hair-don't" are not fitting for her petite body. For a film set in 1988, the costumes totally miss the era they're aiming for, and are an eyesore for the film. The movie gives a sense of being set in a parallel 1988, where personal appearances are wholly different from what we know them as.

Coming in a close second to the script being a total doozy is the one-dimensional acting of the cast.

Travolta's problem is that his character is too much of a nice guy, and like the saying goes, nice guys finish last. Like The General's Daughter and Broken Arrow, Travolta is always at his best when he has an edge to the people he portrays. Here he is totally at a loss for any presence of tenacity, coming across as a pitiful and uninteresting character. When it comes to his co-star, Lisa Kudrow, this film finally cements in my mind what I've known to be true for years: she has a complete lack of any acting talent, possibly

Turn to NUMBERS page 6

Boot Camp.

ZANNA
Amherst
Northampton
Williamstown

We test our system: you get free therapy.

"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."

Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.

If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.

visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.

webtherapy.com™

Planet Earth, Slayer, and others lead a Crusade to Tattoo the Earth

COURTESY OF HATEBREED.COM

The Workhorse Movement and Hatebreed are among the highlights of the Tattoo the Earth concert disc.

TATTOO THE EARTH
The First Crusade
1500 Records

By Michael Delgano
Collegian Columnist

Strawberry milk a term used often by one of my favorite West Coast magazines. It is what you get when you try to milk a cow for all its worth and it starts bleeding, pigmenting the milk a pink (strawberry) color. It's a term used often to describe blatant cash runs when a product or idea is merchandised firmly into the ground. The music world has its share of strawberry milk. Roadrunner records is notorious for re-releasing their CDs in improved formats with additional tracks, forcing true fans to shell out for multiple copies of an album they already own. Slipknot and Soulfly must have at least six versions between them of their individual debut albums.

Pointless remix albums, import singles, and more recently the concert album are the current popular ways to bleed the dollar drs. The concert album, different from a single band/artist's live album, essentially serves as a compilation of live tracks by the various artists on a big tour, such as Family Values or Lilith Fair. Now, after returning home from this summer's Tattoo the Earth Tour minus a tattoo from a world renowned artist (illegal in MA) and plus a $30 minimum T-shirt, you can relive the magic on CD.

No thanks. I have nothing against the Tattoo the Earth Tour or any of the artists showcased, as many of them I very much enjoy, but there are a million better ways to spend your meal dollar. You never get the feeling on this release of a coherent set list, of a progression in the concert; it's just a sampler of live tracks. Granted, many of the young bands on the disc, haven't yet recorded live songs, but that fact wasn't exactly a tragedy that needed immediate remedy. If I want to hear cool songs like The Workhorse Movement's "Keep the Sabbath Dream Alive" or shred-ups "Waiting to Die," I'll just throw in their albums, since they are both less than six months old.

This release is a professional job, however, with fairly interesting track selections and a sleek CD-ROM component. In addition, the live performances are good, especially Slipknot's "Surfacing" and Hatebreed's fear-inducing "I Will Be Heard." But where are the tracks from the lesser known bands that I thought stole the show like Amen and Cold? Not disappointing, just completely unnecessary, The First Crusade is simply time and money better spent on full-lengths from the collected artist roster.

COURTESY OF KRISTI CECARRONI

Dr. Faustus comes to town

This weekend the UMass Theater Department opens its production of Marlowe's Faustus. The show will run at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday nights of this and next weekend in the Rand Theater.

Most people recognize Dr. Faustus as the tragic story of a man who sells his soul to the devil in exchange for power and knowledge. Essentially, it is a story of good versus evil, a theme that is "older than Adam and Eve," said director Tanya Kane-Parry.

In Marlowe's play, Faustus encounters his darkest desires embodied by the seven deadly sins. Addressing its universal relevance, Kane-Parry said these are tendencies most people repress or limit to exist within society, but they never entirely go away.

Kane-Parry, a graduate student, directed last year's production of Hamlet Machine and the one-act Tone Clusters for the department. Like her previous pieces, Faustus doesn't adhere to the strict classical interpretation of the text. The unique set and costume design strike futuristic poses on the stage and reinvent the classic tale in a dynamic way.

Tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center box office at 545-2511. The play contains adult subject matter and language.

Kristi Ceccurossi

NFL Week 11 (Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only.)	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
						Wow, this feels like my predictions all year, non-existent.
Last Week	(Overall)	5-9-1 (61-62-5)	11-3-1 (69-54-5)	6-8-1 (65-58-5)	8-8-1(62-61-5)	6-8-1 (59-64-5)
New England @ Cleveland	New England by 7	New England	Cleveland	New England	New England	Cleveland
New Orleans @ Carolina	New Orleans by 1 1/2	Carolina	New Orleans	New Orleans	New Orleans	New Orleans
Arizona @ Minnesota	Minnesota by 13 1/2	Minnesota	Minnesota	Arizona	Minnesota	Minnesota
Atlanta @ Detroit	Detroit by 8 1/2	Atlanta	Atlanta	Atlanta	Atlanta	Detroit
Seattle @ Jacksonville	Jacksonville by 7 1/2	Jacksonville	Seattle	Jacksonville	Seattle	Jacksonville
Chicago @ Buffalo	Buffalo by 7	Buffalo	Chicago	Chicago	Buffalo	Buffalo
Cincinnati @ Dallas	Dallas by 9	Dallas	Cincinnati	Dallas	Dallas	Dallas
Philadelphia @ Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh by 3 1/2	Philadelphia	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh
Baltimore @ Tennessee	Tennessee by 3 1/2	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee
Miami @ San Diego	Miami by 4 1/2	Miami	Miami	Miami	Miami	Miami
Kansas City @ San Francisco	Kansas City by 3 1/2	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	San Francisco
Green Bay @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 9	Tampa Bay	Green Bay	Green Bay	Green Bay	Green Bay
St. Louis @ NY Giants	St Louis by 2	St. Louis	St Louis	St. Louis	NY Giants	St. Louis
NY Jets @ Indianapolis	Indianapolis by 6	Indianapolis	NY Jets	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Oakland @ Denver	Denver by 3	Oakland	Denver	Denver	Oakland	Denver

TRASH TALK

I'm a tired man. I had to whip the ass of everybody else who picks games in this trivial little game of ours. Why, I ask, are we even having these football picks if schmoes like me can slaughter, and I mean in a ruthless dictator sort of slaughter, supposed "football" experts?

White, huge effort by you on the Arizona and Carolina pick but that was, apparently, the only effort you put into the whole damn thing. Who are you letting make your picks, the lady friend? C'mon man, for someone who lectures so extensively about your past war experience in Korea, your championship season on the Boston Red Stockings and your successful attempt to get James K. Polk elected president, your knowledge of football has failed you entirely.

As for Smitty, the loser who is trying to tell me right now that he's not a loser – his record last week's suggests otherwise, 6-8-1 and Smitty, as I've told you before, thin, drunk and stupid is no way to go through life. Must I lecture you on a regular basis about (this basic fact? Stick to what you know: Charlie's and beer. Avoid the things that you clearly know nothing about: football and politics. Richard Nixon would hate you cause there's no denying that he knew both. We might mock you, but without Nixon's support, you're nothing Smitty. And now he's endorsing Stalin. Good lord Smitty, at least swing for Trotsky.

Martignetti might be a scarecrow, but it isn't the brain that he lacks, it's any common sense at all whatsoever. Do me a favor and explain to me how driving all the way to North Carolina on the off chance that you might happen to pass by Katie Holmes on the street is not the work of a pathetic man-stalker. Adam, get over it. It isn't happening. You're a great kid, but Katie Holmes doesn't date pale Massachusetts Republicans. It's on her website as one of her policies; look into it.

Rose, Jesus Christ you suck. How have you even gotten below .500? I didn't think they even let someone as bad as you be described as below .500. Are you even consciousness when you make your picks? Do you think about the ramifications of taking the Niners against the Saints? (Hell, Smitty took them too — Rose, don't go the way that he did. You're better than that; you don't have to end up a thin, drunk dumbass.)

This week I'll take Chicago, Pittsburgh and ohohoh, Denver because I did last week and they all came through. Picking games is taking the definites and splitting the questionables. There's only about three definites per week and one of them won't win — then split the questionables. If the rest of this group figured out that there aren't as many definite games as they think and if, instead, they more often played the points, they'd have better records than their current state of stupidity.

-Sam Wilkinson

■ football

continued from page 10

The UMass pass rush caught fire last weekend, sacking Villanova's Scott Lukash twice and harrying the freshman field general into throwing three interceptions. Senior linebacker Kole Ayi once again led the charge for the D, ringing up a dozen tackles and one of UMass' picks.

The Maroon and White tri-captain should have a little extra gas in his tank against the Hens, as younger brother Femi starts at defensive end for Delaware. The visitors also feature twin brothers Mike and Mondeario Pinckney at the two defensive tackle spots.

Out beyond the trenches, the story will be one of pure athleticism from both teams. The Blue Hens boast split end Jamin Elliott, a fleet-footed junior who hauled in four passes for 101 yards last Saturday. The Hens also make a habit of throwing to fullback Craig Cummings out of the backfield, a play that netted Delaware 94 more yards against the Wildcats.

UMass counters with arguably the best defensive secondary in the nation, spearheaded by senior safety Brian Smith. A native of the First State, Smith stands fourth on the team in total tackles with 52 (10 for a loss), two sacks and one interception ironically, his lone pick may serve as the best testimony to how good Smith really is.

Brian Smith is a name you don't hear much, but it's because teams flat-out refuse to throw to his side," Whipple said. "It's like we're out there playing 10-on-10."

So when the whistle blows to start tomorrow's war, the home team will still have a fighting chance at tasting playoff glory this season. But instead of racking their brains to solve that complicated equation, the Minutemen would do best to just lower their shoulder pads and play some football.

■ numbers

continued from page 5

being one of Hollywood's worst actresses to date. No single film she has been in (and there have been far too many) has she shed her ditzy Friends persona. Her whiny, bimbo behavior forever aggravates me and jangles my nerves, and her name attached to any film adds a black mark to it, no matter how promising the project has going for it.

The casting for this movie is totally at a loss, with the supporting cast doing all of the film's supporting. Bill Pullman (Independence Day) plays an inept policeman investigating the scam, and Ed "Al Bundy" O'Neill adds a comedic element to the film as the TV station manager. Tim Roth (Reservoir Dogs) rounds out the cast as the shady strip club owner, and cameos by "Who's Line Is It Anyway?" veteran Collin Mochrie as a goofy Denny's waiter, and Michael Moore (Roger & Me) as Kudrow's chronically-masturbating uncle are the only memorable moments in the movie.

I've always liked John Travolta and each time he releases a movie I hope that it will propel him back to the top. Lucky Numbers, however, is so bootish and brainless you can't help but feel had for the former "Welcome Back, Kotter" star, and wonder what the hell he was thinking when he signed on for a project like this. Even though a Battlefield Earth sequel is in development, I'll keep my fingers crossed that someday in the near future, perhaps with his next movie Swordfish, John Travolta will again get lucky in Hollywood.

Used Clothing Drive
Sponsored by:
Alpha Epsilon Pi
Saturday, November 11
10 A.M. - 3 P.M.
Location: 401 North Pleasant St.
(Frat Row by UMass Campus)
All Proceeds Go To The Salvation Army

■ women's b-ball

continued from page 10

nine shots in the first half, going 15 for 26 on the way to a 39-20 lead at the half.

"We knew going into the year that we were going to have to shoot the ball better," O'Brien said. "And I think we have a number of players who are capable of shooting a very high percentage. I think tonight everyone took quality shots and that makes all the difference in the world."

The finest shooting performance of the evening came from the gun of sophomore Kristin Cannon. Cannon, who did not see a lot of playing time last year for the Minutewomen, went 7-for-7 from the field and 2-for-2 from behind the arc for a team-high 17 points.

"I wasn't really looking to go out and score," Cannon said. "The shots just came."

It only took four minutes for UMass to gain control of the contest, when at 15:13 in the first half, senior Kathy Coyner, pushing the ball up the court, connected with a streaking Cannon for the easy lay-up and a 13-4 lead. The advantage just gradually increased from there on in.

Latvia, who lost two exhibition games to Atlantic 10 opponents last week (George Washington University, 106-52 and Fordham University 81-77), struggled offensively, hitting a mere 17 of its 57 shots and creating 20 turnovers. UMass was able to score 15 points off of the Latvia mistakes.

Other significant performers for UMass were Coyner (11 points, 7 assists, 1 turnover), Caroline Nehls (11 points, 8 rebounds), Jennifer Butler, who only played in the second stanza (10 points, 6 rebounds) and Amber Sneed (13 points, 4 steals).

Sneed, who will fill the big shoes of Smith at the forward position, brought a lot of exciting plays to the hardwood last night, including her driving, hop-step lay-in with just under a minute left to play.

"I was hoping not to have to make Amber go back and play that four position, just because we had good numbers in there," O'Brien said. "But now she's going to have to do that. She did it last year and did it very well. It's just an adjustment you have to make when injuries happen."

"I played it last year," Sneed said. "I'm just going to play, anywhere Joanie puts me. If she needs me at the forward that's where I'm going to play and I'm going to put 100 percent into it."

www.dailycollegian.com

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration - 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room (43 Amity St-downtown
MERCYhouse
It's a Church!
374-7532 www.knowmercy.org

field hockey

continued from page 10

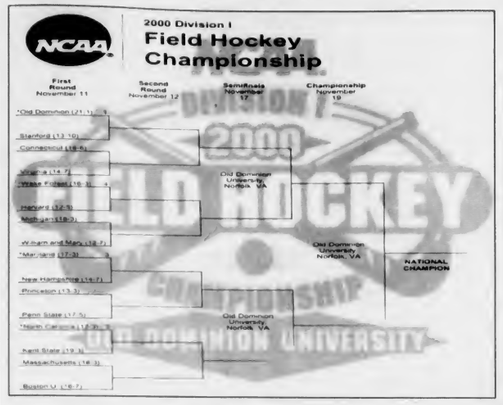
established herself as one of the country's most complete players with season tallies of 21 goals and 22 assists, and leading goal-scorer Arlette van Cleeff, who has 23 goals to go along with eight assists.

In comparison, UMass' leading goal scorer, Anke Bruemmer, has only 11 goals, while its assist leader, Patty Robinson, has 13 helpers.

Should North Carolina advance, then it will probably be an even tougher game for the Maroon and White, as the Tar Heels are hosting the tournament's first round as the No. 2 seed. Despite the fact that UNC recently was upset by rival Virginia in the semifinals of the ACC tournament, it is still a very dangerous team that is one of the favorites to win the national title.

However, UMass should be ready.

"Our goal now is a National Championship," said Shea. "When we consider this next round, it's a four game season. You play two games one weekend and two games the next weekend. We just have to take them one game at a time."



Pucksters head to Midwest

Surging Minutemen to face UNO

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

In general, the state of Nebraska is the known for many things – the powerhouse football program in Lincoln, the College World Series each June, and, of course, as agriculturally dominated economy.

Hockey, however, is not something that Cornhusker state is famous for. Nevertheless, that trend is slowly changing with the emergence of the Nebraska-Omaha program.

This weekend, the Massachusetts pucksters will head to the Midwest to face a team that mirrors itself.

UNO coach Mike Kemp has instilled a winning attitude in the state capital since the inception of the program four years ago, and the Mavericks have responded. A season ago, they were one win away from reaching the NCAA tournament.

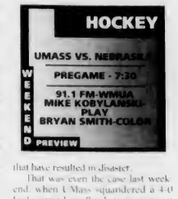
The Minutemen, on the other hand, also have a program that is still in its infancy. Yet, in the first year of the Don Cahoon era and the eighth since the reinstatement of hockey at UMass, the Maroon and White appear to be on an upswing of their own.

Since starting the season with two losses at Wisconsin, UMass had posted a 3-1-1 mark to reach the .500 mark. Included in that span are a win over No. 4 New Hampshire and a tie against No. 12 Colgate.

The Mavericks also come into this weekend with a record that sits at the break-even point, 4-4. UNO also has a win against No. 5 Michigan State to their credit, the only loss thus far for the Spartans.

"There's a lot of room for improvement, but so far, we're playing fairly well," Kemp said. "We're a team that likes to play a good transition game, and we have to do that this weekend in order to be successful."

UMass is coming off one of its most successful weekends in recent memory, as it defeated UNH and UMass-Lowell to ascend into second place in the Hockey East standings. However, in the early going, the Minutemen have been prone to lapses that have resulted in disaster.



That was even the case last week-end when UMass squandered a 4-0 lead against Lowell only to squeeze out a 5-4 win in overtime. Because of that, Cahoon is still unsure of what team to expect on a nightly basis.

"It's almost miraculous when I look at last night's game and I watch it on tape," said Cahoon following the UNH win on Saturday. "Clearly I'd have to be very pleased with what I saw out there tonight.

"Our team has two faces – we showed one last night, we showed a very different one tonight."

The Minutemen have been paced by the play of the Turner brothers in the first seven games, each of which has 10 points. Tim leads the club in goals with six, while Jeff leads in assists with eight. Martin Mihjkt is second on the squad with six points. Five other players have five points apiece.

Senior goaltender Markus Helanen has been the main man between the pipes thus far. He has shut out Merrimack and UNH in his last two outings and is the reigning Hockey East Defensive Player of the Week for the year. Helanen is 2-1-1 with a 2.65 goals against average.

The Mavericks have a diverse scoring attack with sophomores David Brisson and Greg Zanon and junior Jeff Heggan leading the way with seven points apiece.

In goal, UNO relies on freshman netminder Dan Ellis, who won the United States Hockey League's Most Valuable Player Award a year ago after posting a 2.25 GAA with 11 shutouts for the Omaha Lancers.

These two teams have met up in the 1997-98 campaign in Omaha, a series that the clubs split. That year was the first for the Mavericks program, but since then they have emerged as a legitimate player in college hockey. UNO was ranked No. 15 to open the 2000-01 season.

"The last time that we played, those were only our sixth and seventh games of college hockey," Kemp said.

The team that we had at that point in time had players who had never played college hockey before. Since then we've had the opportunity to mature as a team, as well as the ability to recruit players who can come in and help out our program."

Game time is set for 8:05 p.m. (ET) at the Omaha Civic Auditorium.

It's 'No more Mr. Nice Guy' tonight at Mullins

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The grace period is over. The training wheels are off. No more Mr. Nice Guy.

In last week's season-opening exhibition game against California Midwest, Massachusetts men's basketball coach Bruiser Flint let his players work off their early-season rust. In tonight's exhibition finale against Statmaster.com, it will be the guys with the most polished game who get the lion's share of time on the William D. Mullins Center floor.

"My thing for this game is that we're going to treat it more like a real game than we did last week," Flint said. "I told the guys that if they don't play, they're coming out. Last week everybody played between 14 and 20 minutes, so everyone got somewhat equal time. It might not be that way this week."

Statmaster.com presents the Minutemen with a challenge similar to the one they faced against the All-Stars. The team boasts seven former college standouts, each of whom brings a solid facet to an overall dangerous squad. Factor in the propensity for a traveling team to switch up its ranks, and Statmaster.com becomes an almost impossible team to prepare for.

"You never know with teams like this," Flint said. "People might show up who aren't on the roster, and other guys won't show up who are."

The job of bringing the ball up the floor for the visitors will likely belong to Shandue McNeill, arguably the most prolific passer in the history of his alma mater, St. Bonaventure. McNeill holds the Bonnie assist records for both career total (531) and high game (13) and stands at No. 29 on the SBU all-time scorer's list with 1,049 career points. Upon his graduation in 1997, McNeill took his act overseas and played professional ball in Germany.

Dueling with the former pro will be Minuteman Jonathan DePina, making his second-straight start at point guard. DePina logged 27 minutes in the exhibition opener last week, racking up a game-high five assists. His backcourt mate, Shannon Crooks, led the Maroon and White with 17 points.

UMass will enjoy somewhat of a size advantage against Statmaster.com; the visitors' tallest player is 6-foot-8 Manhattan grad Brendan O'Brien. The team does possess a tenacious frontcourt presence in forward Brent Fisher, a 6-foot-6 Cornell product who averaged 9.6 points and a team-high 5.2 rebounds over his senior season for the Big Red.

Fisher and 6-foot-7 Rutgers grad Jamal Phillips (10.3 points, 6.1 rebounds per game from 1991-95) will be a key focus for a Maroon and White squad that had a problem with carom against Cal-Midwest.

"We didn't rebound the ball well at all last week," Flint said. "It wasn't because we weren't boxing out, we just didn't go for the ball. We'd have three guys around the ball, and they'd pick it up and score. Maybe it was jitters, but I want guys to fight for every rebound."

The Minutemen most needed in the board war will be 6-foot-10 Kit Rhymer and 6-foot-8 Eric Williams. The two split time in the post last week and teamed for 14 rebounds, nine of which came on the offensive end of the floor. Problems came when the two tried to play in tandem, limiting the schemes Flint could implement on defense.

"It's tough trying to play zone when you've got Kit and Eric out there at the same time, trying to guard guys out on the perimeter," Flint said. "This game, we're going to work on our zone on both offense and defense. I'll probably tell the other team to play a little zone too."

Not that Statmaster.com will necessarily oblige. Last week, Flint tried a similar negotiation with Cal-Midwest and made a deal that the All-Stars didn't quite live up to.

"Their coach asked me not to press, because they only had seven guys," Flint said. "I asked them not to play zone, because we hadn't worked on it yet. Then they came out and played zone for the first 10 minutes of the game.

"I wanted to go over and ask them if they wanted their check or not."

Tip-off is slated for 7 p.m.

Sophomore Micah Brand takes the feed from senior Jonathan Depina.

Big weekend for Minutewomen

UMass travels to Philly to end regular season

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

It all comes down to this.

Through 25 games this season, the Massachusetts women's volleyball team stands at 12-13, with an 8-6 record in the Atlantic 10 conference, a record that places them one-half game behind Dayton, who is 9-6 in conference.

This weekend, the Minutewomen finish off their regular season with games against two A-10 opponents who hail from opposite ends of the spectrum record-wise, but both call the Cradle of Liberty home.

Friday night sees the Maroon and White face off against LaSalle, a team who wallows in the misery of the basement of the conference. The Explorers come into the match with the dubious distinction of being the only winless team in A-10 conference play. They hold an 0-14 mark, with a 12-20 overall tally.

LaSalle has been swept in six consecutive matches, including five matches with A-10 schools. The last meeting it had with the Minutewomen, the Maroon and White promptly dismissed the visiting Explorers on Oct. 14 in straight sets (15-8, 15-11, 15-5).

In that match, junior co-captain Lymarie Llovet had 11 kills and 12 digs to lead UMass. Senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson added nine kills of her own in the contest. Trina Allen led LaSalle players with ten kills on the evening.

The second match of the weekend should be far tougher for the Minutewomen as they will go head-to-head with second-place Temple on Saturday afternoon. Temple (16-8, 12-2 A-10) is just a half game out of first place in the conference, with only George Washington (22-5, 13-2) ahead of it.

The Owls have brought home victories in their last four contests after losing two the weekend before that in games at Xavier and Dayton. They will face Rhode Island tonight before their Saturday match. Two wins for the Owls would guarantee them a share of the A-10 title and a shot at the No.1 seed in the A-10 tournament next weekend.

The Owls faced the Minutewomen on Friday the 13th back in October, and they terrorized the hard-fighting home squad, sending UMass to its first home loss of the season in four sets (13-15, 15-12, 13-15, 10-15).

That match saw Temple completely outpower the Maroon and White with a healthy diet of kills by senior All-America candidate Alma Kovaci, who notched 17 kills in her first game back from an ankle injury she suffered two weeks earlier against Dayton.

Llovet and Hasson were again the leaders for the Minutewomen, this time tallying 13 and 11 kills, respectively. Junior outside hitter Janeen DeMarte led UMass on the defensive end, tallying 16 digs on the evening.

The Minutewomen fell in their last match, losing a five set battle to Fairfield University on Tuesday night. In the match, four players tallied double-doubles in the contest, with Jen Davis leading the team with 17 kills and adding 12 kills. Hasson, Llovet, and DeMarte were the other Minutewomen notching double-doubles on the night. Senior Jenni Drennan had 38 set assists and a team-high 19 digs.

Goten
COOKING AT YOUR TABLE
Call for reservations and hours of operation
Now accepting OCMP
Come sit and relax as our chefs exhibit their talents in preparing for you the finest foods at your table.
For nearly 30 years our large sized tables and private dining room have made Goten a favorite for birthdays, anniversaries, meetings, and private functions of all kinds.
Affordable seafood, chicken, and steak dinner specials are available daily except Saturday, so come in today and try our fine Japanese cuisine
Student Discount
1/2 Off Appetizer Special
(Call for more information)
104 Old Amherst Road • Off Route 116 • On bus route
Sunderland • (413) 665-3628

Collegian Sports

CINEMARK Theatres
At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA
Get out of your books and into the Box Office!
Register to WIN a 2001 Season Pass to Cinemark!
To enter, go to cinemark.com
Grand Openings and click on the Hadley web page
FEATURING
• 2 Box Offices
• 2 Concession Stands
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens
Purchase movie tickets via the Internet and register to receive showtimes and special offers via email
Go to cinemark.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OFFcampus Antics Find Ruth's big red heart on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Sublease 2Bedroom Apt. $775/month including everything. Call 665-0969

One room in 3 bedroom apt available. $337/month all inclusive. Located at Cliffside apts. in Sunderland. Contact Jyll Evens @ 397-9887

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

96 Suzuki Sidekick exc condition. New tires, Tune-up, 50k, 5sp, $7500 obo Dana 253-0540

99 Saturn SL manual, air, 25,500mi, Yakima Rack $9500, 545-1998

CHILDCARE

1991 VW Passat 5spd, CD player, sun roof, spoiler. Must sell $2695 obo 546-3114

91 Pontiac Firebird 126k miles. Power windows/locks. T-tops. New tires. 413-789-1149

89 Volvo Stationwagon. Mechanically: runs absolutely mint! Body: Tan, no rust, very solid. Loaded: AC, sunroof, leather, etc. Milage 181k, 4 new snow tires included, family owned, dealer maintained. (Book value $6060) asking $5700 or B/O Jim (413) 628-4789

CHILDCARE

Mothers Helper 2 children - 4pm-7:30pm Tues +Thurs After Dec 15, Mon-Fri. Cook light dinners. $8.00/hr. Call Michelle 256-8632

COMPUTERS

Printer Multipass C3000 Bubble Jet Fax Machine/Color Printer/Scanner. Great for school. New! Hardly used $280 or B/O Julia 586-9552

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Mail Boxes Ect. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Center, Amherst)

Reliable and Reasonable dog care person wanted in Sunderland. 665-2779

EMPLOYMENT

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampt on area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Attention! Work from home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR SALE

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

CATCH BEERPONG FEVER. BABY WE GOT YOUR TABLE DON'T YOU WORRY. 549-5950 ASK FOR CHAD FREE DELIVERY, CUSTOMIZED TO YOUR LIKING GOD AND THE BABY JESUS, CALL US

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOMMATE WANTED

Wanted to Share 2 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. Start Jan 1 Call Beth 665-8572

Two Girls Looking for roommate in 3 bedroom Pufton Apt. Avail Jan/01. Call 549-4017

Share Apartment with 2 female roommates. Spring 2001 summer option available. Cheap rent! On bus route. Needed ASAP please call 256-0912

To share Apt. with 3 other roommates for Spring 2001. Summer option available. Cheap rent! Great location! Please call 549-5570

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
37 - CBS/3 Hartford
8 - UPN 1 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
61 - UPN 57 Springfield
9 - HSCN Movie Channel
57 - UPN 20 Hartford
10 - HSCN New Movie Channel
11 - NBC 10 New Britain
13 - Fox 61 Hartford
15 - PBS 24 Hartford
17 - NBC 22 Springfield
18 - International Channel
19 - UMASS Academic Channel
20 - WB 59 New Haven
21 - ESPN
23 - ESPN2
30 - UVE TV (Student Channel)
32 - Weather Channel
33 - Discovery Channel
34 - Cspan
35 - CNN
36 - CNN Headline News
38 - Lifetime
40 - USA
41 - TBS
43 - TNT
45 - Nickelodeon
47 - Nick at Nite
48 - TV Land
49 - Comedy Central
50 - BET
51 - Univision
52 - Bloomberg Financial Network
53 - College TV Network
54 - MTV
55 - MTV2
56 - VH1
58 - The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 10, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer.		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Positivly Conn.	Tributo to Secrifice		Bob Hope Memories		Positivly Conn.
WFSB 3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive "Miles to Go" (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "Double Trouble"	News		Late Show
WBZ 4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive "Miles to Go" (N)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "Double Trouble"	News		Late Show
WCVB 5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Two Guys-Girl Trouble With		Norm	Madigan Men	20/20	News		Nightline
WLVI 6		Sabrina-Witch	Cluerless	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Popular "Un-ine Trouble" (N)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH 7	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Rescue Me" (N)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News		Tonight Show
WTXX 8	6	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Freedom "Assassins" (N)		Level 9 "Terror in the Sky"		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT 9	10	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Providence "Rescue Me" (N)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Friends	Tonight Show
WTIC 10	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	Police Videos (N) (In Stereo)		Million Dollar Mysteries (N)		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP 11	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence "Rescue Me" (N)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News		Tonight Show
WGBY 12	8	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Stone Wa'ss In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB 13	29	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Two Guys-Girl	Trouble With	Norm	Madigan Men	20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK 18		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Freedom "Assassins" (N)		Level 9 "Terror in the Sky"		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS 22		Roseanne	Rosanna	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	"Pretty Woman" (1990, Comedy-Drama) Richard Gere, Julia Roberts.						Saturday Night Fever" (1977)
A&E 15		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Heidi Fleiss		Poirot "Wasps' Nest"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Survival"
CNN 24	23	Wordnews	Moneyline Newshour (N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM 25	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	"When Harry Met Sally" (1989) Billy Crystal, Meg Ryan,
DISC 26		Wild Discovery "Yak of Tibet"		Wild Discovery		Bridges: Reaching Out		News	Strange-True	Storm Warning! "Blown Away"		Justice Files
ESPN 27		Sportscenter		NFL Matchup	NFL Films	Arete Awards for Courage		College Basketball: Coaches vs. Cancer Classic				Sportscenter
LIFE 29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Other Mother: A Moment of Truth Movie" (1995, Drama)				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV 31		2gether	Cribs	Little Nicky	Jackass	Wrestling Special (In Stereo)		Jackass	Sports on MTV	Real World (In Stereo)		Real World IX Finals Wrap-Up
NICK 33		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI 35		Sliders "Common Ground"		Babylon 5 "Grupos" (In Stereo)		Invisible Men (In Stereo)		"Babylon 5: In the Beginning" (1998) Bruce Boxleitner.				Invisible Men (In Stereo)
TLC 37	28	Windsor Restorad		Understanding Viruses		Dangerous Police Videos		Eye Spy: Hidden Cameras (N)		Great Books: 1984 (N)		Dangerous Police Videos
TNT 39		ER "Shades of Gray" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Parole" (In Stereo)		"Addicted to Love" (1997, Comedy-Drama) Meg Ryan,				"Addicted to Love" (1997, Comedy-Drama) Meg Ryan,
USA 42		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Goodbyes" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Gimme Shelter"		"The Stranger Beside Me" (1995) Tiffani-Amber Thiessen.				Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO 63		(5:15) "The Heist" (1996)		Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		"The Thirteenth Floor" (1999, Drama) Craig Bierko, Charlize Theron, Armin Mueller-Stahl.				"Beverly Hills Cop III" (1994, Drama) Eddie Murphy.
MAX 65		(5:00)		"Loverboy" (1989) Patrick Dempsey.		"Home Alone" (1990, Comedy) Macaulay Culkin.				"The Siege" (1998, Suspense) Denzel Washington.
SHOW 55		(5:45) "Never Say Never Again" (1983) Sean Connery.				"The General's Daughter" (1999, Mystery) John Travolta.				Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "Abaddon"		Beggars

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DOGBERT CONSULTS
YOU NEED TO REORGANIZE BY CUSTOMER TYPE
ONE DIVISION WOULD FOCUS ON SELLING TO FEEBLE-MINDED PEOPLE.
ARE YOU GESTURING AT ME BECAUSE I WOULD WORK IN THAT DIVISION?
WHAT'S YOUR SECOND GUESS?

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

TIME TO CELL MOTHER, SON! ARE YOU IN YET? BEFORE YOU ARE?
DAD! I'VE GOT BAD NEWS AND YOU DON'T WANT
YOU KNOW WHAT? I'M GONNA DO ANOTHER LOAD! I GET TO THE OVAL OFFICE EARLY. FIRST THINGS
DAD! YOU LOST! YOURS NOT SO BIG TO THE OVAL OFFICE!
I'M HAVING ALL THE COUCHES STEAM CLEANED. TWICE!
HE WON'T LISTEN!
SPEAK SLOWER.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

WHAT'S THE POINT OF THIS ELECTION AGAIN?
TO PICK A MAN TO LEAD US TO GREATER PROSPERITY.
IS THAT POSSIBLE?
EAT NOW!
NO
R.J. SOME DISTANT SUBDIVISIONS IN SOUTH DAKOTA STILL DON'T HAVE HEATED DRIVEWAYS!
I HAD NO IDEA

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WEIRD. I'VE NEVER BEEN YOGA ON TV BEFORE.
THAT'S YOGA? I THOUGHT YOGAS WERE LITTLE GREEN UFO THINGIES
NO, MAN. THAT'S "YOGA."
YEAH. WAIT. WHAT ARE WE TALKING ABOUT?
DOES ONE DO VANILLA YOGA? I LOVE THAT STUFF

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

THIS ARTICLE SAYS HOLLYWOOD'S ACTORS AND WRITERS MAY GO ON STRIKE THIS SPRING.
THINK ABOUT IT— NO NEW MOVIES NO NEW TV SHOWS.
AND THIS IS DIFFERENT HA HOW?
CAN SOMEONE TAPE TONIGHT'S FUGITIVE? I'M GOING TO CHARLIE'S ANGELS WITH STEVE

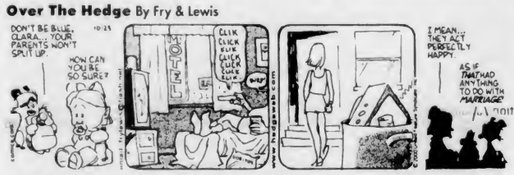
Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

How can you stand living in Southwest!? Everyone is so violent and aggressive!
You guys will riot at the drop of a hat.. bunch of animals
If you say one more thing about Southwest, I'll throw this bottle at you... I swear..!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

SO HERE I GO AGAIN, FALLING IN LOVE WITH A WOMAN WHO'S ANGRY AND COMPLAINING, AND MAKING MY LIFE MISERABLE
WHAT DOES IT MEAN, DOC? WHAT'S MY PARANOIA?
HMMMMM
AND YES, HERE WE ARE
YUCK A MEW

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis



DON'T BE BLUE, CLARA... YOUR PARENTS WON'T SPLIT UP
HOW CAN YOU BE SO SURE?
CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK CLICK
I MEAN, THEY ACT PERFECTLY HAPPY
AS IF THAT HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH MARRIAGE

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Don't worry, it's not wrong that you are uncomfortable sitting next to Satan's headdress. You had a dream about his two brows last night! That's cool. I'm sure it wasn't sexual even if his eyebrows looked like hammers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – That which is coming to you will come today, in certain, many forms, none of which will be forms of cream. You will meet a man named Newt who has Jesus Sea lizards. Walk to and where he starts talking in a way about being one of his subjects.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Today you will fall off your chair in class. Everyone will laugh, but not the "ha-ha" kind of laugh. More the "meow, meow, hark hark" kind of laugh.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Still have Dots left over from Halloween? Does anyone want them? Perhaps we can all put our leftover Dots together and send them back to the Dots company with a letter saying, "This is what we think of your stupid Dots."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Today you will magically be transported to another land and play with fairies and goons and run crickets with kings and queens. Reading rainbows, reading rainbows. ...I can do everything! I can read a book in a nook.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – What you love to once today can surely work for you now. But trying for a third time may be pushing it. Honestly, can you even eat that many Sunny Knees anyway?

TAURUS (April 20- May 20) – You can emote a highly impulsive, creative and energetic day. This leads you into a weekend of pure fun and lots and lots of crazy drunkenness. That was a reference to Albert Camus, in his book, Existentialism: Lots and Lots of Crazy Drunkeness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – A conflict between material desires and a need for something richer within will send you on a surprising direction today. More clothes, jewelry, and the entire back section of Spencer's Gifts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Though you're used to picking up the pace these days, it may be time to slow down and enjoy a more leisurely rhythm for a while. Hint, hint, wink, wink, nudge, nudge, hint, wink, splat, wink, wink ...oh wait that was way too fast.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A conflict between material desires and a need for something richer within will send you on a surprising direction today. More clothes, jewelry, and the entire back section of Spencer's Gifts. You might notice that this is exactly the same horoscope for Gemini, who it means one of two things. One, horoscopes are dumb.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may get lost amid the volume of practical duties you have to perform today. When we say practical we mean usually mean Playstation.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct. 22) – Thousands of people will rush to your door today, but it won't be because you saved Timmy from the burning tire. It's because you then offered him drugs and some beer, because he looked a little hungry and thirsty.

Amherst Weather

Friday	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 52 LOW: 46	HIGH: 51 LOW: 39	HIGH: 58 LOW: 36

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

"OH, TO BE A POLE DANCER AGAIN!"

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Quarter Pound Burger (B,F,H)
Macaroni & Cheese (vegetarian) (B,F,H)
Golden Burger (vegan) (B,H,W)
Harvest Burger (vegan) (F)
Beef Burrito (W)
California Chili (vegan) (W)

Quote of the Day

"Make me laugh, make me cry, enrage me, but just don't try to disengage me"

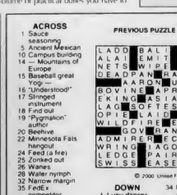
–Ani DiFranco

"The tongue weighs practically nothing. But so few people can hold it."

ACROSS
1 Sauce seasoning
5 Ancient Mexican
10 Campus building
14 — Mountains of Europe
15 Baseball great Yogi —
16 "Understood"
17 Stringed instruments
18 Find out
19 "Pygmalion" author
20 Beehive
22 Minnesota Fats hangout
24 Feed (a fire)
25 Zonked out
26 Wanes
28 Water nymph
32 Narrow margin
35 Fed+ competitor
37 Deal with
38 Turkish title
39 Mission river
41 Many, many years
42 Piano tune
45 Native souvenir
46 Droops
47 Plaiseau
48 Streetcar
50 Makes fun of
54 Windy
58 Lava makers
61 Incapacitate
62 Asian nurse
63 Bizarre
65 Fitness centers
66 Not all
67 Imagine
68 Writer Wiesel
69 Frog's cousin
70 Mountain curves
71 Cincinnati nine

DOWN
1 Luau dances
2 Burst forth
3 Proportion
4 More dreary
5 Skillfully
6 Last letter
7 Snares
8 Actor Flynn
9 Birchbark craft
10 Clean-up tool
11 Industrial safety agcy.
12 Genuine
13 Whimper
21 Johnny —
23 Singer Horne
25 Cleopatra's snakes
27 Channel marker
29 Brainstorm
30 Easy as falling off
31 Cozy rooms
32 Inane
33 Chills and fever
34 McKellen and Astbury
36 Basketeer Magke
37 He has "will" power
40 Arquines
43 Baby-sat
44 On the briny
46 More complecent
49 Long, long — 51 Battery part
52 Becomes disenchanted
53 Senator Hefauver
55 Fashion
56 Shy
57 Votes in favor
58 Enormous
59 Melville novel
60 Tibetan monk
61 Bottom edges
64 Actress — Dawn Chong

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Kristi Ceccorossi
Photo Technician	Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor	Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor	Roberto Delgado
Production Staff	Elana Premack, Shimouli Dave

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Friday, November 10, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

En route to Tobacco Road

BU, North Carolina first roadblocks

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team has achieved a high level of distinction: the NCAA tournament in Chapel Hill, NC.

And the team will not be happy with anything short of a Final Four appearance.

"We want to go to the Final Four and win the National Championship," said forward Kristen Schmidt. "And the only way we can make it is if we beat ourselves."

UMass was able to garner an automatic bid into the big dance by defeating Temple 5-0, in last Sunday's championship game of the Atlantic 10 tournament. This game was pretty much a "must win," considering that it was question-able whether or not the Maroon and White would have been able to receive an at-large bid, had it lost to the Owls.

"I'm glad it wasn't left in the hands of a committee, we would have been screwed on," said Head Coach Patty Shea.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Kaitlyn Byron and the Massachusetts field hockey team will hope for more celebrating this weekend.

However, with the win, the 18-5 Minutewomen head into the tourney with the No. 8 national ranking and a nine-game winning streak. In the first round, they will play the Boston University Terriers at 2 p.m. on the Chapel Hill campus.

BU will also come into the game red hot, as it now has the No. 13 national ranking and a 16-7 record. The Terriers were able to qualify for the tourney by beating New Hampshire in the America East Championship game, 2-1, and then crushing Rider in the play-in game, 6-1. Added incentive for BU this season, will be the fact that UMass eliminated it from last year's NCAA tournament in the first round, 2-1.

"The only thing we can control is our performance," said Shea. "And the outcome should take care of itself."

Earlier in the year, the Terriers and Minutewomen engaged in one of the closest and hard-fought battles ever seen on the turf of Richard F. Garber field. It looked like the Maroon and White would be able to pull out the win early when Lindsay Abbott poked home a goal with 11:48 remaining in the first half, but Rachael Stillings tied it with 9:12 left in the game. The teams then battled through two scoreless overtime periods before heading to penalty strokes.

When BU took the early 2-0 lead in strokes, it looked like it was over. But then goalie Zowie Tucker and Schmidt took over to deliver the most dramatic win of the year for the Minutewomen.

With UMass down 2-1 in the first round of strokes, Schmidt knocked home the game-tying goal to send the game into yet another extra frame. In the second round of strokes, Schmidt blasted the lone goal of the round into the back of the cage, and then watched as Tucker completely faltered the Terrier attack.

It was just one of many shining moments for Tucker, who leads the nation with a 0.64 goals against average on the year.

"Obviously [Zowie] gives us so much confidence because she is a wall back there," said midfielder Patty Robinson. "I think it definitely helps us play."

If the Minutewomen are able to get by BU for the second time this year, then they will move on to play the winner of the Kent State/North Carolina game. That contest is taking place on the same field at 11 p.m. on Saturday. Both teams enter the tournament as national powerhouses, and both will be tough second-round competition for Massachusetts.

The 19-5 Golden Flashes are riding an 18-game winning streak into the tourney, and absolutely destroyed the rest of the Mid-American Conference in order to gain their birth in the NCAA's. For the year, they were 10-0 in conference play, led by a dynamic and explosive offense. The two main scoring threats for Kent State are Flo Brouwer, who has

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Atlantic 10 Championship MVP Kristen Schmidt leads her Minutewoman squad into the first round of the NCAA tournament. Turn to page 7 for the tournament brackets.

Hens up next in UMass playoff hunt

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

In order for the Massachusetts football team to make its third post-season appearance in Mark Whipple's three-year tenure as head coach, the team must capture the Atlantic 10 championship. Is this even possible?

You Bet! It will take some help.

Of course, the Minutemen must defeat No. 4 Delaware tomorrow and Rhode Island next weekend. But even consuming wins in those two games might not be enough.

Richmond must lose both of its final games, as the second place Spiders hold the advantage in a tiebreaker with the Minutemen.

That would leave a three-way tie atop the conference between UMass, Delaware and James Madison. Having beaten the Dukes in Week Nine, the Blue Hens would prevail there. Since a UMass win over Delaware is necessary for this scenario to even occur, the conference title would subsequently go to the Minutemen.

If Delaware follows up a loss tomorrow with a defeat in its season finale with Villanova, the Hens will drop out of the picture altogether.

Likewise for the Dukes if they fail to top both Richmond this week and Northeastern next weekend.

So in other words, it will take a combination of two UMass wins and no less than four other losses for the Maroon and White to lay claim to the A-10 crown.

Impossible? No. But for now, it may be more realistic to focus solely on tomorrow's home showdown with Delaware.

The Minutemen (6-3, 4-2 A-10) come into their McGuirk Alumni Stadium finale on the wave of their biggest win ever, a 38-17 dismantling of Villanova last weekend. The Blue Hens (8-1, 5-1 A-10) came up a point short against New Hampshire at home on Saturday, 45-44.

Whipple saw a brutal week of practice pay off against the Wildcats, and elected to use a similar technique in preparing for Delaware.

"I've been a miserable SOB for two weeks now," Whipple said. "I've been nasty. I've been ruthless. I don't like to be that way, but I like to win."

The victor tomorrow will likely be determined by which team takes better command of the air. The UMass passing attack returned to splendor last weekend behind a solid outing from Richard Lucero, who hooked up with three different targets for scores and connected on four completions over 20 yards.

Pulling the ball out of the air is the single most important ingredient for a Minuteman win tomorrow in the words of Whipple.

"One of the keys to this game is that our receivers catch the football," Whipple said. "We're going to throw it; we have to against this team. If we can catch the ball, we'll win."

On the other side of the pigskin, the Maroon and White will seek to shut down the passing attack of Delaware signal caller Matt Nagy, who put up 317 yards and three touchdowns and set a new school record with his 50th scoring strike last weekend against UNH.

Turn to FOOTBALL page 6

FOOTBALL
UMASS VS. DELAWARE
PREGAME - 11:30
KICKOFF - 12 P.M.
91.1 FM-WMUA
DAVID ROSE-PLAY MIKE MELILLO-COLOR
WEEKEND PREVIEW

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Senior tailback Marcel Shipp will look to run over Delaware on Saturday and keep UMass' playoff hopes alive.

Minutewomen win big; Cannon fires perfectly

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

This wasn't supposed to happen to the Massachusetts women's basketball team.

Junior Nekole Smith should have been wearing her number 50 in last night's exhibition game versus the University of Latvia. Nobody thought that her teammates would be the ones sporting that integer on their wristbands – the 2000-01 season now dedicated to their fallen comrade who suffered a season-ending knee injury in practice last Saturday.

UMass	84
Latvia	49

"She was pretty much instant offense," Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "She had the authority to score pretty much whenever she wanted. That's a big loss."

The Minutewomen, however, bounce back seemingly well to misfortune. Because last night, as Smith watched from the sideline, her fellow Maroon and White scored 84 points en route to a 35-point win over Latvia at the William D. Mullins Center, 84-49.

Although it wasn't omnipotent, the worthy presence of the UMass shooting gallery was evident. The Minutewomen hit 31 of 62 shots from the field and 6 of their 16 three-point attempts. Notably, the Maroon and White missed only

Turn to WOMEN'S B-BALL, page 7

JARET BABB/COLLEGIAN

6'3" center Stasia Robinson stays strong in the middle for UMass.

Check out a review of the British film, Billy Elliot, today in Arts. Who else looks this good in a tank top?

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 48 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, November 13, 2000

Senior tri-captain Jonathan DePina flashed crazy game in Friday night's victory. Those who've slept on No. 1 better wake up!

SPORTS p. 10

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Saturday Stooges
The UMass Minuteman takes a poke at the Delaware Blue Hen. The football team didn't have it so well, falling to DU 31-19.

Election comes down to the Sunshine State

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Election Day has come and gone, but the country still does not know who the next President will be.

A round of recounts in Florida wrapped up this weekend, but it seems as though it may be even longer before Florida is officially done counting their votes.

Late last week, the counties of Palm Beach, Miami-Dade, Volusia and Broward decided to canvass selected precincts in those counties to determine if a third, manual recount was necessary.

Yesterday, Governor George W. Bush's campaign filed an emergency motion for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction against the canvassing boards of the four Florida counties in the Federal District Court of Southern Florida.

"It is inconsistent with both the Constitution and the public interest for select county canvassing boards arbitrarily to reopen the 2000 presidential election in Florida for a third time," the motion stated.

The Division of Elections for the State of Florida had initially reported that Governor Bush and Secretary Dick Cheney received 2,909,135 votes to Vice President Al Gore's and Senator Joe Lieberman's 2,907,351. Under Florida statute 102.141, an automatic recount is instituted when the margin of victory is below .5 percent. Governor Bush's margin of victory was originally 1,784 votes, or .0299 percent.

"The Florida votes have been now counted twice and the results established a winner. Counting these same ballots again and again will not produce a more accurate result, only more delay and confusion," the Bush motion explained.

On Sunday, four counties decided to begin a one hundred percent hand recount. Volusia County is expected to take three days to recount some 184,000 ballots.

Still to be determined are the overseas absentee ballots, which may swing the count, and Florida's 25 electoral votes. The absentee votes must be counted by November 17.

In accordance with the Electoral College system, the ballots cast on Nov. 7 were not actually for President, but for electors who will vote for those candidates. The Electoral College is scheduled to meet Dec. 18. Each state will then forward its tallies before January 5, 2001. That is the date when the joint session of Congress is scheduled to meet.

Two Senators and two Representatives count out the electors' ballots to the assembled Congress.

If Florida has not counted its ballots by then, neither candidate will have received the requisite 270 electoral votes to win the Presidency.

An objection to any of the electoral votes would need to be signed by a Representative and a Senator. Each legislative body would then debate the votes in question. It would take a majority vote of both the House and the Senate to discard an electoral vote.

George W. Bush

COURTESY WORLDWIDE WEB
Al Gore

In that case, the job of determining the electoral votes would go to the House of Representatives, with each state receiving one vote and the outcome being determined by the Representatives.

The Republicans control almost 30 state delegations in the House. If the delegations voted strictly along party lines, Bush would become the next President.

Reading program continues at UMass

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is just one of many colleges around the nation to be the subject of a pilot program put on by USA Today.

The College Readership Program at UMass is in its second stage of a pilot program that began last semester. Newspapers are delivered to the Webster and Dickinson residence halls in Orchard Hill as well as John Quincy Adams (JQA) in Southwest five days a week. USA Today, The New York Times, The Boston Globe and The Union News are being made available to students for free throughout the 2000-2001 year.

The program originated at Pennsylvania State University five years ago, where it has since taken off and spread to other colleges throughout the nation.

"UMass was an important school for us because of its size and leadership in the North East," said Bill Windsor, USA Today's General Manager of Circulation said.

"We're targeting all of the colleges in the North East, big, small, public and private," explained Windsor. "Right now, we have a really good mix of all of these things. The whole program is a work in progress, and we're trying to involve as many different perspectives as we can."

The program began at UMass last year in a five-week pilot program. Surveys were distributed before and after the pilot took place and were reviewed at the end of the semester. The program has since continued into this semester; however, it was scaled down to just three residence halls.

"In it's [the pilot's] first week here this semester, we saw an overwhelming good response," John Riley, President of the College News Services said. "We'll drop off a 100 Boston Globes and they will be gone by the next morning."

Riley went on to explain that results from pilots done at Penn. State and Ohio State University concluded that students had better reading and writing skills after they had participated in the program.

"The project gives students an educational tool as well as a different aspect and tool for everyday life," said Windsor.

One major issue that has been looked into is the total cost of the project if made available to students in every residence hall on campus.

"We have $10,000 in seed money which we split between Housing Services, the Commonwealth College, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and the Chancellors funds," Michael Gilbert, Director of Housing Services said.

On a daily basis, anywhere from 800-900 newspapers are delivered and split between the three residence halls.

"Right now it would cost roughly $250,000 to $300,000 a year just for on campus students to receive these newspapers daily," Gilbert said.

The question still remains as to whether or not the program will become a permanent program at UMass and continue into the Fall 2001 semester.

"There's a lot of studying to be done, and were just looking to take it one step at a time," said Gilbert. "We haven't taken the program that far into the future. We have to consider our priorities and whether or not it stacks up to other priorities that we have here on campus."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

A UMass student views a free copy of the New York Times distributed as part of a pilot program by USA Today.

Veterans remembered at Army ROTC vigil

SCOTT LIPSKY/COLLEGIAN

Two cadets at parade rest flank the flagpole in front of Memorial Hall as a Veteran's Day vigil is conducted on Saturday.

The University of Massachusetts chapter of the Army ROTC celebrated Veteran's Day in a different way than many other students on campus.

Members of the ROTC held a Veteran's Day vigil in front of Memorial Hall to honor those that have served in the United States military. The hall is a building that was constructed to commemorate the 51 members of the Agricultural College that died serving in World War I. The North Room of the building has been dedicated to memorial purposes.

The holiday, which is always celebrated on the second Monday in November, came about in 1919 as a way of remembering the sacrifices that men and women made during World War I in order to keep lasting peace. The holiday was originally known as Armistice Day.

It was voted into law and became a federal holiday in 1938. Many people celebrate the holiday in different ways. Some veterans choose to gather at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. and honor those that fought with gifts and stand in silent vigil at the names of friends and relatives who fell in Vietnam. This is similar to the way that ROTC members chose to honor veterans.

Veterans of military service also have support groups, such as the American Legion and the Veteran's of Foreign Wars. On both Veteran's Day and Memorial Day, these groups raise money for the military by selling goods that are made by disabled veterans.

Melissa Hammel

MHC series about election concludes

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Mount Holyoke College's lecture series on the presidential elections will culminate today in a panel discussion featuring a political scientist, a Massachusetts State Representative and a Princeton University Professor.

Sponsored by the Harriet L. and Paul M. Weissman Center for leadership, this is the last of a four-part series investigating American democracy. The panel discussion, entitled "Election 2000: Implications for American Democracy," will be offering their own views on the election process thus far, major shifts in public opinion and party alignment, and the significance that this election may have on future elections. Other topics that will be touched upon include the nature of political leadership in the 21st century, and the impact that the impeachment and trial of President Clinton may have had upon the elections.

Political scientist Theodore Lowi, senior professor of American Institutions at Cornell University, will be a participant on the panel at the event. Lowi is well known for several of his books, some of which include The End of Liberalism, The Second Republic of the United States and Embattled Democracy: Politics and Policy in the Clinton Era. Lowi has also served as president of the International Political Science Association from 1997-2000 and received the Outstanding Mentor of Women in Political Science Award in 1986.

Also participating on the panel is Democratic State Representative Ellen Story. Representative Story was the first woman to represent the towns of Amherst, Pelham and Shutesbury and has served in the Legislator since 1992. Some of her major issues include affordable health care, welfare reform and issues relating to unions.

The third panel member participating in the event is Sean Wilentz, a professor of History and the director of the program in American Studies at Princeton University. He is a contributing editor and frequent contributor to The New Republic, a political magazine, and the author of Chants Democratic: New York City and the Rise of the American Working Class 1788-1850. He received the Fredrick Jackson Turner and the Albert J. Beveridge Award for his book. He also provided expert testimony during the Clinton impeachment hearing.

Moderator for the event will be Christopher Pyle, a professor of politics at Mount Holyoke College.

It is free and open to the public and will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Gamble Auditorium.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

SAM WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

Paving the way
Workers pave the walkway near the Southwest horseshoe.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Every Weekday Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a Broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bernharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jared Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Smiarowski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargenta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Bell Atlantic Mobile is now
Verizon Wireless
All the advantages. None of the hassles.
New digital Prepaid Wireless.
Introducing Digital Prepaid Wireless Service
· No additional charge for long distance
· No long-term contract
· No monthly bill
· No credit check
· No security deposits
$50
Prepaid Wireless Card $30* $50 $100
Home Airtime Minutes (includes long distance) 60 125 285
*$30 card available for replenishment only.
Choose America's #1 Wireless Provider!
Special Start-Up Package
$75 starter kit includes set up fee, a $50 prepaid wireless card, and double value pack coupons. Includes 25% off a headset for easier driving!
The Digital Phone
CDM 4000 for $79.99
Or
Bring your own phone. Verizon Prepaid Wireless works with many phones.
Hands-free headset kit available
Drive responsibly. Call with care. Verizon Wireless Simple. Affordable. National. Join in.
for free delivery, call
1.888.800.1840
shop online @ www.verizonwireless.com
verizonwireless
COMMUNICATIONS STORES
BOSTON, MA
Saltmar Street
(Across from Mary's)
617.646.6000
745 Boylston Street
(Across from Lord & Taylor)
617.266.9000
BURLINGTON, MA
Burlington Mall
(Next to Lord & Taylor)
781.221.6400
CAMBRIDGE, MA
87 Blaney St
(1 Mile from Galleria Mall)
617.864.0300
CHESTNUT HILL, MA
Route 9
(Near Walnut Plaza)
617.738.1900
MARLBOROUGH, MA
Solomon Pond Mall
508.624.6670
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MA
Emerald Square Mall
(Lower level, next to Sears)
508.695.0077
SAUGUS, MA
Kmart Plaza
(Next to Square One Mall)
781.941.8900
SHREWSBURY, MA
77 Boston Turnpike
(Route 9)
508.757.0900
Subject to terms & conditions of Prepaid Wireless Agreement & Price Plan. Account set-up fee may apply. All card sales are final. Usage rounded to next full minute; unused minutes lost. Other charges & restrictions apply. Verizon Wireless reserves the right to cancel service if account contains $0 balance after 60 days. Compatible digital phone required. Limited time offer. Phone offer while supplies last. ©2000 Verizon Wireless.

Brown U. appoints first African-American Ivy League President

By Beth Herskovits
Cornell Daily Sun (Cornell U.)

(U-WIRE) ITHACA, N.Y. - Brown University made history Thursday by appointing its first female president and the first African-American president in the Ivy League.

Ruth J. Simmons, president of Smith College, will become Brown's 18th president on July 1, succeeding E. Gordun Gee, who resigned last February to become chancellor of Vanderbilt University. Simmons will replace interim President Sheila E. Blumstein.

In an open letter to the Smith community, Simmons said that her experience at the college was "an unforgettably moving and happy one for me."

"She's been a wonderful president, and she's really inspired the school," Charles Staelin, dean for academic development at Smith, told The Brown Daily Herald Wednesday. "We're very sorry to see her leave."

The youngest of 12 children and the daughter of a sharecropper, Simmons told Thursday's press conference that increasing financial aid at Brown was a "moral imperative."

"I'm very interested in finding ways for students who come from least favorable circumstances to be able to come to Brown," she said.

During her five years at Smith, Simmons initiated the first undergraduate engineering program at a women's college, increased the endowment and launched a number of major building projects.

"She is truly beloved by faculty, staff and students at Smith, and we have every reason to believe she will be a star at Brown," said Brown Chancellor Stephen Robert.

Simmons served as vice provost at Princeton University before assuming the presidency at Smith. Prior to that, she served as provost at Spelman College and associate dean of the graduate school at the University of Southern California.

"The qualities we were looking for was someone who had great vision for all the leaders on campus... someone who could bring faculty, staff and students together," said Jill Lawlor, who chaired the Staff Advisory Committee during the nine-month presidential search.

Cornell President Emeritus Frank H. T. Rhodes also contributed to the selection process.

Veteran's Day Scenes

DAN SANTELLI/COLLEGIAN

The UMass band played a tribute to all those servicemen and women who have proudly served our nation in the Armed Forces.

SCOTT EDDOLS/COLLEGIAN

In honor of Veteran's Day, this serviceman stands outside Memorial Hall on Saturday.

A CALL TO ARMS
WMUA 91.1 FM
PRESENTS:
THE LAN PARTY
CAMPUS CENTER 163
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18TH FROM NOON UNTIL 1AM
SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19TH FROM NOON UNTIL 8PM
FEATURING TOURNAMENTS IN:
QUAKE I, II, III
HALFLIFE:COUNTERSTRIKE
WE SUPPLY THE FOOD, MUSIC AND SERVERS
YOU BRING YOUR ETHERNET-READY MACHINE AND TALENT. SHOW OFF YOUR SKILLS.
20 BUCKS PUTS YOU IN THE ACTION...
PRIZES WILL BE AWARDED TO THE ELITE...
So be there... and Represent!
Register online at www.gamersarena.com

Peer Health Education
What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...
❒ A. Contracting an STI.
❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.
Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits
Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education,
A 2 semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.
Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

To beat the band: another SW ruckus

This past Saturday, the University of Massachusetts football team played Delaware at home. McGuirk Alumni Stadium rocked as the two teams clashed. The deafening roar of the fans, the sound of the cannons and the music of the band shook the air as the athletic contest fought its way to the finish.

That wasn't the only noise related to the game, however.

At roughly eleven o'clock that morning, Southwest Residential Area was rocked by the sound of cannons, gunshots, falling rocks, anvils hitting the ground and cars colliding. Students throughout the towers and townises, from the North section to the South section, fell out of bed in fright. People who, weary from the carousing and revelry of the previous Friday night, had finally gone to their much-deserved rest only a few scant hours before, were woken with a start and a disbelieving, wild-eyed glance at the clock. Finally, after a few initial moments of bewilderment and fright, of insensibility and semi-consciousness, the grim realization of fact set in. War had not come. There were no car accidents, no anvils. The inevitable rock war still lay in the future. No, this noise was an all-too familiar ruckus.

The band had struck again.

It is evidently a tradition for the band to go through Southwest, particularly the drum corps, and play their songs. It is evidently meant to stir up the students, to get them excited about the game. It is meant to soar school spirit up to the skies and get the UMass student body ready for the athletic competition to come. In theory it wins on all accounts: the band continues their warm-ups, gets to practice their songs, and the student body gets to experience the nationally-acclaimed Minuteman Marching Band first-hand as well as get excited about the upcoming game. Also, those who forgot about the game get a reminder to go out and support the team. Everyone wins.

The theory, however, does not equal the reality.

In reality, there is nothing worse than being awoken by what seems like every drum in the world right outside your window. In reality, Saturday is a day of many hung-over students who need their sleep. The weekend is, for many people, the only time where sleeping in is permissible, and the loss of that precious sleep is something crushing.

The fact is that not everyone cares about football. Not every student goes to the games, not because they forget, but because they simply don't want to. Sports are not something for everyone – this is a fact that is often lost in the shuffle.

The students who live in Southwest have a right to their sleep. The hours before noon are known as 'quiet hours' for a reason – If the band were inside the dorm playing the RA would write them up in an instant, and there's no reason they should get away with more simply because they are outside.

This past weekend was the last home game of the year, and so there will be no more free concerts by the marching band in Southwest, but for next year, take it under advisement: let the Southwest students have their rest. The game can go on without them.

Question No. 1: Umberto or Xaviera?

SETH KOENIG

"Mitzi."

As I looked through the UMass souvenir keychains bearing possible names of buyers, I realized that there were more problems in this country than the petty presidential election.

There was "Al" and there was "George," so neither of those yahoos would have a problem buying a keychain at the UStore, and even "Ralph" of the Green Party would be okay when shopping at this school.

Nope. My problem was definitely not going to be solved, no matter whom I placed my vote for.

Regardless, it was an exciting day last Tuesday when I went to the Amherst Town Hall, where they told me to look for my name in some huge folder to find out where my district or section or whatever of Amherst that I was in. Then, when I found out that I was in district (or section or whatever) No. 5, I was told to go to the Bangs Community Center, where I could, for the first time ever, puff my chest out and tell our government what I thought.

And they could promptly ignore me.

There was no little lever next to a question that had anything to do with keychains at the UStore. All I wanted was a keychain that says "Seth" on it, and this booth that was supposed to be able to help me do my democratic duty and fix the country was utterly useless to me.

Oh well. While I was there, I figured I'd flick the little lever next to Gore's name, and then, because I'm a Maine resident voting on Massachusetts issues and politicians, I arbitrarily flicked other little levers until all of the other extremely important referendum questions and elected official issues were dealt with.

Because I had to wait in line and I was in this little private booth with a curtain on it and everything, it seemed as though flicking all of the little levers – not just one – was the fashionable thing to do. Who wants to be a two-pump chump in the voting booth? Not me.

I would do my part for this glorious state which has been my surrogate home for the past three and a half years and carefully make scientific decisions on the current issues.

People running for some extremely important position in the government: Guy No. 1? Never heard of him. Guy No. 2? Never heard of him. Edward Kennedy? I think he killed his girlfriend. Shouldn't he be in jail or something? I'm going to vote for Guy No. 1 instead.

Question No. 1: Do you think that blah blah blah blah blah blah blah?

Let's go with "Yes."

Question No. 2: What about this other thing?

How about "No" for this one.

And so it went for eight or nine questions and way more of those "people running for some extremely important position in the government" than I ever cared to actually flick levers for.

But I was done fairly quickly and the world was apparently a better place because I did it, or so all those pro-voting campaigns claimed.

Still, I left the Bangs Center sans keychain bearing the name "Seth."

Once, at a rest stop on the Jersey Pike, I found keychains that read "Fritz," "Umberto" and "Xaviera." No joke. Now, I had been to the glorious UStore and had found "Mitzi."

Fritz. Umberto. Xaviera. Mitzi. Seth? Not a chance.

"Seth" isn't on a personalized keychain or a personalized pen or a personalized T-shirt or a personalized letter opener. Anywhere. Ever.

Oh sure, all of those people out there by the ultra common name of Mitzi would be able to sit at their desk in their "Mitzi" T-shirt, unlocking their file cabinet with keys on their "Mitzi" keychain, where they pull out a letter and open it with their "Mitzi" letter opener and respond using their "Mitzi" pen, but I – poor Seth – would be forced to do all of the aforementioned duties with regular stuff.

A day after I did my civic duty and made decisions on issues that I knew absolutely nothing about, I found out that the people who count ballots were doing so again in the state of Florida.

I guess a bunch of people in Palm Springs couldn't figure out how to vote on the ballots they had down there, my guess is that they were just irritated because nowhere on the ballot did it tell them where to get keychains with their names on them.

All these blue-haired old folks lined up to vote and, low and behold, the ballot had nothing at all to do with personalized "Ethel" or "Abraham" knick-knacks. Out of depression over the thought that they'd spend their few remaining days searching in vain for such things, the elderly citizens figured they'd try to doom the country by voting for trigger happy Pat Buchanan and whichever member of the NRA he had as a running mate.

I should have thought of that.

But no. I wander on, with the political gossip making up the wallpaper of my life – never quite grabbing my attention but always wherever I turn – following the idea that maybe, someday, I'll be able to open my car door with a key on a chain that says "Seth" on it.

Seth Koenig is a Collegian Columnist.

Write for Ed/OP

How a flood woke me to ponder my safety

BOO DOWNS

Finally, some sleep. After a long week of deadlines and a Friday night working, I settled into my bed, looking forward to a rest long deserved. My music played softly. I pulled my quilt over me, and I was on my way to dreamland. I glanced at my clock as my vision blurred, glad I made it to bed before four. That's when I heard a whooshing sound, and the fire alarm went off. As I snapped to consciousness, I looked around, disgusted. I considered staying in my room anyway, as this was probably some drunken prank. I decided to look outside my door, somewhat concerned about the strange sound I heard. As I opened my door, I was greeted with a rapidly approaching wave of water, coming from the woman's bathroom. Without thinking, I did what I could to prevent any water damage. I turned off my computer and picked up any electric devices that were lying around. I then proceeded to cover the door with my towel, and do what I could to prevent water from flooding my room. With that done, I finally got dressed, and walked down the twenty flights of stairs to the large crowd assembling outside the dorm.

The air was chilly, the wind was blowing, and there was a slight drizzle, making the largely drunk crowd restless. I imagine that few people actually knew what was really going on, but that didn't seem to matter to them, as all they wanted to do was sleep. I knew that my floormates and I were to share a different fate. As I breathlessly exited the stairwell, I looked at the floor in grim amusement. I never thought that Southwest would be so generous as to provide us a swimming pool. I entered my room, only one of three or so on the left half of the building that was visited by Saint Liquid. The other side was in far worse shape, seeping into almost all of the rooms. I personally was very fortunate for several reasons. First, my precautions blocked a lot of the water from entering. Second, the water pooled up on my roommate's side of the room, who was away for the weekend. Third, my roommate is extremely tidy, and had almost nothing on the floor. I began the long and tedious process of drying my room, making little headway. Knowing that my room spared most of the flood, relief would be sparse until the other waterlogged rooms were cleaned. As I wait for the wet-dry vac, I pass the time by writing this account, noticing that it is 5:30 a.m. I also know that it will be quite some time before I can finally get some well- deserved sleep.

This is not the first time I've been flooded out of my room. My floor was flooded freshman year, with far more serious consequences. Every room was touched by the water, and thousands of dollars were lost to water damage. Our floor spent the next seven hours salvaging stuff, cleaning, and throwing away things that were ruined. The fire was started by a cigarette butt thrown into a container in the trash room. To this day, no one knows who did it.

Could there be anything done that might have prevented it? Of course. The tragedy was caused by carelessness on the part of irresponsible students. At the same time, smoking in the rooms is prohibited, although the perpetrator certainly got away from it. Since I am not responsible for the well being or conduct of my fellow floormate, some one else is.

While my floor was being cleaned, I spoke with an off-duty RA who was helping out, even though his floor was three below us. He mentioned that he ran across several smashed bottles on the floors. He also discovered several fire extinguishers that looked tampered with. I heard another RA voice her concerns that she was handling three floors because two of the other RAs were AWOL. This uncertainty was certainly not reassuring, especially in the face of extensive property damage.

I've heard that the dorm I live in, IQA, has been called a ghetto dorm. When I saw the widespread damage on the eve of classes, I did my best to give my new home the benefit of the doubt. All I wanted from my dorm was an ethernet connection and a nice view. Living on the 20th floor with a broad view of the Valley, and a connection to the internet that didn't disconnect every three minutes, allowed me to forgive my shabby surroundings. And when people were banging and yelling down the hall at three in the morning, I didn't care. Even when I heard strange sounds right before the fire alarm went off, I did my best to ignore them. Ignoring them is one thing, actually going out of the halls is another thing. At times, I'd rather piss in my pants before venturing out into the halls during a ruckus.

Do I feel unsafe in my dorm? In all honesty, I don't spend enough time there to really feel threatened. Do I have faith in the leadership of the dorm? Although I've seen some excellent work at the hands of the RAs, I didn't meet my RA for the first time until last week. Broken bottles on the floors, strong pot odors in the air and the occasional flood disillusion me. Some people are not doing their job, and it's cutting into my dorm experience.

Do I feel safe in my dorm?

Yes, I have yet to run into any sort of confrontation.

Do I feel secure in my dorm?

After the flood threatened to destroy my possessions and kept me from getting any sleep, I begin to question my position on things.

As one of the RAs wondered about his on-duty peers making rounds, I wondered if the RAs were doing all they could to make this dorm a safe, secure place to live. While I cannot speak for any RA, given that I know little about their technical responsibilities, I do know they make nightly rounds. I also know that these people, responsible for their floors, have several fringe benefits, including housing and a small stipend, among other things. I also know the job is not all as glamour as it is advertised. However, given the constant mess of things, I've asked myself how often rounds are made, if at all. Although it is impossible to catch everyone at all times, I wonder if enough is done. We as students put a certain faith in the RAs, hired and trained by the University to serve us. When those RAs do nothing for the students, then they should be evaluated, and then treated accordingly. Perhaps more active RAs might have prevented the accident. Perhaps not. It has happened, and the rest is speculation. However, I would be far more satisfied with the outcome if I felt that attempts were made to prevent such destructive behavior.

To those RAs who make their floors a fun, safe place, I salute you. You've provided the stage where students can enjoy their home away from home. To those RAs who don't take your job seriously, remember you might become washed up to a group of your peers.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Columnist.

What I'm thankful for

KATIE LANDERS

Thanksgiving is just a short while away. It's hard to believe that such a momentous holiday is already here again. Since, oddly enough, I've been given space inside the wondrous Daily Collegian this year, I thought I would tell you what Thanksgiving means to me, and what I'm giving thanks for this year.

This isn't my favorite holiday, what with all the eating and more eating. I like food; it's just that this day is so overwhelming. There are a lot of other great things that go on, though. T-day allows a whole town to glorify high school football rivalries, and to get together for a semi-reunion. I'm not sure if anyone actually sits and watches the game, though; it's more about hugging old friends. For some crazy reason, everyone goes when there is a high chance of catching hypothermia, and of course it's a guarantee that there'll be some precipitation, this being New England and all. I've been going to the games for the last 20 Thanksgivings, but this year I just might sleep in.

In my house, we are the sponsors of the Thanksgiving dinner. This isn't so thrilling for me. A lot of work goes into the meal, but luckily I am away at school until the Wednesday before, so I don't help out too much. My whole entire family troops to my house; my Nanny, aunts, uncles, cousins, babies, etc. Somehow we all fit into my dining room that only gets used once a year on this occasion. With barely enough room to hold your fork, everyone sits around the table and inhales the turkey, along with all the good stuff on the side, like mashed potatoes and green bean casserole. The turkey skin is my favorite. Yeah, I know it's disgusting. Somehow the fourteen or so of us always forget the grace part.

In this half hour experience of dining, everyone sits around the table doing quintessential American things. You know, someone talking about what's going on in his/her life, and everyone else listening and pretending to be interested. This is Ok, though, because it only happens once a year. It is good to catch up with everyone. Dessert comes out and then the big dinner is over. This part really sucks because I always have to help cleaning up, and I really hate that. Then after that I have to go to my other grandparent's house, which is another adventure to be had. Maybe it's not so much an adventure, but it is some great feat, If you last through my Grandmother's ranting and raving about the dinner rolls she made without going into hysterics, you can make it through anything.

Now the reason I said that I disliked Thanksgiving is not because I'm ungrateful, although my mother might disagree with you. The fourth Thursday in November is just a tease to the holiday season that starts the next day, my favorite part of the year. To me, Thanksgiving just feels like a big fancy meal, because Christmas not only has the meal and presents, both giving and receiving, but happiness and good snow (sometimes), decorated trees, lights, and cards in the mail. I'm really happy when that Thursday is over, because it's officially the road to Christmas.

We have Thanksgiving because the Pilgrims settled here a few years back, and so a holiday was created. In fact, those Pilgrims landed in our great state, just down on Plymouth Rock. Since I'm grateful to those good ol' British for taking stake in our great country, I'll tell you my thanks today.

First and foremost, to get the mushy parts over, I want to thank my parents this year. They rock. They have done lots of great things for me, especially over this past year, which has definitely had its ups and downs. My mom is mad cool. My brother and sister are pretty cool too. They don't really do too much for me, but I guess I'm thankful for them too. Of course I'm not forgetting my Nanny who's the best, and my best friend Erin. OK, I've gotten through the tear jerking. You can take a moment to dry your eyes, and then read on.

Another high priority on my list is the UMass Financial Aid Office. They get lots of respect from me. I definitely dug myself a deep whole before but they helped me get right out of it. They've taught me not to wait until the last minute anymore, and if I do I have no one to blame but myself. Thanks, Financial Aid.

I'm thankful for the omelet bar the school has brought back to the Berkshire Dining Hall. For some reason it didn't come back second semester last year, and it really disappointed me. This past Saturday though I was up early enough for breakfast and was in for a nice surprise. I also really like curly fries at lunch. Keep up the good work Berkshire.

I really can't believe that the Collegian lets me write for them. [Editor's note – We can't believe it either.] By this I mean I'm thankful. Although I do get my jeers from readers, I still keep getting more space in the layout. Could you believe Sports lets me write too??

I'm thankful for Nomar Garciaparra and Jason Varitek. I need not go into explanation for this. We'll just leave it at that.

OIT hardware support is awesome. I broke my computer again this year, not too long into the semester. It took me a few weeks to drag it to Lederle, but when I finally did they had it fixed in just a day, and pretty cheap. Thanks OIT.

I'm SO thankful that the 'Subway Series' is over. Those of you from around Mass share my sentiment.

For now, I'm thankful I am not in high school anymore. I know when I'm old I'll say, "Wow, I would give anything to be back there. Youth is wasted on the young," but for now I'm pretty happy being in college. It's more fun.

I'm thankful for all that other stuff, you know, freedom, health, happiness, yadda yadda yadda, but you should already know that.

With the holidays just about here, everyone is a little happier, and I really enjoy that. So with that I would just like to wish everyone a great Thanksgiving. Stay warm and dry, try the turkey skin (it's really good), and remember all you are thankful for.

Katie Landers is a Collegian Columnist.

As November cold seeps in, hot fashion tips to improve party scene

It's starting to get cold out, and everyone is starting to stress out about the semester coming to a close. Instead of hiding out in your room every Friday night cloaked in a big UMass sweatshirt furiously trying to make sense of "Beowulf", why not take a much deserved break and throw a funky party? It will get you all psyched up to ace your finals at the end of the semester.

So most parties that you attend are B.Y.O, or pay five bucks at the door, and then everyone stands around one room, while techno and/or Dr. Dre pumps in the background. The girls all wear black stretch bootcut pants, and the guys all wear khaki cargo pants. Everyone has a good time, but why not make YOUR party one that everyone will remember for a long time? And not just because you had to break down that door at it. Parties need style and flair... it'll make it a lot more fun.

Style File WITH SHAUNA BILLINGS

Now for all you responsible of-age students who are holding parties complete with alcohol, attended only by fellow responsible of-age students, you can add theme drinks to the following parties, along with the usual fridge full of beer.

The Luau – This is a classic party on the UMass campus, coming in second on the theme party list only to every Frat house's favorite – "The Pimp and Ho Party". The Luau is a much cleaner theme, with the results being the same – girls walk around in bikinis and (sometimes!) wrap skirts, guys wear their white-sleeveless t-shirts, sometimes with a Hawaiian shirt over it. The only real difference between the Luau and the Pimp party is that, at the Luau, people justify their ensembles with plastic leis. So how can you get your place ready? Mix up lots of fruity and frozen drinks, and be sure to purchase little umbrellas. Get lots of fun spring break music, and make sure to toss some Jimmy Buffet into the mix. Get plenty of leis from a party store. If you have mad cash (i.e. don't work at the dining hall like me) get fun inflatable parrots and palm trees. If you're broke, gather tropical looking posters from friends, and cut out pictures from magazines, and put around your walls. This party is served best on a cold winters day.

Middle School Party – Oh yeah!! Bust out the Kriss Kross, 'cause we are going back to the early nineties! Been reminiscing with your friends about your glory years of grade seven? (I really hope those weren't your glory years!) Or just been laughing about how you tight rolled (or pegged, for all you non-North Shore people) your pants and sported the HyperColor T-shirts? Well imagine how much fun it will be now, when you actually understand the song lyrics and aren't afraid of the opposite sex! Middle School Parties let you be a kid again, dressed in your old style, listening to all your old favorites (Milli Vanilli?). You can even play cheesy games like Seven Minutes in Heaven and Spin the Bottle like you used to do, and if you are crushing on the girl on the other side of the room, write a note that says: "Do you like me: Check Yes/No" and send it via a friend.

MTV Music Awards – No, you don't need to hold this bash when the Awards are actually on (though with the way MTV replays everything, they probably will be aired at some point during your party). For this party, you have everyone dress as their favorite singers/bands. You can give cheesy awards for best dressed, etc., and have the whole thing hosted by an extremely lame comedic duo. Have some really crazy, and or drunk, guests perform dance and lip-synching routines throughout the night. Beware of Britney wannabes!! Make sure there is something underneath that black suit before she rips it off!!

Celebrate a decade – This can be a theme that runs over a period of Fridays, or every month. Have a party celebrating each decade, or just choose your favorite. 80's – slouch socks, Dirty Dancing and The New Kids on The Block. The possibilities are endless. 70's – I found that guys just love to wear tight pants and half buttoned shirts with big gold medallions. My green disco dress gets more wear then my black hoochie pants because I get invited to so many 70's parties! But they are a personal favorite. And, for all those who are lacking the funds to purchase alcohol, have a 20's party, when prohibition was in full effect!

Toga Parties – it's a nod back to your parent's days in college (not saying they went to school back in the days of ancient Greece!) and can be a very good time, though it kind of screams "We're having a big drunken party" when you see streams of people entering a house/room clad in white.

Seasons Party – This is for all the Martha Stewarts out there that love a good time. Have a party in which you start off at one season, and move to each of the others, having drinks and music to match. Fruity drinks and Will Smith's "Summertime" for summer months, Bailey's Irish Creams and Guinness to celebrate the Spring's St. Patrick's Day. You can have a lot of fun planning the music out, creating the drink menu and figuring out decor. But it's a big undertaking!

So have some fun with parties this winter, and worry about your term papers and exams tomorrow!

Shauna Billings is a Collegian Columnist

COURTESY JEFF BUSBY

I see a little silhouette of a man...

The Sydney Dance Company will present Air and Other Invisible Forces this Tuesday November, 14 at 7:30p.m. at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center. Tickets can be purchased by calling the box office at 545-2511.

Elliot charms Academy

The young Jamie Bell stars as Billy Elliot

BILLY ELLIOT
Directed by Stephen Daldry
With Jamie Bell, Julie Walters, and Gary Lewis
Playing at the Academy of Music Northampton

By Dave Troupes
Collegian Staff

British film has a knack for producing comedies thick with emotion, balancing authentic characters and an affecting storyline against a general lighthearted-ness and eagerness to poke the audience's funny bone. Although the results could seldom be called great filmmaking, they're always at least enjoyable.

Billy Elliot, although well-anchored in this genre, offers such excellent performances, seriousness of subject matter, and emotional gratification as to propel it to the front of its pack. "feel-good" might apply, but it wouldn't reflect the film's maturity and usefulness as social commentary.

The young Jamie Bell stars as Billy Elliot, a British boy who stumbles upon a love for ballet when the after-school boxing program he's enrolled in has to share a gymnasium with a ballet class. Billy's mother died when he was very young, and he lives with his father and older brother, both of whom are involved in a coal miners' strike. As the family's financial situation continues to tighten, tensions grow dangerously volatile, fueled by the emotional isolation of Billy's father and the head-butting of father and son over how the strike ought to be conducted.

Billy's growing dedication to ballet provides a much-needed escape from his troubled home life, but when his father discovers that he's abandoned boxing for dancing, he forbids the pursuit. Such generational conflicts are at the core of what Billy Elliot has to say about childhood, and one's ability to find happiness amid a life of suffocating drudgery. this boy's discovery of a passion for something beyond what his father understands or approves of, and what his town can support, and his struggle to maintain that passion amid the self-doubt and defensiveness natural to any child in Billy's position, drives most of the movie, illustrated by sequences of Billy dancing violently down streets and alleys, throwing himself against walls and pounding on gates.

Were not this passion easily apparent, Billy Elliot could have easily failed, but Jamie Bell proves himself an outstanding actor with sincerity, subtlty and a range of emotions beyond his age. Gary Lewis as Billy's father gives an excellent performance as well, communicating the years of aimless anger he's suffered because of his wife's death and his insecurities as a father.

Billy Elliot also takes the time to comment on the purtis of childhood friendships, weighing this against a dispelling of the innocence of childhood For instance, we listen to Billy's ballet classmate Debbie (Nicola Blackwell), the daughter of the instructor, talk about how her parents don't think she knows about their adulteries and the emotional dissolution of their marriage, and we hear Billy's closest friend, Michael (Stuart Wells) admit his homosexuality, again bringing to the movie's forefront the idea that children have desires and emotions and understandings beyond that which their parents may understand (or want to understand).

All of this emotional headiness is flavored with effective (and never intrusive) bits of comedy, and although the transition from scene to scene may be jarring at times, it's only as an illustration of how fleeting but necessary any escape from the dreariness of adult life is. It comes as no surprise that Billy Elliot has won an assortment of international awards.

And you thought one vote didn't make a difference.

www.alltrue.com
watch
Alltrue
Watch thousands of killer video clips at www.alltrue.com
made you look

We can give you the opportunity to change the world.
GENUITY
903 Campus Center
Tuesday, November 14
6:00pm-8:00pm
Genuity offers an exceptional salary and benefits package, as well as an intellectually charged, creative environment with an outstanding opportunity for professional growth.
For a complete listing of employment opportunities, please visit us at www.genuity.com. Please forward resumes to: college@genuity.com, or Genuity, Attn: University Relations, 150 Cambridge Park Drive, 9D, Cambridge, MA 02140 or Fax: (617) 873-5676.
Diversity gives us the strength to lead. Equal Opportunity Employer M/F/D/V.
Genuity is the leading Network Services Provider for businesses changing the world. Genuity is the only company in the industry to offer a Network Services Platform (NSP) that combines a Tier 1 network with a full portfolio of managed Internet services, including dedicated, remote and broadband access, Web hosting and Internet security, to create a platform for creating scalable and repeatable managed eBusiness solutions. With 1999 revenues of $706 million, Genuity (NASDAQ: GENU) is a global company with offices and partnerships throughout the U.S., Europe, Asia and Latin America.
You can do anything with a Black Rocket
The world's first Network Services Platform

Showtime series set in different place; diverse program in PA

By Jenn Heinold
Pennsylvania State University

(U-WIRE) You will never guess where one of [illegible] most controversial dramatic series on network television takes place. It's not set in NY. LA isn't seeing any [illegible]

When the creators of Showtime's "Queer As Folk" chose a location for the series which debuts on Dec. 3, they picked a city just three hours west of Penn State College. A Showtime Executive Producer Tom Jonas said was a "micro-cosm of the way that America seems to work" Pittsburgh.

Jonas said the series is set in Pittsburgh because of the history of the city and the predominantly working class [illegible] but said the series production takes place in Toronto, Canada, to curb production costs.

Based on Britain's series of the same name, "Queer As Folk" focuses on the relationships, careers, loves and [illegible] in the lives of a group of gay men and lesbians. "It's really a drama as well as a comedy," said Jonas, who attributes the successful mix of genres to the series' writers – Ron Cowell and Daniel Lipman, creators and writers for the series Sisters.

"It [the show] will feel different in nature because you'll find yourself laughing while at the same time, it knocks the wind out of you," Jonas said.

Peter Paige, who plays Emmett, "the gayest and most outrageous" of the lead characters agreed. "You've never seen anything like it," he said.

"It's very edgy. Very out-there, but that's what's so exciting," Paige said. "It's a little dirty – but in a good way."

"Some people call it the sexiest show on television," Jonas conceded, adding that the show deals with gay and lesbian sexuality as it has never been dealt with before on network and cable. Jonas said that due to the adult themes, few actors were willing to take parts in the series. Paige said his manager advised him not to do the show, but because of a gut instinct he had after reading the script, he decided to join the cast.

"I feel that the only power we have as actors is to go with our guts," Paige said. "I couldn't pass up this opportunity for some myth in the future."

Paige said he does fear being typecast after taking this role as a gay man, but added, "I've played plenty of straight roles before and I plan to play them again." Jonas said some of the controversy that surrounds the series, which he says is a testament to cable and what it can do, lies in the fact that gay sexuality has never been dealt with before in network television.

With the exception of Sharon Gless, formerly of "Cagney and Lacey" and Hal Sparks, formerly of E!'s "Talk Soup," the ensemble cast includes mostly newcomers. Paige, Gale Harold, Randy Harrison, Scott Lowell, Thea Gill and Michelle Clunie.

Last week, the cast completed shooting their tenth episode of "Queer," which has a 22-episode contract. Paige said there have been amazing experiences on the set throughout shooting. "Anytime the seven leads are in one room, there is this great electricity," Paige said. "I feel so fortunate, so blessed, so fing privileged."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Brian Smith is flagged down for pass interference as he and Hen halfback Craig Cummings come in for a crash landing in the UMass endzone.

COURTESY RON BATZDORF
To all the Whos in Whoville
The wait is almost over for the most anticipated film of the year. Ron Howard's The Grinch Who Stole Christmas opens this Friday. Check out our huge preview in this Thursday's Arts cover story.

WHERE DO WE GO TONIGHT?
CLUB 21
21 PLUS TRIVIA / DANCE PARTY WITH
D.J. MATT
Filmore
DRINK SPECIALS
Every Monday Night
9:30-Closing
GIVEAWAYS CONTESTS
ALL NIGHT MENU
5 TVs
CLUB 21 ROUTE 21 BELCHERTOWN, MA. 323-4117

■ lost

continued from page 7

blitz on third and 8. Lucero showed tremendous poise on the ensuing drive, stepping up in the pocket to strongarm a duck to Eric Brass on third and 13 and then scrambling for 25 more yards down to the Hen 28 on the next play.

The riflemen capped off the drive with a 6-yard scoring strike to fullback Pete Cariello.

The Hens then went 3-and-out to once again give UMass the ball, and another White field goal staked the Minutemen to a 13-7 lead. The key to that drive was a 30-yard Marcel Shipp rush on which the All-American shunned no less than six would-be tacklers.

UMass would hit the locker room at halftime with a possession advantage of 12:44 and 144 more yards of total offense than UD.

The opening drive of the second half was all Hens, as Cummings and company carried the ball on 11-of-12 plays and amassed 78 yards on their way to the UMass endzone. The senior finished off the series with a 2-yard plunge around the right tackle to hand the Hens back the lead.

The two teams traded punts before a strange series of events around the 2:53 mark of the third quarter. The Minuteman ran a solid reverse with DeShon Hardy, but the junior fumbled away the football at the Delaware 47. On the very next play from scrimmage, Cummings stopped short of the line of scrimmage on a sweep right and tried to shot-put the ball to teammate Brett Veach, instead finding the arms of Smith.

The home team failed to capitalize on the halfback option-turned-interception, however, and instead settled for a coffin-corner from punter David Sanger that bounced out of bounds at the Delaware one.

UMass' next possession was essentially when the wheels came off. On the drive's first play, Shipp was leveled by UD's Darrell Edmonds on the left side for a loss of two. The Minutemen then tried going to wideout Jeff Howard with a swing pass to the right, but Edmonds again sniffed it out and planted the senior after only a 2-yard gain. Lucero's next throw may have been the most costly of his career so far, as it went straight into the chest of Delaware's Brian McKenna at the UMass 51.

"I don't want to take anything away from their quarterback, but he threw the ball right at me," said McKenna, who was a game-time decision with a nagging groin injury. "There's nothing wrong with my hands."

The Hens made the most of their luck by covering the remaining distance to the UMass zone in a mere three plays. The Minuteman D had appeared to stymie Nagy and company when the QB's third down toss into the endzone fell incomplete, but the officials saw otherwise and awarded UD another controversial call, pass interference.

"I was definitely surprised to see a flag," said Smith, who was defending intended target Cummings on the questionable play. "I was playing the ball the whole way, and I didn't think I made contact with him."

"That swing really hurt us," Whipple said. "[Smith] doesn't touch their kid, he goes up and tips the ball and they call it pass interference."

UD's Antawn Jenkins made the swing hurt for the home team, scampering in from five yards out to finish the drive. Hen kicker Scott Collins tacked on some insurance points 5:34 later via a 19-yard field goal to make it 24-13.

Lucero would lead a valiant charge back in the game's closing minutes, orchestrating a seven play, 43-yard march that culminated in a Shipp 1-yard TD lunge. All hopes for a comeback were dashed, however, when Delaware's Dominic Banks took Lucero's third interception of the game back 27 yards to tally the Hens' final points.

Afterward, Whipple questioned how to motivate his team in the face of a loss that hinged more on penalty flags than the game itself.

"That [ineligible receiver] call alone was the worst call I've ever seen in all my days as a coach," Whipple said. "Now I've just got to find a way to get my kids back up for this last game."

■ halves

continued from page 10

again found themselves within striking distance, this time inside the red zone. After chances on first and second down went for naught, Lucero dropped back and spotted Howard running a slant across the middle. The quarterback lofted a perfect touch pass into his receiver's hands but Howard fumbled it for what would have been a sure six. Again, UMass had to settle for a field goal. Once again, a missed opportunity.

Perhaps the most costly mistake by the Maroon and White came after a Delaware turnover on the ensuing possession. The fumble was recovered by the Minutemen on the visitor's own 31 yard line. With a 13-7 lead at this point, the home squad seemingly had a chance to lock this game up before halftime. Alas, another scoring chance went for naught as a delay of game penalty, a personal foul, a quarterback sack and an incomplete prayer downfield led to a demoralizing end as UMass continued to look that gift horse straight in the chops.

Escaping the first half unscathed, the Hens came out pumped as the second half opened and proceeded to run roughshod over the Maroon and White defense. Delaware turned a negative eight-yard rushing performance in the first into a 149-yard thrashing of the UMass front seven in the second.

The Hens used a balanced ground game and a variety of running plays to confuse the defense and move the ball consistently.

Delaware Coach Tubby Raymond said in the post game press conference, "In the second half we realized we could run the ball."

The Hens did just that as Coach Raymond ran halfback Craig Cummings on numerous speed sweeps for good yardage. He continued to keep the UMass linebackers honest by pushing power backs James O'Neal and Antawn Jenkins between the tackles. Jenkins, who is 6'2", 225 lbs, punished the Maroon and White line while O'Neal used his 5'10", 210 lb frame and low center of gravity to break tackles and gain positive yardage on almost every run. The two power runners combined for 114 yards and a score with Jenkins rushing for almost seven yards a carry.

The Hens were able to win the time of possession battle, as well as the turnover ratio in the second half. UMass committed three turnovers in the second, two interceptions and a fumble, as opposed to one in the first. They were only able to hold the ball for a little over 13 minutes in the second as compared to almost 22 minutes in the opening frame.

It was really a tale of two halves, a sentiment echoed by Shipp. "In the first half we did a pretty good job, but in the second half things just didn't happen for us."

A ball control offense and an aggressive defense went into the home locker room after 30 minutes, while a mistake prone attack and a complacent defense emerged for the most important half of play in the 2000 campaign.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Coach Mark Whipple painfully ponders an effective method of stopping Delaware's high flying Wing-T offense.

■ hoops

continued from page 10

practices; he's just playing too tentatively right now," Flint said. "He just needs to get out of his funk."

A Crooks trey put the Minutemen back on top briefly, but Rhymer's fourth personal put Thomas on the charity stripe where he converted two free throws while Flint fumed.

"They shot 32 foul shots, and we only shot 11," Flint said. "When you foul that way, you don't make them work on the other end. It's tough to win games that way."

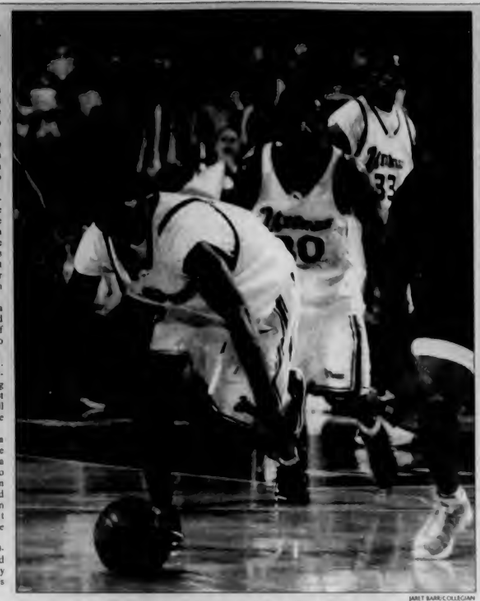
Instead of folding under the constant barrage of whistles, the Minutemen bucked up and retook the lead behind some inspired play from their frontcourt. Rogers crashed the boards hard to follow up his own miss at the 15:31 mark, then fought through traffic 13 seconds later for another close quarters hoop to push UMass to a 49-46 edge.

The junior jumpman scored a team-high 18 points on the night, and drew perhaps the biggest applause of the evening after sliding hard into press row trying to save a loose ball.

"The kid plays hard," Flint said. "You see him out there hustling, diving on the floor. That was something that was missing a little bit in the first game. Tonight, we had guys diving all over the place, keeping the ball alive and getting a lot of second efforts."

A wicked slash from Smith and a rousing dunk from Brand brought the crowd to a boiling point, and DePina kept things hot with a driving dish to Crooks for a couple and a three from the left elbow. The senior put up solid all-around numbers (11 points, seven rebounds, six assists and three steals) in a team-high 35 minutes on the floor.

Statmaster got within three at 70-67 with 3:44 left to play, but would get no closer. Four-straight points by Crooks and a pair of short range pails from Rhymer sealed up the win.



JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN
Minuteman Ronell Blizzard works to corral a loose ball in UMass' 82-71 win over Statmaster.com.

Big guys step it up and deliver victory

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Last year it was a weakness. Against the California All-Stars it cost the team the game. But hope for the remainder of the season came this past Friday at the William D. Mullins Center, when the rebounding of the Massachusetts men's basketball team proved to be the one thing that separated it from the competition.

If it hadn't been for the 53-32 advantage that the Minutemen were able to garner on the boards, than in all probability they would not have been able to pull out the 82-71 victory over the Statmaster.com All-Star team. Considering that an 0-2 exhibition record would not speak well for the season to come, it was an important win for the team's confidence going into next Saturday's season opening game at home against Iona.

"If we didn't get all of those second chances on the offensive end than we probably wouldn't have won the game," said senior tri-captain Winston Smith.

"We talked about rebounding before the game," added Head Coach Bruiser Flint. "Guys were being more aggressive and we got a lot of rebounds. Our problem was that we didn't get any fouls off the rebounds. They shot 32 foul shots and we only shot 11."

However, instead of scoring from the line, where it was only 5-11 anyway, the Maroon and White concentrated on cleaning up the defensive glass. And nobody exemplified this more than newcomer Jackie Rogers, who turned six offensive rebounds into the majority of his game high 18 points off of put-backs.

"Jackie did a nice job of filling Chris' void," said Smith in reference to last year's second leading scorer and newly graduated forward Chris Kirkland. "That is key for us. I think we are going to be really good this year if we keep battling hard."

Rogers was also not the only player battling in the paint on the offensive end for UMass. Kitwana Rhymer, Micah Brand, Smith and even 5'9" point guard Jonathan DePina hauled down two offensive boards apiece, on the way to 21 team offensive rebounds on the night.

But as good as the offensive rebounding was, the defensive rebounding might have been even better. For Flint and the rest of the coaching staff, a must have been a relief to see their team controlling the paint on the defensive end, especially since last year's main weakness could have been keeping the other team off the glass.

Of course, recruiting the 6'8" Rogers and his equally tall counterpart Eric Williams, to go along with the 6'10" Rhymer and 6'11" Brand certainly was expected to be a move that helped the rebounding of the Maroon and White.

And in the Statmaster.com game, Williams lived up to the hype by grabbing just about everything that bounced off the Statmaster rim. In only 14 minutes of play, he hauled down 10 rebounds before injuring his ankle midway through the second half. After the game, though, Flint assured the media that it was a minor injury and that Williams would be more than ready for the Iona game.

Rhymer, DePina and Ronell Blizzard also got into the act on the defensive end, snaring five board+ apiece on the opposing end of the court.

"The big guys played very well this week," said Flint. "Eric [Williams] did a great job rebounding the ball and Kit did a good job when he was out there."

Due to foul trouble, however, Rhymer was only able to take the floor for 11 minutes throughout the game.

Now, as the regular season approaches, it remains to be seen whether the Minutemen can consistently duplicate Friday's performance. If the Statmaster game is going to be a sign for anything to come, it will be that this year's UMass squad will not be as easy to push around.

Huskies can't stay afloat

Minutewomen push winning streak to four

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Undefeated with ease, a statement that can easily describe the Massachusetts swimming and diving team.

The Minutewomen improved their record to 4-0 with a defeat of the Northeastern Huskies on Saturday, capturing 10 of the 16 overall events in their most contested victory of the season.

With the win at Joseph R. Rogers Jr. pool, the Maroon and White now move to one game above .500 in 19 all-time match ups against the Huskies.

Junior Anne Dettloff from Barrington, Illinois won two events en route to a 156-144 win for the Minutewomen. The 12-point win was UMass' slimmest victory of the season. Prior to Saturday, Central Connecticut State was the closest to knocking off the Maroon and White, coming within 25 points in a 151-126 UMass win on November 4th.

Centerville native Christen Dexter also came away with two victories, as did junior Becky Hunnewell, who hails from Sandwich, MA.

Dettloff, who holds the school record for the 1,000-yard freestyle, won both the 500-yard freestyle with a time of 5:06.48, and the 1,000-yard freestyle in 10:38.72.

Dexter, a freshman, won the 100-yard breaststroke and the 200-yard breaststroke in times of 1:07.53 and 2:25.42 respectively.

Hunnewell was victorious in the 200-yard backstroke with a time of 2:07.98, a little over one second slower than her personal record of 2:06.48. She also came away with the win in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:10.99.

Lauren Rowell from Hamburg, New York also stepped for the Minutewomen over the weekend. The freshman captured the 100-yard backstroke in 1:00.37.

Another New York native, Andre Kazanjian, captured the 100-yard freestyle. Kazanjian, who is a member of three school-record relay teams, 1200-yard freestyle, 200-yard medley, 400-yard medley) won her race in 53.58.

Molly Buckley was also victorious, as she posted a time of 24.54 in the 50-yard freestyle race.

Lizzy Boyle , a sophomore from Darien, Connecticut, teamed with Rowell, Kazanjian and Buckley for the 200-yard medley relay. The UMass squad won the race, finishing with a time of 1:49.94.

History was made in Amherst on Saturday, unfortunately, the home squad didn't do the writing. Instead, it was the Huskies who gave the history lesson.

Northeastern's 400-yard freestyle relay set a Joseph R. Rogers Jr. pool record. The team of Jesse Coxson, Kelly Colburn, Jill Vance and Jennifer Bradley finished with a time of 3:55.80.

The visitor's Emily White also set a new Rogers pool mark in the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 58.40.

The Minutewomen will look to extend their winning streak to five games, as they travel to Jamaica, New York to take on St. John's. UMass will aim to quiet the Red Storm next Saturday, November 18th at 1:00 p.m.

Last season on November 20th the Maroon and White dominated the Red Storm at home. UMass won the match by 56 points in a 138-82 thrashing.

Kazanjian and Dettloff both had record setting days as they competed in the 400-yard medley relay. The UMass squad won that race in a record setting time of 4:01.54.

To repeat the same feat as last year, the Minutewomen will rely heavily on veterans Kazanjian and Dettloff to lead a young and talented team.

From any standpoint, SIU should not pose much of a problem for the Maroon and White, but UMass needs to prove that they can handily beat the lesser teams, especially with Syracuse and Connecticut waiting in the wings in the next two weeks.

Syracuse absolutely owned the Minutewomen last year in a 216-127 victory in New York. UConn also defeated UMass the following week in a closely contested 137-106 contest.

Ironically, the Maroon and White went into those matches undefeated, which is exactly what they will be if the Minutewomen hold form against the Red Storm in Jamaica, New York.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Ball and chain
Delaware's Dan Mulhern drags down UMass field general Richard Lucero on one of the QB's second-half scrambles.

Read Collegian Sports. Period.

Sponsored by University Health Services
Fall 2000
Eating Disorder Programs
• Eating Disorder Assessment Program
For individuals - with Nutritionists, Mental Health Clinician, Physician and/or Nurse Practitioner. - - Confidentiality Assured.
Call 577-5314, General Medicine 2
• Eating Disorder Informational Sessions
Facilitated by a UHS Nutritionist, these drop in sessions will include a video and discussion about eating disorders, where to go for help and learn how to help a friend. Registration is not required for these sessions that will meet 4:00 - 5:30 P.M. on Sept. 13, Oct. 16, Nov. 15, and Dec. 11 in room 302 at University Health Services.
• Residence Hall Workshops
Body Image and Understanding Eating Disorders Workshops are available upon request. Contact your Resident Assistant to schedule a workshop.

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY OF PARIS
Two 5-week Summer Sessions
Session I: June 3-July 5
Session II: July 9-Aug. 10
Over 100 Courses
French Immersion
Other Special Programs
Tel: (33/1) 40 62 06 14
Fax: (33/1) 40 62 07 17
or in NY (212) 983-1414
summer@aup.fr
www.aup.edu
Summer in Paris 2001

The School for International Training
&
The International Language Institute of MA offer:
ESOL TEACHER CERTIFICATE COURSE
(SIT TESOL Certificate)
Jan 2-26, 2001
or 4 weekends between
Jan. 13 & April 16, 2001
at ILI, In downtown Northampton
SPACES LIMITED!
For info call: (413) 586-7569 or visit our website: www.languageschoolusa.org

Anniversary Sale Week
November 15th - 19th
Enter to Win a Zanna
$1000 Shopping Spree
Two $250 Shopping Sprees
Our 1998 winner was UMASS Student Suzanne Schmuul, Class of 2000.
This year it could be YOU!
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OFFcampus Antics Find Deanna with the magic martini clock on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Are You Sick of the Dorms? Take our Lease! 2 Bdrm, $830/month. w/heat. On Bus line Call John or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

Ready 4 Ski Season 93 Isuzu Trooper 5spd, 4x4, 4dr, AC, excellent condition. 74k. $7700 413-323-6565

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

96 Suzuki Sidekick exc condition. New tires, Tune-up, 50k, 5sp, $7500 obo Dana 253-0540

1991 VW Passat 5spd, CD player, sun roof, spoiler. Must sell $2695 obo 546-3114

99 Saturn SL manual, air, 25,500mi, Yakima Rack $9500, 545-1998

AUTO FOR SALE

91 Pontiac Firebird 126k miles. Power windows/locks. T-tops. New tires. 413-789-1149

89 Volvo Stationwagon. Mechanically. runs absolutely mint! Body: Tan, no rust, very solid. Loaded: AC, sunroof, leather, etc. Milage 181k, 4 new snow tires included, family owned, dealer maintained. (Book value $6060) asking $5700 or B/O Jim (413) 628-4789

EMPLOYMENT

Paid Business Internship Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered. For info and application Go to http://www.jablon.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Mail Boxes Ect. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Center, Amherst)

EMPLOYMENT

HUMAN SERVICES - Want to make a difference in someone's life? Permanent and relief positions available to support individual in their home. Be a mentor, share your interests and support theirs. Call (413) 323-9174 to start the application process. AA/EOE

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

EMPLOYMENT

NURSING STUDENTS: Pick up some home care experience and earn some extra cash. Work as an Aide for our patients in the Amherst/Northampton area. Various days and hours available. Call today. Interim HealthCare, 586-7365

Attention! Work from home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

CATCH BEERPONG FEVER. BABY WE GOT YOUR TABLE DON'T YOU WORRY. 549-5950 ASK FOR CHAD FREE DELIVERY, CUSTOMIZED TO YOUR LIKING GOD AND THE BABY JESUS, CALL US

FOR SALE

Comfort Plus! Authentic Surgical Scrubs. Wear them to bed or wear them to class! Check out our website at www.authenticsrubs.com

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL DISTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom open in large house. Cheap Rent! 2min walk from campus. Available Jan. 1st, call Laura 549-5383

ROOMMATE WANTED

Wanted to Share 2 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. Start Jan 1 Call Beth 665-8572

ROOMMATE WANTED

Three Girls On Main Street need Roommate for Spring. Call 256-3816

Two Girls Looking for roommate in 3 bedroom Pufton Apt. Avail Jan/01. Call 549-4017

To share Apt. with 3 other roommates for Spring 2001. Summer option available. Cheap rent! Great location! Please call 549-5570

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES

Want Academic Success? Want to take professional notes and pass exams? Get the academic guide to success! For more information send SASE to: TDS, P.O. Box 225 Sunderland, MA 01375

Calculus Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

What are you waiting for??

Get your Ads in NOW before it is too late!!

Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSCN Bulletin Board
3 - CBS 3 Springfield
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC 40 Springfield
6 - UPN 57 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - UPN 40 Hartford
9 - HSCN New Movie Channel
11 - NBC 30 New Haven
13 - Fox 61 Hartford
14 - UPN 24 Hartford
15 - NBC 26 Springfield
16 - Instructional Channel
17 - WMFP (Academic Channel)
18 - WB 20 New Haven
19 - Cable
21 - UHF2
23 - UPN TV (Student Channel)
24 - Weather Channel
25 - Shows on Cable
27 - Sports
28 - CNN 1
29 - CNN Headline News
30 - Lifetime
31 - USA
32 - TBS
33 - TNT
34 - MTV
35 - Nickelodeon
36 - Nick at Nite
38 - TV Land
39 - Comedy Central
40 - BET
41 - Discovery
42 - Disney
43 - Cartoon Network
44 - Nick at Nite
45 - TV Land
46 - Comedy Central
47 - BET
48 - Discovery
49 - Showtime Basic Package
50 - College TV Network
51 - MTV2
52 - MTV3
53 - VH1
54 - The Learning Channel

USA DAILY COLLEGIAN NOVEMBER 13, 2000 - NOVEMBER 19, 2000 GRID #1 01AMHERS.DAT

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 13, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Antiques Roadshow		American Experience "Return With Honor" (N) (In Stereo)		Wasps and Witches (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "For Love" (N)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear	Raymond	Becker (N)	Family Law "For Love" (N)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	20/20 Downtown		NFL Football: Oakland Raiders at Denver Broncos. (In Stereo Live)
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	7th Heaven "Bye" (In Stereo)		Roswell "Wipeout" (In Stereo)		News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	"In the Beginning..." (2000, Drama) Martin Landau,		Third Watch "After Hours"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "I Love You"			Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood		"In the Beginning..." (2000, Drama) Martin Landau,		Third Watch "After Hours"		News			Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends		"In the Beginning..." (2000, Drama) Martin Landau,		Third Watch "After Hours"		News		Friends	Fraser
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!		"In the Beginning..." (2000, Drama) Martin Landau,		Third Watch "After Hours"		News		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer			Antiques Roadshow		American Experience "Return With Honor" (N) (In Stereo)		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	26	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier		20/20 Downtown		NFL Football: Oakland Raiders at Denver Broncos. (In Stereo Live)
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier		Moesha (N)	Parkers (N)	Hughleys	Girlfriends	Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince		"Ghost" (1990, Fantasy) Patrick Swayze, Demi Moore						"Dirty Dancing" (1987)
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Competence"			Biography: Randy Travis		City Confidential		Investigative Reports (N)		Law & Order "Profile"
CNN	29	22	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour	(N)		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	28	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show		Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	Com.-Presents	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Great Bears		Wild Discovery: Polar Bears			Riddle of the Desert Mummies		Tomb of the Warrior Prince (N)		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		2-Minute Drill	Monday Night		Countdown (N)		Figure Skating: Skate Canada International.					ESPNews
LIFE	45		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait			Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Childhood Sweetheart?" (1997, Drama) Melissa Gilbert.		Golden Girls		Golden Girls
MTV	33		Making-Video	Jim Carrey Uncensored				TRL (In Stereo)		Direct Effect (In Stereo)		True Life	Jackass	Truth (N)	Macy Grey (N)
NICK	43		Hey Arnold!	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats		Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	I Love Lucy	3's Company	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	46		Sliders "Xmas Story"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)			Invisible Man (In Stereo)		Farscape		Lexx: The Series "Luxliner"		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	49	24	Andy Griffith Retrospective		48 Hours "Hoping for a Miracle"			Code Blue: Sweet Charity		Police, Camera, Action!		Police Force: Stemming		Code Blue: Sweet Charity
TNT	50		ER (In Stereo)		Pretender "Homerism"			WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo)				Bull "One Night in Bangkok"		Pretender "Bazooka Jerod"
USA	30		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG (In Stereo) Part 1 of 2			Nash Bridges "Superstition"		"Tommy Boy" (1995, Comedy) Chris Farley, (In Stereo)		Martin		Martin
HBO	37		4:30		"Police Academy 4: Citizens on Patrol" (1987)			"Like Placid" (1999) Bill Pullman,				"Another Day in Paradise" (1999, Drama)		Charlie's Angl	"Substitute 4"
MAX	39		(5:30) "The Last of the Mohicans" (1992)		"Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt, Edward Norton, (In Stereo)							"Analyze That" (1999) Robert De Niro,		"Teach Me"
SHOW	35		"Pressure Point" (1995, Suspense) Sleve Railsback,					"Nothing Hill" (1999, Romance) Julia Roberts,				Resurrection Blvd. "Mascaras"		"Jeffrey" (1995)

Dibbert By Scott Adams

YOUR OFFICE IS TOO FAR FROM THE EXECUTIVE OFFICES
IT IS?
THEY ARE ACTIVELY FORGETTING YOUR NAME EVEN AS WE SPEAK. IT'S GOING...GOING...
GONE!
CAROL. WE HAVE TO MOVE MY OFFICE!
HAVE WE MET?

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

WHAT'S ALEX DOING ONLINE SO EARLY?
LOOKING FOR INVENTORY. MY VULTURE.COM HAS BROUGHT OUT HER IN HER SEARCH ENGINE
SHE'S BEEN SPENDING EVERY WAKING MOMENT SCOURING THE NET FOR OVERSTOCK FROM E-COMMERCE SITES IN DISTRESS
DAD! $1,000 LEATHER SHOWER CURTAINS!
PHASE SO TO SCHOOL ALEX

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

A-HA! YOU'RE NOT THE ONLY ONE WHO HAS A FANCY DIGITAL ORGANIZER! FEAST YOUR EYES ON MY NEW TOOL!
THAT'S SATCHEL'S OLD GAMEBOY, MAN.
I SEE. WELL THAT EXPLAINS WHY IT WAS TRYING TO BLOW ME UP AS I WAS ENTERING MY DATA

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY HAS HIS COSTUME ON!
HOWDY
HA HA! NICE! WHAT MADE YOU WANT TO BE A COWBOY?
WELL, IT WAS EITHER THIS OR A FIREMAN, AND THEN I REMEMBERED THAT COWBOYS GET TO PUNCH DOGGIES.
OK. NOT SO NICE
DO COWBOYS REALLY DO THAT FOR DO THEY REALLY?

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

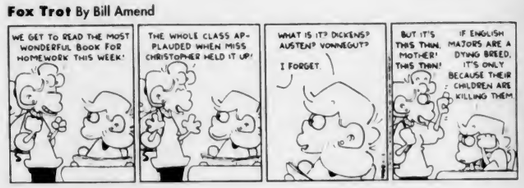
A COURSE IT'S REAL!
YOU THINK?
BLAM! BLAM! AHHHHAHH!!!
IT'S ONE OF THEM NEW REALITY SHOWS.
ZING! BOOM!
THIS IS FUN.
AND THE RECLINED SHALL LEAD THE RECLINED AND BOTH SHALL FALL INTO A DITCH.

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

Buutercup Festival By Elliott G. Garbauskas

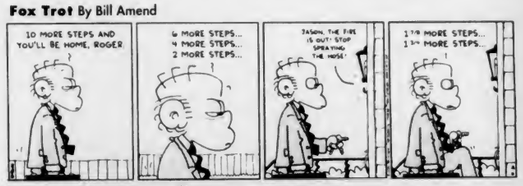
I CRAWLED INTO MY GOUA THIS MORNING
YOU EAT SOUP FOR BREAKFAST!
I FELL OUT OF A PLAIN THIS MORNING
YOU MEAN "PLANE"?
I AM NOT MALEM JUEL OSMENT.
PILE OF DIRT

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



WE GET TO READ THE MOST WONDERFUL BOOK FOR HOMEWORK THIS WEEK!
THE WHOLE CLASS APPLAUDED WHEN MISS CHRISTOPHER HELD IT UP!
WHAT IS IT? DICKENS? AUSTEN? VONNEGUT?
I FORGET.
BUT IT'S THIN, MOTHER! THIS THIN!
IF ENGLISH MAJORS ARE A DYING BREED, IT'S ONLY BECAUSE THEIR CHILDREN ARE KILLING THEM

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



10 MORE STEPS AND YOU'LL BE HOME, ROGER.
6 MORE STEPS... 4 MORE STEPS... 2 MORE STEPS...
JASON, THE FIRE IS OUT! STOP SPRAYING THE HOSE!
179 MORE STEPS... 134 MORE STEPS...

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – No one can say that you've been building castles in the air at this time. Your dreams enjoy a strong and stable foundation in reality.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You can expect to have more excitement today than you had planned. You may not be able to prepare yourself for it in any special way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – You are likely to find yourself indebted to someone who has in the past developed a history of asking too much, too often. Deal with it!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Your energy cycle is high at this time, and you don't want to let an important opportunity slip through your fingers. Act now!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Now is not the time to lurk about in the background. Today, your role will bring you to the forefront, and demand that you dig deep for inspiration.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – An early start today is meant to give you an advantage. Use this time as efficiently as possible, or you may find yourself missing out.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – The role you play is likely to be quite significant today, though you may not be front and center at all times.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You may have been rushing about without a care for anyone else but yourself in recent days or weeks. Now is the time to embrace somebody.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your romantic nature is sure to rise to the surface today. You'll enjoy the opportunity to let your feelings ride roughshod over your intellect.

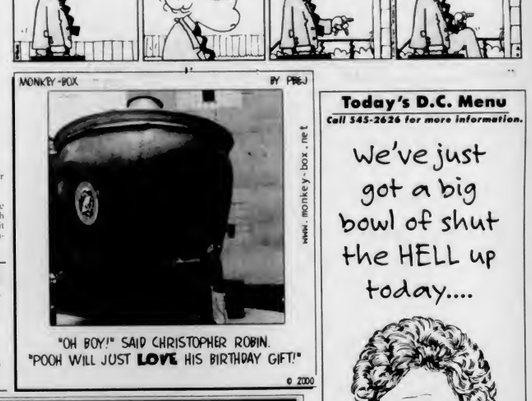
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You'll be feeling the need to liberate yourself in some sense, and the temptation to break free of family responsibilities will be great today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You may be coming dangerously close to fooling yourself about something that is more important to you than you know. Hear the wake-up call!

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22) – A false start may leave you struggling to catch up later in the day, but you have what it takes to make your efforts pay off doubly by day's end.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 54 LOW: 40	HIGH: 48 LOW: 34	HIGH: 45 LOW: 27



Quote of the Day

"It's often easier to give advice than it is for a person to lead's one's own life."

--Guru

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

We've just got a big bowl of shut the HELL up today....

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Margie Smelkinson, Soren Nash

YOUR AD could be here!

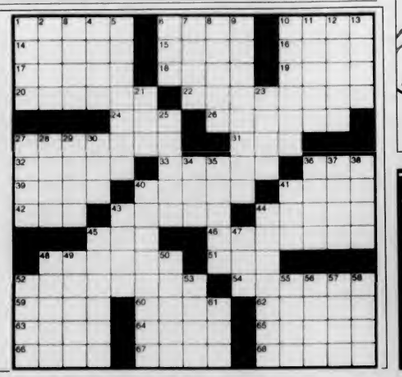
28,000 Readership

Call 545-3500 for details.

ACROSS
1 It's seperated from the wheel
6 Cateneaut
10 Designer Cassini
14 Proportion
15 Lilion ingredient
16 Butterfly stage
17 Wedding-vow site
18 Tiny Tim's pudding
19 Oklahoma town
21 Vy a verb?
22 Reference books
24 Over and over
26 Eating spots
27 Philadelphia bell
31 Drowse
32 Barkin of Hms
33 Rule
34 "How grosel"
36 Close by
40 Gate fasteners
41 Neighborhood
42 Volcano's dust
43 Toy airplane material
44 Church instrument
45 Broadcast
46 Gelatinous
48 More hackneyed
51 Deborah's 1996 co-star
52 Medieval weapon
54 Jeweled headdresses
58 Marsh bird
60 "C — cat"
62 Build
63 Between gigs
64 Theater
66 Starlite
68 Harry's love
67 Pyrelis locale
68 Hurled

DOWN
1 Jagged rock
2 Sound in body
3 Envelope add
4 Decree
5 Nearly hopeless
6 Jabber
7 Mexican pot
8 Was willing
9 Accident-prone rodents?
10 Became accessible
11 Of the moon
12 Heroic tales
13 Roams around
21 Salamander
23 Auth. unknown
25 Alpine region
27 Home of jazz
28 Serve sights
29 Dull
30 "Ballad" finish
34 Chicago trains
35 Venice's country
37 Paraphernalia
38 — Christian Andersen
40 Kind of rider
41 Craft or skill
43 Scrape
44 Slickest
45 Supermarket sections
47 Absent
48 Beiber
49 Mutilates the easter
50 Gymnast's stickum
52 Nursery furniture
53 Port or sherry
56 Curved entrance
56 Bring up
57 Unit of land
58 Colors
59 slowly
61 Born

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, November 13, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Flags fly over UMass' lost season

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Games shouldn't be decided like this. Seasons shouldn't end like this. Dreams shouldn't die like this.

But for the Massachusetts football team, the future has been reduced to the regular season finale at Rhode Island next weekend. Any hopes of a postseason berth were dashed Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, when the Minutemen fell to Delaware 31-19 in a hail of penalty flags and missed opportunities.

Delaware	31
UMass	19

UMass (6-4, 4-3 Atlantic 10) ran 26 more offensive plays and controlled the ball for over nine minutes longer than the Blue Hens, but was hit by two questionable penalties and a pair of excruciating UD drives that spelled the margin of defeat.

"This game was frustrating," said UMass linebacker Kole Ayi, who made seven tackles in what would be the final home game of his career. "Any time you play hard and lose, it's tough. They had only two drives, but somehow they scored 31 points."

After winning the coin toss and electing to receive for the second week in a row, the Minutemen drove deftly down the field. Head Coach Mark Whipple had promised plenty of passing and his troops didn't disappoint, as signal caller Richard Lucero changed the opening formation at the line from the I to the shotgun and hit tailback Kevin Quinlan with a screen pass good for 18 yards.

After UMass receiver Jeff Howard laid out for a Lucero laser-beam for 18 more, the Maroon and White offense appeared to hit paydirt on its twelfth play. Lucero threaded a perfect 29-yard touchdown strike to wideout Adonis Kinsey, but the home team's celebration was short lived as flags flew and the play was nullified by an ineligible receiver downfield penalty. An enraged Whipple insisted that such an infraction never occurred, and that the play was more the result of week-long gripping by Delaware about the officiating last weekend in its loss to New Hampshire.

"I guess you've just got to cry all your life, and maybe you get a break," Whipple said. "We had a touchdown called back on a formation that wasn't illegal. There had been crying all week from Delaware, but we didn't think it would be a factor in today's game."

Lucero would make up some of the yardage lost on the play by hitting Kinsey on a buttonhook variation of essentially the same route. But the Minutemen were kept out of the endzone, and had to instead settle for a career-high 40-yard field goal from Doug White.

The Hens had success of their own on their first offensive series, as Coach Tubby Raymond's complicated bunch scheme gave his team room to run with fullback James O'Neal up the middle and halfbacks Craig Cummings and Butter Pressey to the outside.

"We really hadn't seen that package before," said UMass strong safety Brian Smith. "We made some adjustments, but at the same time they were able to move the ball. They caught us off guard."

The Hens' first-drive moment of truth came on a fourth-and-1 from the UMass 38, when Whipple stacked the box in anticipation of another O'Neal surge up the gut. Delaware quarterback Matt Nagy went play action instead and lofted a perfect 38-yard rainbow to Cummings, who had slipped behind the UMass secondary. The senior then strode into the southern endzone for the easy score.

"We just didn't get the call right on fourth down," Whipple said. "That was a good call by them."

The Minutemen charged right back down the field on their next possession, powered largely by the legs of Quinlan (four carries for 28 yards). The drive came to a screeching halt, however, when Lucero was picked off by Delaware safety Mike Furline at the Hen 5-yard line.

"[Lucero] did some good things out there; he just misread the safety on that one," Whipple said.

The ball would come right back to the home team after UMass' Eddie Bowman tattooed Nagy on a corner

Turn to LOST, page 6

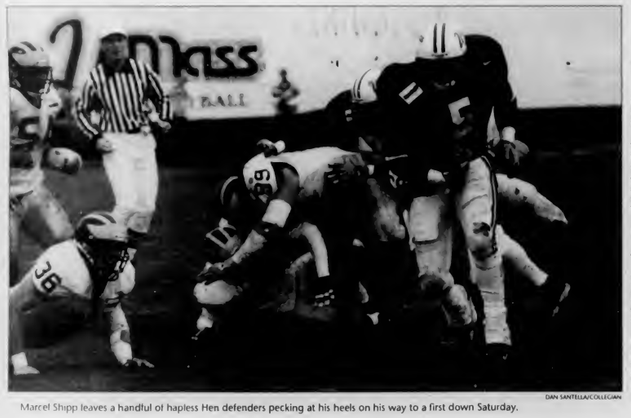
DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Richard Lucero flies past the Blue Hen defense. UMass couldn't emulate it's quarterback in a 31-19 loss to Delaware.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Marcel Shipp leaves a handful of hapless Hen defenders pecking at his heels on his way to a first down Saturday.

A tale of two halves

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Ancient myths say Janus is the god of two faces. Likewise, a 30-19 loss to Delaware says that Massachusetts has shown two very different facades in its latest performance on the gridiron.

One likeness was exhibited in the first half, when the Minutemen utterly dominated play to the tune of 235 yards of total offense. Considering the 144-yard difference in offensive efficiency, and the 12:44 edge in time of possession, UMass should have entered the locker room with a healthy lead. Unfortunately for Coach Whipple, his squad was only able to produce a 13-7 advantage despite exhibiting control of the ball and the game for the first 30 minutes.

"We had our chance in the first half but we didn't get our points," said Whipple.

Complacency reared its ugly head in the second half of play, as the Minutemen were not able to maintain their consistency on either side of the ball. The Blue Hens, on the other hand, corrected early miscues, starting the frame with a renewed commitment to the ground game.

The contrast between each half of play proved to be the difference in the game, as Delaware withstood the early UMass charge before conducting a final assault of its own. The second half supremacy by the Blue Hens whisked away all hopes of a win and a playoff appearance by the Minutemen.

At the outset of the contest, the Maroon and White came out like a team intent on victory. The Minutemen set the tone for the half on the opening possession, when quarterback Richard Lucero guided his offense on a mammoth drive that seemingly ended in a touchdown when he hit Adonis Kinsey on a stop and go pattern down the right sideline. Luckily for Delaware the referee called the play back, because the Blue Hens showed no signs of stopping Lucero and company on the initial drive.

The score was waived off by an illegal receiver downfield call, as UMass was forced to settle for the field goal. The opening possession was a microcosm of the whole half for the Maroon and White, as its play would be continually characterized by missed opportunities.

The theme continued on UMass' next offensive possession, when a masterful drive brought the Minutemen deep in Delaware territory. On the visiting 26-yard line, Lucero dropped back behind center and fired a pass over the middle towards Jeff Howard who was streaking into the end zone.

Howard was initially in single coverage, but free safety Mike Furline broke on the ball as it was released, cutting across for the interception as the Blue Hens turned back another UMass touchdown bid.

The Minutemen managed to reach pay dirt on their first opportunity of the second quarter, but the trend returned on the next offensive drive.

After a powerful run by Marcel Shipp, UMass

Turn to HALVES, page 6

Hoops has Statmaster.com's number

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

The irony was that stats didn't matter all that much against Statmaster.com.

The Massachusetts men's basketball team wasn't looking to run up the numbers Friday night when it hosted the barnstormers at the William D. Mullins Center. Coach Bruiser Flint and company were simply looking to start putting the pieces together in their final exhibition game, which they did in a solid 82-71 victory.

UMass	82
Statmaster	71

"We were going out there tonight to win," said tri-captain Winston Smith. "You can see in the stats that not many guys got the minutes they did last week; the guys who did worked really hard."

Smith set the pace for UMass early for the second time in as many games, canning a 12-footer from the left baseline and then cleaning up a Kitwana Rhymer miss to put the Minutemen up 8-2.

Pointman Jonathan DePina also got off to a sweet start for the home team, slicing through the Statmaster zone and dishing to Jackie Rogers for an easy hoop before taking a Ronell Blizzard block the length of the floor en route to an assist to Eric Williams.

"Jonathan did a good job of running the team," Flint said. "My thing with him is that he's getting open better, and being more vocal with his teammates."

Statmaster cut into the Minuteman lead behind the aggressive play of former Tulane standout Carlin Hartman. The forward knocked down a mid-range jumper at the 12:27 mark, then stepped in front of an entry pass intended for UMass' Micah Brand on the ensuing Maroon and White possession.

Fellow Statmaster Fred Cofield made the home team pay for the miscue, burying a three-pointer from the right corner to bring his team within one, 16-15.

Rhymer took advantage of the Maroon and White's size advantage (the 6-foot-7 Hartman was Statmaster's tallest player) by pounding inside for a six-foot jumper, and freshman Jameel Pugh followed with a rainbow three-ball from the left corner to pad the UMass cushion back to four, 21-17. Statmaster's Chad Thomas then made a spectacular look-away feed to a slicing Bernard Blunt, whose layup trimmed the UMass lead back to a bucket.

Guard Shannon Crooks put home UMass' first backcourt points at the 9:03 mark with a 10-foot jumpshot. Transfer Jackie Rogers woke up the crowd with an acrobatic up and under layup around Statmaster's Dan Buie, then followed up a Crooks misfire with a second-chance baby hook to stake the Minutemen to a seven-point lead, 29-22.

The former West Virginia Mountaineer scored on another putback less than two minutes later, a trend that would help the Maroon and White build a 21-5 edge in offensive rebounds over the course of the game.

"We got a lot of second chance opportunities on the offensive end," Smith said. "They were pretty much one-and-done. That was a big plus for us."

DePina continued to dazzle in the closing minutes of the first half, picking the pocket of Statmaster guard Jamar Smiley and coasting in alone for a layup to give UMass an 11-point lead, 33-22, at the 5:41 mark. The 5-foot-9 tri-captain then showed great composure on a second breakaway, drawing in his defender and kicking the ball to a cutting Smith for an easy finger-roll deuce.

"This year, we've got guys who can really push the ball up the floor," Smith said. "We're a whole lot different from last year in that way."

The teams' point guards then got into a personal war of trifectas, as Statmaster's Smiley knocked down a three with DePina right in his face at the left elbow. DePina came back down the floor and put up a three of his own that rimmed out, leading to a Blunt transition hoop that sliced UMass' lead back to three, 35-32.

After a home team timeout, DePina drew Smiley out past the arch with a fake and instead passed to Crooks, who drilled a three from the left elbow to send the Minutemen into the locker room back up by six.

"[Smiley] was talking to me a little bit out there, so I wanted to stay on him and pressure him on defense," DePina said. "Coach tells everybody to be ready if they're open; if you've got an open shot, you've got to take it."

Statmaster.com had UMass' number in the opening action of the second half, as Hartman put together a three-point play courtesy of a Rhymer back. Smiley then sucked the air out of the crowd with a monster three from six feet beyond the arch that gave the visitors their first lead since 2-0.

Williams and Hartman traded layups before Brand finally utilized his size in the post, backing Hariman down and banking over him for two. The 6-foot-11 sophomore's aggression was something Flint and company had been waiting for throughout his young career.

"The kid's been having great

Turn to HOOPS, page 7

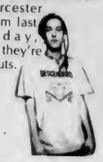
JARRET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Jonathan DePina's eyes light up as he crosses half-court looking to take it to the tin. The senior had 11 points, 6 assists, 7 rebounds and 3 steals in the win.

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 49 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, November 14, 2000



Less Than Jake rocked the Worcester Palladium last Thursday, proving they're no sellouts.

ARTS p. 6

Patty Robison ended her career in a UMass uniform Sunday afternoon in Chapel Hill, NC when the field hockey team lost to the Tar Heels in the Elite Eight.

SPORTS p. 10

Election woes continue everywhere

Presidential race in legal mess

PHOTOS COURTESY OF BUSH FOR PRESIDENT AND GORE 2000, RESPECTIVELY

The Second Circuit Court of Florida may decide the deadline for the Florida tallies. The Bush and Gore families wait for judge Terry Lewis to rule.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Florida remains the focus in the eyes of the nation after another day of legal maneuverings by both the Republicans and the Democrats.

The day began with a blow to the Republicans, as United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, judge Donald Middlebrooks ruled against a temporary restraining order. The motion, filed Saturday morning would have stopped four southern Florida counties from hand counting their ballots. The Bush campaign filed the motion to speed up the election.

"The repetitive counting of ballots – especially manual counting- diminishes the accuracy of the counts," the motion, drafted by several Florida attorneys, stated.

Judge Middlebrooks disagreed.

"A federal court has a very limited role, and should not intervene," Middlebrooks said in his official decision. "I believe there are serious arguments. The question becomes who should consider them."

Middlebrooks' decision came shortly after Florida's Secretary of State Katherine Harris released a statement declaring her position on Florida's ballot tally deadline.

"The electoral process is a balance between the desire of each voter to have his or her intended vote recorded and the right of the public to a clear, final result within a reasonable time," she said. "For this election, that time is 5:00 p.m. Nov. 14."

Harris, a Republican, claims to have Florida state law on her side.

"Section 102.112 provides that the county canvassing board must certify the county returns by 5:00 p.m. on the seventh day following the general election. A $200 per day personal fine is imposed on members of the county canvassing board for failing to meet this deadline," she said.

The Volusia County Canvassing Board disagreed, and filed suit in Florida's Second Circuit Court. It claims that the Board may be permitted to delay certification of the results.

"The Canvassing Board prays that this court declare that the Florida Elections Code permits the Canvassing Board to certify the results of the Presidential Election after completion of the manual recount without regard to the deadline," the motion reads.

Included in the Board's motion was a copy of a request by the Florida Democratic Party for a manual recount. The Democrats allege that six precincts were unable to transmit their tallies. The Democrats also allege that a tabulation machine in one precinct "burned out."

The Board filed a second motion in the case, asking for an injunction against Secretary Harris, which would legally force her to count the ballots that arrive after the deadline.

Governor Bush joined in the second front in this legal war by filing a motion to intervene, which would name him a defendant in the suit as well.

"The interests of Mr. Bush in the outcome of this legislation clearly meet the requirements for intervention. Mr. Bush's interests in the litigation are so significant that denial of the motion to intervene as a full party defendant would constitute an abuse of discretion," the motion, drafted by Florida attorneys, reads.

The legal battles rage across Florida as time slips by. If Civil Judge Terry Lewis upholds the deadline then the election may be over when the overseas ballots are counted. The deadline for the overseas absentee ballots to be counted is Nov. 17.

MAUREEN MASE/COLLEGIAN

SGA president Jeff Howe (left) tries to make his case as SGA speaker Jim Eltringham (extreme right) looks on. Eltringham was the defendant in last night's student judiciary case.

Commuter seats threatened

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Questions of election misconduct and commuter seat tampering were issues brought up last night at the Student Government Association (SGA) Judiciary hearing.

SGA President Jeff Howe and Central-at-Large Senator Rebecca Austern went head-to-head against SGA Speaker Jim Eltringham and T.J. Roy in the first night of a petition for ruling.

The petition for ruling was brought to the Student Judiciary Committee by Austern with accusations against Eltringham on charges that misconduct occurred under his direct knowledge. T.J. Roy, a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, represented Eltringham at the judiciary hearing.

Howe and Austern began the hearing by presenting their case, specifically focusing on questionable commuter seats made available in the Senate election.

"Originally there were 29 seats made available for commuter senate seat positions," Howe said. "34 seats were given. [proving] Eltringham ignored advice given by Assistant Speaker Michael J. McCarthy," Howe said.

Eltringham responded to the allegations that the number of commuter seat's was altered in the process of distribution.

"I do take value in my Associate's advice, but it is not something I have to take, it's non-binding," Eltringham stated. "There wasn't a number agreed upon. When Michael McCarthy and I were going over the numbers, the

Turn to SGA, page 2

MAUREEN MASE/COLLEGIAN

Garden of Eden

Lindsay Ramos and Jill Weathers work on a Lively Arts assignment in Durfee Conservatory Greenhouse.

Scores on rise in controversial MCAS

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Improved results from the controversial Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System (MCAS) were released yesterday by the Massachusetts Department of Education.

Yesterday's MCAS numbers showed that a smaller percentage of students failed the exam and students in grades four, eight and 10 did comparatively better than the last time the test was administered.

Fourth graders, thought by many to be the most telling indicator of any emerging MCAS trends, fared about the same on the English portion of the exam and improved slightly on both the math and science and Technology portions. Eighteen percent of fourth-graders fell in the "failing" category of the math section while 28 percent fell in the "proficient" category – compared to 19 percent and 24 percent respectively for 1999.

"We recognize there is still work to be done. We will continue to demand hard work, high standards and accountability until every child in Massachusetts has the skills needed to succeed."
— Paul Cellucci, Governor

After the MCAS is given, student's tests are scored and assigned to one of four categories: failing, needs improvement, proficient or advanced. According to the MDE's website, the definition of "failing" is "Students [who] demonstrate a minimal understanding of subject matter and do not solve simple problems." The definition of "proficient" is "Students [who] demonstrate a solid understanding of challenging subject matter and solve a wide variety of problems."

Among eighth-graders, the percentage of students failing English dropped from 13 to 11 year-to-year and the percentage failing math fell from 40 to 39. Proficiency levels increased from 53 percent in 1999 to 57 percent this year, and from 22 to 24 percent – in English and math respectively.

The tenth grade testing level showed the most significant improvement, especially in the math area, where the percentage of failing students fell from 53 to 45 percent.

Students slight overall improved performance still may not be enough to save the much-beleaguered MCAS from further criticism.

Since the test was first administered in 1998, consistently high failure rates have raised alarm over the test being used as graduation requirement. This seems only likely to continue as over one-third of all tenth-graders who took the test this year failed either the math or English portion.

MCAS opposition has been lead by The Massachusetts Association of School Committees, which, along with six different legislative districts, has called for the suspension of the test. In addition, the Massachusetts Teachers Association, long since one of the test's major opponents, recently began a $600,000 dollar ad campaign against the assessment test.

Governor Paul Cellucci and other state education officials continue to support the MCAS though, adopted as a part of a $22 billion statewide education reform effort.

In a news conference yesterday morning, Cellucci told reporters, "We recognize there is still work to be done. We will continue to demand hard work, high standards and accountability until every child in Massachusetts has the skills needed to succeed."

Many education experts are also waiting for the individual break down of MCAS results by district and school. This data will detail the performances by students in the inner-cities and also students from distressed towns – the idea being that these areas have particularly underfunded, poor school systems. Superintendents will receive this information tomorrow and the information will be made available to the public on Nov. 20.

This year's MCAS results should serve as a crucial barometer for what could potentially be an explosive situation come this time next year. The tenth-graders who took the MCAS last spring don't have to pass the exam in order to graduate from high school. However, starting this year, those same tenth-graders will have to earn a "needs improvement" (defined by the MDE as "Students [who] demonstrate a partial understanding of subject matter and solve simple problems.") in both English and Math to receive their diplomas.

Information from The Boston Globe was used in this article.

SGA

Continued from page 1

number 30 came out and that looked low considering we had 38 seats last year."

According to Hingham, he said he ended up holding off providing the election commission with those numbers from the beginning in attempts to get a more accurate projection of the number of seats.

"I received a roster of numbers of undergraduate students living on and off campus from Housing Services," Hingham said. "When I went to the registrar's office, initially for the number I was told it would be two weeks until I would receive them."

When it came down to it, I was put into a situation where time was an issue and I went with the numbers I had and gave the number 34 in caution," Hingham explained. "I would rather make the mistake of giving more commuter seats than less."

Yet, it went on to claim that all Constitution By-Laws in compliance to the voting general are being violated and that the Senate, as a whole is in violation of all laws due to faulty elections.

Right now we as Senators cannot uphold the oath of which we sworn to, including myself due to the unconstitutional elections that took place," Austein said. "Knowing this, we can't as Senators fulfill our roles due to the fact unconstitutional elections took place."

Allegations were made towards much of the Greek community in complaints to the fact that members of the Greek community represent 33 out of the 34 commuting seats. They argued that the Greek community does not fit under the commuter district but under the district of campus-owned off-campus residences.

"The Senate must reside in areas within the community of which they represent," Austein said. "Those who are not representing the correct district should surrender their seats which they never should have received in the first place."

They argued that only one commuter seat is being filled legally at this time, and the other 33 members should not be grouped in that category due to false representation. According to Howe and Austein, Senator Ian Teixeira is legally the only representative of the 0-647 commuter students.

A representative is given to every 250 students, according to the projected ratio of students to representatives. However, Howe and Austein claim that as of now, including all 34 Senators, there is one representative to every 12 commuter students.

Questions were then addressed on the grounds of an unconstitutional election. Howe and Austein made accusations against the Greek community, specifically in reference to a list made by Ros of all the Senate candidates from the Greek community.

"Campaigning is not allowed within 50 feet of the polling stations," Howe said. "There was a copy of this list on top of one of the polling stations at the Campus Center. This was a direct violation of the code of conduct, which is stated in the Constitution."

Ros responded by explaining that the list was specifically used as internal communication between the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

"Yes I put the list together, but it was filled and distributed only to the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon," Ros claimed. "This is protected under the amendment of freedom of speech. The memo stayed only in the confines of 37 Olympia Drive, and whether or not brothers took it out of the house is out of our control."

Howe and Austein made further accusations, in addition to lists being left at the polling booths, campaigning was being done by individuals within 50 feet of the area as well.

"This form of harassment toward anyone affects students' rights to be able to cast their vote in privacy," Howe said. "These are their rights and they are being infringed upon."

The meeting ended with the questioning of executive witness Sam Blasiak, member of the Election Commission. The presentation of Hingham and Ros as well as further questioning will take place Thursday, Nov. 16 at 7 p.m. a location is set to be determined.

Commonwealth College receives grant for courses

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A $375,000 grant was awarded to the University of Massachusetts Commonwealth College to support an intensive course of study in the area of community service.

The grant, which was awarded to the school by the Corporation for National Service, allows 15-20 students per year to participate in a curriculum that promotes leadership and combines it with volunteer work. According to David Schimmel, professor in the School of Education department and co-director of the Citizen Scholar's Program, the awarding of the grant is a way that the University will be able to expand their service learning offerings.

"The awarding of this grant is an acknowledgement that UMass is doing some of the most innovative work in community-service learning in the country," Schimmel said. "The University now offers more than 60 service learning courses and has opened an office of community-service learning courses."

He explained that the grant money would be used to expand and institutionalize the Citizen Scholar's Program. The program is a two yearlong project that allows students to take five service-learning courses and to obtain service-learning experience. Students that enroll in the program will start off by taking a course in the Anthropology department called The Good Society and finish their curriculum by taking Public Policy and Citizen Action. In addition to taking the five classes, students are also required to complete 60 hours of community service in each of the four program semesters.

"What students learn in the classroom is helpful for application in the community," he said explaining that both classroom and outside experience is needed for effective learning.

"Together this is a more powerful education tool."

Students will have the option this semester of volunteering at the Survival Center in Amherst, the Big Brother Big Sister Program, North Star Academy of Springfield, and Hampshire Educational Collaborative 21st Century Schools. In addition to simply volunteering at these places students will also be able to observe the director or head of the program. Schimmel explained that this would give them the opportunity to learn about leadership roles that they may one day apply in society.

Qualifications for the class are fairly limited. Students participating in the program do not have to be part of the Commonwealth College and only need to have a 3.2 GPA in order to qualify for the class. Students must also have an interest in volunteer work and have demonstrated a history of prior community service and a commitment to future service. In addition they must also have four semesters remaining at the University.

For their participation, students receive a $1,000 award per year, a Citizen Scholars Medal upon graduation, and the eligibility to apply for an additional stipend to support summer practica in community service.

Students interested in participating in the program may pick up applications in the Office of Community Service Learning at the Commonwealth College.

MAUREEN MISKELL/COLLEGIAN

Catchin' the Vibe

Mike Sousa, Will Savage and Stephanie Rondeau groove to live bands in Butterfield dorm Friday night.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax: (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.daily collegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts and operates solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as "Aggie Life" before the College Aggie in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a financially independent publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulte Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorkovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Marrigonzi Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargarita Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN
is

now
accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

Kyoto Protocol demands attention to global warming

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

Since the early 1990's the debate surrounding air pollution and climate change has become more and more intense. Now, after four years of negotiations, leaders from countries around the world are meeting in The Netherlands to discuss a treaty that would help to corral global warming.

The Kyoto Protocol, named after a similar meeting in Kyoto, Japan in 1997, is a treaty that would take great steps toward reducing greenhouse gases around the world. The meeting is scheduled to last two weeks and is being held at The Hague.

Countries from every continent have come together to look at evidence of global warming and discuss possible solutions. The problems that the world is facing now include the disruption of weather patterns which could melt polar ice caps and cause massive flooding; shift the gulf stream possibly causing another ice age in Europe and other areas along that latitude; and could largely affect ecosystems and agriculture on all continents.

The treaty calls for a five percent reduction of the greenhouse levels that were measured in 1990. The reduction would take place between eight and 12 years for industrialized countries.

Developing countries would not be legally bound to reduce their emissions, but would pledge to reduce them in the future. India and China, for example, may not emit the same amount of pollution now, but could surpass the United States within 20 years.

The argument has been that growing economies bring increased production of greenhouse gases. Negotiators are looking for cheap solutions that are not politically risky.

The Protocol's main initiative is to require industrialized nations to reduce the release of greenhouse gases, especially Carbon Dioxide, that trap heat in the atmosphere. So far over 100 countries have signed the treaty; including the United States, however none of these countries have ratified it.

Of the 34 industrialized nations involved so far, only two are anywhere near meeting their emissions targets. Germany is in the midst of shutting down grime-belching factories and Britain is closing many obsolete coalmines.

The United States is one of the industrialized nations that is behind in its efforts to curb greenhouse gases. As of now, the US is producing 22 percent more emissions than it was in 1990. Under the Kyoto Protocol, the country must reduce that number by seven percent between 2008 and 2012.

For the treaty to be put into effect, it must be ratified by countries with combined 1990 emissions of 55 percent of the world's total. In 1990, the European Union made up 24.2 percent, followed by Russia with 17.4 percent and Japan at 8.5 percent. The frontrunner of greenhouse gas emission however, was the United States, causing a whopping 36 percent of the world's total air pollution.

The other nations attending the meeting at The Hague this week are counting on the United States to ratify the treaty because the US is the larges producer of greenhouse gases. In essence, it is up to the US to lead the was for everyone to take a united action.

The involvement of the United States does depend on the presidential election, and depending on who the next president is, the treaty could be in danger.

Governor Bush opposes the treaty because not only does he question the science backing the threat of climate change, but also because the treaty has been the darling of the Clinton administration. However, he would support the reduction of Carbon Dioxide emissions from power plants.

Vice President Gore, on the other hand, flew to Kyoto, Japan in 1997 to meet with delegates and convince them of the severity of the problem with global warming. Gore has long been an activist for the environment and would work hard to get the senate to approve the movement, even though it may prove to be difficult to get 67 out of 100 members to comply.

Meanwhile, environmental groups are pressuring politicians in Washington DC to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, thus beginning to address the damage that has been done since the beginning of the 21st century by fossil fuels.

However, at the same time, oil moguls are also lobbying the nation's capital to inhibit the progress of the treaty. Many oil companies face potential problems as the world withdraws from petroleum.

Another stumbling block for the Protocol is the disagreement between countries on specifics regarding credits for cutting pollution and penalties for not reducing emissions.

The US disagrees with certain points on how to penalize countries that don't meet requirements as well as credits for moving from oil and coal to hydroelectric or nuclear power plants.

There are many different opinions within the meeting, as there is vast diversity within the politics, geography, and economics of the countries involved.

Australia, for example wants to sop up Carbon Dioxide by planting trees. The European constituency believes that imposing such a rule is a bad idea since they don't have the space or the wide-open areas of the Australian continent.

Lawyers from low-lying and island countries are looking for fiscal policies to defend against the affects of climate change: mainly the massive floods that would occur as glaciers melt.

The European Union is being pressured by a Green Movement that is insisting on strict limits on credits for countries investing in pollution prevention abroad. They want change to be made on home soil. They also want increased energy efficiency and clean energy, such as windmills.

The United States is bent on an economic approach, seeking a system of global trading for Carbon Dioxide, like the one instituted in America for reducing the sulfur pollution that is known to cause acid rain.

The Europeans want to impose a system of cash payments for every ton of Carbon Dioxide missed as a penalty for non-compliance. The US wants penalties to be in the form of fewer cuts in pollution. Critics say that it is likely that neither program would be successful, and would increase loopholes in the system.

Another issue that is being pondered during the meeting at The Hague is the state of global forests. Many officials believe that planting large quantities of trees and forests can substantially curb the effects of Carbon Dioxide. However, critics believe the forests are not a secure way of sucking the greenhouse gas. Some say that saving some forests can lead to the clear-cutting of others.

Earlier this year a summary of findings was published by the World Meteorologist Organization and the United Nations Environmental Program and sent to world leaders. Some of the findings included evidence that if greenhouse gases are not decreased, warming in the next 100 years will increase as much as 11 degrees.

A panel of international climate scientists put forth that fossil fuels are altering the atmosphere and the Earth has warmed substantially in the last 50 years. The Public Broadcasting System reports in a Frontline feature that each American is indirectly responsible for 20 tons of Carbon Dioxide per year.

Though an overwhelming number of scientists agree that there is a substantial problem with global climate change and its direct link to human industrialization, there are many scientists who disagree.

Some scientists claim that the average temperature today is only nine degrees warmer than at the end of the last Ice age. Many other Climatologists and other Paleometeorologists believe that the climate has constantly changed throughout Earth's history and that this recent warming trend is natural and harmless.

Though both sides may have their disagreeing evidence, all members of the Kyoto Protocol meeting have agreed that it is time to take an active role in decreasing global pollution and greenhouse gases.

Russian president relieves pressure on proposed US nuclear defenses

By Jason Spears
Collegian Correspondent

As the debate over nuclear arms control waits in limbo for the next American president, Russian President Vladimir Putin took a surprising stand in his proposition that both Russia and the United States cut their nuclear arsenals down to 1500 warheads each.

The announcement came after strategic missile forces commander General Vladimir Yakovlev acknowledged that the United States is going ahead with plans for anti-nuclear missile defense system despite Moscow's opposition.

Yakovlev felt that the United States could counter balance the missile defense proposals with cuts to its nuclear missile arsenal. Putin believed the reductions could be done before 2008 and suggested that deeper cuts are possible.

Putin's proposal is the latest event in arms control negotiation with Russia. In 1972, President Richard Nixon and the leader of the Soviet Union Leonid Brezhnev signed the Salt I treaty and the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty. The Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty limits defense against a nuclear attack.

In 1991, President George Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev signed another treaty, the Start I, effectively cutting 8000 nuclear warheads from both arsenals, according to the United States Department of State website.

On January third, 1993 President Bush and Russian President Boris Yelstin signed the Start II treaty. According to the United States Department of State, the treaty would reduce an additional 5000 nuclear warheads beyond the Start I treaty. By December 31, 2002, both Russia and the United States would not have more than 3500 warheads each.

The two countries started negotiating the Start III treaty during a summit meeting between President Bill Clinton and Yelstin in March of 1997. The Start III treaty would reduce nuclear warheads to only 2000-2500 per country. However, until now Russia has insisted the United States give up the nuclear missile defense plan before more talks on the Start III treaty.

According to the Federation of American Scientists, the nuclear missile defense plan consists of a non-nuclear ground based missile that would intercept an incoming ballistic missile outside of the earth's atmosphere. The intercepting missile would be guide by a spaced-based detection system and destroy the incoming ballistic missile on impact.

Moscow called the nuclear missile defense plan a violation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. In September President Clinton postponed the nuclear missile defense plan project for another year in order to test the technology further.

The Putin's new proposal would allow the United States to continue with the nuclear missile defense plan and not harm the Start III talks.

Both Vice President Al Gore and Governor George W. Bush support the nuclear missile defense plan, but approach it differently.

Gore is cautious about the plan.

"An approach that combines serious unilateral reductions with an attempt to build a massive defensive system will create instability, and thus undermine our security," said Gore at the West Point Commencement on May 27, 2000 according to official Gore-Lieberman campaign website.

Bush favors moving quickly ahead with the plan in the interest of national security.

"For most of our history, America felt safe behind two great oceans. But with the spread of technology distance no longer means security," said Bush at the Citadel on September 23, 1999 according to the official Bush for President website.

Bush stated that his administration would deploy anti-ballistic missile systems as the earliest possible date.

Information for this article was compiled from the BBC website, US Department of State website, Federation of American Scientists website, Arms Control Association web site, George W. Bush for President website and the Gore Lieberman campaign website.

Write for World News!

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
www.bostonbartender.com

Why not be a bartender?
• Only professional school in Western MA
• Hands-on training in real bar/club setting
• National certification in alcohol awareness
• Lifetime refresher • ID Card • Resume
• Special UMass student discount
• Conveniently located in West Springfield
Call TODAY! (413) 747-9888

Make a Difference in a Life
in downtown Northampton.
Be a therapeutic housemate for a person in recovery from psychiatric disturbance
Female age 22+needed. Salary, benefits, team support.
Call Mary Cape at Windhorse Associates
586-0207

Squeezed For Cash?
Take The Bus!
No gas money. No tolls.
No parking. No smelly Bob.
Save a few bucks and catch a ride home in Billy's car!...with Jason, Thomas, sleazy Andrew, crazy Jennifer, Kevin and smelly Bob. Oh, and Billy needs the car back on Sunday. Be sure to bring fifty bucks for gas and tolls...whatever! How 'bout some personal space? Maybe leaving on your own time, with some a/c, more leg room, a bathroom...and on some schedules, even a movie. Take your next ride home with Peter Pan/Greyhound. And leave smelly Bob behind.
Peter Pan
www.peterpanbus.com
GREYHOUND.
www.greyhound.com

We can give you the opportunity to change the world.
GENUITY.
903 Campus Center
Tuesday, November 14
6:00pm-8:00pm
Genuity offers an exceptional salary and benefits package, as well as an intellectually charged, creative environment with an outstanding opportunity for professional growth.
For a complete listing of employment opportunities, please visit us at www.genuity.com. Please forward resumes to: college@genuity.com, or Genuity, Attn: University Relations, 150 Cambridge Park Drive, 9D, Cambridge, MA 02140 or Fax: (617) 873-5676.
Diversity gives us the strength to lead. Equal Opportunity Employer M/F/D/V.
Genuity is the leading Network Services Provider for businesses changing the world. Genuity is the only company in the industry to offer a Network Services Platform (NSP) that combines a Tier 1 network with a full portfolio of managed Internet services, including dedicated, remote and broadband access, Web hosting and Internet security, to create a platform for creating scalable and repeatable managed eBusiness solutions. With 1999 revenues of $706 million, Genuity (NASDAQ: GENU) is a global company with offices and partnerships throughout the U.S., Europe, Asia and Latin America.

You can do anything with a Black Rocket. The world's first Network Services Platform

UMASS
University of Massachusetts Amherst
School of Nursing
OPEN HOUSE
NOVEMBER 15, 2000
5:00 – 7:00 PM
Morrill IV Room 403
SON Learning Resource Center
Ranked among the top nursing schools in the nation by the "U.S. News & World Report" on "America's Best Graduate Schools" (3-29-00)
We have a commitment to diversity, innovation and life-long learning.
Our award winning academic programs include
Undergraduate: Traditional Pre-licensure,
2nd Bachelor's and RN to BS tracks
Master's: Psychiatric/Mental Health, Gerontological, Community/School Health (On line)
Family Nurse Practitioner
And a Collaborative PhD Program
For more information call (413) 545-2703 or
Check out our website at http://www.umass.edu/nursing

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Florida politics hit home

As the painstaking process of recounting ballots and taking legal recourse continues in Florida, the University of Massachusetts has its own election scandal coming to a head.

Last night, the Student Judiciary, the Judicial branch of the Student Government Association, met to hear a case put forth by Associate Speaker Michael J. McCarthy that the Senate be dissolved due to improper election procedures in September.

McCarthy's official contention is that during the September election, the number of commuter seats was incorrectly calculated, and, proportionally, too many slots were left open for commuter representatives in the SGA.

Unofficially, it is difficult not to see McCarthy's case as strategic chess move engineered by the current SGA leadership, namely, Student Trustee Seth Avakian and SGA President Jeff Howe.

Earlier in this semester, Avakian vowed not only to not recognize the Senate in its current form but also to cease attending the Senate meetings until the situation was rectified. Thus far, Avakian has kept his word, though his absence has gone relatively unnoticed among body members.

Likewise, Howe, and, for that matter, most of his Executive Cabinet have not been showing up to the regular Wednesday night meetings. Howe and his supporters have seen their base of political support crumble beneath them, and seem content only to observe, if they even are observing, from a distance.

And all of this comes down to one question: why is McCarthy, the one person who is supposed to be looking out for the best interests of the Senate, looking to absolve that very body?

Again, we can turn to Florida.

For as unlikely as it may seem, the Presidential Election, now being decided in Florida, and the recent SGA elections do have something in common. They are both perfect examples of how politics can interfere with, well, politics.

Both elections are great examples of how small politics can overshadow the larger democratic process. In the case of the SGA, this is certainly the case. Because of the narrow-mindedness of a few, and essentially their unwillingness to give up political power, the entire body must now suffer internal strife. It is not good for the commuters, who now feel like a disinherited part of the Senate. It is not good for the Senate. And most of all, it is not good for the student body.

While the situation in Florida is obviously more complicated due to confusing ballots, improper voting procedure and mysteriously "over-looked" ballots, the principle remains the same.

The technicalities surrounding both elections must be clear up so democracy can move forth. It is the only way that the people and, ultimately, justice will be served.

Gore needs to just concede

The people have spoken, George W. Bush is the new President.

And if the so-called "countercoup" crew persist in trying to defy the protocols and practices laid out in our Constitution, they very well may de-stabilize our government to the point where this whole mess ends up in a military coup.

First, one must understand that the President is elected by 51 separate state elections and that it really doesn't matter if, in a sum total of all the votes cast, one candidate got 0.002 more than another or if (in the case of Bill Clinton) 57 percent of the total votes were for someone other than the victor. Our election process is defined by our Constitution and everything else is irrelevant.

The Constitution was written as an 18th Century compromise between large cities (essentially Boston and Philadelphia) and small states. Each state has two Senators to ensure that a tiny Vermont or a sparsely-populated Wyoming has the same voice as a California or a New York – the system exists as a sort of affirmative action plan for small communities. To a large extent, the system has worked well for 211 years.

ED CUTTING

So too with the Electorial College. Established when there were 37 fewer states than today, it was intended to ensure that a President had to be elected by a majority of the country, not by a majority of the people. In such a system, the votes of a lot of people (such as Massachusetts Republicans) have no impact on the election because each STATE holds a separate election for President (and Massachusetts essentially has no Republican party).

This is, after all, a republic of 50 states – 50 of which voted for Bush. This is how we have selected Presidents since 1789 and everyone (including the man who "invented the internet") knew this when the campaigning started. The national county-by-county map is truly impressive, a vast sea of Bush Red with small pockets of Gore Blue. Al Gore's strategy was to win specific key states by winning specific key cities – a strategy that clearly recognizes that the total national vote count is irrelevant.

Second, Al Gore needs to be very careful about claiming election fraud. The infamous "butterfly" ballot was designed by a county election supervisor who is a Democrat, in a state where the Attorney General is a Democrat, was approved by everyone including the Democrats, and was widely circulated before the election so that everyone including the Democrats could show their illiterate supporters how to vote for the candidate of choice. Now I am not saying that the Democrats aren't capable of doing something stupid, but if their own ballot design was somehow confusing to their own supporters, well, umm, whose fault is that? These people, who allegedly can't design a ballot, want to govern the whole country?

Furthermore, a great deal of fraud did occur during this election. What about the one MILLION aliens who were somehow given citizenship just in time to vote for Al Gore, including the 75,000 convicted felons who aren't eligible to apply for citizenship.

In two cases, wealthy democrats attempted to "buy" an election, one going so far as to pay out-of-state homeless people $75 per day to work on his campaign. Imagine the outcry if a Republican tried a stunt like this!

I could not help but laugh as I saw Richard Daley (Jr.) talking about election fairness. It was his father, former Chicago Mayor Richard Daley, who somehow managed to find the 4,480 extra votes in Chicago's Cook County to offset the southern counties and thus throw the 1960 Presidential election to Kennedy. Everyone knew that there was widespread fraud in both Illinois and LBJ's home state of Texas, but Richard Nixon realized that contesting this would "tear the country to pieces" and being a patriot he recognized that "you can't do that."

Nixon (who would win the Presidency eight years later) decided to cede his 1960 victory to Kennedy in a private meeting. Arguably the entire Watergate affair that would lead to his 1974 resignation evolved out of a paranoia that the Democrats would 'rig' the election process again. And while Richard Nixon truly was corrupt, he was honorable enough to resign before impeachment (unlike Clinton) and to avoid a protracted post-election battle (unlike Gore). To his dying days, Nixon believed that in 1960 he lost to the cemeteries of Chicago.

Forty years later we not only had dead people voting, but we even have them getting elected! Notwithstanding the requirement that one elected must be physically able to serve (and that it is difficult to do so while dead), Mel Carnahan was elected Senator from Missouri. While the man he defeated, John Ashcroft, has a legitimate challenge to this, he is doing the honorable thing and respecting the outcome of the election. Al Gore should do the same.

But in Florida we have him bringing in the son of a corrupt politician, a man who himself is the product of the corrupt Chicago 'machine,' complaining about "confused" voters. We have George Sweeney of the AFL-CIO willing to provide unlimited funding for election protests and we now have the "countercoup" crew out disrupting Veteran's Day observances. Welcome to modern America...

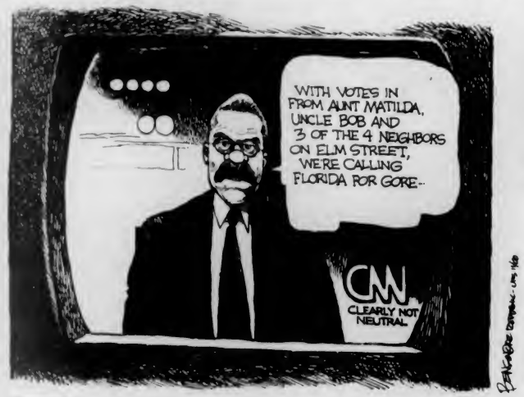
By the time this goes to print, Al Gore may have done the decent thing and conceded defeat to Bush. The man who brought us Willie Horton has been shown lacking in willpower when challenged and our second national nightmare may well be ended. Or this whole thing may inexorably expand to the point where we literally have the potential for a military coup.

The military has silently repeated the twenty-second Psalm during these eight years of Clinton-Gore. Oliver North reports that the burial of a Clinton "fat cat donor" in Arlington so outraged the military that barracks wagers were being held to see if the Army or Marines would dig him up first. Our foreign policy has imploded and our military is acutely aware of just how much of a mess the Boy President has made. They have silently fumed as their Commander in Chief engaged in moral transgressions that would have landed them in jail. And they have silently waited for a promised redemption on Jan. 20.

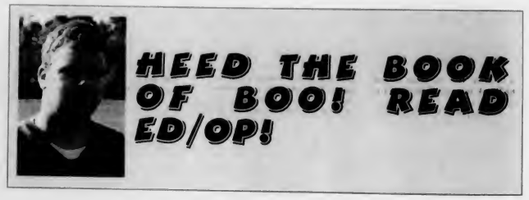
They all voted for Bush, and their families voted for Bush. Even life-long Democrats voted for Bush and they know that the "law" states that he is supposed to become President on Jan. 20 and that William the Impeached is supposed to be gone on that date. If Clinton stays on, if Al Gore takes the Presidency without benefit of the Constitutional authority to hold that office, if the Democrats attempt to preclude a peaceful transfer of power – we might just see an end to our long tradition of peaceful transfer of power.

Albert Gore Jr. needs to do the honorable thing and to concede defeat before this whole mess gets way out of hand...

Ed Cutting is a UMass graduate student.



WITH VOTES IN FROM AUNT MATILDA, UNCLE BOB AND 3 OF THE 4 NEIGHBORS ON ELM STREET, WE'RE CALLING FLORIDA FOR GORE...
CNN
CLEARLY NOT NEUTRAL
BARBARA BRANDON-CROFT '98



ADAM MARTIGNETTI

Reflections

On Thursday, Nov. 2, I turned 21 years old... finally! (Okay, I'll say all this once more. "Good show by Smitty." "Jaret, thanks for showing up man." Thanks also to Lisa and Ryan. And Kristin, you rock.) By the way, the "upchuck" shot Charlie's is not all that it's cracked up to be.

Anyway, in the midst of the hangover from that Thursday night and the four or five or six days and nights of drinking that followed it, I began reading some of my old writing. As you near graduation, you too will find yourself wondering where all those old Word documents on your hard drive actually came from. Or maybe I simply just mislecked in my intoxicated state. Either way...

I stumbled, literally, upon a paper from my junior year writing course in which the assignment was to write an autobiography. Basically it was to somehow summarize your life in three well-written, single-spaced and creative pages. Like most of the other assignments in that class, this one was ridiculous. Still, it being my 21st birthday and my being in a somewhat contemplative mood made me think, "What better time to reflect on this thing we call 'life' than now?"

I figured 21 years was a decent sample of my entire life to draw some fairly accurate conclusions – statistics-wise, that is.

So, I started out to take that autobiography and turn it into an Ed/Op. The main point of the hypothetical piece (you'll soon see that I never finished it) was this: life is like an hourglass and all the people and all the experiences in our lives are like the little grains of sand in the hourglass. These grains come, affect us somehow and, hopefully, we enjoy them, but only as long as they persist in the top half of the hourglass. For once they trickle through the hole down to the bottom, they are gone and can never be recovered. Boiled down, the point was something along the lines of: "All good things must come to an end."

Then, I stopped. For a couple of reasons.

First, I realized that I had written two of the more depressing things that have appeared on this page this semester (Rob, I still feel yours man), I wasn't particularly keen on writing a third.

Second, I realized that what I was saying was simply wrong. What I had written was wrong. I realized this partially on my own and partially because somebody else made me see things differently. This person made me see, and sometimes I now believe, that everything does matter. Then, suddenly, an epiphany.

All of these things that I talked about in this autobiography weren't gone. They were still here. Everything was still here.

Suddenly, this reflective piece became really easy.

I remember when the Braves won the World Series, and every year, around late fall, I still pull out the old newspaper clippings to prove that it actually did happen, that I didn't just imagine it.

I remember the first article I wrote for the Collegian. I still store it proudly alongside a slew of others.

I remember the first angry response I got from a reader. Damn Titanic fans.

I remember the first time I knew I was in love, because I lied about it at the time.

I remember the first time I saw Jerry Maguire. It's the first time I saw a movie.

I remember the first time I saw "Dawson's Creek." Okay, so my life is sad and pathetic, but I will not lie.

For different reasons, I remember the first time I went to The Academy of Music. I remember seeing Shakespeare in Love. I remember the light mist, which made that fall night seem magical. I remember getting coffee and waiting for the bus. I remember looking at her and watching our cold breaths ascend toward the serene, black heavens above. I remember looking into those heavens and thinking "all is right with the world."

I remember being trashed and passing out on the bathroom floor in my dorm as a freshman. I remember (kind of) two friends who decided that it would be funny to take my picture before helping me to my room.

I remember Pizzeria Paradiso.

I remember third floor Field: Drew, Bill, Jefe, Scott, Fitzy, Barret, Kendall, Beth, Steph, Vihann, Arie, (cough...Stacey), etc. You guys were the best.

I remember, I'll always remember the last night of my sophomore year.

I never remember having cried so much in one night. Never mind the following day.

I remember season one "Felicity." I remember anxiously coming home every Tuesday night from my History of Film class to watch the taped episode with my RA. And in a self-reflexive way, I remember how eerily the show resonated in my life.

I remember the day my grandmother died.

I remember my roommate finding me passed out one night in the middle of our room, unable to move, watching Practical Magic.

I remember having the most bizarre "boy" conversations with the girl that lived across the hall.

I remember my first impressions of the big, scary-looking kid from West Virginia.

I remember the "back to school" issue of my junior year.

I remember peanut brittle.

I remember Seattle, WA.

I'll always remember this year's Collegian Halloween party.

And now, I'll always remember my 21st birthday party.

I remember so much. So much more than I could ever say or ever attempt to describe.

I don't need words, though, because it's all right here. I carry it all with me. Everyday. And I'm glad I do.

Adam Martignetti is a Collegian Columnist.

Hey kids

LAURA SICILIANO

Hey Kids...That is how it all started two years ago. My friend Val at UMass Dartmouth wrote an e-mail to a whole bunch of my high school classmates. Maybe someone else sent the first email, though. Over the past two years, the thousands of emails have faded into a blur, but through them, I have learned more about some of my friends than I ever did in the 12 years we went to school together.

We are spread out around the country and even across the Atlantic now. One of us is in Ireland, one in Washington D.C., one at the University of Texas, and another at the University of Nebraska. We are at Boston College and the University of Hartford, Western New England College and one of us is taking a semester off. We are at UMass-Dartmouth, UMass-Lowell, and, of course, there is a good representation here at UMass Amherst. But even on this campus we are in Sylvan and Southwest, Puffton and Mill Valley. Out of my high school class of 87, 11 of us are exchanging e-mails. Not too bad, considering we graduated two and a half years ago. We have not all been together since graduation. We all may never be together again. These emails connect us in ways that will never link us together.

The "Hey Kids" emails have filled up my mailbox, frightened up my day, made me cry and made me laugh. Quite now, we are communicating daily, sometimes sending more than one e-mail a day. A fight might brew up on a few days and shut things down for a while, as has happened in the past. However, someday, somewhere down the road, someone will have something to share and will send out a mass e-mail to do so.

Recently the subject has been politics. As most of the country has been discussing, the issue has been the results of the presidential election. The Gore backers have been cheering that the vote in Palm County might be declared illegal. The Bush camp has been yelling that the elderly were blind and it is their fault that they misread the ballot. Rumors fly, tempers rise, and thoughts are exchanged. It is fun, but it can get ugly.

It isn't all serious stuff, though. There is a good deal of name-calling. There is a constant tug and pull between the more conservative members of the list and the one interning at the Feminist Majority this semester. We have learned that someone allegedly planted pot in an 11th grade biology ecosystem. People have shared drinking stories, most embarrassing moments, favorite movies, and stupid jokes. Everyone has shared their funniest memories of high school, making me remember things that I had long since forgotten. Some days, when I read my email, I laugh so hard that I cry.

My friends have shared their darkest hours and told each other things that we never could have imagined. There are people on the list that I never was close with in high school. I now understand who they are and why they are that way. Some people would rather not get so deep over e-mail. We have learned that it is okay if some people only talk of more lighthearted matters. We just try to acknowledge it when people do share something personal. An important lesson that the emails have taught all of us is that you can rarely disseminate tone from emails. It is very easy to be misinterpreted. We are gradually learning to be more careful about how we express ourselves.

Most of all, however, we have learned about each other. Mr. Popular in high school is a real scholar of philosophy and religion. The girl we thought hated everyone – well, she had her reasons. Some of us have really grown up a lot; some of us are still kids. One of us is engaged. People have learned that I am addicted to MTV and that one girl just got her dream part in a musical. Most of us have moved on to different places in our lives, with different friends. But we know now, more clearly than I think we ever did in high school, that we have a core group of friends who will always care about us. I hope that when I'm 70 I am still getting emails, perhaps titled, "Hey Old Folks."

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

GLBT Awards Given

The Northampton Area Lesbian and Gay Business Guild (NALGBG) proudly announced the recipients of its annual awards of distinction on Oct. 27.

Northampton mayor Clare Higgins and Venture Out, a local outdoor recreation and social group, were cited for their many years of service to the lesbian and gay community. The awards were presented at the NALGBG-sponsored Charity Ball and Silent Auction at the Delaney House on Friday, Nov. 3.

Mayor Clare Higgins is being cited for her six-years of service as an openly lesbian member of the Northampton City Council and for her current service as mayor. Known as an advocate for the disenfranchised, Mayor Higgins is a role model for the lesbian and gay community. Her commitment to diversity, equality and social justice makes her truly deserving of the 2000 NALGBG Award of Distinction for an individual.

As one of the oldest and possibly most successful lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender organizations in Western Massachusetts, Venture Out is the recipient of the 2000Award of Distinction for an organization. Venture Out has served the community consistently for 10 years, providing a social outlet and community building experience that has become a unique and valuable resource to the community.

–Collegian Staff

Adventures of a College Fag-Hag: Letter to Mother

Dearest Mum,

How is life in that drab little town of ours? Yes, I did get your last letter. Yes, I'm still hanging around with the "boys" though I am meeting straight people, too. No, the straight guy I told you about has not asked me out. No, he doesn't think I'm a lesbian. It's no great tragedy he didn't ask me out if he wants to. No, he's not gay....

I went to Rocky (Rocky Horror Picture Show) again this year. You should really come up for it sometime (nudge, nudge, wink, wink). Then you'll get to experience what my life is like on a daily basis (just kidding). Hope to hear from you soon.

Love,
Your Crazy Daughter,
JackiO

The excerpt above is taken from a letter I wrote to my mother recently. She is under the impression that my life is a carnival. She thinks I walk around campus completely skyclad and have sex with random boys. She thinks college is one massive orgy. She laughs as I confirm her suspicions with a straight face. She knows I am crazy.

My mother doesn't understand my life, or me but I think she accepts it. I know it's no real comparison, but I like to think that it helps me empathize with those of my gay friends whose families/friends are having a hard time accepting their lifestyles.

More than once, I have had to tell my mother that I'm straight. I don't think she believes me...

I even think at times that she wishes that I were a lesbian, because it will give her an excuse for not understanding me. It would also be a way for her to reconcile with her sister's ghost. (My aunt was a lesbian. She died my freshman year of college from lung cancer.) By thinking of me as gay, I think she feels that there is some remainder of my aunt still present.

But I digress. My mother came for a visit a few weeks ago and we talked. Now, to the rest of the world this might seem like no great feat, but to my mother and I it is a huge step. We don't have much in common. My sister has always been the apple that fell closer to the tree. However, this particular visit I was the center of my mother's attention. That felt really surreal to me as well as amazing. I also found it humorous to learn that she told stories about my "boys" and me to her co-workers. "My daughter," she said laughing, "Went to a drag ball. Can you imagine?" She giggles as she relates the telling of her tale and her audience's reactions. I never knew that my mother even paid attention when I told her my crazy stories. Never mind, that she passed them on. I'm proud of her for being able to accept, and find humor, in my life. I think she's beginning to see things as I see them. (Hehe. Kind of scary, huh Mum?)

After her visit I received a letter from her. It was just a simple card with a summary of her life and a few small praises about mine. That short card meant more to me than any other article of mail that I have ever received to this date.

So, what am I saying? I guess I'm appealing to those who find others lifestyles difficult to understand. You don't have to understand why. Only know that you care for them. Truth and understanding come when we stop looking for the answers. With my mother, I used to tell her what she wanted to hear, because it avoided the questions. Finally I gave up trying to hide the fact that we had nothing in common, and as a result we found common ground. Now I am able to say what I'm thinking and though others may not agree, if they find the relationship worth pursuing then perhaps they will find a common ground too. Who knows Mum, maybe the straight boy will ask me out. He just might have found his common ground.

Jackie Oh is a UMass student.

(Questions? Comments? Complaints? Email me at lenore1890@hotmail.com)

Subscribe to the Pride Alliance mailing list!
Email UmassPride@egroups.com.

Make your voice heard! Write for the GLBT Affairs page. Contact editor Jeanie Gorlovsky at jeanie@student.umass.edu.

Quintessentially Queer Café

The Quintessentially Queer Cafe was held Thursday, Nov. 9, at the UMass Campus Center Graduate Lounge. The event was intended for queer students to have an opportunity to show off their talents in a comfortable environment. Students from the five colleges watched, listened and performed poetry and song, and after a brief intermission a singer-songwriter named Scotland, a regular to the event, put a close the evening.

The only downfall of the event was poor attendance. Despite the good turnout, the majority of people there were women. There were only about four men to the 15 to 20 women in the group, and Scotland was the only male performer. My loudest applause went to those few men who showed up to support the queer community. What excuse do other queer men have for not supporting their community as well?

One can only hope that the problem in this situation was merely a lack of advertisement. It would be sickening, to say the least, to have to place the fault on a lack of interest. I sincerely hope that all queer events are not as poorly represented as this one – otherwise, we aren't really a community at all.

–Lynne Babineau.

The Challenge of Coming Out

Coming out. It's something that most GLBT people experience.

Whether they look forward to it or not is a very personal thing. For some of us, we snuck out of the closet very slowly and cautiously, nervous about what everyone would say, as well as being nervous about how we ourselves feel. Others were hit in the butt by the door on the way out. Either way it is an experience that many of us will never forget.

I will never forget how it felt when I realized that I'm bisexual, how I dealt with it through junior high and high school, and how it felt when I finally truly opened the door and was honest with both myself and my friends.

I first knew that I was bisexual when I was just a kid. I wasn't looking at magazines and found myself turned on by women and I wasn't experimenting with a friend. I was simply on a dinner cruise with a friends' family when I realized that the woman across from me was catching my attention more than any male in the room. We were doing the chicken dance and I couldn't take my eyes off of her. She was so beautiful, fun, laid-back, and nice. I knew that night that I was bisexual, though I didn't know the term yet. I thought that it was odd, but okay. My parents had told me that I should make decisions that I felt were right for me. Never in their wildest dreams would they have thought that I was bisexual. My parents had consistently told me that I was a good kid, so I assumed that these thoughts were good and would be seen as okay by them. Luckily, I didn't tell them for probably six or seven years.

When I realized my sexual preference, the last thing that I was going to do was tell my friends. So I went through junior high and high school liking both boys and girls. No one every brought up the subject of homosexuality at any point during class except to say to a friend "You're such a fag/dyke." It was seen as a joke in my schools, but was taken seriously enough so that no one ever came out. It was seen as almost an insult, or wrong, to be anything other than straight. So I kept my mouth shut.

By the middle of high school, people started figuring out that I wasn't straight, but they had no idea of what I was. All they knew was that I didn't only like boys. Everyone knew that I liked boys, but no one knew what else. Near the end of high school, I finally let the suspense out and came out to my friends and acquaintances.

The response was...pretty positive. Most of my friends said that they knew that I was "different" somehow, but they didn't know how. The others responded with "whatever." One girl literally ran away screaming and saying that she didn't want a dyke to hit on her. I took it with a grain of salt. She wasn't anyone to talk.

Next came the venture to college. Here I first learned about Coming Out Day. I took advantage of this day dedicated to GLBT people. So on Oct. 11, 1998, I officially came out to a bunch of my friends and to my brother's best friend. I wasn't quite ready to come out to my parents and my brother's best friend was like a brother to me, so he was close enough for the time being.

Their shock, as well as their understanding, was wonderful. All of my friends were great about it. They were very happy for me and knew how to take the news. There was no criticism, only love. They actually told me about how they wanted to tease me about it before, but they wanted to make sure of my sexual preference before anything was said. One of my friends actually asked how long I'd been with my girlfriend at the time. It was funny because I'd introduced her to all of my friends as just a friend. But they all still knew. It was wonderful.

The next part of my worrying was when I finally received an e-mail back from my brother's best friend. He was also great about it. He saw nothing wrong with it and only wanted to see me happy. His response to my news made me happier than I thought was possible. I didn't know what to say other than "thank you." So that's all I said.

Coming out was a wonderful experience, one that I'm sure I will never forget. Life has been a little easier since then, mainly because I no longer have to hide who I am.

Emily Georges is a UMass student..

GLBT Events Calendar – 11/14-11/19

Tuesday, Nov. 14
Pride Alliance, the UMass group for GLBT students and straight allies, is meeting in the Campus Center room 168C at 7 p.m. All are welcome!

The Amherst-Franklin county area PFLAG, a support, education, and advocacy group for parents, family members, and friends of lesbians, gays, bisexuals, and transgendered people, meets on the second Tuesday of each month at the Grace Episcopal Church Parish Hall in Amherst from 7-9 p.m.

Wednesday, Nov. 15
There will be a meeting of the Pride Alliance's Political Committee at 8 pm in the Pride Alliance office, 413B Student Union. Call 545-0154 for more information.

Thursday, Nov. 16
The LGBT Lunchtime Lecture Series presents Lisa Bowleg, a social psychologist and assistant psychology professor at the University of Rhode Island. Bowleg's lecture, "Multiplicities: Exploring Multiple Minority Identities and Experiences in the Lives of Black/African-American Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender People," will take place at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 905.

Pride Alliance is going bowling at night! To find out more, and to sign up to go, call the Pride Alliance office at 545-0154.

Saturday, Nov. 18
There will be a gender-role-free contra dance at the Northeast American Dance Studio in Northampton. For more information, call 584-0938.

GLBT Mentoring Opportunity!

We are looking for some enthusiastic students to get involved in a fabulous community service project called Project SAME. Project SAME (Students Allied Mentoring for Education) is a program that was founded by Steven Belec, an activist and student at the University of Massachusetts in part through grants received from the UMass Small Grants Program.

Project SAME seeks to link gay, lesbian, bisexual, or transgender students in the Five College area to GLBT-identified high school students. In doing this, it will provide the high school students with positive GLBT role models, since too few exist in our society. The over-arching goal of Project SAME is to seek to decrease the drop out rates of GLBT students in high school due to pressures from peers and family members regarding the students' sexuality. The project also seeks to encourage high school GLBT students to continue their educational endeavors into higher education. In the spring, participants will meet their mentors and spend a day with them enjoying the "college experience" in a day-long conference event with guest speakers.

We are now seeking GLBT students in the Five College area to serve as mentors to GLBT students. Participating college students will be asked to serve as mentors to a few high school students in Central and Western Massachusetts high schools through e-mail exchanges, phone exchanges, written exchanges and video conferencing. This will include, but isn't limited to, one attempted visit to the students' high school gay-straight alliance group, bi-weekly communications, monthly meetings with other mentors and participation in the spring conference.

If you are interested in becoming a mentor, please e-mail Steven at sbelec@student.umass.edu with "Project SAME" in the subject line, or call him at 413-546-6138. Be sure to leave your name, school affiliation, and contact information.

–Collegian Staff

GLBT EVENTS CALENDAR – 11/20-11/27

Monday, Nov. 20
There will be an annual "Valuable Families" meeting at KidSports in Hadley from 6:30-8:30 p.m. Call 585-1257 for more information.

Tuesday, Nov. 21
Pride Alliance, the UMass group for GLBT students and straight allies, is meeting in the Campus Center room 911-15 at 7 p.m. All are welcome! After the meeting, stay for the Social Committee meeting at 8 pm.

Friday and Saturday, Nov. 24-25
There will be a Lesbian Homeshow, showcasing the finest in lesbian-made wares, at the Northampton Center for the Arts (17 New South Street in Northampton). The times are 5 to 9 p.m. on Friday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday. For more info call 534-4408 or 533-5895.

Sunday, Nov. 26
The Men's Resource Center presents their monthly Sunday brunch for gay, bisexual, and questioning men from 11-1 at 236 Pleasant Street in Amherst. After the brunch there will be a session to discuss how the Resource Center can better attract, serve and support GBQ men. For information, call 253-9887.

Adventures of a College Fag-Hag: Ode to the purple underwear

I used to work at the D.C. in Northeast. I used to like my job, but things changed. Things are always changing. One day you see the purple underwear and the next day they're gone.

One morning last semester, as I dragged my butt to the D.C. for about the 100th time that week, I saw them. They lay discarded on the steps between Mars Lyon and the Worcester Dining Hall. A rather sorry looking pair of women's purple underwear tossed carelessly on the ground. Now, I know it sounds silly, but I couldn't shake the image of those underwear deprived of the warmth of their owner. I mean imagine that you were that underwear. One day you did your job, keeping the butt of your owner warm and toasty, and whatever else underwear does and the next day you lie cold and abandoned on the not so stable steps in Northeast's quad. How would you feel? What would your purpose be?

"Sigh" I thought about those underwear all day. I talked about them to everyone I came in contact with that day. They all looked at me as if I'd stripped naked and started dancing the hula. Who owned that poor pair of lingerie that now had no purpose? Would this person just as easily discard a friend or family member on a whim? I wondered what I would do if the underwear had been mine. I certainly wouldn't discard them so that the whole world could see what I had done.

I passed those panties several times that day and every time I couldn't help but find the irony and sadness in the whole situation. Does no one care about dignity anymore?

The next day on my way to the D.C. yet again, I looked at the spot where the underwear had been the day before. Where once these bastard undies had laid there was now an empty spot. What happened to them? I wondered, and still wonder to this day. Did the owner come to claim their lost property? Did someone find the situation funny and decide to take them home and display them as a shrine? (Probably not). Or did some brave soul have the courage to send the dead to their proper resting place? I suppose I'll never know the answer and that it will remain one of life's great mysteries. It will reside along with the other monster questions of our time such as: Why are we here? What is the meaning of life? Which came first: the chicken or the egg? And finally, what happened to the purple underwear? Will we ever know? I guess not, but I would just like to honor these mysterious garments and their bravery in the face of embarrassment.

Now I suppose some of you might wonder what this has to do with gay issues. Well, you see, it's a metaphor for how our society treats those who are different from the norm. They discard them as the owner of the purple underwear had. They do not do this in private or in a manner that is considered proper; instead it is a public bashing. The reciprocates, left cold, abandoned and struggling to contain their dignity in a world that sees them as nothing but trash. So, once again, I salute you, the discarded purple underwear of society.

Jackie Oh is a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

Tuesday, November 14, 2000

6

Arts Editor •
Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

A devilish time at the Fine Arts Center

DR FAUSTUS
Rand Theater
Nov. 10

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

We have the right to say what has been said and even what has not been said in a way that belongs to us in a way that is immediate and direct."

This quote by Antonin Artaud is placed, perhaps as a disclaimer, in the program for the UMass Theater Department's current production of "Doctor Faustus." Sounds pretty good, doesn't it?

In theory, sure. But as seen in director Tanya Kane-Parry's vision of this classic story, Artaud's idea falls into obscurity in practice.

Everyone knows the tale behind Christopher Marlowe's play. In it Faustus sells his soul to the devil in exchange for knowledge and power. His forbidden desires, representative of the seven deadly sins, get him in a heap of trouble. The text exudes religious implications, which were, for 16th century England, plenty important.

And now, over 400 years later, with the aid of a flashy sound design, actors striking deliberate pose and a merciless manipulation of the original script, the Theater Department's production tries to prove that Faustus can speak just as clearly to modern audiences.

Heh, remember what Artaud said.

But this is what I say. When does reinterpretation exceed originality and become absurdity? When does making something classic into something distinctly modern surpass creativity and reel into the ridiculous? When does saying even "what has not been said" go beyond conceptualizing and enter silliness?

When Kane Parry directs a play might be one answer.

The Department has taken Marlowe's Faustus, reduced it to no more than 10 pages of text, and under Kane Parry's direction, extended those pages to 90 minutes of movement and noise.

Of course it isn't all bad. With an absolutely beautiful set design by Steve Haves, a brilliant if eclectic sound design by Nick Keenan, and truly unique costume design by Kathleen Jansyn Thaw, Faustus is aesthetically solid. Kane Parry brings all of these elements together to paint stunning stage pictures and intensely sensual moments. But she fails to provide the cohesion needed to unite each of these achievements consistently, to produce a worthwhile piece of theater.

Messy, full cast dance routines to DMX's "Party Up" and Black Sheep's "This or That" (among others), though daring, ruined the drama of Faustus' remorse or the force of the three-actor embodiment of Mephistopheles. Having nearly every line echoed by another actor or all actors grew tiresome. Seeing, essentially, every moment of the show extended to an extreme portrayal of some emotion, appropriate or not, just didn't drive a point home. And, for God knows why, having the technical crew move set pieces in Raddolph the Rednosed Reindeer costumes confused any audience member that almost saw a pattern in Kane-Parry's art.

Beneath the rubble of such distinctly "experimental" direction was a cast of actors who have my deepest sympathies. It was clear that real talent would have surfaced if they weren't left only with unnaturally zealous personalities to portray.

Russell Rakouskas, Gregory Hoyt and Bryn Manion who, as a unit, played the messengers of Satan who answered Faustus' pleas. Their timing and ability to work off of each other was exact and, undoubtedly, if given lines that didn't simply demand they yell angrily, each of them could exhibit rich talent. Matthew Ferraro, too, seemed to carry unofficially the rest of the cast in much of their ensemble work and, again, revealed skill that would have been much more effective in subtle realities. Richard Ballon, as Faustus, was the only actor with the chance to deliver a range of emotions and thoughtful transitions. Unfortunately, he came up short when his character's dynamics should have appeared. Instead he was rather stagnant, though acceptable, an upset party to his own wild desires and Satan's will.

I am all for innovative moves in art. Even in theater. There should be no limits to what artistic visions should encompass. But there are times when the intentions behind doing something new and different are confusing. In Faustus, misguided direction leads a powerful group of actors and obvious creativity astray. It becomes hard to tell whether Kane-Parry made things happen for the sake of telling a story or simply for the sake of them happening.

"Doctor Faustus" is playing Thursday through Saturday of next weekend at 8 p.m. in the Rand Theater. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts box office at 545-2311.

RUTH CECCAROSSI/COLLEGIAN

Richard Ballon as Faustus ponders the difficulties of knowing everything in exchange for eternal damnation.

Blackout hits Pearl Street last Thursday

DEEP BANANA BLACKOUT
Pearl Street Nightclub
Nov. 9

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday night there was a blackout in the Pearl Street Nightclub Ballroom. It was not caused by a power outage or any other catastrophe. Rather a packed house that flocked to see Deep Banana Blackout (DBB) caused it. DBB is one of a growing number of very successful jambands to come out of New England. Rather than from Vermont, Deep Banana hails from Bridgeport, CT where two separate bands converged together to form this touring dynamo.

For those who have never seen a DBB show, they mix a unique blend of funky songs and pure fun. This eight-piece ensemble gets so excited about their music that the energy cannot help but spill over to the crowd.

The show started off with a bang with instrumental favorite "Fuzzy Logic" featuring the band's excitable guitarist Fuzz. This song is used frequently to open DBB's show because it really gets both the crowd and the band grooving. Next up was a song named "Fire it Up," which will be featured on the new album coming out soon.

This tour debuts the band's brand new front-women Hope Clayburn. Hope has the difficult task of replacing previous singer and fan favorite Jen Durkin, who played her last show this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival in August. Making the transition to a new musician in an established band is a very difficult thing to do, especially when the person is your lead singer, but DBB is doing a great job acclimating Hope to her new role.

COURTESY DEEP BANANA BLACKOUT

Damn, that's jam! Deep Banana Blackout played Pearl Street.

Hope adds a whole new dimension to the band, with her saxophone and flute talents on top of her extremely impressive soulful voice. This was no more evident than on the Latin feeling quently to open DBB's show because it really gets both the crowd and the band grooving. Next up was a song named "Fire it Up," which will be featured on the new album coming out soon.

This tour debuts the band's brand new front-women Hope Clayburn. Hope has the difficult task of replacing previous singer and fan favorite Jen Durkin, who played her last show this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival in August. Making the transition to a new musician in an established band is a very difficult thing to do, especially when the person is your lead singer, but DBB is doing a great job acclimating Hope to her new role.

This second, shorter set began with "Universal" and keyboardist Cyrus Madan ripping away on the solo. The eccentric Peter Prince came on stage to join the band on "Its Your Thang" and opened the show. Prince was a great addition to this song as he played some killer riffs throughout this song. The set progressed splendidly as each member of the band had ample opportunity to show the crowd what Deep Banana Blackout is all about. The second set ended with dueling saxophones between Hope and saxophonist Rob Somerville during "Homolingo."

The show ended after a great two-song encore featuring "1,2,3,4" and "Anesthetic." This was a great show through and through. My fears have successfully been squelched about Hope not being able to replace Jen. Deep Banana Blackout continues on their Northeastern tour before settling down for a two day New Year's Eve extravaganza in their hometown of Bridgeport.

Less Than Jake brings ska joy to Palladium

LESS THAN JAKE
Worcester Palladium
Nov. 9

By Andy Vogt
Collegian Staff

The ska craze hit American pop culture in 1997, introducing teenage kids to bands such as the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, Reel Big Fish and Save Ferris. Months later, the craze was over and ska was declared to be dead.

However, Less Than Jake's energy-packed set Thursday night at the Worcester Palladium proved that the genre is still alive and well. The six-piece band from Florida coasted through an hour and ten minute set filled with old and new favorites alike, as hundreds of young kids danced and sang along.

LTJ opened the night with a track off their new disc Borders and Boundaries, "Magnetic North." Immediately, the crowd was in a frenzy as the pit started to move. The band dipped into some old songs from arguably their most famous album Losing Streak as they played "Sugar in Your Gas Tank," "Shindo," and "Johnny Quest Thinks We're Sellouts."

Right now, Less than Jake is on tour opening up for Bon Jovi, but they took a break from playing sold out 15,000 seat arenas to play a smaller venue. However, they still managed to bring in well over a thousand people to the show, the vast majority of them being high school aged kids and even younger. LTJ has refused over the years to play anything but all-ages shows, and this has been the cornerstone for their success. The sextet out of Gainesville, Florida has released six albums and countless vinyl records with the support of their young fans.

The band thanked all the kids for coming out, and gave a shout-out to all of the parents in the background for bringing their children to the show.

Although many of Less than Jake's usual stage antics were missing from the show, such as their infamous toilet paper gun, the band still played with plenty of vigor. The horn section danced and Roger, the bass player, jumped around and played to the crowd. Songs later on in the set included "Automatic," "I Think I Love You," and a high-octane version of "Jen Doesn't Like Me Anymore." The night ended with a searing version of "Last One Out of Liberty City" which featured a "circle-pit" of kids encouraged on by lead singer/guitarist Chris. The action became so fast and furious that several kids almost ended up injured.

Altogether, the group played approximately 17 songs, with background vocals provided on every one by the crowd. The throng of teenagers went home satisfied as Less than Jake put on another awesome performance. The band proved that ska still has plenty of life in it for its many young fans.

However, the opening band, Big Wig, provided 45 minutes of pure musical horror. The four-piece band out of New Jersey played power-driven punk filled with annoying riffs, incoherent lyrics and plenty of screaming. The group didn't appear to have one distinct song as they all meshed together into one horrible-sounding mess. Running out of material, the band wasted time by continuously asking the crowd if they liked sex. It wasn't funny the first time, and it grew more and more tiresome as the set wore on. A low point to an otherwise fantastic concert.

COURTESY JOSHUA KESSLER

Less Than Jake and their antics took the stage in Worcester last week.

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE adoption
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
99 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS Student Travel Services On-campus contact: Josh @ 413-549-4514
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com

The Arts page...feel the love.

Food Science
The Major where it's OK to play with your Food!!!
Recent UMass Food Science majors are developing products for food companies like Kraft, Coca-Cola, General Mills, and Ocean Spray.
Great Jobs...Great Salaries.
What will you be doing after you graduate?
The Department of Food Science
Phone 5-2276, e-mail <dept@foodsci.umass.edu>
or Visit our web site: www.umass.edu/foodsci

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on eyeglasses from the new on-site Optical Services at UHS
A great place to get contact lenses
Convenient hours and location
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer: $25 off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient.
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H Bloom O D
Director UHS Eye Care Services

The woman behind the wall; Tucker leaves legend

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

She met a man with a load of bricks, and said, "please, man, give me those bricks to block my goal with." So the man gave her the bricks, and she carefully built a wall with them. Then, female student-athletes with field hockey sticks came to her, and as they did to the other collegiate goalies, screamed, "goaltender, goaltender, we are going to knock your wall down and score on you." And she responded: "No. Not by the muskets of my Minutewoman defense."

"Then we'll just huff, and we'll puff and we'll blow your wall down and score on you," they said.

Well, they huffed, and they puffed, they puffed and they huffed, they shot and they fired some more; but they just could not knock her wall down. They could not score on the goaltender of the Massachusetts field hockey team. They couldn't score on senior Zowie Tucker.

O.K., she wasn't perfect. But she did stop 126 of the 144 shots on goal she faced this season. And that's nearing the line of faultlessness.

She's just good. In fact, it's safe to say that she'll be placed right behind her coaches, Patty Shea (Head Coach) and Hilary Rose (Assistant Coach), as one of the best in UMass history. But the modest Neath, South Wales native won't tell you that herself. She also won't tell you that many people are calling her the best goaltender in the country this year.

"It's a nice thing to say," Tucker said. "And it's always a compliment [when someone tells you that]. But there's always somebody better out there."

She was the backbone of the Minutewomen the entire year. Because when her teammates didn't show up (in the figurative sense of the phrase), she somehow found the will to do so. And her 11 shutouts bestow validity to that.

Only once did she let in more than two goals in a single game – that coming from the 24-shots-a-game firing squad of the University of North Carolina. She let her opponents tally more than once in only three contests and her home cage at Richard F. Garber field swallowed up only five enemy bullets the entire season.

"This whole year has been a highlight," Tucker said. "This is the best record we've had in four years. And I've been the most consistent this year which makes me happy."

Tucker doesn't overlook the fact that she had help, however, as the defense in front of her was also ranked by many as tops in the nation. Senior Lucy Koch and juniors Anke Bruemmer, Jill Fantasia and Kerry Ann Jaggassar combined to form one of the best offense killing teams this school has ever seen.

"It's pretty cool having Anke, Lucy, Jill and Kerry Ann in front of me – I think we all worked together pretty well."

The Final Four – it was her goal for the season, along with every one of her coaches and teammates. And although it looked like it might happen this year, the powerhouse Atlantic Coast Conference wouldn't see fit as UMass lost to UNC 5-1 in the second round of the NCAA Tournament. It was the only accomplishment left on the list – it's the only one she can't cross out. The four A-10 Championships and four NCAA Tourney appearances have been crossed out, however. And that's not too bad.

It was a frenzied fall in 2000. If the Massachusetts field hockey games didn't end in overtime, It was almost uncanny. At least they weren't losing. Because the Minutewomen didn't lose an overtime game all season long. Tucker wasn't going to lose in extra periods and that's exactly what she would say after every game that found overtime or penalty strokes.

"I don't want to lose in overtime," Tucker said after a 1-0 double-overtime, double stroke period victory over Providence on Oct. 11. "And I don't want to lose in strokes. It's my job and it's what coach expects me do."

In that victory over the Friars, Tucker made two saves in both the first and second halves, a couple more in the second overtime and stopped eight consecutive Providence penalty strokes to grab hold of, at that time, her sixth shutout of the season.

She had a similar performance a week earlier against Boston University at Richard F. Garber field when, in the second stroke period, Tucker stopped all five Terrier shots fired from the stroke circle to seal the deal for the Minutewomen. The wall stood all season long. In fact, this school should probably dedicate a wall to this shot stopper.

"There's a certain presence that she gives off which is purely menacing," said fellow senior Kristen Schmidt after that game: "She looks opponents in the eye and just scares them, you've got to believe in her."

"A few people have told me that you need to look big in goal," Tucker said after her Terrier shutdown. "Every goalie has their own thing. That's just mine."

As a freshman (1997), Tucker started all but one game for the Minutewomen and was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Tournament team. She started every game as a sophomore (1998) for UMass and was an All A-10 selection for the first time. As a junior (1999) she started 22 of 23 games for the Maroon and White, recording seven shutouts. She was also named to the Northeast Region All-American second team and the A-10 All-Conference team while grabbing the A-10 Tourney MVP on the way.

This year she was named to the A-10 All Conference Team as she lead her squad to a perfect 5-0 conference record and the A-10 Tournament championship.

Tucker, who started playing the sport around the age of 12, now has many interesting avenues that she can take in the future – one them possibly leading to the Olympics. The sport management major said that it just depends on where she makes her residence after she graduates.

"I play for my national team when I go home in the summer, so I'm doing that," Tucker said. "One day, if I progress to that level I'd like to follow Patty and Hillary and do the Olympic thing."

But even if that doesn't work out, she has her outstanding academic achievements to fall back on. When asked if it was hard balancing school and sport, she simply chuckled and said: "I've been Academic All-American for the past four years." Just don't take that out of context. She wasn't bragging. That's the first time all year she's given credit to herself. And it's well deserved.

And it's probably for the fact that she didn't want to miss a practice. Skipping class means you can't practice – that was just one of Coach Shea's many rules that Tucker had to get used to, on the field and off. As a foreigner, Tucker entered the UMass system in Shea's first season with the Minutewomen. And although she may not have understood Shea's game plan at first, now that it's all over – it has become crystal clear.

"It's taken me four years to understand why she does it," Tucker said. "It's just what we needed to do to win."

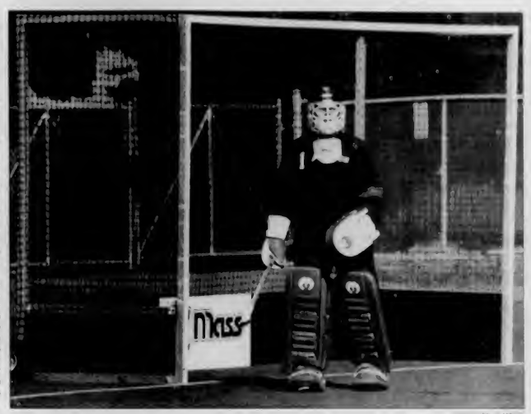
Shea was, by far, the best goaltender in UMass history. So when she rambles off the simple compliment of Tucker, "We have the best goaltender" that means something.

Having the best goaltender wasn't the only huge advantage for UMass this season, however, as the Minutewomen posted the No. 1 defensive ranking in the nation. The offense might have struggled at times, but Tucker was always there – a mold of consistency. She led her team to a 19-4 record this year and in her four years here she racked up 25 solo shut outs – the No. 1 that she wore on her back should have been a hint to everyone.

Sure, it's nice to see your name at the top of a statistical category. And sure, winning is fun, but in the end the unity of Tucker and her fellow Minutewomen is going to speak a lot louder in the future than their field hockey finales last weekend. The relationships formed within this team were probably the cause for 50 percent of UMass' success.

"These guys have always been there no matter what I've been through they've been here to support me. They're basically my family over here," Tucker said. "When [Lucy] Koch, Kristen[Schmidt] and Patty[Robinson] came in they all knew each other, but I didn't feel any awkwardness – they were all really nice, just really good friends.

"If I ever need anything, those are the guys I'm going to go to."



Zowie Tucker stands guard over the UMass cage. This past Sunday, she ended a brilliant career when the Minutewomen fell to No. 2 North Carolina, 5-1, in the Elite Eight.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

the game on a tally from senior Dave Nuel-Bernier. After UMass goalie Mike Johnson stopped a shot from Billy Pugliese, Noel-Bernier flipped the rebound over the Minutemen netminder for a 1-0 lead.

UMass evened the game just under six minutes later when junior Martin Miljko stripped UNO defenseman Joe Yurecko of the puck at the UMass blue line, then broke in alone on Mavericks goalie Rodney McLeod. Miljko skated in and fired a shot between the pads of the UNO goaltender to knot the contest at 1-1.

The score stayed that way until the third period, but not before an eventful middle frame. The Mavericks controlled the action in the second period, peppering Johnson with 13 shots, yet the Excelsior, MN product rose to the challenge on each UNO scoring bid.

"I thought that Mike Johnson did a tremendous job in goal," Kemp said. "There were many times in the second period where we had ample chances to put a goal, but he was up to the task every time.

"In these kinds of games, when you are throwing everything but the kitchen sink at a team and you are still tied, that's when you get scared. When you're throwing everything and you don't get anything out of it, it doesn't take a lot for the other team to knock one into your own net."

Fortunately for Kemp, it was his club who caught a break at the 7:57 mark of the final period. Following a scramble in the slot, Gabinet found the puck on his stick with a flurry of players in front of him. So, he ripped a slap shot through a screen that beat Johnson to give the Mavericks a 2-1 advantage, while also igniting the raucous crowd in the process.

Then, just over a minute later, Gabinet fired a pass through a seam in the UMass defense right onto Wong's stick. The freshman center walked in on Johnson and beat him to net the eventual game-winning goal for UNO.

Cahoon would then pull Johnson with just over one minute remaining for the extra attacker, and it paid off when Turner connected off a wild flurry in front of McLeod with 46 seconds left. From there, UMass had its chances to tie it, but came up just short.

"We've got a good, hard-working group of kids, but we've been playing some pretty good Top 10 teams," Cahoon said. "It's the attitude that the kids have, they play because they love it. There's no fear of failure. But as a team, we clearly have to get better."

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

For the Tar Heels, the win escalated them to the Final Four, where they will take on Maryland next Saturday. In the other Final Four game, Old Dominion will do battle with Wake Forest, after the two teams beat UConn and Michigan, respectively.

While UMass was unable to pick up the Final Four berth, the weekend was far from a complete wash. That was because in the first round, the Minutewomen edged rival Boston University 2-1, when Schmidt scored the game-winning goal off a penalty corner with only 5:22 remaining in the contest. The helpers came from likely sources, as Koch and Robinson netted their 15th and 17th respective assists of the 2000 campaign.

Lindsay Abbott netted the first goal for UMass at the 26:53 mark of the second half, in order to counter a BU score by Christina Strauss just under 10 minutes into the game.

"We were fortunate to come out on top," said Shea. "It was just a regular UMass win – we dominated but still struggled to win."

Despite the fact that the Minutewomen failed to gain the Final Four birth they were so desperately seeking, they did show that they were more than capable of matching up with any other team in the country. And next year, under the tutelage of coach Shea, they will once again be hunting for a National Title.

Attention Sports Staff!!!

All stories that are to be printed in the Basketball Preview Magazine are due no later than Friday at 12 p.m. This deadline must be met in order to have the issue out on time. If there are any problems with this please call Smitty or Kobo A.S.A.P.

The School for International Training
&
The International Language Institute of MA offer:
ESOL TEACHER CERTIFICATE COURSE
(SIT TESOL Certificate)
Jan 2-26, 2001
or 4 weekends between
Jan. 13 & April 16, 2001
at ILI, in downtown Northampton
For info call: (413) 586-7569 or visit our website: www.languageschoolusa.org

haircuts★ colors ★highlights
REGENCY HAIRSTYLISTS
189 N. Pleasant St
253-9526
perms★ tanning★facial waxing

YOUR WORLD.
YOUR CHANCE TO MAKE IT BETTER.
WWW.AMERICORPS.ORG
1.800.942.2677 (1.800.833.3722 TDD)
AMERICORPS. GIVE BACK FOR A YEAR. SERVE YOUR COMMUNITY. CHANGE YOUR LIFE.
AmeriCorps and Peace Corps at UMASS, Wednesday, November 15th at 7:00 p.m. 504 Goodell Hall UMASS. Join former AmeriCorps and Peace Corps members for discussion about their experiences. Refreshments will be served. For more information call 617-565-7002

Anniversary Sale Week
November 15th - 19th
Enter to Win a Zanna
$1000 Shopping Spree
Two $250 Shopping Sprees
Our 1998 winner was UMASS Student Suzanne Schmuul, Class of 2000. This year it could be YOU!
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Swing/Salsa Dance Northampton Center for the Arts. Wednesdays. Lessons 7pm $10, $7/students. Dance 8:30 $5 for dance only (413) 259-2982 (Mark)

SIGMA KAPPA PLEDGE KRIS W I Still Know, Your final Clue! This Angel Sister has mad respect for the queen because she is royalty herself Eh!

OFFcampus Antics Find Ruth in her favorite pajamas on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

96 Suzuki Sidekick exc condition. New tires, Tune-up, 50k, 5sp. $7500 obo Dana 253-0540

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

99 Saturn SL manual, air, 25,500mi, Yakima Rack $9500, 545-1998

AUTO FOR SALE

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

Ready 4 Ski Season 93 Isuzu Trooper 5spd, 4x4, 4dr, AC, excellent condition. 74k. $7700 413-323-6565

1991 VW Passat 5spd, CD player, sun roof, spoiler. Must sell $2695 obo 546-3114

89 Volvo Stationwagon. Mechanically: runs absolutely mint! Body: Tan, no rust, very solid. Loaded: AC, sunroof, leather, etc. Milage 181k, 4 new snow tires included, family owned, dealer maintained. (Book value $6060) asking $5700 or B/O Jim (413) 628-4789

CHILDCARE

Responsible Caring Person for 4 Year Old Girl. 3 Afternoons a week or more. Car. Ref. Thru June or Summer. 259-1750

EMPLOYMENT

Work from home - up to $25-$75hr PT/FT mailorder, 877-608-Rich

EMPLOYMENT

Don't Get a Job Next Summer, Get a Business! Earn Avg. of $8563/summer as The Manager of a University Painters Summer Business Must be SOPH, JR or SR. Information and application at: www.university painters.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campus fundraiser.com

Administrative Assistant. Use your skills and make a difference. International grassroots hunger lobby seeks computer literate, highly organized individual. 15 hrs/week. Main St. Northampton. Email resume and writing sample to: empower@javanet.com

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Mail Boxes Ect. Year round and part time. Customer service and lifting required. Computer background helpful. Apply in person, 6 University Dr. (New Market Center, Amherst)

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

Looking for a great paying job? Like to travel? Are you good with people? Than look no futher, All Starr Meats wants you. No exp. nes. 18-25 2wk pd trn. Call Sheli @ 413-788-9607 ext. 22

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Comfort Plus! Authentic Surgical Scrubs. Wear them to bed or wear them to class! Check out our website at www.authentic srubs.com

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom open in large house. Cheap Rent! 2min walk from campus. Available Jan. 1st, call Laura 549-5383

ROOMMATE WANTED

Three Girls on Main Street need roommate for spring. Call 256-3816

Wanted to Share 2 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. Start Jan 1 Call Beth 665-8572

Two Girls Looking for roommate in 3 bedroom Pufton Apt. Avail Jan/01. Call 549-4017

Looking for 1-2 females for 2nd bedroom in Brandywine starting Jan 1. Call 549-1988 for more info.

SERVICES2

Want Academic Success? Want to take professional notes and pass exams? Get the academic guide to success! For more information send SASE to: TDS, P.O. Box 225 Sunderland, MA 01375

SERVICES

Calculas Homework? Get any derivative, automatically, step-by-step, with each step explained. Free! www.calc101.com

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash-tours.com

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@sun coastvacations.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL1-800-227-1166

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

HSCN Bulletin Board
1 CBS Hartford
2 CBS Boston
3 ABC 40 Springfield
4 UPN 57 Springfield
5 HSCN Movie Channel
6 UPN Hartford
7 HSCN New Movie Channel
8 NBC 30 New Britain
9 FOX 61 Hartford
10 NBC 22 Springfield
11 International Channel
12 CBS/TV Cablevue Channel 3
13 WB 59 New Haven
14 ESPN
15 ESPN 2
16 TNT
17 TBS
18 CNN
19 CNN Headline News
20 Lifetime
21 USA
22 A&E
23 TNT
24 BET
25 Nickelodeon
26 Showtime
27 Sunrise Financial Network
28 Cinemax
29 Cable TV Network
30 MTV
31 VH1
32 The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING		C - Campus								NOVEMBER 14, 2000
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Hitler's Lost Trial" (N) (In Stereo)				Frontline "Real Justice" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		Sports Heroes
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG (N) (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Convictions"	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG (N) (In Stereo)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)		Judging Amy "Convictions"	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis		Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer	Angel "Darla" (N) (In Stereo)			News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)	News		Tonight Show
WTXX	4	7th Heaven "Who Knew?"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	+/h "Jade" (1995, Suspense) David Caruso				News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "411 on the DL"		News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "Hitler's Lost Sub" (N) (In Stereo)				Frontline "Real Justice" (In Stereo) (Part 1 of 2)		Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire	Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis		Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	+/h "Jade" (1995, Suspense) David Caruso				Frasier	Med Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	72	Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Orlando Magic at Sacramento Kings (Live)					NBA Basketball: Knicks at SuperSonics
A&E	33	Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Securitate"		Biography "Alan Jackson"		American Justice "Why O.J. Simpson Won"				Law & Order
CNN	29	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Shein's Money	+/h "BLAIR-P.S." (1997, Comedy)	Halle Berry, Martin Landau,			Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show	Shein's Money
DISC	69	Wild Discovery "Wild Asia"		Wild Discovery: Monkeys		On the Inside: Prisons		New Detectives "Cold Cases"		FBI Files "Deadly Trail" (N)		Justice Files
ESPN	31	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Preseason NIT – Pepperdine at Ind.				College Basketball: Preseason NIT – Princeton at Duke				Sportscenter
LIFE	62	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Judith Krantz"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Deadly Family Secrets" (1998, Drama) Loni Anderson, Gigi Rice,				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	81	Yupac Spoken	Jackass	Senseless	(N) (In Stereo)			Making Video: Backstreet Boys		Together		Truth (N)	TBA
NICK	53	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Pelswick (N)	Brady Bunch	Brady Bunch	Laverne	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	63	Sliders "World Killer" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 "Acts of Sacrifice"		Invisible Man "Impetus"		Farscape		Lexx: The Series "Love Grows"		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	32	Star Trek: A Captain's Log		Spinal Impact		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Maternity Ward "Hard Labor"		Trauma: Life in the ER		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	25	ER "Suffer the Little Children"		Pretender "Fresh & Blood"		+/ "Addicted to Love" (1997, Comedy-Drama) Meg Ryan,				Bull "How Green Is Your Mart?"		ER (In Stereo)
USA	17	Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Rules of Engagement"		Nash Bridges "Resurrection"		+/h "Billy Madison" (1995, Comedy) Adam Sandler, (In Stereo)				Martin
HBO	13	Legend		+/h "Doosed" (1998, Comedy) Jennifer Tilly, NR		* "American Beauty" (1999) Kevin Spacey. R				Real Sports (N)		Curb-Enthem	G-String Divas
MAX	15	 "Home Alone" (1990, Comedy) Macaulay Culkin. PG				+/h "Oscar" (1991, Comedy) Sylvester Stallone. PG				+/h "Cobra" (1986, Drama) Sylvester Stallone. R		Life Gfy
SHOW	65	(4:30)		 "Throw Momma From the Train" (1987)		+/h "A Night at the Roxbury" (1998) Will Ferrell,			Extras-6th Day	Beggars and Choosers		 "Whatever" (1998) R

Dilbert By Scott Adams

MY STOCK OPTIONS ARE WORTH A FORTUNE NOW. YOU MISERABLE BAG OF CRUD!
OH, LOOK, THEY'RE BACK DOWN TO WORTHLESS.
TRY TELLING HIM THAT BAGS OF CRUD ARE HIGHLY VALUED IN SOME SOCIETIES.
SHUT UP

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

FOUND A GREAT LIQUIDATION PROSPECT, DAD!
LET'S HEAR
IT'S A FIRST-BANKING E-COMMERCE SITE. THE BUZZ IS THEY JUST PARED 35% OF THEIR STAFF.
THERE'S BLOOD IN THE WATER, DAD! I RECOM-MEND WE MAKE A PLAY FOR THEIR INNER-TONY.
WHAT DO THEY SELL?
UM...RAIN GEAR FOR CATS.
KEEP LOOKING.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

HEY, JASON – WANT TO PLAY SOME FOOTBALL?
OK
I'VE GOT THIS NEW MOVE I DO ON POST PATTERNS THAT'S TOTALLY UNSTOPPABLE.
I MEANT PLAY OUTSIDE.
WHAT? LIKE ON A GAMEBOY?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO...THIS IS A GAMEBUOY. NOT A PALM PILOT. I SPENT ALL THAT TIME INPUTTING MY SCHEDULE TO IT GOOD THING I REMEMBERED TO NAP TODAY. I COULD HAVE BEEN REALLY TIRED OTHERWISE.
HANG IN THERE, BUCKY.
AND DO US ALL A FAVOR. WHEN IN DOUBT, NAP.
WHEN IN DOUBT, BY JOVE, THAT'S BRILLIANT!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T RUN THE COUNTRY.
THE PRESIDENT SERVES AT THE PLEASURE OF THE PEOPLE...
...THEY RUN THE COUNTRY.
GOOD JELL-O!...
BLUE'S MY FAVORITE FLAVOR.
GOD BLESS AMERICA.
WHY? I DON'T KNOW.

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci

IN DIAGNOSING YOUR ILLNESS, I'M AFRAID I MUST KNOW: ARE YOU SEXUALLY ACTIVE?
ME?...AM...I
HA HA HA HA HA
HA HA HA HA HA
HMM... YOU DON'T READ THIS COMIC REGULARLY, DO YOU?

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

VICKI DON'T YOU JUST LOVE ANTONIO'S
OF COURSE I DO SPUNK! I LOVE PIZZA!
I'M GETTING MY FAVORITE SLICE! IT'S ALMOST BIG ENOUGH TO BE A FULL MEAL!
ALMOST?
NEXT TIME I'M GOING TO GET A SLICE WITH A LOT OF TOPPINGS
ANTONIO'S IS LOCATED IN THE CENTER OF TOWN!
SPUNK © 2000 MICHAEL LARICCIA

Robotman By Jim Meddick

HI. I'M HERE TO SEE THE SHRINK. HE'S NUTZ.
I AM NOT A SHRINK! I AM A BOARD CERTIFIED PSYCHOTHERAPIST!
AND MY NAME IS NOT PRONOUNCED "NUTS"! IT'S PRONOUNCED "NOOTS"! NU-T-Z! NOOTS! I AM NOT NUTS! I AM NOOTS!
WHAT'S WITH HIM?
HE'S A LITTLE BIT "NOOTS."
NO NUTS

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BUCKY, I DIDN'T GET A RAISE IN MY ALLOWANCE EITHER.
YOU'RE ASKING FOR 10 TIMES MORE THAN SATCHEL GETS AND HE DOES CHORES!
I FEEL I BRING CERTAIN UNIQUE QUALITIES TO THE TABLE.
I'M SORRY, BUCKY, BUT THIS DISCUSSION IS OVER. PLEASE EXCUSE ME WHILE I IGNORE YOU.
BUT, KEW, I UM SEE IT, UH, OH. ALL RIGHT. YOU'RE EXCUSED SALE!

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

THE ENTIRE GOLF WORLD COWERED IN FEAR AT THE SIGHT OF DR. RANDY SMITH AND HIS THUNDER-POWERED DRIVER © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – You're not going to be content today unless you are able to explore one or two new opportunities with complete freedom.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Don't be late today! Punctuality is not only polite, but it is the best way for you to make a good impression and secure a future favor.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Take care that you don't treat others with contempt simply because you are dissatisfied with yourself. Be Fair!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19) – Take care you don't let yourself become so moody and changeable that you are impossible to live with – at home and in public.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb 18) – Unnecessary worry will only keep you from tending to the more important issues and problems facing you today. Don't distract yourself!
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – You're in need of a little, gentle nudge in the right direction today. Someone you love is looking out for you.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Experience will serve you well today, but you won't be able to describe what you're doing with great success. Let your actions speak for you.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Friends will give you your distance today if you ask for it. There is no reason to think that they – or anyone else – will misunderstand.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Go for it today, and enjoy this new fling as if it were the most important thing in the world to you. Someday, in fact, it may be just that!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – It's only after you've made a mistake tat you can truly study just how it is best avoided. Don't be hasty, however, in your won self-judgment.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You can provide a shoulder for someone you know to lean on today – and you can be confident that the favor will be returned when necessary.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – You're being a little too impractical, and someone close to you is sure to remind you of what is really at stake today.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 49 LOW: 34	HIGH: 47 LOW: 28	HIGH: 48 LOW: 31

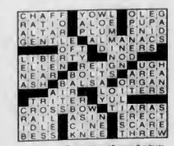
Quote of the Day

"How hard is it to check guns these days? Not hard, they just asked me if it was loaded, and I told them it was."

–Overheard at the Omaha airport

ACROSS
1 Storage-closet wood
8 Takes a chance
11 Lair
14 Gas made by lightning
15 Extremely
16 Stone Age tool
17 Thin soup
18 End-of-season sale
20 Naughty
21 Grabs a bite
23 Cut into cubes
24 Laundry units
26 In a nasty way
28 Warms
30 Bellyache
31 Intuitions, slangily
32 Pantyhose color
33 XX minus VI
36 Flightless birds
37 Nobelist Bunche
38 Computer unit
39 Tooth on a wheel
40 Frizzes
41 Put in folders
42 Does modeling
43 Felt hat
44 Emulated Bing Crosby
47 Doze
48 Devastation
49 Heavy hammer
50 Kept secret
53 Phil Esposito's game
56 Wash away
58 Guys
59 Mattress parts
60 Old Norse inscriptions
61 Um's cousins
62 Lone Ranger's sidekick

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

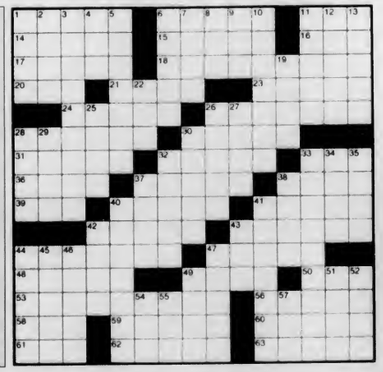


12-5-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

63 Filet mignon

DOWN
1 Baseballer Ty
2 University founder Cornell
3 Trapper of 4 Down
4 Picnic pest
5 Warms over
6 Pipes
7 "— fair ..."
8 Map abbr.
9 Historical period
10 Canned fish
11 Social event
12 Surpass
13 Poet
19 Helper
22 Want
25 Miners' output
26 Nina and Pinta
27 Close by
28 — plaisir
29 CEO's car
30 Sources of water
32 Drugged
33 Marimba's kin
34 Appian Way, e.g.
35 Hindu sacred text
37 Trick
38 Wait
40 Invent
41 Antisnobs
42 "Nonsense!"
43 Winter malady
44 Ring out
45 10K competitor
46 Bakers' needs
47 Final authority
49 Dissolve
51 Brainstorm
52 Rooftop —
54 Dove's sound
55 Relatives
57 Furrow

YOUR AD HERE! 28,000 READERSHIP! CALL 545-3500



Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Charbroiled Chicken Sandwich (B, F, H)

Broccoli-Rice Casserole (vegetarian)

Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan) (W)

Dinner

Beef Fajita

Baked Ziti (vegetarian) (B, F, H)

Tofu Fajita (vegan)

African Vegetable Stew (vegan) (W)

Today's Staff
Night Editor — Bryan Smith
Photo Technician — Maureen Maske
Copy Editor — Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak, Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff — Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Tuesday, November 14, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Minutewomen fall just short of title

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

With 25 minutes left in the first half of last Sunday's game against North Carolina, it looked like the hopes, dreams and prayers of the Massachusetts field hockey team were about to be answered.

The Minutewomen were leading the Tar Heels 1-0, and had the No. 1 ranked defense in the country to stall the UNC attack.

It was about to be the culmination of a season of successes for a team that had become so close to each other, and had ascended to the ranks of the field hockey elite.

UMass	2
BU	1
UNC	5
UMass	1

"Last year the highlight for us was getting past the first round," said senior goalie Zowie Tucker. "This year we know we can get over the first hurdle, and now we have to take another step. We want to go to the final four and it is within our grasp."

"It seems like this whole year has been a highlight," added senior midfielder Lucy Koch.

All season the team had talked about getting to the next level, and now it looked like all the hard work would finally pay off. UMass was a mere 60 minutes from one of the greatest achievements in collegiate athletics: a final Four appearance.

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, things just didn't turn out exactly how they imagined.

With 22 minutes remaining, the Tar Heels began a string of five unanswered goals when Carrie Lingo was able to score her first of two unassisted tallies on the afternoon. From there, UNC exploded, out shooting the Maroon and White 26-1 and winning the penalty corner battle 14-1, on its way to the 5-1 win.

It was the first time all year that UMass had given up more than two goals in a game, and it put an end to an otherwise successful season for the Minutewomen.

"We controlled the first 10 minutes of the game," said UMass Head Coach Patty Shea. "We just lost control of the game. The girls were in a situation that we were not used to and North Carolina took advantage of it."

"I am very sad for my seniors," she added. "They have been with me since I got here four years ago. They are a great group of kids and they have a lot to be proud of."

One of the lone bright spots on the day for the Minutewomen came in the form of midfielder Patty Robinson, who was able to tie the UMass record for the most career assists when she led Kristen Schmidt at the 27:18 mark in the first half. Schmidt's goal gave her team the brief lead, and was her sixth goal in the last four games.

However, it would be the only shot that the Maroon and White would be able to collect throughout the game.

Meanwhile, on the other end of the field, Tucker was being bombarded by the potent North Carolina attack. She fought back valiantly, making 14 solid saves, but it would not be enough to propel her team to the victory.

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY page 7

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend Patty Robinson tied the UMass mark for most career assists. Here she tries to dribble through the defense on her way to the opposing team's goal.

Huge weekend for UMass, but no tourney spot

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

There are times when all a team can do is go out and fight its hardest, fully knowing that it does not control its own destiny in the race for the playoffs.

For the Massachusetts women's volleyball team, this past weekend in Philadelphia represented just that, as even if it could manage to muscle two victories over A-10 rivals LaSalle and Temple, it would need to see Dayton fall in its final regular season matchup against Fordham to make the playoffs.

The Minutewomen (14-13, 10-6 A-10) rose up to the task and fulfilled their end of the bargain, sweeping past the Explorers on Friday and upending the Owls in a five-set triumph on Saturday afternoon.

Unfortunately for them, the Flyers were also up to the task, as they topped the Rams three games to one. Dayton and UMass had identical conference records and split their matches during the season, so the tiebreaker went to overall record, where the Flyers posted an 18-10 tally this year.

"The matches were very exciting," said senior co-captain Rebecca Hasson. "It was very disappointing that we didn't make the playoffs, but we did what we could to get into the tournament. It was a wonderful way to end our season."

UMASS (2-15, 15-12, 12-15, 16-14, 15-12)

In the regular season's final match, junior co-captain Lymarie Llovet led the Maroon and White to a thrilling five-set win over A-10 powerhouse Temple. Llovet threw down a career-high 26 kills and pulled up nine digs in the victory. Hasson added 15 kills and nine digs of her own in the match.

Junior Janeen DeMarte and senior Jenni Drennan also had strong performances in the triumph. DeMarte had 19 digs on the defensive end, while Drennan set up 60 kills for assists.

"Jenni and I had never been able to defeat Temple in their house," Hasson said. "With all our experience in five-game matches this season, we were able to go out and win one."

Temple's big player was All-America candidate Alma Kovaci, who knocked down 29 kills and picked up 17 digs in the five games, but the performance was not enough to carry the Owls, who, nonetheless, claimed second place in the conference.

UMASS (15-8, 15-0, 15-5)

UMass' big guns all showed well in a three game sweep of LaSalle on Friday night in a match that was over in only one hour and 12 minutes.

Hasson paved the way for the Maroon and White, as she unleashed a 13-kill performance to go along with her eight digs on defense. DeMarte was again the leader on defense as she retrieved a match-high 15 digs. Llovet added 12 kills and nine digs as well.

"It was very nice to see us put up a good game because there are very few teams in our conference that we can put away in three games," said Hasson. "It definitely set us up for a good win against Temple."

The Maroon and White wrapped up their A-10 slate with a three-game conference win streak and tallied victories in six of their final seven conference matches.

"It was disappointing only in that we lost a couple of games that we could have in the beginning of the season," Hasson added. "Our team chemistry on and off the court got to the point where it was a very successful season."

UNO sweeps weekend tilt with Minutemen

Late surge not enough for UMass

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

OMAHA, NE — When it comes down to home-ice advantage, the Omaha Civic Auditorium might not be held in such high regards as Wisconsin's Kohl Center or Boston College's Conte Forum.

UNO	3
UMass	2

Nevertheless, on Friday night, the Massachusetts hockey team discovered that "The Bullpen" is still a hostile environment for the opposing teams that enter its premises.

Fueled by second period goals from freshmen Mike Gabinet and Andrew Wong, the University of Nebraska-Omaha Mavericks pulled out a 3-2 win over the Minutemen in front of a sold-out crowd in the state capital. The loss snapped a two-game losing streak for the home team, who had dropped a series against Lake Superior State University last weekend.

"Obviously, it was important for us to get our feet back on the ground after last weekend's games," UNO Head Coach Mike Kemp said. "We put up a good effort for three periods, so I was pleased about that. We did a good job of playing in all three zones throughout the entire evening."

In a game which UNO controlled for the majority of the 60 minutes, UMass still battled the Mavericks until the final horn. For a moment, it even seemed like the Minutemen were on the verge of completing their second 11th hour comeback of the season. Earlier in the year, the Maroon and White trailed Colgate by two goals late in regulation, only to score twice in the final 90 seconds to earn a 4-4 tie with the Red Raiders.

This time around, UMass found itself in the same predicament as it did against Colgate. Trailing 3-1 with under one minute to play, senior captain Jeff Turner netted his third goal of the season off of a scramble in front of the UNO goal.

UMass kept the pressure on following Turner's goal, yet failed to convert the equalizer. The best chance for the Minutemen came in the waning seconds, when Turner set up Samuli Jalkanen in the left circle. However, the sophomore fired a shot over the net just before time expired, and the Mavericks escaped with a one-goal win.

"I thought that we struggled a lot more [Friday]," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "I don't know if it was the long trip or if the kids were too excited. We hung in there, but we couldn't score [the tying goal]."

The Mavericks (5-4) opened the scoring only 1:47 into

Turn to HOCKEY page 7

DAN SANTELLA / COLLEGIAN STAFF

The hockey team celebrates a pivotal Minuteman goal.

Three-goal second period vaults Mavericks to win

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

OMAHA, NE – A night after dropping a hard-fought one-goal decision to Nebraska-Omaha, the Massachusetts hockey team needed a win to split the weekend series with the Central Collegiate Hockey Association (CCHA) opponent.

UNO	3
UMass	1

The second game of the series would prove to be no better than opener, as UMass left the Omaha Civic Auditorium on the short end of a 3-1 decision.

The Mavericks came out of the gate storming and peppered UMass goaltender Markus Helanen with 14 shots in the first, but the senior turned all of them aside. In a period that the Minutemen were clearly outplayed, they were able to head into the intermission with a 1-0 lead.

The first goal of the night came off the stick of Tim Turner. The sophomore was the beneficiary of a great pass from Jimmy Callahan for the tally.

The power play goal was made possible when Callahan made a great pass from behind the net to a streaking Turner in front for the score. But that was all the offense that the Maroon and White would muster on the night as it departed the Cornhusker State losing two non-conference games.

"The conference games are clearly more important, but we're working on a day to day basis," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "You don't try to play a different game though. This is the time to get a guy like Toni Siderholm [did not make the trip to rest a knee injury] mended, so that he's strong for the conference games. The issue with this program though is our day to day preparation."

Trailing 1-0, UNO came out firing in the second period, netting three goals in a span of 7:02. The barrage turned out to be too much for UMass (3-5-1, 3-1 Hockey East) to overcome.

The first of the three Maverick tallies came when Billy Pugliese scored on a picture-perfect move. The senior made a great individual effort from the right-wing boards. He battled for the puck in the corner, dug it out, and then skated to the front of the net before slipping the puck past a sliding Helanen for the goal.

Just over six minutes later, Jason White would score the eventual game-winner on the power play. Defenseman Luke Duplessis was in the penalty box for hooking and UNO (6-4, 3-3 CCHA) advantage of the extra-man opportunity.

White beat a defenseless Helanen from the doorstep to give the Mavericks a lead they would not relinquish.

The senior scored his second goal of the season on the power play at 9:41 of the middle frame on a scramble in front of the UMass net. Both White and defenseman Mike Gabinet were slapping at the puck in the scramble, but it would be White who was attributed with the tally.

The crowd had not finished celebrating White's goal when the final goal of the night was scored. Daniel Samuelsson tallied the third UNO marker off a fluttering shot from the point that found its way to the back of the net. The shot made its way through a wall of UMass and UNO players and beat Helanen under the right arm.

"I thought that we had a better performance than we did last night," Cahoon said. "Markus [Helanen] gave us a chance, but we didn't capitalize."

The Maroon and White had numerous opportunities to score in the game, but were unable to beat UNO goalie Dan Ellis after the first period. Ellis, a freshman from Orangeville, Ontario made 25 saves on the night and kept the UMass attack at bay in crucial situations of the game.

Ellis, a second round draft pick of the Dallas Stars in the 2000 NHL Entry Draft, came up big when he needed to, as he turned aside 10 Minuteman shots in the third to seal the victory.

Despite allowing three goals, Helanen made 33 stops in the loss.

"Our strength starts in the goal," Cahoon said.

The Minutemen have been receiving great goaltending as of late only allowing 10 goals in their last four contests. UMass is 2-2 in those games, with the most impressive win coming against No. 3 New Hampshire via the shutout.

The Maroon and White will look to get back on track when they take on rival UConn Thursday night at the William D. Mullins Center. The puck is scheduled to drop at 7 p.m.

Should you spend your time taking a trip to the Red Planet? Find out in today's arts section.

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Kristen Schmidt has been an integral part of the UMass field hockey team during her distinguished career. To learn more about her, check out Sports.

ARTS p. 6

Volume CVII Issue 50 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 15, 2000

Election woes mount for FL, SGA

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

With 25 electoral votes and the presidency in the balance, counties in Florida reported their election results to Florida's secretary of state yesterday, giving George W. Bush a lead of 300 votes over Al Gore. Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris announced at 7:30 p.m. yesterday that Bush lead Gore 2,910,492 to 2,910,192 with all 67 Florida counties reporting results. Harris said that counties planning to go ahead with manual recounts of ballots must present their justifications for her consideration of new vote totals tomorrow.

"I'm requiring written statements of circumstances to be filed by 2 p.m. tomorrow for three Florida counties that may be considering filing returns past today's deadline," Harris said.

After facing off in the closest presidential election in the nation's history last Tuesday, both candidates need only Florida's 25 electoral votes to become President. However, given Bush's razor thin margin in Florida, absentee ballots mailed from overseas, which could still be arriving in Florida as late as Friday, could determine the election.

"The final results [of the election] will be announced after the results of absentee ballots are certified on Friday," Harris said.

Bush Campaign Committee Director Karen Hughes accused Democrats in Miami-Dade, Palm Beach and Volusia Counties of trying to "re-invent" the results of the election through manual recounts.

"We don't believe a manual count conducted in different ways in different counties can result in an accurate count," Hughes said.

Gore Campaign Chairman William Daley took issue with Hughes' assessment of the manual recounts in Florida.

"This suggestion that vote counting is partisan is completely untrue," Daley said. "This is not about politics its about determining the will of the people fairly and accurately."

Florida counties complied with a state law that calls for all counties to report their certified results to Tallahassee by 5 p.m. on the seventh day following an election. The deadline followed a day of legal wrangling by the campaigns of Al Gore and George W. Bush in courts across the state of Florida.

Circuit Court Judge Terry Lewis issued the most important ruling of the day denying a motion to extend the state's election certification deadline.

In his decision from Leon County, Judge Lewis said that Secretary of State Harris must exercise "sound discretion" in deciding whether to recognize or discount vote tallies submitted after the deadline. The ruling stated that Harris must consider "all appropriate facts and circumstances" which could include "any pending manual recounts" or "corrective returns" leaving the door open for counties to submit recounted voting totals past the Tuesday deadline.

Attorney Donna Blanton, speaking for Harris, said that she "was not surprised" by the ruling and added, "If there are counties that do not [meet the deadline], we'll consider the individual facts and circumstances."

Former Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Gore's election observer in Florida, described Judge Lewis' decision as a victory for the Gore campaign.

"The court has held that the secretary of state cannot arbitrarily declare that she will not permit votes to be counted after 5 p.m.," Christopher said. "The court holds that she must receive and be prepared to consider those counts that are recorded after that time."

Christopher added, "The court's opinion on this point is tantamount to the injunction that we sought."

The Palm Beach County canvassing board chose to certify the results of its first recount at around 4:30 p.m. yesterday. However, county officials announced they will go ahead and conduct a manual recount of the county's more than 430,000 ballots as planned. Various claims of electoral fraud have come out of the country since election day, and Bush's slim lead among Florida voters could be overturned in a recount. The recount will start at 7 a.m. Wednesday and officials estimated the process will take a week to complete.

The board, which had planned to begin a manual recounting this morning,

Turn to ELECTION page 2

MORRIS MEDIA / COLLEGIAN

T.J. Roy (center) defends Jim Eltringham (left) in a Student Judiciary case after accusations were made against Eltringham for tampering with the Senate elections. The final case hearing is scheduled for tomorrow night.

SGA looks forward amid controversy

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Emotions and opinions ran high on Monday night's Student Government Association's [SGA] Judiciary hearing as Jim Eltringham, the Speaker of the Senate, saw his credibility questioned by fellow SGA members.

However, with the hearing yet to be completed, the SGA moves onward tonight at its 136th regular meeting. With many questions left unanswered and Senate seats at stake, the possible productivity of tonight's meeting is left to question.

"I would hope that the case would not effect the meeting, and that we can continue business as usual," Associate Speaker, Michael J. McCarthy said. "Overall I think the Senate is pretty well split. Some feel everything is fine and others feel we need to follow the constitution and correct the problem that occurred. I'm sure that will have a few more announcements about the case and Senate business."

Eltringham expressed optimism as to what tonight's meeting would accomplish.

"I think it's going to be a little long. For most Senators the case is going to be in the back of their minds," Eltringham said. "Administrative Affairs has six or seven motions to bring before the Senate. One motion that will be up for presentation will be a Dining Services Select Committee. We had one last year and it was very successfully, and we've seen a lot of interest in forming one again this year."

Opinions varied greatly however, Central at large Senator Rebecca Austern expressed her opinion in the fact that issues over the elections will come out tonight.

"There's been a lot of tension about the elections and the fact that the case wasn't decided on yet is going to make it very tense tonight," Austern said.

With Monday night's heated Judiciary hearing in the back of many Senate Members minds, questions of what is fact vs what isn't comes into query. One topic under much debate is the allegations against Eltringham that commuter seat tampering took place.

"We agreed on 30 commuter seats. I was informed that it came out to 18,220 undergraduate students," McCarthy said. "When we took that number and subtracted those who live on campus, we calculated the number 30. I received the number from the registrar's office within two hours of talking to them."

Eltringham disagreed with this statement, responding to the fact that the numbers given were not an accurate count of off campus students.

"There really wasn't a number agreed upon, the number 30 came out and that looked low, considering we had 38 seats last year," Eltringham said.

"When I called the registrars office they told me that it would take two weeks to get the exact numbers," Eltringham explained. "Jeremy Rouille called me and needed a figure, and when I calculated it out, I came up with 34 seats. I would rather have made the mistake of giving more commuter seats than not enough."

Austern stressed a different opinion in regards to the issue of the commuter seat distribution. She explained that in her opinion, by only representing two electoral districts instead of three and by having candidates running for incorrect seats, the elections were unconstitutional. Thus, leaving a decrease in the power of the Senate and its members.

"It's not about kicking people out of the Senate, it's not a personal thing. It states in the constitution that we have three electoral districts, not two. We can't be powerful with an unconstitutional Senate," Austern said.

With accusations flying across the board towards both sides of the petition one question is left to consider, will SGA members be able to work together considering circumstances before them?

"He [Eltringham] approached me after the elections and accused me of filling the petition because I didn't like the outcome of the elections," McCarthy said. "Right now we just have a working relationship. I would like to have a better communication between us because I feel we would work better and more would be done for the students."

Eltringham responded to the accusations made by McCarthy as well as to the issue of having a successful working relationship.

"I never made a public accusation. I may have my speculations, but would never make a formal accusation towards anyone," Eltringham said.

"McCarthy and I have been in similar roles last year on a smaller scale. His involvement with bringing the case to the Election Commission is water under the bridge."

"As long as he does his job as Chief Clerk of Parliamentary, I'm not going to have a problem, and the same goes for me. As long as I do my job as Chief Residing Officer of the Senate, he won't have any problems with me," Eltringham said.

Although questions are still on the rise as to when and what the outcome out of the Judiciary hearing will be, the consequences of the outcomes are a reality.

"It depends greatly on how the seats are proportioned. If they decide to redo the elections for whatever reasons they decide upon, the Election Commission will pick up small points. This would then leave us short of probably two to four commuter seats in the

Turn to SGA page 2

Students react to Fla. election difficulties

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

Today's ruling by Florida's second circuit court to uphold Secretary of State Katherine Harris' recount deadline has brought hope to many University of Massachusetts students that a fair verdict will be the final result.

Even as national debate swelled over Republican Harris' ultimatum and the possibility of partisan bias, students contended that their faith in both this year's election and America's democratic process has not been shaken.

"I think the Electoral College works fine," said Mark Holloway, a 20-year old undergraduate. "The announcement on election night has always been nothing but a prediction, and it's purely chance that a virtual tie would happen."

While some supporters of the Republican ticket have accused the Gore camp of sour grapes in its insistence on a hand recount,

Turn to RESPONSE, page 3

COURTESY PRNEWS FOTO

Turkey Day is Coming

Spot of turkey? A young boy enjoys a pre-Thanksgiving feast recently at Plymouth Plantation in Plymouth, MA

Award winning poet to read tonight

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

Sonia Sanchez, an award winning, internationally-known poet and activist will share thirty years of exceptional writing and selections from her new collection, "Shake, Loose My Skin," tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

Sanchez is the author of 14 books, six plays and three children's books. She has been teaching since 1965, starting with the Downtown Community School in New York before moving on to San Francisco State College, the University of Pittsburgh, Rutgers University and Amherst College. She is presently working at Temple University in Philadelphia as the Director of Women Studies.

Lecturing at over 500 universities and colleges worldwide, Sanchez has received much recognition and maintains an intense dedication and commitment to the education of youth in middle schools, high schools, elementary schools, as well at the college level.

Sanchez has been the recipient of the National Endowment for the Arts Award, the Lucretia Mott Award, the Outstanding Arts Award from the Coalition of 100 Black Women, the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching, the Community Services Award from the National Black Caucus of State Legislatures, and was recently nominated for both the NAACP Image and National Book Critics Award.

Striving to educate the Five College Community, The Every Woman Center (EWC), the Women of Color Leadership Network of EWC, the Women's Studies Department of Umass, and Food For Thought Books has joined together for this event to enhance and expand a deeper consciousness for all who participate this evening. Sanchez can also be met at Food For Thought for a reception from 7:00-7:45 p.m. where wine and cheese will be served.

According to Sandy Mandel of the EWC, Food For Thought Books and the EWC have worked together in numerous activities in the past, and are dedicated to promoting the visibility of women in the arts. Recent partnerships have included: "Clearing the Color Line, Intersections of Race and sexuality," "Audios Barbie," a book written by editors of Ms Magazine, and "Staci

Turn to SANCHEZ page 3

election

"Both sides should agree to accept the vote count of all the counties as the statutory deadline," according to former Secretary of State James Baker, speaking for the Bush campaign in Florida.

"The proposal was just a reiteration of what the secretary of state laid out yesterday," Gore campaign chairman Bill Daley said from Capitol Hill. "It truly was not a proposal. What happens in Florida will be determined by the courts, not by representatives of these two campaigns."

Also in Palm Beach, four judges recused themselves due to conflicts of interest yesterday from having to hear a combined lawsuit filed by a number of voters seeking to right the results of the general election in the county. The plaintiffs in the case complained that the county's so-called "butterfly ballot," which listed candidates names on both sides of the ballot, led many voters to vote for Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan when they intended to vote for Al Gore.

The plaintiff's motion claimed that the ballot used in Palm Beach County was illegal according to Florida statute 101.191.

The statute reads "This general election ballot involving the election of the President and the Vice-President of the United States of America, indicates that the name of the candidate should be located on the same line with the appropriate box to the right of the candidate's name."

Judge Catherine Brunson recused herself Tuesday, saying her husband was represented in a case by one of the attorneys for the plaintiffs. Judge Edward Eime then recused himself because he claimed that he had had conversations with an attorney for the plaintiffs in the case. Judge Thomas Barkdull was the third judge to recuse himself Tuesday, saying his father, a senior counsel to the state attorney general, was working on issues which may impact the outcome of the case. Judge Peter Blanc was the fourth to recuse himself, saying the attorney for one of the plaintiffs and his partner, showed as co-treasurers for Blanc's 2000 re-election campaign.

The Judge first assigned to the case, Stephen Rapp, recused himself Monday following an allegation made by an attorney for the plaintiffs claimed that Rapp made prejudicial comments about Democrats the day after the election. Judge Jorge Labarga is now assigned to the case.

sga

continued from page 1

next election," Eltringham said.

In regards to the timely ness of this issue, and what the future holds in terms of the official ruling, it is yet to be determined. Yet this does not stop members from forming their own opinions.

"I hope that it can be taken care of by Thursday. It's important to get it done in an timely matter, but the most important thing is to get it right," said Eltringham.

"Whatever the outcome I believe it will be handled fair and evenly. There's a lot of emotion and personal feelings that are being fueled into this case which makes it hard."

Austern made comment in regards to why she feels the decision will be made at Thurs. night's Judiciary hearing.

"It's gone on too long. The Judiciary pointed this out on Monday; it's been over a month since the petition was filed," said Austern. "If it passes we can hold elections and have a ratified Senate by next semester, giving us a clean start."

Tonight's SGA meeting will begin at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Thursday's continuation of the Judiciary hearing will begin with witnesses from Austern and SGA President Jeff Howe as well as the presentation of the opposing side. Eltringham and advocate T.J. Roy. The meeting will begin at 7 p.m.; its location is yet to be determined.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University year except for vacation periods. The Collegian is financially independent from the University administration. Production costs are entirely generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 by the College senate and became the College senate in 1903. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then The Collegian in 1938. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a daily publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Hobson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargantta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

UMASS
University of Massachusetts Amherst
School of Nursing

OPEN HOUSE
NOVEMBER 15, 2000
5:00 – 7:00 PM
Morrill IV Room 403
SON Learning Resource Center

Ranked among the top nursing schools in the nation by the "U.S. News & World Report" on "America's Best Graduate Schools" (3-29-00)

We have a commitment to diversity, innovation and life-long learning.

Our award winning academic programs include

Undergraduate: Traditional Pre-licensure,
2nd Bachelor's and RN to BS tracks
Master's: Psychiatric/Mental Health, Gerontological,
Community/School Health (On line)
Family Nurse Practitioner

And a Collaborative PhD Program

For more information call (413) 545-2703 or
Check out our website at http://www.umass.edu/nursing

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Read it!

All Now. All Yours. All Free
MadAdz welcomes
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The first three students in each category to place ads will get a free T-shirt. Just another way in which MadAdz.com will hook you up.
No Brainer.
$500 cash that you can put towards rent, tuition, books, or whatever, awarded to two students a day, five days a week, just for posting a classified on www.madadz.com.
Live & Learn.
MadAdz.com hooked me up. Your Classifieds. Your Campus. Free
No purchase necessary. Void where prohibited.

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN is now accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

<<<<<<<<< win a free pair at puma.com/umass
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> buy it at puma.com
<< SUEDE
PUMA
PUMA.COM

Police Log

Breaking and Entering

November 8
A CD player valued at over $100 was stolen from an unlocked vehicle.
November 10
CD's were stolen from a vehicle in lot 33.
November 11
A car was broken into and stereo equiptment was stolen in lot 11.
November 12
Speakers and a stereo were stolen from a vehicle in lot 49.
The driver's side door lock was damaged to a vehicle in lot 11.
A CD and sub woofer were stolen from a vehicle in lot 49.

Disturbance

November 10
There was a report of fireworks in Van Meter Dormitory.
A large noisy group was dispersed behind Cashin Dormitory.
November 11
There was a disturbance outside of Southwest Mall.
There was a disturbance outside of Patterson Dormitory. There was a report of a large fight and a broken window, two individuals were treated for lacerations.
There was a report of a disturbance in Wheeler Dormitory.
November 12
There was a reported fight outside of the Southwest Mail.

Larceny

November 9
A wallet was previously stolen in Dickinson Dormitory.
There was a report of unauthorized use of a phone card.
There was damage done to a washer and a dryer in John Adams Dormitory.
November 10
A wallet was stolen from Franklin Dining Commons.
November 11
Two bikes were stolen from the front porch of the North Village Apartment Complex.
A bicycle was stolen from Van Meter Dormitory.
Books, a book bag and clothing were stolen from a room in Washington Dormitory.
A hockey bag was stolen from a dormitory room in John Quincy Adams Dormitory.
A basket and swimwear were taken from the locker room in Boyden Gymnasium.

Vandalism

November 8
Anti-Semitic graffiti was found on a refrigerator in the lounge of Hills House.
November 9
There was damage to a vehicle done in lot 33.
November 10
A cinder block was thrown through a window in Hamden Dining Commons.
There was a report of vandalism in lot 43.
A vehicle mirror was broken off in lot 44.
November 12
A vehicle was damaged by an apparent kick in Southwest Mall.
A vehicle window was smashed in Macnamara Dormitory.
November 13
A car was damaged in lot 49.

Indecent assaults investigated

By Melissa Hummel
Collegian Staff

Two incidents of indecent assault and battery, a form of sexual offense, occurred on Sunday in the Sylvan and Southwest living areas, respectively.

According to Jim Lyons, spokesman for the University of Massachusetts Police Department, the cases are currently under investigation and that no information can be released. He explained however the nature of indecent assault and battery.

"Indecent assault is an unwanted touching," he explained. "For example, this could include the breasts or buttocks."

On Saturday at 8 p.m., a student reported being assaulted by two people in the Southwest tunnel. Lyons explained that the student was walking along the Southwest path when two individuals knocked him down and kicked him. Both individuals were college-aged males with dark hair; both were wearing down jackets, sneakers and jeans.

"A search of the area revealed no one matching those descriptions," Lyons said. "There was no apparent motive and the case is still open."

Douglas Sayers, a 21-year-old Chelmsford resident, was arrested on Saturday morning for both disturbing the peace and for driving under the influence of alcohol.

"An officer reported that a vehicle had been circling the Butterfield lot and tooting its horn for the past half an hour," Lyons explained.

Upon pulling Sayers over, the officer smelled a strong odor of alcohol and, upon giving the suspect a field sobriety test arrested him.

An additional incident of driving under the influence of alcohol occurred on at 1:45 on Saturday morning. Glen Schleehauf, 18 of Milton, was arrested after police spotted him driving around in residential areas making harsh noises with his car horn. He was arrested for transporting liquor under age, possession of a false license and for making harsh and objectionable noises with his car horn.

There was a medical emergency reported in Field Dormitory on Saturday. The call came into the police station claiming that a student was throwing traffic cones off of the fifth floor balcony of the building when he went through a window. Upon arrival, police noticed that the injured party was being administered first aid. He was taken to Cooley Dickinson hospital where he was treated for his injuries.

A large fight was reported on Saturday at 3:00 a.m. in the Southwest residential area. The incident involved over 20 people and a window was broken.

"Apparently there was an altercation going on," Lyons said. "It is unclear as to who broke the window or how it was broken."

Two students were sent to Cooley Dickinson hospital for treatment for laceration wounds on their hands, another student refused medical treatment. Emergency housing was called to repair the window.

Anti-Semitic graffiti was discovered in on a refrigerator in the lounge of Hills House on Wednesday. The graffiti was attached to a note on the wall and was immediately erased. There are no suspects in this matter.

Two students were trapped in an elevator in Washington Dormitory on Saturday morning at 12:30 a.m.

"They were reported out of the elevator at about 1:05 [a.m.]," Lyons said. "The students were in there for about a half-an-hour."

Read the Collegian!

The School for International Training
&
The International Language Institute of MA offer:
ESOL TEACHER CERTIFICATE COURSE
(SIT TESOL Certificate)
Jan 2-26, 2001
or 4 weekends between Jan. 13 & April 16,2001
at ILI, in downtown Northampton
SPACES LIMITED!
For info call (413) 586-7569 or visit our website www.languageschool.org

Sanchez

continued from page 1

Hanes, the Survivors guide to Sex, how to have an empowered sex life after sex abuse."

Mandel, said that this relationship has been a great experience for her and the public, and hopes to continue this with numerous groups in the future.

"We're always interested in new collaborations, said Mandel. "I would look forward to working with other campus's, and communities or other groups that would be interested."

The presentation this evening will embrace selections from early works, "Home Girls, and Hand Grenades," "Under A Soprano sky," and "I've Been a Woman," as well as recent books. "Wounded in the House of a Friend, Like the Singing Coming Off the Drum," and "Does Your House Have Lions?"

Through all of her effort, Sanchez has been reflecting serious struggles between black and white people, how each affect Black culture and Black art, as well as identifying the characterization of women in her work, and the stereotypes that Black women face. Through it all, she carries with her a strong sense of history and sensual and political powers, viewers will sense this evening.

In an interview on WMUA this past week, Sanchez said that music has also been significant in her art forms.

"I am influenced by jazz, Coltrane, and blues," said Sanchez. "Being an African American in a place called America sometimes goes to the marrow of us in this country. All of that is very much a party of my song and my poetry."

According to Joan Barberich, the event coordinator at Food For Thought Books, "Shake Loose My Skin," was originally a Haiku in memory of Bill Cosby's son who was murdered. Barberich went on to say that in this respect she has felt overwhelming emotion.

"The main thing that I can say is that Sanchez writes about black people, but it's deeper than that. Its universal," said Barberich.

Many people find that they can identify with the causes and effects of Sanchez's writing.

"We need to examine what goes on in this country. I write about the politics of this country, the humor of this country, the beauty of this country, and the beauty of the people, things that happen to women, things that happen to men," Sanchez said to WMUA. "I try to always put in my poems the idea of extreme love that one has for the people and the country, and we want the country to be what it should have been a long time ago."

Tonight's event will be free and open to the public.

response

continued from page 1

one UMass student countered that the outcome would most likely have been the same if George W. Bush were on the other side of the fence.

"I think the additional measures taken by the Democrats are certainly valid," said 23-year old Joshua Snyder. "Validity in this instance is determined by what the other side would do in the same situation."

Republican club member Jim Eltringham agreed that the recount could be justified, but insisted that litigation is uncalled for.

"When you try to win an election in the courtroom instead of the ballot box, you raise serious questions about the democratic process," Eltringham said.

One worry expressed by students was that of the precedent set by the election's delay. Noeleen Meola, an undergraduate in the Stockbridge School, sees a possibility for future elections to be delayed any time the votes are close.

"I think it's feasible that people will try to use this situation to their advantage in the future," Meola said. "Consistency is an important part of the democratic process, but hopefully future politicians won't try to pull that scam."

Make a Difference in a Life
Live rent free in downtown Northampton.
Be a therapeutic housemate for a person in recovery from psychiatric disturbance
Female age 22+needed. Salary, benefits, team support.
Call Mary Cape at Windhorse Associates
586-0207

Acapulco
Cancun
Jamaica
Bahamas
Florida
Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
On-campus contact:
Josh @ 413-549-4514
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com

© 2000 InfoRocket.com Inc
Visit the local sperm bank until you turn blue.
or
Get paid for the stuff you know.
InfoRocket.com
Answer questions. Earn cash.
www.inforocket.com/amherst

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

BDIC: Majoring in frustration

Here we are again, pre-registration time. Every semester the same thing happens: we wish for things we cannot get. Being students ourselves, we recognize the frustration most students have trying to get into courses they desire and need to take. However with budget cuts and restrictions, students are often limited by the University at which they pay thousands of dollars for an education.

As if things can't get worse, they do. At least they do for BDIC (Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration) majors. The motto of BDIC should be "good luck getting into any classes". That is because within this University, other than within the BDIC program itself, none of the other departments care if the students in the program receive an education.

BDIC is an interdisciplinary program at UMass that allows its 260 self-motivated students (and growing) to create their own major. Students within this program usually have specific educational goals to establish a secure, focused background in a particular field. BDIC permits students to take any course within all the departments as long as the course is relevant to their focus and is a 300 or higher level course. This program eliminates unnecessary courses that are required in predefined, traditional majors. The supervisors and advisors of BDIC guide each student in planning their own required curriculum.

This is where the problem lies, because while trying to reach individual requirements, the other departments at UMass don't acknowledge this need as a priority. A BDIC student trying to get into a course is like a freshman trying to get into a senior course.

Most of the time, professors appreciate a student's interest in trying to take their class, but then they explain that their departments will not permit them to enroll a BDIC student until all other students within the department are allowed in. Translated, that means: "Forget it, but you can still waste your time sitting in my class until the end of add/drop period".

Students who want to graduate with a BDIC degree on time are forced to pursue other options. These students must take independent studies and internships in order to complete the 36 credits required for the major. The simple fact is that they cannot possibly earn enough credits from regular courses to complete their requirements. This is a harsh reality for these students to face.

Concerned and frustrated themselves, the supervisors and advisors at BDIC are forced to suggest that students should partake in exchanges to other colleges and universities. This poses another problem, because the BDIC program requires that all their students must enroll in classes designed for the program. These classes are only available at UMass, so involvement in an exchange comes with its own limitations.

Along with all the other students at this University, BDIC students pay tuition to receive a higher education. But unlike all the other students at this University, BDIC students are handicapped by their academic ambitions. It seems that UMass enjoys penalizing its unique, self-motivated, goal-oriented students, while it should be commending these students for their ambition to excel outside of the structure of a traditional student.

Got Sleep?

JEANIE GOROLOVSKY

Who needs sleep? I do, I do. As I sit here writing this column on Monday night I am fighting with myself to keep from falling asleep at the computer. My sleep pattern has gone completely off what it should be because I stayed up last night studying for a test (into the wee hours of the morning (until 7 am, to be exact), and then I had to get up for my 9:05 class.

Needless to say, I didn't really get much of a nap after studying for hours before I had to get up and get ready to face another busy and demanding day.

I think the sleep crisis is something that's really facing UMass students as a whole. Now I know that there are some people who go to bed early no matter what. To them, the philosophy is that your health and well-being are more important than whatever could be keeping you from being in bed. I don't really know how people like this manage living on campus, with all the noise that that entails, but I guess somehow they manage to go to bed early every night, and, usually, they rise up with the sun.

On the other extreme of the sleep scale are the real, confirmed "night owls" who cannot stand going to bed early any night of the week, let alone a weekend night. I think some people don't even understand the concept of going to bed before midnight. To them, anyone who does that is some kind of alien. Then again, there is the majority of UMass students, who are somewhere in the middle of the two extremes. Most people I know don't go to bed very early, but also do not usually stay up very late. Usually, these people go to bed around one or so at night on the weekdays and an hour or two later on the weekends, not a horribly late time and even early for some who don't have an morning classes.

However, almost everyone at UMass – heck, almost anyone at any college – has had a time when he/she is just overwhelmed. You know, it's one of those weeks where you have tons of exams and papers and readings due, and you just don't feel like there are enough hours in the day to do it all. Almost everyone I know has ended up staying up really late, or up all night, on a weekday night at least at some point in his/her college career. It could be a project that's due in class tomorrow or an exam for which you haven't yet read, but something becomes so important to get done that you are willing to sacrifice important hours of sleep for it. The worst part of it is that you will often have an early morning class the next day you cannot skip, so you have to drag your poor exhausted body to class and walk around in a daze all day.

I think people who get no sleep or just a few hours go through certain stages. I am a classic example. As I stay up all night, I'll usually start getting really tired around 5 a.m. or so, depending on how much I've slept the previous few nights. By 4 a.m., I am usually half-asleep, trying not to nod off, and taking "study breaks" very often. This is when I usually guzzle down some Coke to try to keep awake. However, the trend reverses, and usually by 7 a.m. or so I am feeling halfway. I go to my morning classes, and soon my body really starts feeling its tiredness. A lot of times, I will nod off in class or walk around campus in a daze. The real horror of a night with no sleep comes after I eat something at lunch, especially if I'm in class after the meal. My body usually decides that this is the perfect time to take a mid-afternoon siesta, and I end up fighting a losing battle to stay awake in class. By dinnertime, and through the evening, I start feeling less tired because my body is completely confused as to the time. It's one of those feelings where you know you're tired and you are going to have to collapse sometime soon, but you really don't pay attention to yourself until you end up crashing and falling asleep on your bed or on someone's floor, as is often the case in my life.

Even though we are mostly young and healthy college students, and losing one or two nights of sleep a semester supposedly will not significantly hurt us, there are still a lot of negative effects to not sleeping well or enough. For example, I know that I am always happier and more cheerful when I am getting enough sleep. If I have been chronically under-sleeping, I can get really depressed and start crying out of frustration and anger. Falling asleep in classes is not cool as well, especially when I am in my small classes where everyone later ends up making fun of me for being such a sleepy person.

According to the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute of the National Institutes of Health, an average, healthy adult normally sleeps 8 to 8.5 hours per night. Unfortunately, since most UMass students do not sleep this much, they accumulate a "sleep debt" until they sleep enough to "pay off" the debt. Even then, sleeping late on the weekend to offset not sleeping during the week (which is something I do all the time!) is not enough, and it will not completely erase your sleep debt. According to the Institute, problem sleepiness, which is when not getting enough sleep interferes with a person's daily functions, can result in automobile crashes, poor grades, depressed moods and problems with relationship.

I am the last person in the world who should talk about sleeping enough, because, as most people who know me notice, I am perpetually tired and not sleeping enough. In fact, I notice problem sleepiness all the time in my life, as I often cannot control when I will start randomly falling asleep. What the point of this article is, though, is to educate people a little about sleep deprivation and also point this out as a problem to the people here at UMass. Too many times, people will joke around with their friends about not getting enough sleep.

I've been there, done that. Hey, we're college students. It happens sometimes. However, it's once it starts happening often enough that your life is being affected by not getting enough sleep that you have to do something about it. It might just save your, or someone else's life, and it will probably make the quality of your life a heck of a lot better than walking around in a sleepy stupor.

Stalks and bonds

RYAN BENHARRIS

Think about it, have you ever received a forward from a guy? Of course you haven't. There's the first way to prove that those things don't work. No guy sends forwards to anyone, so according to forward's crazy ideology, every guy on the planet should have been run over by a bus and eaten by a fifty foot nuclear shark by now. Although forwards are complete crap, every once in a while I will get one that amuses me. Until last week, I had never sent a forward to anyone else, but this one was just really cool. So cool that I sent it to everyone I knew. Of course, before I sent it to anyone, I took out the part about "If you don't send this to five of your best friends, your baby sister will be stolen and sold to a crack dealing pedophile," but that goes without saying.

The forward was called, "College Rocks." The title immediately made me think such brilliant things as "yeah college does rock," and "peanut butter rocks too." The forward had about 100 reasons why college is the best place on earth. Things like, "I am a college student, I will walk in the cold, dark and snow for beer, but I refuse to go to class in the same weather," and "No matter how hard parents try to protect their children, they'll eventually get arrested and end up in the local paper."

A lot of the forward was silly and exaggerated, but one part hit me. It struck that nerve that only gets touched when I see an attractive woman or even more attractive car. I think it's called my brain. The line was "I've learned that you can't make someone love you. All you can do is stalk them and hope they panic and give in." That may be the most accurate portrayal of college life I've ever heard.

Stalking has become a staple in college. A lot of the horror stories I've heard from men and women on this campus stemmed from "the random guy stalking her" or "that psycho chick that won't leave him alone." Now, allow me to set something abundantly straight, when I say stalking, I don't mean Prom Night stalking. I don't mean heavy breathing into the phone, or masturbation while you're looking through the whole you drilled in the wall to watch your neighbor undress. I'd like to assume that no one reading this article does any of that stuff. If you do, get yourself some help fast, Norman!

No, stalking, is the act of driving someone crazy until they have a sneaking suspicion that you have a general interest in them. Then they get really scared of you and refuse to accept the undeserved gifts you send them, and screen their phone calls because they're afraid that it's you on the other end. The stalking that I'm talking about isn't exactly stalking in the dangerous sense. It is more so, in the annoying sense.

My friend Scott has a humorous outlook on the stalking scene. "A stalker is a status symbol," he says. It's an interesting way to interpret I guess. He claims that stalkers are like Porsches. The more you have, the more people will respect you. I guess if it's harmless, then the absolute basic root that your stalker can hang upon is that he or she likes you. So in a messed up, Buffalo Bill, Silence of the Lambs sort of way, it's flattering to have someone stalking you.

Speaking from personal experience, as a person who has been stalked on several occasions, I can admit that it can be scary at times. However, we all know how it happens. I think stalkers have some sort of manifesto that they absolutely must follow when acting all psychoriffic. They all use the Internet, they all send gifts and they are all more predictable than Pee Wee Herman at an adult movie theater with an erection.

I guess I'm going to speak for a bit on behalf of the stalked people everywhere. To all the stalkers out there, here's a list of things that we don't like.

First of all, we don't like gifts. Well, I take that back. We like gifts, just not from you. If you like a guy, and have been saying things to him for six months like, "You're the nicest person I've ever met in my life," or "I want to pull of your pants right now," and he's not responding, chances are he's not going to be very appreciative of a banana bread.

Secondly, if you keep appearing everywhere he or she is, your target is going to recognize this really quick. Sorry fellas, but this is more of a guy thing. That girl that you followed to class, then to the Campus Center, then to the dining hall, all the while staring at her breasts – she noticed. And if she didn't notice by then, she'll certainly notice it if you try to follow her into the women's room.

Thirdly, (and this is the one that really gets on my nerves) if you take a class or job just to be in the same room as the person of your dreams, we really hate that! There is nothing worse than to be sitting in class trying to take notes (and by taking notes I mean reading The Collegian of course) and all of sudden getting the sneaking suspicion that you're being watched. The worst is when we turn around and you do that weird "I wasn't staring at the back of your lumpy head" turn your eyes away thing. That's just freaky. (Oh, and while I'm on the platform, let me just say this. If you work at a place, say a newspaper, just so you can stalk everyone in your office – not cool. Very not cool)

Though I can sit back and say, I'm not a stalker, I can look at some of the pretty sketchy but harmless things I've done, and wonder why. I've looked up names in a phone book to see what building they live in, or found their address on AOL IM, but that's about the extent of it. It's not exactly sending severed heads or anything, but I guess it still counts.

I guess the seemingly absolute truth about college stalking is really emphasized in that email. The only time I've seen people really, "falling in love" over the past three years has been in the movies. In real life, it's much more common that I'll run into someone who will say, "Dude, hook me up with your friend. I already know her entire class schedule, and how many times a day she pees (depending on the amount of soda she drinks, so I should be golden!" or "Look, I found a picture of this chick from my class on the Internet."

We're a brilliant culture here at UMass. I would never take myself out of that generalization either. It's just enjoyable to really make fun of it. Could you ever imagine explaining to your grandparents how stalking is an acceptable way of courting someone of the opposite sex? (Actually, I don't think I'd even say 'sex' to my grandparents, it would offend them way too much, and they still assume I don't know what it is, and that I watch 'Teletubbies' all day long) That would be a great conversation. I'd end it with another quote from "College Rocks." "I am a college student, my computer is used for two purposes; AOL Instant Messenger and downloading MP3s on Napster." To which my Grandparents would reply, "You shouldn't sit too close to that computer, and if be careful with hamsters, I hear they have rabies."

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

I came, I saw, I voted

SIMON PONGRATZ

Make no mistake about it: the election gridlock we now face will have serious repercussions, and the longer they drag on, the worse it will be. This system has for years been in much more danger than anyone has cared to admit, and it is beginning to surface. Essentially, the election results show an even 50/50 split between different parts of the country, so that Bush and Gore have been given the mandate by two entirely different Americas. Whoever is chosen after all the hullabaloo dies down will command less legitimacy upon ascension than any other president in recent memory. The Congressional elections mirrored the presidency in the fact that both houses are also equally divided, and since the president depends on his prestige to unite such a bi-polar body, he will need great amounts of it. Unfortunately, he has already been deprived of that. The first years in office will be spent ending the debilitating partisanship that has spread like a virus across the length and breadth of the land.

Up until the election, the worst scenario anyone could think about was a split between the Electoral College vote and the popular vote. One casualty of this crisis, in fact, may very well be the Electoral College. Senator Clinton (I hate the sound of that) from New York has already begun calling for the abolition of the body. Personally, I don't know if the country is any more ready for direct democracy than we were two hundred years ago. On the other hand, something has to be done about a system that awards Ross Perot's Reform Party 19 percent of the popular vote but zero electoral votes. When the Electors meet on December 18th, chances are that 271 of them (or maybe more) will be obliged to vote for George Bush. Of course, they don't have to vote for Bush if they don't want to, but since they are picked by their respective party, they are usually very partisan. The recent return of New Mexico to the undecided column (congratulations to the media on another faux pas) places even more uncertainty on the final results, but the real deciding factor will be Florida.

And herein lies the danger: the Constitution's 12th Amendment provides that only a majority of the Electors must vote. Florida's votes could remain uncertified, and the total number of votes needed would drop to 255. This would almost certainly secure the election for Gore. But the manual recount should (as it has once before) give Florida's 25 votes to Bush. Then what happens? Will Caesar face Pompey at Pharsalus?

No matter what the result, the elected president will not be considered legitimate. This is a unique problem today because of the aforementioned partisanship that divides the country, which requires that the president forget conflict and practice reconciliation. How ironic that president Clinton, who fought so hard for a legacy of peace abroad, will be remembered for the intense conflict he has created in the patria?

Kenneth Walsh put it well: "The picture revealed on Nov. 7, 2000, was a split image–which was particularly disturbing because it was unveiled so suddenly, after nearly a decade of political apathy that had camouflaged the problems underneath. But the electoral map showed it all: a nation divided in almost every conceivable way–by geography, gender, marital status, race, ideology, party, culture and beliefs about the role of government in American life." But this situation does not have to turn out badly. It's like nature is pushing more and more responsibility on the American people to get involved but now, instead of taking the great initiative to make change, we must merely work together to prevent imminent disaster. Walsh says again "Some Washington veterans of both parties say they've felt like they are witnessing a car wreck from a hilltop, perversely fascinated by the imminent crackup but unable to do anything about it." This crackup could lead to gridlock or worse, fragmentation.

Important Democratic influences, including the New York Times and Senator Tom Daschel, have implored Al Gore to give up the fight. While no precedent exists, the 19,000 ballots punched twice in Democratic Palm Beach County are being considered for a revote, at which time the election would further sink into chaos. For one thing, the inherent unfairness of that action is obvious: while 19,000 wrongly punched votes (invalidated by law) would be included in the count, 24,000 wrongly punched votes in another county with heavy Republican tendencies will not be included. Not to mention the well-known fact that in 1996, 14,000 votes from the same county (Palm Beach) had been invalidated for the same reason. Since that election was not close, there were no problems. The ballots were invalidated then and they should be now; for any judge that orders otherwise will set a dangerous precedent that will confuse future elections.

It makes sense for the Republicans to try to stop the manual recount of three counties in Florida. There is much more potential for error (deliberate or not) with a hand count, especially when it involves overly Democratic committees. And if the count miraculously turns up with more votes for Gore, then what? Is Gore elected president? Probably not, because the Bush camp has just as much right to bog down the process with legal action (something they have already begun to do) as the Gore camp, and you can bet that will be their course of action. Apparently a recount of one percent of the votes yielded 19 more to Gore, meaning that he could come out with 1,900 more, enough to put him over the top. If this happens, the Bush team will cry foul and the litigation will continue.

How ironic is it that two second-rate politicians, one the son of a senator and the other the son of a president, have brought such a serious problem to light? The next four years will be chaotic, with neither candidate, whoever wins, able to claim the mandate so necessary to govern. They probably won't even last four years. As for us, perhaps we can glean some lessons from this problem. Will partisanship give way to cooperation? It must, should the government continue in its present state.

Although the networks are already, after a series of flip-flops, beginning to hint that Gore will almost certainly be the winner. I have my reservations, for the media has been wrong before – and very recently, judging from Gore's record in Congress, where he was equally despised by both Democrats and Republicans, his election on January 20th would be a disaster.

Gore's game is even more partisan than Clinton's, and in the current atmosphere that will translate into big problems. Bush on the other hand has based his entire administration on the promise to end the partisanship and bring people together. Partisanship is an old game for another time. Now, for the future of the country, reconciliation must be the order of the day. Veni Vidi...

Information from US News, Investors Business Daily and Foxnews.com was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian columnist.

Ed-Op. Every day in the Collegian.

Flori-duh

BRYAN MCALLISTER

Okay, I have an idea to end this election silliness; no more recounting and recounting. No more lawsuits. No more examining the entire system. If we want to end this (and we all really, really, really want to end this), then let's do the mature thing here.

Let's get rid of Florida. Wouldn't it be cooler to say the United States has 49 states, instead of 50?

Don't worry, getting rid of Florida doesn't mean Bush would be president. With Florida gone, we'd obviously have to revamp the entire Electoral College. In my system, all of Florida's electoral points go to Rhode Island.

Because the fact is, Florida simply does not deserve to be in the Union anymore.

After all, this bizarre catastrophe that occurred last week – about this election thing – was only the latest in a long line of offenses that Florida has committed since it joined the Union. I can't think of any of these offenses immediately off the bat, but I'm sure they're there, hidden deep, like George Bush's true blood-alcohol level when pulled over for drunk driving in the 70s. Or George Bush's real IQ, which ironically, is exactly the same as George Bush's blood alcohol level when pulled over for drunk driving in the 70s.

If you weren't following last week's events, what the hell were you doing, Pat Buchanan? I'll recap in case anyone was sleeping from last Tuesday to today, which basically means everyone in Van Meter. First of all, Florida is a large state in the southeastern part of our country (the United States) that is shaped kind of like a boot. This shape gives it the nickname, "The Boot." This is not to be confused with Italy, which is an entirely different country altogether, and called, "The Shoe."

Florida's state motto is "Let's create some national chaos!" which has been their state motto since the Spanish originally bought Florida, but we bought it back for lollipops. We should have let them keep it. Has anything good ever come out of Florida? We'll come back to that question later. But let's just take the example of the Fountain of Youth, which explorer Ponce De Leon searched for way back on the historic date of Sometime in the 1500-1800's. De Leon, who was Spanish and therefore liked lollipops, was lured by this idea of a fountain which brought back youth, which sounds like a damned good plot for a Tony Danza movie.

De Leon found nothing. Nothing! No magical "Fountain of Youth." According to his records he just found, "a little fountain with some dog poop in it."

That kind of false advertising and emptiness has characterized Florida now for over 200 years. It is a big state of metaphorical dog poop.

For instance, let's look at its citizens: old people. It has been widely established by science that old people are good for nothing, can't drive, can't give good birthday presents or Halloween candy and obviously can't vote. What do they do? Florida is like a big, huge nursing home where we send all our old people when they can't perform regular functions anymore, like following arrows on a ballot.

Old person 1: "I don't know, Mac, these crazy arrows sure are confusin', huh?"

Old person 2: "Yeah, I can't make sense of them at all, Margie. I mean, am I supposed to follow it with my finger?"

I'm being sarcastic, of course. In actuality, I feel bad for those that voted wrongly and were upset about it. But c'mon – have you read about how many ballots were discarded in Florida and elsewhere? The numbers are in the thousands. What the hell is wrong with people? Yay, we got people to come out and vote this year, but oops, they COULDN'T PUNCH A HOLE IN A PIECE OF PAPER.

Luckily, Florida is used to screwing up. They are a land of screw-ups. Take the Florida Marlins, who won the World Series a couple of years ago, but now can hardly field a team. Or the Miami Dolphins! A team which always blows it when it matters (luckily, we have the Patriots...wait, nevermind...)

What has Florida done for us lately? To be fair, we need to make a list of the good things Florida gives us.

1. Oranges

Florida is known for the citrus fruits, and thus provides the country with a lot of Vitamin C. But what would you rather have, a few more colds, or a land of idiots? I say bring on the sniffles

2. Disney World

This is very important. Disney World is pretty cool. Which is why when we get rid of Florida. We can keep Disney World, and call the state "Disney World."

3. A Good Place to Put Old People

The fact is, if we get rid of Florida, we have no place to put old people. We don't want old people invading cool states like Delaware. So we need to keep Florida and make it a separate country, called "A Big Country of Old People."

Now, I'm no Constitution expert, but I don't think three things qualifies you as important to our country. Take Massachusetts, for example, which provides the country with bad driving, bad accents, bad sports teams, bad manners and a bad attitude. That's five things! So listen up, Florida: if you don't improve your goof-off act anytime soon, you're out. We're tired of your screwing around. We're tired of your game playing. We're tired of hearing about how cool Miami is. We're tired of your complete disregard for the rest of the nation. We're tired of your dog poop.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian columnist.

ALL LETTERS TO THE EDITOR MUST BE SIGNED AND INCLUDE AN ADDRESS AND PHONE NUMBER.

REMEMBER, ALL LETTERS TO THE EDITOR ARE READ BUT NOT ALL ARE PUBLISHED!

Loving you

ANNA FAKTOROVICH

Everyone seems to be leaving. Nothing lasts forever, huh? Well, so then love is mortal. Is love a man that stands on top of a mountain and glares down at us sinners waiting for us to look up? And what? Sparks, giggles, butterflies appear and you are in love. What nonsense or maybe...

No, no. It's all silly.

I considered making up some Don Juanian love fantasy for your amusement and satisfaction, but the truth is infinitely more interesting to me. So I'll "tell it like it is."

I have a few fleeting memories of feelings that resemble what some people call love. The first is from eighth grade of a Brooklyn junior high school. His name was Mateo. This isn't a story for the weak-hearted. Through all of my columns, I resisted writing about this. But this had to pop out of me eventually.

He had black hair, a tanned complexion and was quick in mind and body. I had a crush on him all year. Whenever I saw him in the halls and our eyes met, I smiled. And when he spoke in class, I ate his words like heavenly manna and was happy. Those memories carried me through the year and suddenly it was time to graduate from junior high.

The administration gathered the senior class in the auditorium to practice for the graduation. They placed us in alphabetical order. And by some slim chance, fate placed Mateo right behind me. I almost didn't breathe. Because I was afraid my breath would stop one of his breaths or one of his words from reaching me, as if the hundreds of chattering people in the auditorium didn't already drown out both of us.

Then suddenly in the middle of all that tension, I felt a thin fountain of air touch my ear. That puff of air sent a shock wave through my body. I took a moment to compose myself, then turned around. Mateo's face was flat. It wasn't on fire; at least if it was, there was so much smoke in front of my eyes that I didn't notice. He wasn't looking at me. He was looking somewhere far away at nothing in particular. I couldn't question him, got embarrassed and turned back around. A few minutes passed. All of my concentration was focused on my ear. And there it was again. This time a thin piece of paper brushed my ear right under my earring, so I didn't imagine it the last time. I turned around again. His face was still blank. The rest of the preparation is a blur.

The next thing I recall is the graduation. My parents weren't there. And the graduation meant I'd have to change schools again. And my umbrella disappeared. Everything was spinning and I was sitting in a daze, impatiently waiting for my name to be called, so I could run away from this crowd to some safe place where it would be quiet and I could organize my thoughts and feel sorry for myself.

And finally my name is called. I fly up and forward. Suddenly, I feel something unfamiliar in my hair. I brush my hand through them, feel something there, assume it's some intrusive leaf and smash it into the ground.

But it made a heavier sound than a fallen leaf would make. So I looked down at the ground and there was a barrette with flowers and butterflies. In my selfish despair, I didn't notice him putting it into my hair. But I was in the middle of a crowed and couldn't pick it up right there. And I saw Mateo – a dozen or so people in front of me – and decided to try and catch up with him and ask. But he was quick and in moments, he disappeared from view.

This was like a final blow and I collapsed. I didn't go back for the barrette or try to recover my umbrella. I just fled home. I told the story to my mom and my sister and got nostalgic for the barrette. It suddenly seemed like a symbol of something holy, something lost. And I kept on saying, "I wish I could go back to get it. But I'd have to take the bus again," I told my self. "And it's a while away." As I spoke, I expected my mom to tell me it's just a barrette, and that I should get real. But she didn't say any of that. She just said I should do what I think is best. And so I went back.

By the time I returned, the crowd was gone and only the street-sweeper remained – monotonously sweeping up the remains of the celebration. The barrette was gone. I approached the sweeper and asked him if he saw such and such a thing, and that it might be broken, but that it's really important to me. He said he didn't see it. To that I said he should keep an eye out for it and that I'll come back later to ask if he found it.

That memory just galloped through my head like the horses of the Apocalypse. Wasn't that love? Didn't fate play a role in this affair? And yet no words were exchanged. So the story would make a poor play. For example, can you imagine Romeo and Juliet without words?

Was I "in love," did I "love," or was it a "crush" or an "infatuation." If I assigned a word to it, then it would become permanently grounded. While, without any words, that feeling, whatever it is, is more than I can ever expect from love.

I got carried away with this story and there is no room to fit the other guys. Oh, well perhaps I'll tell you about them another time.

What do you think love is? What is it for? How does it feel like? Is it for everyone who wants it? Or do you think love is only for the beautiful and the romantic? Or is love about fights and family? I'd like to get your opinions on this. I'll use them in my next article.

Anna Faktorovich is a Collegian Columnist.

Letters to the editor

Rules and Spanglish

To the editor,

I recently attended BCMP's jeans and t-shirt event, which is held on campus every year and brings people from as far as New York City for the party. What I expected to see was a lot of people having a great time on the dance floor, which there was a great turnout. What I didn't expect to see however were the rules imposed on this event.

A few examples of the rules of the event were: that purses couldn't be brought in, men and women had to enter through separate doors, and everyone was frisked before they entered. Security was high, there were a lot of campus police on duty at the event along with members of the BCMP who volunteered to be there as security as well.

Having been to a few events on campus, I was shocked at the security required for this particular event. The Student Union is a big place, but I thought the rules were too much and I believe that the University imposed these rules because it was a black group putting the event on. I'm white and Catholic. Last semester, I went to the Newman center for their annual Mardi Gras party and there weren't a lot of police there, no one was frisked and they served alcohol.

For a school that advertises itself as being culturally diverse, the University needs to lighten up on its rules for minority groups.

Joanne Decourcey
UMass

To the editor,

Hello. It's us, the happy, attractive, normal, party girls. We're writing to let you know that we are disgusted in the assumptions you have made about us. How dare you infer from the smiles placed on our attractive faces that you know anything about the experiences we've gone through or the feelings we have pent up inside. Our lives combined have been filled with rape, molestation, suicide attempts, broken families and relationships filled with pain, suffering and mental and emotional abuse. Really normal eh?

We suppose you never thought that pretty girls could have such screwed up lives. Well, you never asked. Instead, you relied on surface based conversations to create what you thought was reality. We feel you should have acted more like an adult and confronted the situation head on. If you were bothered, you should have voiced your opinion.

The smiles on our faces were not intended to desensitize your experiences. However, we listen to "Last Resort" and different emotions arise within us. We take this song as being inspirational, and as a result it gives us power and strength. Strength to overcome the horrible things that have occurred in the past and go on with our lives.

By writing about us as carefree girls with perfect lives you have deserv- sitized our experiences. You have judged two books by their covers. And that's just wrong.

Sarah Huntington and Misha Motes
Amherst

To the editor,

I am writing in response to the article, "AC Professor to give class on Spanglish." I read with concern the justifications discussed by Professor Stavans for a Spanglish class he is to teach, especially when I think that all of them are based on mediocrity and conformist convenience.

Spanglish is not a language or dialect of its own; it is a mixture of Spanish and English used at everyone's own convenience. This occurs usually when faced with words that one is more comfortable using in either language and choosing to use that word. In Latin America, you will run into people mixing up Spanish and English in business situations in which technical terms are most commonly known in English. Informally, you might also encounter people who have been exposed to the English language and hear them use a couple of words in English. In both situations people are perfectly aware that they are using both languages, not a hybrid. English and Spanish are two separate and amazingly rich languages, each with an endless variety of areas to study. To justify the proliferation of this in-between mixture in the United States is to justify the inabilities of many Latino children and adults to communicate in proper English and promote mediocrity. It is important to note that any foreigner living in a Latin American country would be expected to speak Spanish, particularly the dialect spoken in that country. He or she would not be able to argue his or her way out by creating a new lingo and it should not be any different in the United States.

Some of the highlights of the article include all. "108 ways of saying penis in Ecuador alone." as a tasteless remark with no other purpose but to shock. Local and national forms of slang should remain and be respected as such, and not be confused with Spanglish. It is hard enough to understand each other in all the Spanish speaking countries as it is. Another faulty argument of Professor Stavans' is that Spanglish satisfies a need for Latinos in the United States to define what we are. I think we are Latin Americans living in the United States, who speak both English and Spanish, and who should not be sold short by trying to justify Spanglish as our means of communication or, even worse, as a way to define our culture.

Javier Izquierdo
Amherst

To the editor,

This is an apology to the young woman I collided with on Wednesday in front of Machmer Hall. I was riding my bicycle from FLab to Bartlett, as I do every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and unfortunately came a little too close as you halted my approach and cut-off my intended route. I am very sorry that you had to experience the feeling of handlebars jabbing you in the ribs and the scare that it must have given you. You shouted, "Jesus!" and I apologized quickly as we both continued on our way. With thousands of students walking to class across this campus, I can say with confidence that it was entirely my fault.

Riding in crowds is hardly a science, (The only truth is that you can expect people to move unpredictably), but in the past three years I have managed to make it to all my classes without physical contact or any memorable close-calls. I have been nearly spat upon a few times by individuals that don't check over their shoulder before they spit, but can now predict this. I often whistle if a walker or other biker is not aware of my presence in an effort to prevent events such as the one that happened on this day. I don't want to give bikers a bad reputation, and realize that the issue of wheeled transportation on this campus has been an issue in the past with many students. It is tough with students trying to go every which way.

To the young woman I hit, I'm sorry. If you want to bite my head off, please contact me, as it is your right to do so. James Laing

James Laing

Agree? Disagree? Then write about it in Ed-Op!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Wednesday, November 15, 2000 | 6
Arts Editor • Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

Deltron 3030: A Futuristic Space Odyssey

Deltron 3030
with Ugly Ducking and People Under The Stairs
Nov. 8
Middle East

By Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

The white Apple logo glowed in the darkness while a man scurried behind the small computer. Dan the Automator was trying to get his beats going. To his left, Kid Koala stood with a grin like a guilty child after stealing cookies. He didn't wear headphones and focused on his turntables. In front of the both of them stood Del Tha Funkee Homosapien in a yellow skullcap, a cut-off T-shirt, his microphone on his right hand, his left hand out towards the crowd like he was driving an imaginary automobile.

And after People Under The Stairs and Ugly Ducking gave their ups to the traditional hip-hop old school, Deltron's music went far into a futuristic world last Wednesday night. On the edge of a creative cliff, Del, Dan and Kid all waved the crowd over to look out toward their version of the future. It was a brilliant vision to anyone that dared to venture near, but the crowd at the Middle East was unwilling to explore Deltron's newly created world. For them, it seemed only to be a hip-hop show on a Wednesday night, not a performance of tracks from what is potentially the best album of the new millennium.

"Support us if want and if you don't, that's cool," Del Tha Funkee Homosapien.

Smoothly blending technotica and hip-hop with a sound that was futuristic with old-school beats, the Automator and Koala fueled a show that threatened go anywhere and everywhere as Del attempted to tell us about his future. Joined on stage by a bassist and a guitarist (who dressed as Spiderman at one point), Del told stories of sicknesses and super heroes, pasts and probabilities.

The show was a chance for all three men to show just how talented they can be when left to their own devices. Dan's constant shifting behind his small computer and his awe at the performance of the other two was evident; he stood with his mouth open appreciating his fellow musician's talents. Del writhed on stage, sometimes moving about, sometimes stopping mid-step to focus on the lyrics, closing his eyes like he was getting more visions about our world's future before looking at the crowd with a sly grin, like he knew more than we did.

But it was Kid Koala who was perhaps the most entertaining to watch – accused by some of showing off too much on the turntables during his career, Koala looked the part with his rounded face and his hunched over figure. He didn't wear earphones, just the look of a guilty child as his hands blurred on his two turntables. It was his 10-minute solo that might have stolen the already brilliant show, somehow finding a way to shine just that much more. It was jazz and hip-hop, technotica and vinyl, all put into the creative blender and taken out, pieces at a time, by Koala and his delt right hand. A show-off perhaps, but his grin was infectious, a sign of guilt at his own skill. It was like he almost didn't believe where he was going when he started with his turntables and when he got there, he couldn't believed that he had ended up where he did.

SAM WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN STAFF
Del tha Funky Homosapien and Spiderman perform at the Middle East.

Futuristic beats from old school scratches on the story-telling of a lead singer time traveling made for an amazing performance.

The only drawback? The crowd who had no idea what was going on. To them, it was just another hip-hop show, slightly different aurally, but not the performance of truly artistic music.

"Us and People take you back, Del takes you forward."

For the futuristic quality of Deltron's performance, the bands on stage before them, People Under the Stairs and Ugly Ducking were more than willing to throw Del's spaceship in reverse.

Performing energetic hip-hop, both People and Duckling showed tremendous promise as, if nothing else, live performers. People's set was aggressive, music thrown right in the face of the crowd. With a singing DJ, all three members of the California based band whipped the crowd into a frenzy performing songs that will, unfortunately, never hit a mainstream audience. People was raw in a very polished way.

They asked the crowd to support indy hip-hop – a message quite possibly lost on a crowd just interested in the show itself, not necessarily spreading the word. But whatever the case, People let the crowd participate in its' good hooks, definitely expending considerable energy for a 45- minute set.

And then, when People was done, a rotund man with a bad goatee took the stage in a blue windbreaker. A techie? A roadie? Just one third of Ugly Duckling, a Long Beach based white hip-hop ground. The quality of the music was good, but the band's appearance couldn't be overlooked – the lanky Ryan Stiles look-alike, for example. He went for the cheap pop by giving the easy ups to Boston, and then he busted out the worst dancing the crowd had ever seen. The sign that they weren't taking themselves as seriously as they could have been was enough for the crowd, who then relaxed enough to realize just how fun Duckling could be.

Anchored by turntable whiz DJ Einstein and his eight pound gold chain, Duckling's impressive sequences decrying the decline of hip-hop at the hands of money, including one asking the crowd not to believe what it was being shown ("Don't believe bling-bling jewelry" as well as questioning the legitimacy of Jay-Z and Puff Daddy) hinted at a band that, regardless of skin color, was conscious of the decline in hip-hop. Duckling also chided rappers who focus so much on being tough that they come off as jokes rather than serious performers. That sort of attention isn't what makes bands successful; it's what makes bands good.

Both of these bands had a tremendous onstage presence, but showed talents that probably won't get ahead in today's image friendly popular music world. One can only hope that both groups stick it out long enough for that image friendliness to change and that, in the meantime, they keep performing like they did at the Middle East.

Drunken Master some of Chan's best

Legend of the Drunken Master
Directed by Lau Ka Leung
with Jackie Chan, Ti Lung, and Anita Mui
Playing at Regal Springfield Plaza 16

By William Apotheker
Collegian Correspondent

First released back in 1994 in China and Hong Kong, this is Jackie Chan's tribute to one of his earliest and most popular movies, Drunken Master (1978). The literal translation of the original title is actually Drunken Fist II. Finally making its way to the US almost seven years later, this movie stands as an anecdotal snapshot, a fond look back into Jackie Chan's career when he was a little bit younger, a little bit quicker and was given a little more creative freedom. As soon as I sat down and saw Jackie Chan listed as the head fight choreographer, I knew I was in for a good time.

The plot is there mainly as an afterthought, but it is enough to carry the movie along from fight scene to scene. Chan plays Wong Feihung, the son of a local Doctor and Kung Fu teacher who is well respected in the community. Jackie accidentally grabs the wrong package on a train ride home from a shopping expedition with his father. He thought he was sneaking a box of ginseng root past tax collector's at the train station, but what he actually had was a rare Jade Seal which was in the process of being smuggled out of the country.

The man who gets Jackie's ginseng is General Fu Wen-Chi, played by Cha-Liang Liu. He is a general in China's Central Intelligence Agency who has come to retrieve the stolen artifacts. Jackie and the General get into an intense battle underneath the train because Jackie thinks he has taken his package of ginseng. Of course, both packages look exactly the same: two boxes roughly the same size, wrapped in the same yellow-colored sheet.

Their battle leads them under the train where Jackie must show off his speed and agility as the General swings at him with a long spear. It is amazing to see him move that fast in such a small area, especially when there is a real danger should he make a even the slightest mistake. Even more ridiculous is the fact that the scene under the train is just one long tracking shot with no cuts.

When they do get out into some open space, Jackie busts out the drunken-style. The General is impressed... but not worried. "Drunken style, eh?" Well, that's no match for my Kung-Fu, kid." But, actually, Jackie holds his own with the more experienced General for about five solid minutes. He dodges stools and benches, swings around poles, uses bamboo sticks for weapons. And all the while, he is swaying back and forth in the drunken style.

The best part is that as he uses different stances and attacks he calls out their names. Most of them are pretty self-explanatory, "Drunken Master plays the flute," and, "Garden Maid flirts with the Master," and of course the patented, "Down the Hatch." This one is a weird spinning counter, which leaves the Drunken boxer with his back towards his enemy. He pretends to be falling down, hoping his opponent will be confused and grab him. He cups his fist as if he is holding a mug and "pours" it over his head. As he falls back into his opponents arm, he clings his cupped list around the throat of his enemy, screaming out," DOWN THE HATCH!" It is the act of drinking, the motion of pouring the alcohol, which gives him strength.

COURTESY OFFICIAL JACKIE CHAN SITE
Jackie Chan, Master of Drunken Boxing, gets ready for tea time.

But the general is too smart for that, and lets Jackie fall flat on his back. "You're okay kid. I gotta go."

Mixed in with all the classically wacky Jackie stunts is an important message about preserving one's heritage. The general explains this to the young Jackie in one particularly touching moment. "Our children should not have to go to another country to see artifacts from their own history." The General knew this kid wasn't looking for the Jade seal, so he was not too concerned with fighting him for much longer.

But what this movie is really about is fighting. Jackie battles over arenas like steel mills and town squares as he wards off gangsters, thugs and British Colonialists. These men are looking to steal the very heritage of his country, and Jackie is ready to defend it. He uses the art of Drunken Boxing to fool his opponents – luring them in to a false sense of security then throwing them around with their own momentum.

Most of Drunken Boxing is patience. Jackie waits for his opponent to attack him as he stumbles around in an apparent daze. Then, just as they think they have him, he parries their attacks, spins them around and lashes out with a counter. Drunken Boxers move in 360 degrees. The attacks are focused on a small, specific attack point.

In many of his stances, Jackie will have his fingers curled tight into little hooks. After he makes one or two counters, he'll sneak in and grab a hold of his opponent's jugular, squeezing it, rendering his foe helpless as a pile of Jell-O. Even as Jackie walks along the streets buying fish and vegetables, he is challenged to show off the art of Drunken Boxing, which he happily does.

In one scene, the gangsters try to nab the purse of his stepmother, thinking that she has the Jade Seal in it. Jackie is forced to battle a six or seven gangsters at once. His stepmother yells out to him, "Use the Drunken Boxing style. It will be good publicity for the school!" She runs inside a nearby restaurant with her friends and she grabs all the bottles of alcohol that she can find. "It will give him power!" she yells as they run back out into the town square. They throw a bottle into the center of the fighting circle, and in mid-battle, Jackie grabs it, crashes the top of it over some thug's head and proceeds to chug the entire bottle of wine. "That's good!" He says with a smile. She throws him two bottles more, which he crashes over two more gangsters' skulls and proceeds to chug down both bottles at once. At this point, his drunken stammer becomes even more pronounced. The gangsters think they have him and they run in full-strength. But they are no match for the drunken master, especially when he is drunk!

Even though it may seem like this scene promotes the imbibing of alcohol, it does not. As soon as Jackie defeats all of the gangsters, his father runs in wondering what is going on. Jackie is so drunk that he begins to attack his father, not realizing who he is hitting. Jackie is beaten and renounced, thrown out by his father in a fit of rage. "You are no longer my son!"

Jackie stumbles out too drunk to realize what is happening. He crawls to the nearest bar where he drinks even more. Unfortunately for him, he gets too drunk. And when the gangsters come back around town looking for him, he is in no shape for round two.

The next day his father finds him strung up in the middle of town, passed out, beaten and naked as the day he was born. They are all humiliated. Disgraced. His father explains the problem with Drunken Boxing while Jackie is in bed, recuperating. "It is true that drinking makes the body more limber, and gives you a higher tolerance to pain, but the Drunken Boxer often drinks too much. He becomes nothing more than a Drunken Fool."

The movie teaches moderation, which is the key word when referring to alcohol. In the last fight scene, when Jackie must face the head of the Mob, he finds that equilibrium. He drinks just the right amount, where his body is limber, his threshold for pain is high, but he still has control of his faculties. Naturally, the Mob Leader, in his fancy three-piece suit is no match for the drunken master, who pulls out all the stops.

Jackie dodges long steel poles fresh off the flames of the steel factory, crawls across burning hot coals, and even spits fire like an angry dragon! And the best part of it is you know it is all real. Jackie is doing all his own stunts, choreographing all his own stunts, and feeling all the pain when that flaming steel girder hits him in the chest. These fight scenes make us laugh at the same time that we jump back in our seats with our eyes widened and our jaws dropped open. Jackie's creativity and experimentation with the classic fight-movie form is what makes his movies so entertaining and what makes Jackie one of the greatest screen fighters of all time. If you're looking for a good time, just call Jackie.

Red Planet is just formulaic sci-fi

Red Planet
Directed by Anthony Hoffman
with Val Kilmer and Carrie-Anne Moss
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

Tim Letteney
Collegian Correspondent

Do you know how movie previews often hoast the good reviews it has gotten? For example KRAQ in Delaware might say Red Planet is a "non-stop action thrill ride." CBNK in Cincinnati might say that Red Planet was filled with "adrenaline pumping action," or it might be as simple as Gene Siskel giving it "one dead thumb up." Well your humble writer has a bit of knowledge to disclose: the only reason that these radio stations and that corpse gave Red Planet good reviews is because they have been paid off. Lucky for you I will never get paid off. Hell I don't even get a paycheck.

COURTESY OFFICIAL RED PLANET SITE
Val Kilmer and friends scene here in Red Planet, a movie that shouldn't have been made at all.

First timer Anthony Hoffman directs this sci-fi thriller about the first manned trip to Mars. If you hadn't guessed from the previews, Val Kilmer is abandoned on the red planet and Carrie-Anne Moss of Matrix fame is his only hope of survival. Every struggle you can think of ends up in this movie. There is man versus man, man versus machine, man versus nature and of course man versus a very cliche plot. That last man was me. This movie could have taken place 10 years ago, underwater, with different actors and nothing would have been lost, except the name. It would have to be changed to The Abyss.

Red Planet is perhaps the most overdone sci-fi movie made in years. Maybe it was the atmosphere of Mars that made the explosions bigger, or maybe Mr. Kilmer is just that bad ass. I don't know. The highlight of the movie was the sound, by far. My chair vibrated every time something or someone exploded. I think I now understand why the floor is always so sticky in DTS theaters.

The special effects were decent with some particularly well-done parts, i.e. the fire in zero gravity scene. Other than that this movie was not as visually stunning as it should have been. Maybe Mars is just a bad planet to situate a movie. Perhaps Pluto would look better on 70 mm.

Don't get me wrong, it was an entertaining movie. There were explosions, a bit of gore, a shower scene with Carrie-Anne Moss and the first piss on Mars. So, yes it was entertaining, and yes it was much better than Mission to Mars, but is it worth eight bucks? It matters what you look for in a film. If you want a weak and over-told plot, a lot of G.I. great sound, with a bit of machismo thrown in, then, by all means, go spend your cash. But if for some odd reason you want substance, interesting characters, a preponderance of expedition and innovative direction, this film is certainly not for you.

Anniversary Sale Week
November 15th - 19th

Enter to Win a Zanna
$1000 Shopping Spree
Two $250 Shopping Sprees
Our 1998 winner was UMASS Student Suzanne Schmuul, Class of 2000. This year it could be YOU!
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

OPEN HOUSE
Explore the fusion of ART & TECHNOLOGY at The Center's first University expose!
TODAY
3:30 - 6:00 PM
445 Fine Arts Center
The Center For Research in Art & Technology

RIDE • SPECIAL BLEND • OXYGEN • K2
SNOWBOARD SHOP
Gear-up to Get Down
THIS WINTER Rt. 5 Easthampton (413) 586-8766
Quality snowboard packages starting at $299.95
Bus trips starting soon. Call for info. Show your UMass ID save an additional 10%
Rt. 63 East Longmeadow (413) 781-5142
FORUM • NEVER SUMMER • DC • K2 • SANTA CRUZ • NORTHWAVE
RIP ZONE • 4-SQUARE • SALOMON • BURTON

Minutewomen reflect on solid 2000; Experienced team eyes NCAA bid

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

A few breaks here or there, and the Massachusetts women's soccer team could be playing well into the NCAA tournament right now.

Unfortunately, the breaks didn't always go the way of the Minutewomen during the 2000 season. As a result, UMass is now preparing for the off-season after losing to Xavier in the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament.

With the loss, the Maroon and White closed out the year with a record of 11-7-1, including an 8-3-1 mark over the final 13 games of the season.

"In soccer, you talk about the agony of defeat, and we realized that agony," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "We lost two of our last 10 games – one in overtime to Dayton where we thought that we had their All-American [Missy Gregg] smothered, but the kid took a great headed goal."

"Then against Xavier, our freshman defender [Michelle Luttati] shut that kid [Annette Gruber] out, but the cross that they mishit went to the only place that she [Gruber] could get her foot on without allowing Michelle to defend it," he added.

Considering that the Minutewomen entered the season with a newly revamped lineup – 10 players were gone from the 1999 team – UMass surely needed some time to find a suitable mix. Add injuries to several key players, including senior forward Kara Green, and the Minutewomen seemed to be facing an uphill climb right from the start.

"The majority of our kids came in fit and ready to roll, but we had some key setbacks early," Rudy said. "Our big goal scorer [Green] came in with a torn quadriceps, so we didn't have her on the field to begin with."

"To be realistic, Kara's right leg is good for about eight to 10 goals a year, plus numerous shots, rebounds and knockdowns for the other people on the team," added Rudy. "But she had to play left-footed and she played very well."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN
Freshman Michelle Luttati closed out her inaugural season by earning Atlantic 10 All-Rookie team honors.

After two straight wins over Texas- El Paso and Albany to open the season, the Minutewomen then went on to lose four of five and fall under .500.

"We started well enough and got a win against UTEP even though we blew a lot of chances," Rudy said. Then we beat an overmatched Albany team before outplaying Syracuse not by a little, but by a lot. But we didn't finish our chances and they got one very lucky goal. In a way, it was a harbinger of things to come."

But true to UMass fashion the never say die, play all out until the final whistle effort – the Minutewomen rebounded once the Atlantic 10 portion of the schedule started. The Maroon and White posted a five-game winning streak from Sept. 29 to Oct. 15 thanks to solid play from all four areas on the field. Overall, UMass finished 7-2-1 in the A-10.

"We had a brand new defense, so we made some errors along the way," Rudy said. "But finally, once we got played in and diminished the amount of chances and cheap goals, and finally figured out how to play corner [kick] defense, we came around."

For now, the Minutewomen will lose only Green and Kara Ciocca to graduation. As a result, UMass has high hopes for the 2001 season, and will attempt to use this year as a springboard into the upcoming campaign.

"It's been three years without an NCAA bid for us," Rudy said. "The first year, we had too much ground to make up [because of injuries]. But the last two years, we could have been there. Maybe we should have been there. I really believe that next year we can get back to the NCAA tournament, but it's going to take a commitment that starts right now, and not two weeks before the start of the season."

"At times, we were very good, but if we want to be an excellent, top-level Division I program, then we have to cover all of the bases," he added. "You have to be lucky, but you also have to make your own luck. You have to train harder than your opponents on the field and in the weight room and you need to be focused beyond belief. If we don't have that individually and collectively, then we have to be prepared to accept less."

■ hockey

continued from page 10

"When I played here, it was a really good experience," Duplessis said. "We sold out every game, so you get accustomed to playing in front of that many people. The crowd was always into it."

Said Callahan: "As a whole, the people out here look out for you. They almost put you on a pedestal."

Showtime arrives

Friday night, a sell-out crowd of over 8,300 filed into "The Bullpen" to root on their Mavericks. And, on this night, the home team didn't disappoint, snatching a 3-2 win from the Minutemen.

All three players logged plenty of ice time in the contest, but none of them recorded a point. Nevertheless, there was still a sense of familiarity present for the trio when they skated their first strides in front of their former supporters.

"The same people are at the UNO games that were at the Lancers' games," Culgin said. "Even the announcer is the same, so hearing that voice makes you feel like you're playing at home again."

Added Callahan: "It's nice to be back and to see some old faces that you haven't seen in years. It gets you pumped up when the fans are cheering for you."

Less than 24 hours later, the two teams battled again, with UNO emerging victorious for the second straight night by a final of 3-2.

Callahan figured in the scoring on this night, setting up Tim Turner on a power play goal late in the first period.

Unfortunately for the former Lancers and the rest of the Minutemen, the club returned back home with a pair of losses to its credit.

The road left behind

Even though they now call Amherst home, Callahan, Culgin and Duplessis still hold their experience in Omaha in high regard.

"It's great. I'd recommend it to anyone," said Culgin of his time in the USHL, where he was an All-Star in 1997. "You learn so much about yourself. Most of the kids who go on to Division I hockey are in the top half of juniors. You learn about mental toughness and how to compete. And the travel is so much easier for us now."

Said Callahan: "Playing in the USHL is a big step, but once you make it, it's a lot easier to jump into college hockey. The pace of the game and the physical part of it is better than any other junior league."

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA
COMING SOON!
The Largest Movie Theatre In Hampshire County!
Register to WIN
Family 4-Packs to our VIP Night Tuesday, Nov. 21st
To enter, go to cinemark.com Grand Openings and click on the Hadley web page.
Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.
Coca-Cola Celebrates The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!
FEATURING
• 2 Box Offices
• 2 Concession Stands
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens
Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet. Go to cinemark.com

■ field hockey

continued from page 10

University of Massachusetts- located only 25 minutes from her home town of Greenfield. For some people, the pressure of playing close to home can be overwhelming, but for Schmidt it was actually helpful.

"I was more comfortable being closer to the people I know," she said. "I came into a tough situation when I got here, but it all worked out. I don't think that there was specifically more pressure on me just because I was here. Because here I had a support system close to home."

Since she has been here, Schmidt has been a model student-athlete on and off the field. In her first three years at UMass she was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll, and will most likely be hearing his name called for a fourth time at the end of the semester. This is nothing new for the players that competed under coach Patty Shea, however, and it has become commonplace for the members of the team to excel not much in the classroom as they do on the field.

It is for that reason and more that Schmidt has enjoyed spending her four collegiate years with Shea at the helm.

"I've had my slumps, but you get out of it," said Schmidt. "If she [Shea] knows you have potential than she will be on your case until you prove what you can do, and that is a big reason why she is excelling. We are her number one priority."

Laura Gersk

While Gersk did not have a career as successful as Schmidt's, she was still a very important role player on a team that needed all the offensive firepower it could get.

During the 1999 season, Gersk was able to tie for third on the team in assists with six, and while her offensive production dropped off this year, she had a total of one goal, one assist and a very important score during the Minutewomen's 3-2 win over Dayton. On the play, Jen Robinson dribbled into the corner and fed a pass to Gersk, who centered the ball into the box. Gersk increased the Minutewomen lead to 2-0, and the members of the team hope the opportunity can continue during the spoil.

"I had been watching my butt of all season and I finally got the ball in the net," said Gersk. "It's one thing to do it at the end of the season made the day kind of complete. It was very meaningful."

Unlike the other seniors on the team, Gersk was not with Shea since day one, but instead transferred from the University of Michigan after a very successful couple of years with the Wolverines. In her two years at Ann Arbor, Gersk was able to score eight goals, and even managed to net four scores in a game against Louisville.

During her time at UMass, she learned to accept her reduced role, and went out determined to make the most of her time in practice as well as during the game.

"I think my role on the team is to go to practice, step it up and really make everybody work hard," said Gersk. "I bring a little emotion to the team and when I go into the game I just want to work hard on the field."

Now that her collegiate career is over, Gersk would like to continue knocking the field hockey ball around in the future, but like Schmidt, does not see a coaching position in her immediate future.

"I definitely want to play for fun," she said. "But coaching, I'm not really sure."

CHUGGING CAN KILL.
Playing Drinking Games, hazing or celebrating your 21st Birthday by drinking excessively can result in
ALCOHOL POISONING
Remember: Friends Don't Let Friends Die Drunk
Don't Pressure your Buddies into Drinking Heavily
For more information, contact REAP @ 545-0137 Residential Education Alcohol
REAP is a Student Assistance Program
Located in Moore Residence Hall Lobby, Southwest
This message is brought to you through donations from the UMass Police Department.

FREE Give-Aways! PUNKTUATION. punk rock showcase
Featuring... FACE TO FACE
Plus... Amazing Grams, GOB, Chronic Future
Cash Bar! 21 to drink
Register to win a free Snowboard!
Playstation 2 Demos!
X Games Prize Packs!
presented by UPC
Featuring ESPN Winter X Games!!
Thurs. Nov.16. 2000
Student Union Ballroom (Umass)
Doors @ 6:30pm
$3 DOOR CHARGE FOR UMASS
(GENERAL PUBLIC- $5)
tix unlimited* @ door (valid Umass student ID)

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

Sigma Kappa Pledge KrisW I still know, your final clue! This angel sister has mad respect for the queen because she is royalty herself Eh!

Swing/Salsa Dance Northampton Center for the Arts. Wednesdays. Lessons 7pm $10, $7/students. Dance 8:30 $5 for dance only (413) 259-2982 (Mark)

OFFcampus Antics Find Deanna kissing a special someone on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

CHILDCARE

Care, experience, references, housework. Anytime from 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

Responsible caring person for 4yr. old girl. Three afternoons a week or more. Car, references. Thru June or summer. 259-1750

EMPLOYMENT

Someone to use my snow blower to clear my drive way on Rocky Hill Rd. in Hadely 549-5361

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers
Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Administrative Assistant. Use your skills and make a difference. International grassroots hunger lobby seeks computer literate, highly organized individual. 15hrs/week. Main St. Northampton. Email resume and writing sample to: empower@javanet.com

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Comfort Plus! Authentic Surgical Scrubs. Wear them to bed or wear them to class! Check out our website at www.authentic-srubs.com

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

MISCELLANEOUS

RAISE $1600-$7000 + GET FREE CAPS T-SHIRTS & PHONE CARDS! This one week fundraiser requires no investment and small amount of time from you or your club. Qualified callers receive a free gift just for calling. Call today at 1-800-808-7442 x 80

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom open in large house. Cheap Rent! 2min walk from campus. Available Jan. 1st, call Laura 549-5383

ROOMMATE WANTED

Three Girls on Main Street need roommate for spring. Call 256-3816

Wanted to Share 2 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. Start Jan 1 Call Beth 665-8572

Two Girls Looking for roommate in 3 bedroom Pufton Apt. Avail Jan/01. Call 549-4017

SERVICES

Want Academic Success? Want to take professional notes and pass exams? Get the academic guide to success! For more information send SASE to: TDS, P.O. Box 225 Sunderland, MA 01375

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring break.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Your AD Could BE RIGHT HERE!! Call 545-3500 TODAY!!

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

0 - HSCN Bulletin Board
1 - Cable Hartford
2 - CBS 3 Boston
3 - ABC 40 Springfield
4 - PBS 57 Springfield
5 - HSCN Bulletin Board
6 - Univision Hartford
7 - HSCN New Movie Channel
8 - NBC 30 New Britain
9 - Fox 61 Hartford
10 - PBS 24 Hartford
11 - NBC 40 Springfield
12 - International Channel
13 - UMATV Audience Channels
14 - WB 59 New Haven
15 - Univision
16 - UPN 20 (Boston Channel)
17 - Weather Channel
18 - Cable Ad Board
19 - Cspan
20 - CNBC
21 - CNN Headline News
22 - Lifetime
23 - USA
24 - TBS
25 - TNT
26 - A&E
27 - Sci-Fi
28 - Nickelodeon
29 - Nick at Nite
30 - TV Land
31 - Comedy Central
32 - BET
33 - Univision
34 - Financial Network
35 - College TV Network
36 - MTV
37 - VH1
38 - ESPN
39 - The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 15, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Cliffs-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (N)			National Geographic				In the Life (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	3	News (N)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Bette (N) (R)	Welcome-N.Y.	"American Tragedy" (2000, Drama) Ving Rhames, Ron Silver. (R)			News (N)	Late Show (R)
WBZ	4	4	News (N)	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N) (R)	Welcome-N.Y.	"American Tragedy" (2000, Drama) Ving Rhames, Ron Silver. (R)			News (N)	Late Show (R)
WCVB	5	5	News (N)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (R)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (R) Spin City (R)		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)	News (N)	Nightline (R)
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (R)	Friends (R)	Nanny (R)	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) (R)		Felicity "Kissing Mr. Covington"			News (N)	Friends (R)	Sudden-Sussn
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Titans (N) (In Stereo) (R)		West Wing "The Portland Trip"		Law & Order "Return" (N) (R)		Friends (R)	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven (In Stereo) (R)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days "Deloris Demands" (R)		West Wing "The Portland Trip"		Law & Order "Return" (N) (R)	News	Tonight Show
WVIT		16	News	NBC News	Extra (N) (R)	Hollywood	Titans (N) (In Stereo) (R)		West Wing "The Portland Trip"		Law & Order "Return" (N) (R)	News	Charlie Rose (In Stereo) (R)
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons (R)	Frasier (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Friends (R)	Malcolm-Mid.	Normal, Ohio	Street "High Yield Bonds" (N) (R)		News	Friends (R)	Fraser (R)
WWLP	9	22	News (R)	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Titans (N) (In Stereo) (R)		West Wing "The Portland Trip"		Law & Order "Return" (N) (R)	News (R)	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	8	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		National Geographic		Napoleon: "The Summit of Greatness/The End" (N) (R)			News (R)	Nightline (R)
WGGB	57	28	News (R)	ABC News	Seinfeld (R)	Frasier (R)	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey (R) Spin City (R)		Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)	News (R)	Tonight Show
WSBK	38		Judge Judy (R)	Judge Judy (R)	Seinfeld (R)	Frasier (R)	7 Days "Deloris Demands" (R)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier (R) Mad Abt. You	Spin City (R)	Spin City (R)
WTBS	42		Roseanne (R)	Roseanne (R)	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	26		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order	American Dream	Biography "Merle Haggard" (R)		Behind Closed Doors (R)		Investigative Reports (N) (R)	Law & Order "Legacy" (R)
CNN	20	23	Worldview (R)	Moneyline Newshour (N) (R)		Crossfire (R)	World Today (R)		Larry King Live (R)		Newsstand (R)	Sports	Moneyline (R)
COM	53	30	Saturday Night Live (R)		Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money	ex "The Money Pit" (1986, Comedy) Tom Hanks, Shelley Long.		South Park (R) Beltlebots (R)		South Park (R) Beltlebots (R)	Daily Show (R)	Stein's Money
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Creatures		Wild Discovery: Wildcats		On the Inside: Cults		Rage to Ravange		Inside the KKK - Faces of Hate	Justice Files "The Sting"
ESPN	51		Sportscenter (R)		PBA Bowling (Live)		NHL Hockey: Dallas Stars at Buffalo Sabres. (Live)					Sportscenter (R)
LIFE	62		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Kelsey Sagal"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Direct Effect (N) (In Stereo)		Breakin' It Down With Sarana	Truth (N)	Redlohead (N)
MTV	63		WWF Rocks	True Life		Senseless
NICK	43		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! (R)	Rugrats (R)	Told by Ginger (Brady Bunch		Head of Class Head of Class		Facts of Life Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	61		Sliders (In Stereo) (R)		Babylon 5 "Hunter, Prey"		Invisible Man (In Stereo) (R)		Farscape (R)		Lexx: The Series "White Trash"	Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	72	24	Mysterious Skies		Micro Miracles		4-Wheel Force		Tornado Alley (N)		Storm of the Century	4-Wheel Force
TNT	27		ER "A Hole in the Heart" (R)		Pretender "Murder 101" (R)		NBA Basketball: Miami Heat at New Jersey Nets. (In Stereo Live) (R)				NBA	ex "Primary Colors" (1998) (R)
USA	29		Walker, Texas Ranger (R)		JAG "True Calling" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Pump Action" (R)		tv's "Por Richer or Poorer" (1997, Comedy) Tim Allen, Kelsie Alley. (In Stereo) (R)			Martin (R)
HBO	49			tv's "Simply Irresistible" (1999) Sarah Michelle Gellar. PG-13 (R)			ex "Goodbye Love" (1998, Comedy) Patricia Arquette. (R)				Oz "Obituaries" (In Stereo) (R)	Chris Rock (R)	Bare-Autopsy
MAX	50			(5:00) tv's "Wing Commander" (1999) PG-13 (R)			ex "Timeless" (1994) Jean-Claude Van Damme, Mia Sara. (R)				ex "Boys Don't Cry" (1999, Drama) Hilary Swank. (R)
SHOW	45			ex "Lovefool" (1999, Comedy) Patrick Dempsey. PG-13 (R)			tv's "The Rage: Carrie 2" (1999, Horror) Emily Bergl. (R)				Soul Food (In Stereo) (R)	Resurrection	"Number1"

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

I ENJOY FLOWER GARDENING.
BUT YOU'RE A GUY.
(POLITICALLY LOADED SILENCE)
IF I WERE TO NAME THE STATUE OF LIBERTY, I'D NAME HER STEVE. IF I WERE TO NAME MY OWN CHIN, I'D NAME IT RUSSEL D. CHIN.

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

I didn't know fleas didn't like ticks.
They sure are flipping out.
Dude, that is one ugly tick!
Mmm. Lyme!
(Fleaus southparkius)
(Tickus maximus)
Oh my god he killed Kenny! You bastard!
Roar!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I'M SORRY THAT BUCKY BROKE YOUR GAMEBOY! SATCH, WE CAN GET YOU ANOTHER ONE IF YOU--
NO NO. I DON'T WANT ONE. NEVER BEEN A BIG FAN OF ELECTRONIC STUFF. YOU KNOW? BEEPS FREAK ME OUT. THEY'RE BAD. MOST TECHNOLOGY IS BAD.
LOWE TECH
WHOA. DUDE. CALM DOWN. YOU SOUND LIKE YOU LIVE IN A CABIN IN THE WOODS.
HEY! THERE'S NOTHING WRONG WITH LIVING IN THE WOODS.
SATCHEL'S THE UNABOMBER

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

PETER, I ASKED YOU TO RAKE THE LEAVES TWO WEEKS AGO!
I'M WAITING FOR ALL OF THEM TO FINISH FALLING. IT'S MORE EFFICIENT THAT WAY.
WHAT ARE YOU TALKING ABOUT? THE TREES ARE BARE!
NOT TRUE. THE MAPLE TREE OUT BACK STILL HAS ONE LEAF LEFT. GO LOOK FOR YOURSELF
YOU MEAN THIS ONE WITH THE SUPER GLUE ON IT?
JASON, YOU WERE SUPPOSED TO HIDE THE LADDER!

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

NOW, WHAT THE HECK AM I SUPPOSED TO DO WITH THIS?
A GRANOLA BAR!
FOR THERE'RE NOW TODAY AND HAVE NEVER KNOWN A HALLOWEEN WITHOUT FRUIT ON LOW-FAT YOGURT
THEY NEVER HAD THE GOOD CANDY BACK IN DOC BRADLEY'S DAY. NO, SIR. JUST BOWLS OF RAISINS OF SUGAR.
THAT MAN WAS A SAINT.
A VERY RICH SAINT.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You will receive something of a shock today, but your recovery should be quick once you realize just where you stand. The only people who stand up to the window peaked ones are the brave and the ignorant. Contemplate that fact for a while. HB2le Maz

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You're big into solving mysteries and today's your day. old Mrs. Pemberbottom's coin collection was stolen! So let's go. Sam's Drew. Don't answer the phones. The phones are real.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It's not a game today ... and you'd better start taking things more seriously or someone you care about may decide to take things elsewhere. Your jacket leads others to believe that somewhere in this great country of ours there's an El Camino with it's seat cover missing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Tell no lies today, and avoid doing anything illicit or underhanded. Things you do directly and honestly will surely pay off handsomely. Remember my friend help is on the way. Red Balloon is here to take your hand and steer. Red Balloon will help you fly away. Red Balloon has a tale to tell of candy, fun, and golden hells. Red Balloon will wait and done a will. Red Balloon will wait and straight to bed.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Trust your own initial responses to even the most complex questions today. You needn't work too hard to arrive at an understanding. The wrong thing was you're not normally like that.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You must prepare yourself for a rough landing of sorts ... but any landing you can walk away from is a good one, after all. Spend the rest of the day shepherding around.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your critics may not take you seriously today, if you break out in a new direction and try something you've never done before. You're making a choice. A terrible term, I'm afraid.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It'll be smart and wise enough, but today you must still struggle, persevere and be willing to let someone else bask in the spotlight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Take things easy today, and let developments occur according to the natural order. Trying to force the issue can only work against you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You can entertain others today simply by entertaining yourself, though you must have more noble motives at heart in the long run.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You may be lacking in patience today ... and the truth is that patience may be what is most required of you. The evening brings calm.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You must be a little more serenity-minded today and leave behind your more frivolous thoughts ... at least for the time being. All of a humble Earth, step up and claim your fish today.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 43 LOW: 27	HIGH: 47 LOW: 30	HIGH: 43 LOW: 29

Quote of the Day

"It is impossible organically and politically to spoil a system that is already rotten to the core."

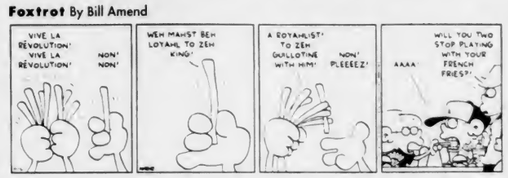
–Ralph Nader

Adam and Eric By Ross Burach

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

DAD! I FOUND A MUMMY! A TOTAL NO BRAINER
IN FACT, I'M SO SURE HE COULD PASS THIS HISTORY 101 STUFF IS AN AFTERTHOUGHT
ABOUT 3 P.M.
I WATCH BOTTOM-BARGE JOKES
I'M TIED, BOTTOM.
SHE WAS HIS ONLY LOVE. I SEE HER HERE
SHE WAS HIS ONLY LOVE. I SEE HER HERE

Foxtrot By Bill Amend



VIVE LA REVOLUTION! VIVE LA REVOLUTION!
NON! NON!
WEH MAHST BEH LOYAHL TO ZEH KING?
NON! PLEEEEZ!
A ROYAHLIST? TO ZEH GUILLOTINE WITH HIM!
AAAA!
WILL YOU TWO STOP PLAYING WITH YOUR FRENCH FRIES?!

Kampus Kids By Adam Souliere

ARE YOU DEAF!? DON'T EVER CALL ME AGAIN! I NEVER WANT TO SEE YOUR UGLY FACE!!
What on earth are you doing?! I thought you really liked that girl!
Oh, I do. But I heard that women are more attracted to jerks who treat them like garbage.

MONKEY-BOX BY PRB-J

WARNING! DONOT PUSH RED BUTTON
ONE FINGER AT A TIME, JENNY GNAWED HER HANDS OFF IN SILENT CONTEMPLATION OF THE RED BUTTON © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Tator Tot Meat Cassarole

Kielbasa Grinder (B,F,H)

Vegetable Tator Tot Casserole (vegetarian) (B,H,W)

Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan) (B,F,H)

Madras Tofu Curry (vegan) (W)

Dinner

BBQ Sluggers (B,F,H)

Pineapple Ham Steak

Breaded Vegan Cutlet (vegan) (B,F,W)

Casablanca Stew (vegan) (B,H)

California Chili (vegan) (W)

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martigneth
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Shimauli Dave, John Zowislak

Your Ad could be here! We have a readership of 28,000! Telephone: 413.545.3500

ACROSS
1 Buffet choice
6 Parsley unit
11 Layer
14 Eimsean on the Beach: e.g.
15 SkyDome: e.g.
16 Female sandpiper
17 Like the sea
18 Gondolier's waterway
19 Eggs
20 The Ginza's locale
22 Dogpatch name
24 Knights' foes
28 Part of the atmosphere
29 Mousse or rat
30 Sea: Semitone: e.g.
32 Skip
33 Chicago airport
35 "How sad!"
39 Caresses
40 And: in Berlin
41 Parched
42 Fan
43 Provide funds
45 Made a remark
46 Russian export
48 Forsyth's "The Fist"
50 Sam Malone's bar
52 Spruce up
53 "The Eyes of — Mad"
54 Gawkey
55 Celestial body
58 Off limits
60 Turkey
65 Tire pressure nos.
66 Reckon
67 Olive green bird
68 Tire woman
69 Fragrant flowers
70 1959 Rookie of the Year Baylor

DOWN
1 Boohoo
2 Calendar abbr
3 Grass skirt accessory
4 Prince Valiant's eldest
5 Ohio city
6 Bags
7 Impore
8 Spitsville
9 "Be there a minute"
10 Star system
11 Tine
12 Embankment
13 Wish for 21 Aware of 23 Ignores
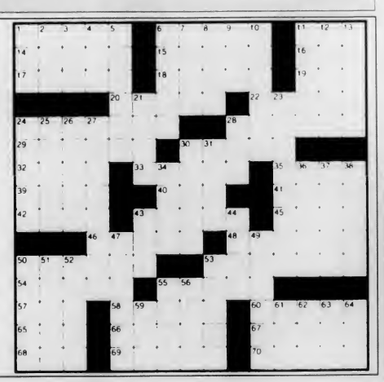
24 Fumbles
25 Juliet's beloved
26 Mine entrances
27 Recovers
28 Grand — Opry
30 Black and white animal
31 Church calendar
34 Big piece
36 Dog's chain
37 Pop up
38 Family car
43 Sullivan and Asner
44 Had on
45 Cigarlo for one
46 Hotbeats
47 Stern
49 Jazzman Blake
50 Ice sheets
55 Kimono sashes
56 Going — doing
59 Notary abbr
61 Zip
62 Work unit
63 "Anne of Green Gables" loc
64 Won — soup

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

C	E	D	A	R		D	A	R	E	S		D	E	N
O	Z	O	N	E		U	L	T	R	A		A	X	E
B	R	O	T	H		C	L	E	A	R	A	N	C	E
B	A	C	K	S	E	A	T		D	I	D	E	D
A	L	D	A	S		S	N	I	D	E	L	Y
L	E	R	T	S		W	H	I	N	E
V	I	D	E	O		B	E	T		G	I	X	T	V
E	M	U	S		R	A	L	P	H		B	Y	T	E
C	O	G		C	U	R	L	S		F	I	L	E	D
		P	O	S	E	S		F	E	D	O	R	A
C	R	O	O	N	E	D		S	L	E	E	P
H	A	V	O	C		M	A	U	L		H	I	D
I	C	E	H	O	C	K	E	Y		E	R	O	D	E
M	E	N		C	O	I	L	S		R	U	S	E	S
E	R	S		T	O	N	T	O		S	T	E	A	K

12 6 00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS
Wednesday, November 15, 2000 10
Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass forwards end careers in style

Schmidt, Geryk provide offensive firepower to quality Elite Eight squad

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team had the best defense in the country this season, but it would have all been for naught had the forwards not been there to score the occasional goal.

This year's senior forwards, Greenfield native Kristen Schmidt and Hatfield native Tamra Geryk, were able to do just that by making the most of the time they spent patrolling the offensive end of the field for the Minutewomen through out their illustrious careers.

Kristen Schmidt

It is safe to say that Schmidt will leave the University of Massachusetts with the knowledge that she went out on the top of her game. And almost every athlete agrees that this is exactly how it should be.

On Nov. 4, in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament against West Chester, she began a historic postseason goal-scoring run by poking the ball into the cage after diving through the circle in order to reach the ball. It was a spectacular score by all accounts, and helped propel UMass to the 4-0 victory over the Golden Rams.

However, this goal was just the beginning.

In the A-10 championship game the next day, she took complete control in the second half and banged home the only hat trick a member of the Minutewomen would collect all season. The last of the three goals came off of a tricky penalty corner play with 7:24 remaining, and all but guaranteed that Schmidt would win the A-10 tournament Most Valuable Player award.

Winning the MVP was something that Schmidt would not soon forget.

"This weekend was a highlight for my career," she said. "You can't really write it any better. I just had so much fun playing that weekend."

She was also able to keep things in perspective following the most impressive performance of her career.

"Granted, I scored three goals," said Schmidt. "It means a lot to me and it's a great memory to have, but I will remember winning the A-10 championship for the fourth time more than I will remember scoring three goals in that game."

When the Minutewomen traveled down to North Carolina this past weekend for the NCAA tournament, Schmidt made sure that she ended her career in style by knocking home the game winning goal in the first round against BU, and then by giving the Maroon and White the early 1-0 lead against North Carolina before it eventually fell to the No. 2 seed, 3-1.

The two goals in the NCAA's gave Schmidt a team-leading season tally of 14, and increased her career goals scored to 32.

Unfortunately, she would not get a chance to continue knocking balls into the back of the cage, as the sound of the buzzer signified the end of the North Carolina game as well as the end of the career of one of the most prolific scorers in UMass history.

And despite that fact that Schmidt spent her senior year as a tri-captain, as well as being one of the most vocal members of the team, it looks like coaching will probably not be in the immediate future.

"If I went to go get my masters or something I would maybe become a graduate assistant or something like that," said Schmidt. "But other than that, I don't know."

Back in 1997, Schmidt decided to stay close to home and attend the

Turn to FIELD HOCKEY, page 7

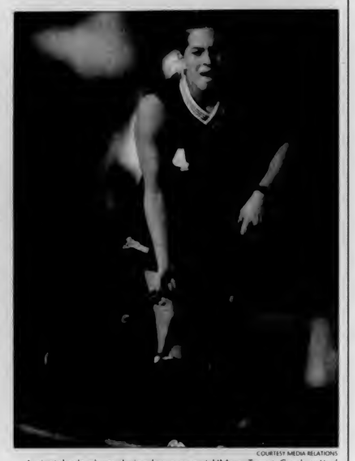
COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior forward Kristen Schmidt had 14 goals this season to lead the UMass field hockey team in that department.



COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

A pivotal role player during her career at UMass, Tamra Geryk netted one goal in her final season in Maroon and White.

Some things will never change; UMass trio returns to Omaha

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

OMAHA, Neb. – Long before the days of the University of Nebraska-Omaha hockey program and capacity crowds at the Omaha Civic Auditorium, fans flocked to Askarben Coliseum to watch the only game in town – the Omaha Lancers of the United States Hockey League.

But even with the arrival of the Mavericks program for the 1997-98 season, interest in the game of hockey in Omaha has not wavered one bit. Both clubs continue to play in front of large, contingent, at the rinks that are separated by only a couple of miles.

So, when the Massachusetts hockey team headed out to Nebraska's state capital over the weekend, it marked the homecoming for three former Lancers – defensemen Joey Culgin and Luke Duplessis and sophomore winger Jimmy Callahan. All three juniors enjoyed success as members of the Lancers program and used that experience as a catapult into Division I college hockey.

"It's nice to come back and see some people that you had good friendships with," Duplessis said. "But the league [USHL] is a good league. Those long bus trips make you grow up when you're away from home. They also get you used to college hockey."

A hockey hotbed in an unlikely spot

Hockey is not exactly the first thing that comes to mind when thinking about the state of Nebraska, a land that is more likely to be recognized athletically for its nationally ranked college football program in Lincoln or the College World Series – certainly not ice hockey.

However, the game is an integral part of the Omaha lifestyle. Game night is a social event, a place where the locals can gather to cheer on their Lancers or Mavericks.

"It was the same type of atmosphere, people getting here at a half an hour before the game for warm-ups," Culgin said. "At home, people don't show up until halfway through the first period."

"Everyone knows who you are," added Culgin. "When we played here, the Lancers were the only show in town. Now, with UNO here, I'm sure that they are treated like gold just like we were."

At the same time, the players also become active members of the community. They contribute to many different worthwhile causes and in a sense, become celebrities.

"Even older people come up to you asking for autographs, not just the little kids," Duplessis said. "They even make you go and sign at stores."

Added Culgin: "They'd bring you to the mall on a Tuesday night to sign autographs and half the town would come out."

But just like in New England, a place that is regarded as the centerpiece of college hockey, the premise in the Midwest is still the same – the fans are still there to root on the home team, no matter what way you slice it.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

DAN LEVITAN/COLLEGIAN

Luke Duplessis is one of three players on the UMass hockey team who played for the Omaha Lancers of the United States Hockey League prior to his days in Amherst.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Jimmy Callahan

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Joey Culgin

TODAY'S JOB OPENING #1026

JOB TITLE: Senior Web Designer.
SALARY: Take what you need.
DESCRIPTION: Kick back and brainstorm. Come and go as you please.
REQUIREMENTS: Internet surfing experience. Ability to hang out with friends a plus. Some napping required.
OTHER: Unlimited benefits. 3-hour lunch mandatory.

Hey, your dream job might not exist. But there are over 40,000 other high tech job openings throughout New York State.

hightechNY.com

You're a mean one, Mr. Grinch, but regardless of your social shortcomings, you still got an Arts page.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

The UMass Hockey team challenges the evil Huskies from the University of Connecticut. J.R. Zavisza hopes to help the home-town Minuteman get the win against the enemy.

SPORTS p. 16

Volume CVII Issue 51 www.dailycollegian.com Thursday, November 16, 2000

Republican Club propoganda defaced, vandalized

JANET BASS/ COLLEGIAN

One of the Republican Club's vandalized signs

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Several signs endorsing Presidential and Vice Presidential hopefuls George W. Bush and Dick Cheney were tampered with in the Republican Club office yesterday.

In a case of apparent vandalism, the office was entered and anti-Republican sentiments were written upon the campaign posters. Messages such as "typical Republican bullshit," and "racist fuckers" were scrawled across the posters that were formerly hanging in the window of the office.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department was unavailable for comment about the alleged crime at press time.

Chuck Johnson, membership director for the organization, explained that the office had no signs of forced entry and that the door was locked. He went on to say that those interested in getting into the office could go through the side entrance, go over the wall or enter with a key.

"Usually people don't like us, but no one has ever done anything like this," Johnson said.

Many theories surround the reason for the vandalism of the office, some of which include the current political tensions in national politics and tensions with the political system on campus. Jeff Bardille, a member of the Republican Club, expressed frustration at the anti-Republican sentiment in the state of Massachusetts but explained that he felt that this particular incident was not motivated by politics but instead by how the club is viewed on campus.

"We are not trying to be the type of club that people think that we are," he said explaining that the club had a bad image. "I think that if we were in Florida that it would have something to

Turn to VANDALIZED, page 3

SARA WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

Sonia Sanchez recited her poetry last night in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Unproductive sniping continues

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Like Moses parting the waters, the Student Government Association [SGA] parted down the middle at last night's meeting as personal issues and emotions flared.

As Speaker Jim Eltringham had predicted, the Judiciary hearing was in the back of many Senators minds, and tension became visible before the meeting was called to order.

An e-mail written by Senator Michael Mercorio sparked heated discussion between Senate members. The email, which was distributed to members of the SGA via their Internet group, expressed Mercorio's opinion about Central at large senator, Rebecca Austern's involvement in the recent SGA election problems.

Northeast Area Governor Michael McCarthy, stood up during announcements and demanded that Mercorio read the e-mail and apologize for his actions. Mercorio refused to do so, and intern McCarthy read the letter out loud to the SGA.

"If there were too many seats filled with a bunch of liberals that had the same candy-ass ideas, Rebecca...would probably have a big smile on her face and a wet spot in the men's underwear that she has on...So fuck the constitutionality of the election it has nothing to do with it, they are afraid that they can't influence us with there shitty liberal ideas."

This lead to further announcements by different members of the senate body expressing concern over personal attacks, as well as an overall concern for this particular case. Senators expressed concern from both points of view and questioned those of others.

Eltringham expressed his thoughts about the pending Judiciary case to the SGA during the meeting as well.

"I think that something needs to be said. Last September you guys came into this office, or people went out and voted for you, or maybe you were appointed. However, you got to where you are now, and let's think about what this means," Eltringham said. "That means that whoever put you here, decided that you were the best to represent them and that they wanted you to represent there voice. They placed there vote and trust in you."

Eltringham continued to speak to the Senate on the issues revolving around the Judiciary hearing, as well as what he hoped the Senate would take into consideration.

"The vote is probably the utmost compliment you can give someone and now we have this case, which has occupied everyone's minds. Right now, you sitting here are the senate. You have been voted in by the constituency and they have paid you the ultimate compliment," Eltringham said. "Don't let this case distract you. It's not fare to the people who put you here. It's not fare to your constituency. Right now the SGA looks like a massive infighting of petty politics, and it's up to you to right this ship," said Eltringham.

Eltringham explained his aspirations for the SGA in regard to his opinion of how he felt they, as a Senate, should carry themselves.

"You are the center of what happens to this organization. For the students who have allowed this organization

Turn to SGA, page 2

SARA WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

Commuter Senator Jeff Bazydlo discussed the Dining Services Committee at last night's Student Government Association meeting despite the fact that most of the meeting's focus wasn't on the quality of campus food. Instead, Senators continued to light amongst one another.

Sanchez wows packed Cape Cod Lounge

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

Sonia Sanchez spoke for justice for all factions of people during a poetry reading last night at 8 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

The Every Woman's Center, the Woman of Color Leadership Network and Food For Thought Bookstore in Amherst all co-sponsored the event, while the UMASS Art Council also provided major funding.

Sandy Mandel headed-off the presentation by explaining a little bit about the Every Woman's Center, which provides leadership skills for women and strengthens bonds between females in the arts through advocacy and persuasion.

"It's time for freedom, for racial and sexual justice," Sanchez read from her work For Sweet Honey in the Rock. "I'm gonna treat everybody right till I die. Wrap your feet around justice. Come to this battlefield called life."

Throughout the night, Sanchez included "all" people when talking about breaking free from stereotypes and prejudices, employing African Americans, Whites, Latinos, Jews, Muslims, Lesbians, Gays, and Chicanos to all live and love free.

She named some of the people who have spoke out for equality in the past and present, such as Gandhi, Sojourner Truth, Martin Luther King, Angela Davis, Paul Robinson, David Walker, Ruby Doris, and many more.

Sanchez periodically gave advice to the audience, usually directing it towards the younger generation. Her words of wisdom reflected lessons that she had learned throughout her life, such as, "apologize to others when you are wrong," and "no one needs to get married at 17. No one needs to get married at 24. No one needs to get married at 29. At 30, maybe think about settling down. Maybe."

Her dynamic style of speaking consisted of rhythmic chanting and singing and the use of repetition in order to reinforce a dramatic point. She also invoked abstract sounds mixed with her words, leaving the audience to feel her emotions of pain, suffering, relief and peace.

Sanchez also read from some of her haikus and the blues haikus explaining, "sometimes a haiku gets a little too funky, so you call it a blues."

"This is not a fire cell, but I am in heat every time I see you," read Sanchez, providing an example of a

Turn to SPEAKER, page 3

Harris tosses out recount appeals, might end election

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Four Florida counties met a 2 p.m. deadline yesterday to submit written justifications for the filing of late election returns based on manual recounts – which could decide the presidential election.

But later in the day, Katherine Harris, Florida's Secretary of State threw out all appeals and declared counts over. Democrats promised to sue.

With all 67 counties in Florida reporting on Tuesday George W. Bush led Al Gore by a margin of 300 votes. But yesterday 4 Florida counties, Miami-Dade, Palm Beach, Broward, and Collier counties, presented Secretary of State Katherine Harris with petitions to accept manually recounted vote tallies.

"Clearly the results of the manual recount could affect the outcomes of this very close presidential election," said Palm Beach's letter to Harris, a Republican who co-chaired Bush's campaign in Florida.

Election officials in Palm Beach and Broward counties had planned to conduct a manual recount of ballots cast in their respective counties. In its petition to Harris, Collier County claimed that it had discovered 24 ballots in an envelope that had not been counted.

"These 24 ballots represent a cross-section of voters of several political parties upon review of the unopened ballot envelopes," said Collier County's letter to Harris.

The counties cited various complications in the counting process necessitating recounts. The observance of Veteran's Day, large voter turnout, lawsuits, and the conflicting opinions of state officials all were listed as reasons to allow recounted returns from the 4 counties.

After facing off in last Tuesday's presidential election, both Gore and Bush are poised to take the presidency, needing only Florida's 25 electoral votes to take the White House.

Later in the day the Florida Supreme Court rejected an emergency petition filed by Harris and supported by Governor Bush, asking it to delay any hand recounting of ballots and to consolidate all election related lawsuits.

The Bush campaign won a partial legal victory yesterday when the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed to hear an appeal filed by lawyer's representing Bush to halt the manual ballot recounts in Florida.

Bush's lawyers alleged that the recounting of votes in heavily Democratic districts gives Gore an unfair advantage and violates the 14th amendment to the constitution which guarantees equal protections under the law for all citizens.

The 12 members of the 11th Circuit agreed to hear the case. The court instructed both sides in the case to present written arguments by 7 a.m. Thursday.

Judge Jorge Labarga, of the 15th Judicial Circuit for Palm Beach County, scheduled a hearing on the constitutionality of a new presidential election for 9:30 a.m. Friday.

Attorneys representing voters in the county bringing the suit argued that the "butterfly" ballot used in Palm Beach confused voters and caused many who intended to vote for Gore to vote for Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan. The plaintiff's charge that the ballot violated their voting rights and tainted the results of the election.

Labaraga questioned the legality of a new election citing a law which, he said, allows for a presidential election to be held only once every four years.

Earlier in the day Labarga ruled that the Palm Beach County Canvassing Board could count ballots with barely recognizable chads.

A chad is the small piece of paper punched out of an election ballot. Labarga ruled that ballots with "dimpled" or "pregnant" chads could be counted. A dimpled chad is a chad that has not been punched but is "bulging" while a pregnant chad has been punched but remains attached to the ballot at all 4 corners.

In his ruling Labarga said, "the election process says that no vote is to be declared invalid or void if there is a clear indication of the intention of the voter."

Palm Beach County officials had delayed the manual counting due to confusion over which chads to record as a vote. Officials had counted the so-called hanging chad – attached on 1 corner, the swinging door chad – attached on 2 corners, and the tri chad which had 3 corners attached to the ballot.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Candidates George W. Bush and Al Gore continue to wait for an electoral result.

U coaches to autograph

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

Everybody knows the feeling. Students walk into the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts and see someone handing out a free pamphlet or brochure for some obscure club or organization. Most of the time students are not even interested in what is being presented to them. They steer clear, heads looking down, attempting not to make eye contact with the provider; they won't have to say the dreaded words: "We already got one," today between 1-2 p.m.

Turn to COACHES, page 3

■ SGA

continued from page 1

to make their voice heard, be true to them, no matter what circus seems to be going on around you," Ehringham said. "Work on your motions, fulfill your campaign box, give your voters reason, gives those people reason to believe that they made the right choice."

As far as what the future holds Ehringham explained his take on the situation.

"You are all Senators, and no matter what happens in the future and what results in the future, no one will ever be able to take away from you the fact that you were an SGA Senator," said Ehringham.

Sheila Tunney, SGA Secretary of Administrative Affairs, suggested that Greek members of Senate were living in an imaginary box.

Jeff Bazydlo responded to the comment, explaining that he was in Senate before becoming a member of the Greek community.

"I'm offended that you would even state that. I have always tried to be there for everyone."

Looking beyond the case Senate members moved on with yesterday's meeting with 16 motions up for discussion.

Motion 2000-124, an enactment to instill a Select Committee on Dining Services was reinstated for a second year in a row. The committee, which helped last year in making decisions within Dinning Services, will take Senators from each dining commons area.

"Last year we were able to increase the number of guest meals students were allowed. We also worked on a lot of minor problems," Bazydlo said. "We were able to throw out our ideas and God knows there are still a lot of problems to be worked out," Bazydlo said.

Other motions under discussion were 2000-136 which allotted $2300 to Concepto Latino, an event to take place later on this month. Motion 2000-137 gave $1500 to Casa Dominicana.

Of the 16 motions brought forth to the Senate 8 motions were passed, and two were tabled until the next scheduled meeting.

Motion 2000-135 was tabled due to a lack of quorum within the Senate. This was the second meeting of the year to be cut short due to lack of quorum.

"Once we got past the first hour, the meeting took a more light hearted feel to it. Having been in SGA for four years, I've been through similar situations before, and I've learned that everything just goes in circles," said Ehringham.

Local community worried after Question 4 passes

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts expressed fear that the Passage of Massachusetts ballot question 4 last Tuesday, which proposed a rollback of the state income tax, will result in cuts in the state education budget.

"I'm a little disappointed that the question passed," said Batia Charbak a junior journalism major. "Every time they pass a tax cut it always draws away from public spending on education and health care."

Question 4, which passed with the approval of 61 percent of Massachusetts voters, proposes a reduction of the state income tax from the current 5.85 percent to 5 percent by 2003.

"I believe a lower income tax is a good thing," said Jeff Bazydlo a junior Plant and Soil science major, and member of the UMass Republican Club. "I worked all summer and a few more dollars in my pocket is a few more dollars in my pocket."

Chris Mullins, a junior Finance major agreed. "I voted for a decrease, and any decrease in taxes is good enough for me."

But most students said that a tax reduction would result in a cut in education spending which many claimed was more important.

"I voted against it [question 4] because I felt it wasn't a significant amount and it's just taking money away from the other things government needs to do, like education," said Heather LePenn a junior Fine Arts major.

"I voted against question 4 because both my parents are bilingual education teachers in Holyoke and passage of 4 will cause the bilingual education budget to be cut," said William Melendez a sophomore Sociology and Education major.

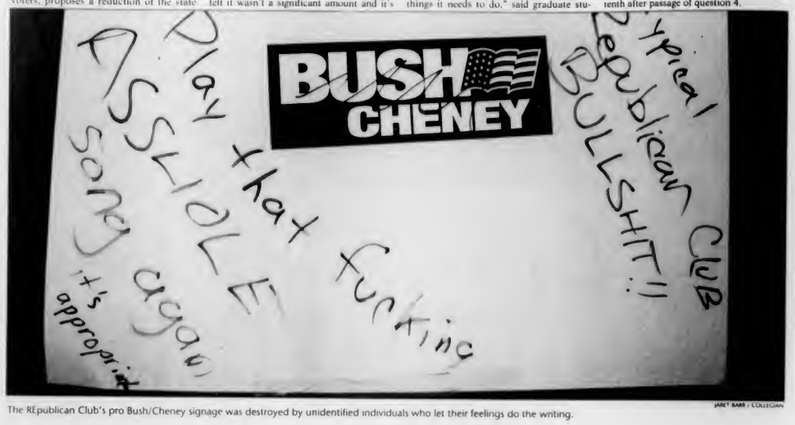
Some students said that the reduction in the state budget due to the income tax cut will directly impact the UMass operating budget.

"I voted against it; it's going to undermine the ability of government to do all the things it needs to do," said graduate student James Shaw. "Here at UMass we're likely to feel the impact directly with the state budget cut our situation here is likely to get even more difficult."

Governor Paul Cellucci lobbied hard for passage of question 4, which the Boston Globe estimated will cost the state $1.2 billion dollars.

The state Legislature increased the income tax from 5 to 6.5 percent in 1989, and claimed the increase would be lifted after the economic recession plaguing the state at the time came to an end.

According to 1999 Census Bureau figures the Massachusetts income tax rate will drop from fifth highest in the nation to tenth after passage of question 4.



JANET BARR / COLLEGIAN

The REpublican Club's pro Bush/Cheney signage was destroyed by unidentified individuals who let their feelings do the writing.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded as the Hatchet in 1890, became the Collegian in 1914 and then the Daily Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967 and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Poinion Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuna Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The Mullins Center
presents
SINBAD
Live in Concert!
Saturday, December 16, 2000 at 8:00 pm

Sinbad brings his energetic stand-up style to the Mullins center for a one-night only comedy performance! Don't miss this opportunity to see one of today's best loved and most versatile comedians.

Event features theatre-style set-up. Reserved seating tickets at $31.00 & $26.00. Available at the Mullins Center Box Office (413 -545-0505), all Ticketmaster outlets (including Filene's at Holyoke Mall).Ticketmaster Charge by Phone at 413 733-2500 and online at www.ticketmaster.com.
Visit our website at www.mullinscenter.umass.edu
ticketmaster

Sponsored by:
Coca-Cola SUBWAY eat fresh.

■ speaker

continued from page 1

blues haiku.

However, she declined from reading some of the work that she had picked out for last night's event on account that some children were present.

"When you speak, you bear responsibility for your culture," commented Sanchez.

Sanchez spent much time focusing on her family, reading from her book Does Your House Have a Lion? She separated her work into three sections. In the first section, she depicted how her brother died with AIDS and her father deserted him in his time of need.

Her story was set in New York City, where her brother at the age of 17, "wearing a green suit and thinking he was hip," came to condemn his father and sister.

She further described him as short, black, thin and enslaved to cocaine due to the fact that he was a closet gay and remarked how she wanted him "to stop numbing himself."

In the second section, she realized that she could not write about his story without telling her father's story as well. She described her father as a southern Negro man and her mother as a high, yellow woman who died in childbirth. After her mother's death, she said her father became involved with promiscuous relationships with other women.

"I'm putting my father in perspective – he became Romeo bound only after she [her mother] died," she said.

Finally, she thought about her ancestors and felt she could not add them into the story as a result of wanting to put her past behind her. However, she realized later that like many, she couldn't escape from her past. One day while she was coming home from teaching a class at Temple University, she heard a song that inspired her to finish the book, incorporating her ancestors into section three.

"If you learn nothing else from me, know that you cannot let your children die from AIDS by themselves," Sanchez said.

According to Sanchez, she formed many of her opinions based on her father's biases towards human sexuality.

"You can't let people condemn others (like gays), most especially people of color, most especially in America," Sanchez said. "We're talking about humans. You can't walk into a church and hear a priest damning people."

"When our children ask what we did when we saw the poor suffering, say you resisted the ego and the greed," she chanted. "Can you say it? Resist!"

At the end of the presentation, members of the audience made donations to the Every Women's Center to help them buy books for their library. Sanchez also was available to sign her books, and a raffle was held to win a copy of her newest writing, Shake Loose My Skin: New and Selected Poems.

Joan from Food for Thoughts Bookstore also thanked the audience for their support for this event and for coming to her privately owned bookstore instead of somewhere like Barnes and Nobles. She explained that independent bookstores want books to "live through our culture." Independent bookstores all over the world have recently banned together under name Book Sense, using the national umbrella approach with Beacon Press, an 11,000 independent bookstores have banned together under that press, which is the publisher of Sanchez's books.

■ coaches

continued from page 1

This afternoon three of the most recognized faces on campus, men's basketball head coach James "Bruiser" Flint, women's basketball head coach Joanie O'Brien and hockey head coach Don "Toot" Cahoon will be on the giving end. The trio will be on hand at the Campus Center Concourse to sign autographs, pass out tickets and promote student involvement in the teams' upcoming home games (men's basketball vs. Iona on Saturday, women's basketball vs. UNC Charlotte tomorrow and hockey tonight vs. UConn; all games are scheduled to begin at 7:00 p.m.).

When asked to spend time on campus promoting the team Flint more than welcomed the opportunity.

"When they ask me to come out and hand out tickets and sign autographs it's great," Coach Flint is interested in increasing the attendance at games also adding, "We appreciate our fans, we just want more of them to come to the games and make it a little crazy at the Mullins Center."

O'Brien echoed that statement; "The crowd becomes important when the team gets tired, then cheering us on makes all the difference in the world."

Only a week and a half removed from a salute to the fans during the first intermission of a win over No. 3 New Hampshire, Cahoon is again reaching out to the student body.

"The students have been fabulous," Cahoon said. "If we can get the students and the fans together and become unique, like BU or UNH, it's going to be fun for everybody."

It is evident to coaches, players and fans that attendance in the Mullins Center has been down in recent years, especially for men's basketball games, a team that has had a plethora of success on the national stage throughout the 90's.

"I think that the students are an important part of our games and our contests," Assistant Athletic Director to Media Relations Nick Joos said. "They make a difference in our building and we need them at all our contests."

In all sports, especially in college athletics fans can have an effect on how a team plays and the outcome of the game.

"They're very important to the atmosphere and how guys play, they can play an important part in whether we win or lose," Flint said.

Players will get pumped up if they are introduced to the rousing cheers of a packed house, more so than if they burst out of the locker room to the deafening silence of empty seats.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Don Cahoon

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
James "Bruiser" Flint

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS
Joanie O'Brien

The coaches agree that the best way to draw more fans to the arena is for the teams and the management to be noticeable to the student body.

"What we're looking to get is visibility," O'Brien said. "Of course you'd rather play at home than on the road, but its not much good playing at home if there is nobody there."

Flint and Cahoon both believe that being accessible to the potential fans on campus sends a message.

"We want to reiterate how important the students are at the games," Flint said. "Coach Cahoon and myself have been talking about getting out there and showing the people that we appreciate them."

O'Brien also notes that the students are not always in the know about the home schedule. "one thing that we realized is that the kids didn't know when the games are."

O'Brien and her colleagues in the athletics program are making an effort to put students on notice about home games.

Each coach, Cahoon being the most vocal about it wants to institute a brand of athletic culture on campus where home games are events that fans want to go to.

"We're just trying to bring a presence to campus," Cahoon said of his reasons for getting involved on campus. "Our intent is to get out the student population and get some more notice out there on the days we are playing."

The key is notice and visibility. If students are knowledgeable of the home schedule in turn more fans will show up for games. In all honesty a university with over 20,000 students enrolled should have no problem filling an arena that holds half the amount.

The consensus is that there has been an overall lack of excitement around campus about the sports program. The coaches are doing what they can to combat this but the burden of the task does not fall solely on their shoulders. In a school of this size and this genre, games can be social gatherings as well as athletic spectacles. The necessary strides are being taken to once again make the Mullins Center a "tough place to play."

Bryan Smith contributed to this article

■ vandalized

continued from page 1

do with this, but this is not Florida."

He went on to say that regardless of the political motivation of the people on campus, this type of behavior is unacceptable.

"This is really disturbing. I know that no standing member in this club would ever do anything like this," he said. There is no room for this."

Seth Avakian, the Student Trustee, expressed concern that the incident may have been motivated by political tensions that had been taking place on campus.

"My guess is that this is a local issue and that there is a small group of borderline insane people," he said. "I would love to find out who did this."

The University Democrat President Matt Pelnar expressed his outrage that the office that the group shares with the Republicans was vandalized.

"This is not the way to go about things," Pelnar said. "I would hate to have something like this happen to us [The University Democrats]."

Guns 'N' Roses once sang it, but just to recap: "You could be mine." This ad space is available. Call 545-3500 for more information.

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR
CONVIENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS

BUZZARD BAY Case 24 btls $19.99+ dep	ROLLING ROCK Case 24 btls $13.99+ dep	M.G.D. Case 24 btls $10.99+ dep	SATURDAY WINE TASTINGS!! Every Saturday Noon to 4 p.m. Stop by and sample a few of our finest selections free of charge!! Sale ends 11/24/00
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 pack cans $11.99+ dep	BECKS 12 pack btls $10.99+ dep	PAPER CITY 6 pack btls $5.49+dep
SAMBUCA 750 ml $16.99	KAHLUA 750 ml $15.99	CASK & CRÈME 750 ml $9.99

333 Russell St. (RTE.9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours: Mon.–Sat. 9am –11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. I.D.s checked by Legal Age Software.

COMPLETE AUTO BODY REPAIRS
ALL MAKES AND MODELS
DANA AUTOMOTIVE Chevrolet Volkswagen
COLLISION REPAIR • GLASS INSTALLATION
Authorized GM/VW Body Shop
Frame & Unibody Straightening
24 HR HOTLINE 586-7250 | FREE LOANERS! | 968 Bridge Road NORTHAMPTON RS# 2427

UMass athletics
at the mullins center

MEN'S BASKETBALL
HOME OPENER
NOVEMBER 18th
SATURDAY
7:00 pm
IONA
THE ROAD TO THE NCAA TOURNEY BEGINS HERE!

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
NOVEMBER 17th
FRIDAY
7:00 pm
CHARLOTTE

HOCKEY THE MASS ATTACK
NOVEMBER 16th
THURSDAY
7:00 pm
CONNECTICUT HUSKIES

STUDENT TICKETS FREE
FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS WITH UMASS ID
545-0810

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 16, 2000
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Our political leaders have failed us

Both the Democrats and the Republicans have gone out of their prospective ways to make a mockery of our entire electoral process. Now, what was once the greatest democracy in the world is instead a struggling one and an embarrassment to all citizens.

The Democrats, under the guise of wanting to do what's right for the American electorate, have continued to toss a dishonest wrench into our political works. For obvious reasons, the Democrats have contested Florida as our nation's veterans once opposed the Germans. But the Dems are fighting a nasty war of politics and have turned their attention to a simultaneously bored and concerned American public. To win their fight, they've brought in the best liberal lawyers that man can truly by in an attempt to get recounts in that southern state.

300 votes.

That's all that separates us from knowing who our next president is going to be and the fight over those votes has been tremendous, but at what cost? Our democracy now twists in the wind like flags over our capital and instead of attempting to find creative or effective solutions, our leaders have chosen to turn this matter over to our legal system.

Not that the Republicans have been, in anyway, superior. Again under their familiar hood of helping the American populace, Republicans have utilized their political allies within Florida (even after Jeb Bush couldn't secure the state for his brother) in an attempt to win any and all decisions. Not only is such behavior dangerously counterproductive and, by its very nature, insidious, it is also a statement of mistrust for those same courts and the decisions they might make. And on top of that, it is counter to the wishes of the American public who want to see a fair resolution reached, not one that benefits one side simply because they had more elected officials in their pocket.

The behavior of both parties has not only undermined the American democracy, it has placed the egg, the onion, the pepper and the tomato, in other words the entire omelet, square on the face of the American nation. Other countries now mock ours for being unable to make our own democracy work, supposedly our most valued of valuable assets. Yet our politicians don't seem to realize that we have a very serious political situation in the United States. They seem so invested in their own political wrangling that they're willing to ignore this one going problem because it isn't beneficial for them. But if they're the ones with the power to fix the situation and if they don't, who will?

The people, in some sort of populist uprising? Of course not, but that people even mention such things, such out there possibilities, is enough for extreme concern. But neither party seems concerned with what would be precise or practical or pragmatic.

It's only going to get worse before it gets better if our leaders can't realize that we have a serious problem in these United States of ours. We can only hope that they do. The other options are unconscionable.

Lessons From the Election

CHRIS MASTERJOHN

The results of this election, which, as I write this, have been yet to be completely determined, raise several issues and questions: namely, how do we measure the success of the Nader campaign and how successful was it; what was its impact on the outcome of the election, and was it for better or worse; is the Electoral College justified, and if not how should it be changed or with what should it be replaced; and finally, what drives people to undermine democracy through fraud (as has apparently been happening on a large scale), and what can we do about it?

Though many of us who worked on the Nader campaign psychologically enshrined the five percent mark, which would have qualified us for Federal funding for the next election, as a measure of success, and though we didn't reach it, in hindsight the mark was overemphasized and even garnering only about three percent, we were highly successful. Though we were barred from the debates, though we only received one percent of the press coverage, and only one percent of that one percent was about the issues we raised, and though we were subjected with a massive assault and scare-campaign by the media and Democratic Party, we still managed to get the votes of nearly three million people.

In receiving those votes, we've established the Green Party as the third largest party in America, vastly boosted membership and funneled tens of thousands of people into progressive politics, attained automatic ballot access in many states including our own, and other such accomplishments. Nader received 25 percent of the vote in Amherst, and precinct by precinct we can see that our vote percentage was largely proportional to the amount of activism in that area, proving our work paid off. We gained all of this, and if each person who voted for Nader donates just ten dollars to the campaign next time, the amount of money raised would vastly dwarf the amount we missed out on by scoring under five percent.

The interesting thing here is, though, for the first time in over a century, it looks like a candidate may become President without winning the popular vote. Is this not ridiculous and undemocratic? Should not people directly elect their own President? Still, though, we must recognize that if we were to abolish the Electoral College we would be left with a horrible winner-take-all no-runoff system that causes people to risk electing their worst nightmare by voting their conscience. That is why we should replace the Electoral College with an instant-runoff system of preferential voting, effectively eliminating the concept of a "spoiler." Voters would rank candidates in order of preference, and if their first choice lost, their vote would count as their second choice, and so on.

But beyond all this, I think the most interesting question is the one that will likely be raised the least. This is the question of what systemic dynamics may have led to all of the alleged voting fraud. I'd like to emphasize this point, because systemic analysis rarely finds its way into mainstream commentary, which isn't surprising, considering the benefits most commentators are endowed with as a result of systems that such analysis would call into question.

Everyone, I'm sure, has heard of the illegal and confusing Palm Beach ballot. But there are many other reports surfacing of all sorts of pernicious fraud. There are reports of massive intimidation of African American and Hispanic voters, interception of the NAACP's campaigning mail, Spanish-speaking polling clerks being sent to Cherokee districts and vice versa, people being told they couldn't vote because there weren't "enough ballots," people being inaccurately classified as ex-felons and denied their right to vote, Republicans receiving two absentee ballots, and other such incidents. There were even several reports alleging that Gore's Florida vote count mysteriously dropped at one point by several hundred thousand votes. And, of course, most of this is happening in Florida, where, coincidentally or not, Bush's brother happens to be Governor. Surely the Democrats' time would be more valuably spent blaming these things for their potential failure than scapegoating the Nader supporters.

But we have to realize two things: one, this is not all that uncommon, especially in Florida; two, this is simply an extension of regular campaigning practices into the bounds of the illegal.

Politicians regularly lie about their records and what they will do in the future. Politicians regularly adjust their supposed positions according to political expediency. The illegal behaviors described above differ only in illegality from the regular manipulation, deception, double-crossing, and other such behaviors politicians regularly engage in.

But why? The answer is, in my view, that in creating such massively powerful positions for people to attain we give every incentive for them to do whatever it takes to attain those positions. Usually this simply means the above-described behaviors, and an additional subservience to the economic elites whose support you must have for a well-financed campaign that will have the support of the media that is run by those elites. But when the race is so close, candidates, or those with a strong interest in their advancement, are driven to further means, as we've seen in this election.

Likewise, of course, this is going to carry on into their policy. If we have a system where the cheaters and liars are the ones who advance their power, and if we have a system where one needs the support of economic elites to advance one's power, then policies will reflect that. Policies will be in the interest of elites, and those crafting them will be those who have internalized the values of manipulation and deception as acceptable means to attain one's ends. No wonder we're in the mess we're in.

The solution? Change the system. If powerful positions are the problem, eliminate those positions. Create a movement to put decisions that affect communities in the direct hands of those communities. Create a movement that will bring us an economy that is controlled at the grassroots, where economic decisions are made democratically and based on cooperation instead of competition, removing the need for a strong central government to regulate the economy.

What we must do is forge a long-term vision that will eventually bring us these goals. For now, we face immediate tasks such as demanding that our democratic processes be free of fraud and unhindered by undemocratic institutions such as the Electoral College, and implementing instant-runoff voting. But we must keep in mind our long-term goals, and craft our strategies so as to put these reforms in the context of a long-term vision. Creating new institutions and societies is no piece of cake. But whether we achieve it is up to us.

Chris Masterjohn is a Collegian Columnist.

Write for Ed/Op

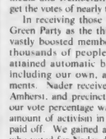
In the courtroom



ROB SCHULZE

I went to court yesterday.

No, I wasn't apprehended in the middle of a horrible stabbing rampage (yet). I had to go for a class, so I can write a paper on it, so I can pass, so I can graduate, so I can someday be able to make a lot of money, so I can give it all to the government in taxes, so they can give it to the billion decrepit old Baby Boomers sucking the life out of Social Security. (Thanks a lot, Mom.)

Anyways, I was sitting in the District Court in Northampton from just before eight in the morning to just after ten. Those two hours proved to be very enlightening, entertaining, and quite depressing. And then I got a free bagel from Bruegger's, so it was OK, again.

I had never been to court before this class made me go. I would imagine that most Americans have never been to court, as only a strong minority gets in trouble and most avoid ever having to do jury duty. I wasn't sure what to expect or what the protocol for dress, noise, or whatnot was. I didn't even know really where to go, but the cop at the door who made sure I had no hidden weapons was very nice and took pity on my ignorant self. He directed me to the second floor of the Hampshire County Courthouse and there I found the court.

I was the first person there – I'd gotten the court's start time wrong, and so I had some time to myself. The first thing that struck me was that the place looked exactly like it does on TV. There were the wooden benches for the audience to sit on, the high judge's desk with a very nice-looking leather chair, two parallel tables for lawyers, and these bookshelves built into the far walls with these old-looking leatherbound books sitting in them like they'd been there for ages. All the desks had these manila folders filled with multi-colored papers sitting on them and there were just there random microphones hanging around.

In other words, it looked exactly like it does on TV. All I needed was for Harry Anderson and that guy who played Bull (editor's note: Richard Moll) to walk in and we'd have had all the makings of a "Night Court" reunion.

OK, I thought, one stereotype confirmed. Would it all be the same?

It actually wasn't. For one thing, there weren't two lawyers, one for the prosecution and one for the defense, battling it out for hours. There were actually right around 15 lawyers (the number fluctuated as they came and went) and they seemed to all be friends, laughing and chatting and flirting. They seemed to all be fairly young, too, with a couple of them looking really young, actually, like 25ish maybe. I don't know if Northampton is like the minor leagues and if you're good you get called up to Boston or something, and there you'd find all the stereotypical old bald men and old Marsha Clark-type women, but it definitely wasn't like that yesterday.

There also weren't any long, hard-fought trials, either. The people on trial would stand up to this little podium-thing, a woman would yell out what they were accused of, and the judge (who looked exactly like a judge, by the way) would ask them what they wanted to plead. If they said "not guilty" he'd tell them to come back on a different date – and almost everyone said they were not guilty. It was like the drive-thru at McDonalds in terms of swiftness; they were just blazing through justice. I wanted to ask if I could get some fries to go, but I figured the bailiff would beat me mercilessly and the judge would sentence me to death, so I passed.

A few people, however, did plead guilty. When they did so, the judge gave them this really scary-sounding speech about how they were surrendering all these rights and threatened them about not being on decision-altering drugs. If this didn't scare them into altering their plea then he would sentence them. Most of the cases of this sort were people driving with suspended registration, in which case he'd fine them and give a couple days community service. Some that were different were two kids from Hatfield who got caught with booze ($50 and no license for 90 days) and a prisoner who was beating another prisoner with a bat in jail (120 days in addition to an already-added year for breaking parole and the already-served 30 days in solitary confinement). Justice In Action.

The depressing part came from just seeing these people and knowing what they'd done wrong. The vast majority of the cases were teenage boys caught for having, using, or attempting to sell drugs. One of the kids, facing a felony charge with possible jail time, was seventeen. Wicked, wicked sad. There was a guy who was charged with beating his wife. She was there. An old woman who was obviously confused said that her whole auto-insurance case was the insurance company's fault. She could barely stand – I can't see how she'd ever be able to drive with any degree of safety.

All these useless, meaningless crimes kept running through my head as I was leaving. Why can't kids just stop getting high? Is that an option? Why do people hit each other, with bats or otherwise? Is 120 days really enough to pay back a crime like that... or is it too much? How could anybody ever really hit a woman?

I don't know. I came out of the courthouse with a better thought of what the law looked like (it has books in the back), but not much else except a vague sense of disquiet. I simply hope to never have to go back.

Rob Schulze is a Collegian Columnist.

The candidates? Nothing but dirty dogs

SAM WILKINSON

The dogs are scrapping at the door trying to get access the ultimate bone in the bowl. Both of them are howling and nipping and scratching, ready to fight one another because that bone will be so damn sweet.

Maybe.

Except, chances are that it won't be so sweet because the bone is half-chewed, gnawed on and marked, twisted up and left for naught. Those two dogs are working so hard to taste something that's going to end up tasting bitter and neither of them have any idea.

Bush and Gore? They're dying a slow political death battling one another for the presidency of this once-great country of ours. Neither of them seem to have any idea that once they get through the giant doggy door in front of them, the bone they're going to get won't be worth a damn thing.

Their fight with one another has already been an out and out embarrassment to our politics, a total joke of an election that makes the once-great United States of America nothing more than a struggling third world democracy that just can't get it right.

If that's the country we're going to be, at least look towards those other third world leaders to get it right. Forbes Burnham in Guyana? The brutal man knew how to rig a vote and a political system so a people against him would apparently vote for him overwhelmingly, all the time.

Bush and Gore and all of their attempts at rigging an easy-to-rig election have failed miserably.

Consider the following for Shrub, the dunthass from Texas whose own brother oversees the state that he needs to win if he wants to lead our little backwater. Yet even with brother Jeb in charge, George W. was unable to lock up the election for himself and is now relying on Florida's Secretary of State Katherine Harris to rig it for him. She's a dummy, no doubt, but thinking that she's doing what's best for the American public by making a clearly partisan decision? That's loony-bin insanity, just absolutely nuts.

Nuts to the squirrels chattering outside the gates, Bush's and Gore's press people, both playing the "blame the others cause we're the victims" game. It's transparent and unnecessary, an embarrassing display of political bickering and infighting. Both should be willing to give simple updates and offer accceptance of some clearly risky situations, but instead they squawk like chickens and run like they've been beheaded. What kind of behavior is that from these birds?

Certainly better than that of either of the candidates, one who can't speak, the other who shouldn't speak, and who knows which is which anymore. Both have ducked into caves, sending only their lie-speaking chickens out for the crowds. Leadership? The ship crashed on the rocks of a feared public opinion, a frightening and embarrassing development for two men who claim to want the right to lead us to the American Camelot.

But King Arthur's home surely isn't nearby; there's at least a thousand miles of Everglade swamp between him and these kings of politics, these princes of deceit. Like any good backwater, especially the one it claims not to be, Florida has embarrassed a nation that didn't need the help.

Lost bags of ballots in the backs of Buicks?

Discovered votes days after the election?

The brother of leaders-elect in charge of the most hellishly contested area?

Can it be ironic or can it be the kind of politics that Americans so often think they're above? From a bungled political standpoint, Florida's been a damned gem, a diamond in the rough for all those states that now have to deal with all of that "got it right" baggage.

When politicians can't figure out that they're going to be unable to solve the problems that they themselves create, the American cancer continues to spread, maybe now affecting our conscience, or at least the part of the brain that's supposed to contain such a thing. The only appropriate solution is the one that won't be made, not by Democrats, not by Republicans, not by any of the people that have the ability to make such a decision.

Let the ballots sit there, on the tables and in the cars and send everybody home; the politicians and the wonks, the pundits and the spokesmen, the winos and the counters who can't seem to figure it out anyway. Bring in people from different countries, outside the borders of these United States, and given them the ballots, let them hand count the entire state. Every county, every city and every ballot from our embarrassing brother to the extreme South: let some foreigners count it.

Chances are they're going to come in, they're going to count, they're going to tell us who got the most number of votes, they're going to ask for the cash and then they're going to get the hell out of this Third World country of ours.

As they absolutely should; the only reason to stay is in case the Anti-U.S. machine guns are low on ammunition and if that's the case, our factory's busy churning out shiny new brass bullets. After that count's done and complete, whatever the result, the loser should concede, we should have a gala party and induct the next president, whichever ninny that might win it, and then sink our heads into our hands.

Why? Because, for one brief moment, those two scrappy dogs chomping at one another will morph into waterfowl and whoever wins will be a lame duck president from day one, a quacker if any winner ever was. After the balls and the speech and the national poem and an event attended by the fourteen people who still claim to care, our duckbilled leader will morph back into the damned dumb dog that he was.

And the bone they've been fighting over, that sweet bone of Presidential victory? It's going to taste like sandy concrete.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian Columnist.

ARTS & LIVING WEEKEND

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2000

Dr. Seuss' HOW THE GRINCH STOLE CHRISTMAS

Magic and mystique bring Grinch to life

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas has been extremely hyped and is clearly the most anticipated movie since The Phantom Menace. With chemistry better than anything we have seen all year, how can it not be?

Put aside the fact that every child in America grew up on the classic cartoon every single year. Ignore the notion that Ron Howard is one of the most successful directors in Hollywood today. Disregard that Jim Carrey holds a distinct grasp on the leadership position in comedy films. Despite the hype and hysteria, if you take The Grinch as its own separate entity it still packs an incredible amount of wealth.

Throughout the world, Dr. Seuss' classic is known and loved. In its many shapes and forms, it represents the Christmastime ideal that even the most hated figures can have a change of heart. The film sets itself up for perfection. The only thing it has to prove is that it has the quality to stand amongst the holiday season elites.

The Grinch as a live action feature story was a seemingly inevitable idea. The desire to make it happen was there, but more importantly, the profit is almost guaranteed. Though it cost over 200 million dollars to make, The Grinch will almost surely earn back its expenses. Early estimates on the film predict it to have the biggest November weekend opening ever. If it were not for the surprise success of Charlie's Angels, The Grinch would certainly be seen as the starting point for the colossal holiday movie season.

The transition of the cartoon into a film was a massively intense process. Over 8,000 make up appliances were used, and the amount of snow could have covered nine football fields. 8,200 ornaments and 1,938 candy canes decorated the set. Six miles of Styrofoam built the fantastic sets. Jim Carrey spent three hours every day getting into costume. He spent the exact same amount of time every day getting out of costume. The term work was denoted with an entirely new meaning when the story went into production.

Director Ron Howard, who has directed films with huge budgets before such as Cocoon and Backdraft teamed up with one of his closest friends, Brian Grazer in 1986 to form their production company, Imagine Entertainment. Howard and Grazer are the true visionaries behind the film because they are responsible for making it look real. Though it supposed to be a fantasy, creating a sense of practicality was essential.

This creativity is where Rick Baker came in. Baker, the special make-up effects artist, had to take an exuberant Jim Carrey and turn him into a grouchy and extravagant-looking Grinch. Baker, a five-time Academy Award winner, is no stranger to creating the absurd. He was responsible for making Gremlins in Gremlins 2: The New Batch, gargantuan apes in Mighty Joe Young, Bigfoot in Harry and the Hendersons, and most notably, he transformed a skinny Eddie Murphy into an enormous Sherman Klump in The Nutty Professor.

Jim Carrey was not an easy person to dress up. Even after his experience in The Mask, he is still Jim Carrey. Making him sit still for six hours per day is an unthinkably annoying task that no one would ever wish to do; he is, however, a perfect fit for the role. As he does with all of his previous jobs, Carrey brings wonders to an already multifarious character. Though the early talk years ago was that Jack Nicholson would be a perfect Grinch, it is difficult to picture anyone but Carrey in the title part.

Another added bonus to the film is music composed by Academy Award winner James Horner. Horner, who is most known for his work on Titanic, said he drew his inspiration from reading a broad range of Dr. Seuss' books. He claims that he was not familiar with too much of Dr. Seuss' work before the film, but after reading several books, he was sure that the music and vocal sound would be difficult to find. He even had to create new instruments to construct it. One of the high points on the soundtrack is the greatly recognized, "You're a Mean One Mr. Grinch," which is sung by Jim Carrey with no help whatsoever.

So when How the Grinch Stole Christmas opens in theater tomorrow, what will be the immediate impact? Despite some cries that The Grinch looks too scary and that it may be too intense for children, it will certainly dominate the competition.

Bring your imagination and childhood recollections of one of the most timeless classics of all time to the theater with you. Watch out, The Grinch is finally here.

Film legend tackles cartoon legend

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

"One day, when I had nothing, absolutely nothing at all, I wrote myself a check for twenty-million dollars. I carried that check around in my back pocket everywhere I went. At every single audition I failed and in every unemployment line I stood in, I made a promise to myself, Someday I would be able to cash that check."

Determined, brilliant, exceptional, and extraordinary describe merely a single droplet in the massive pool of talent that surrounds Jim Carrey. Nevertheless, it may be particularly obvious that all of these adjectives simply act as concealments for the one real description of the actor that makes him one of the most powerful people in the entertainment industry: insane.

Since his birth on January 17, 1962, James Eugene Carrey has delighted audiences throughout the world. To be cliché, you could mention that he has made people laugh, and that he has made people cry. You could focus on the Cinderella aspect of his life. You could concentrate on how, despite being named one of People magazine's fifty most beautiful people alive, and one of Empire magazine's top 100 actors of all time, he fought struggles in his personal life that many average men could not handle. The complexity of his immense influence simply cannot be underestimated. He's performed "Rocket Man" on stage with Elton John, and a Pink Floyd song with Phish.

Jim Carrey certainly did not enter the public eye with a silver spoon in his mouth. The chance that he ever actually saw a silver spoon in his early his life is minimal. Instead, he began by taking almost any job he could find. He started on a small television program in Canada called "YTV Awards Show." At this time, Carrey and his family lived out of their car.

Along with his first few television endeavors, Carrey's early films did not appear to have any promise whatsoever. Atrocious projects like Once Bitten, in which Carrey played a teenager who, if he did not have sex by midnight, would turn into a vampire, exemplify the former drudges of his career. In Earth Girls Are Easy, Carrey did not even have any spoken lines. After a few very minor roles in Peggy Sue Got Married, and Dirty Harry's The Dead Pool, Carrey was still walking around unnoticed.

Carrey has been married and divorced twice, once to Dumb and Dumber co-star Lauren Holly.

As if his luck could not get any worse, he auditioned for "Saturday Night Live," in 1990, only to find utter rejection. It was later in that year that Carrey found his first real break ever.

The Keenon Ivory Wayan-produced series "In Living Color" hired Carrey to be a utility comedian. Running in the tradition of "Saturday Night Live," "In Living Color" produced low quality sketch comedy that would do anything for a laugh. To almost everyone's dismay, "In Living Color" became a huge success. It was one of the first hit series for the newly formed FOX network, and helped Rupert Murdoch's lock on the television world begin.

Carrey's role on "In Living Color" had no boundaries. He was one of the only white actors on the extremely diverse show, and this made him a focal point for many of its jokes. One of his most memorable characters was Fire Marshall Bill, a fire

Turn to LEGEND, page 6

From Opie to Grinchy

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Correspondent

Ron Howard attempts to create holiday movie magic this weekend, with the real-life version of Dr. Seuss' classic How the Grinch Stole Christmas.

Howard and partner Brian Grazzer worked together to convince Audrey Geisel, the widow of the late Dr. Seuss, that they could make a movie that convincingly portrays Seuss' classic book. Upon Seuss' death, Geisel decided that she would not allow production companies to turn any of her late husband's books into movies, but with the expansion of technological resources she felt the Grinch's unique personality could be captured.

"I realized the potential to do it was right there, and I really got interested in wanting to see the Grinch come alive," said Geisel.

Casting for The Grinch was not a small task. But, it was easy for them to select an actor who could accurately depict the Grinch; they felt that Jim Carrey would fit the role perfectly. Carrey expressed his interest in playing the Grinch from the start, and since he had previously worked with Howard and Grazer in Liar, Liar it was almost a certainty that he would get the part.

"Carrey's incredible imagination, energy and physical talents made him the perfect, and the only choice, to bring the Grinch to life," says Howard.

But first Carrey had to audition for Geisel. "I was stunned when Carrey did the Grinch for me. Without make-up he simply became the Grinch before my eyes," Geisel recalled.

With the permission to use the book, and a star like Carrey, Grazer and Howard were on their way. There only problem was how to reconstruct the crazy and zany world that Seuss created?

"It's a real world, it's just not our world," Howard told his creative team as they began work on creating such a world.

"Every element of the movie had to be built from scratch, and every actor had to go through an extensive make-up and hair application to truly embody the art of Dr. Seuss," Universal Studios stated.

One of the first questions Howard had to ask actors was, "How do you feel about being in a make-up chair for 5 hours a day, because a lot of people can't tolerate it that long."

After glancing at Howard's long list of credits, How the Grinch Stole Christmas is sure to be an instant success.

It all started just 18 months into Howard's life when he made his first appearance in "The Seven Year Itch." After several small projects, Howard was cast as Opie in the long-running series. "The

Turn to OPIE, page 6

DESIGN BY MORGAN TAYLOR

■ legend

continued from page 5

marshall who taught the dangers of fire through intensely hazardous examples.

Though most of his characters relied on his unusual physical comedy and charm, it was his facial expressions that everyone seemed to remember. Carrey, who credits the facial expressions to spending long nights in front of a mirror when he was young, earned him the nickname Rubberface. The nickname was also the nickname of his character Tom Moront in the 1985 film Introducing, Joliet.

Though his first few years on "In Living Color," did produce a few opportunities for recognition, like in 1990's revolting excuse for a film, Mister Ito, typecasting with J.J. Begley Jr., and a brief cameo on "Sesame Street," Carrey did not see a big time movie triumph until 1994.

After experimenting with thousands of different characters throughout his life, it would be a humbling private investigator with a love interest for Courtney Cox that would ultimately make Jim Carrey a star. In the spring of 1994 four words translated into an enormous triumph at the box office: Ace Ventura: Pet Detective.

There is no denying that Carrey single handedly made Ace Ventura into a success. It was a rare film occasion where it was void of any positive qualities besides its lead actor. The writing was bad, the other actors were terrible, and if not done right, the plot would have gone straight down the drain. Jim Carrey made all of those things better in a very forceful way.

With Ace Ventura, Carrey vaulted himself into the comedy field - most desirable. With an obvious sequel in the works, Carrey found himself flooded with offers to play any character humanly possible. It was ironic that the choice he made was on a character that was not human.

In The Mask, Carrey transformed himself into a cartoon superhero sent to wreak havoc on the world, and save Cameron Diaz from evil villains. The film grossed over 300 million dollars. Though some hail it as the best example of Carrey's early work, and consider it a landmark as the point where his career actually began, he admitted that it was nothing new to him, and simply thought it was a lot of fun.

If there was any doubt in anyone's mind that Jim Carrey was becoming a superstar after The Mask, he erased it with Dumb and Dumber at the end of the year. Carrey's role in the Farrelly Brother film was his first to gain him critical acclaim. Despite the gross-out comedy that the film relied upon, it was enormously funny. Siskel and Ebert gave it two thumbs up, and hailed Carrey as a genius.

After a long year of exposing his work in 1994, Carrey only released two films in 1995. One was the sequel to Ace Ventura and the other was Batman Forever. Carrey played The Riddler. Though the film was criticized for being a shameless plea to exploit the first two Batman films, with an awful choice of Val Kilmer for Batman and an even more dreadful Tommy Lee Jones as Two Face, Carrey was the sole driving force behind the film. For the first time, people were going to the theaters only to see Carrey. As incredible and awesome-like as this film was surrounded as a supervillain, Carrey looked like a savior. Batman Forever was the top grossing film of the year. Ace Ventura 2: When Nature Calls was the second highest.

In 1996 Carrey showed a much different side of himself. He took the villain idea perhaps one step too far in The Cable Guy. Critics trashed the film, saying that Carrey should not be exploring a darker region, and should return to his more obvious talents in lighter comedy. To make things worse, Carrey was condemned for the enormous salary of twenty million dollars the film brought him. This made him, along with Harrison Ford and Tom Hanks, the highest paid actor in Hollywood.

Though The Cable Guy was criticized, that criticism did not stop fans from seeing it. Again, they came out in theaterfuls to marvel at Carrey's work. He was honored with a "Best Villian" award at the MTV Movie Awards, to which he responded, "I don't care what the critics say, this award is god given proof that I'm a bad ass mother..."

The Cable Guy would be the last time we would see Carrey portrayed as a villain (until The Grinch of course). A year later Carrey fired back at his unhappy critics with a marvelous achievement. He played Fletcher Reed in Liar Liar. The film earned him a nomination for Best Actor at the Golden Globe Awards. Though he did not win the award, As Good as It Gets' Jack Nicholson who did showed respect by saying, "Allow me to thank my fellow nominees." He turned around and said "Thank you." by talking out of his backside as Carrey did in Ace Ventura.

In 1998, Carrey released The Truman Show. The film is easily identified as his very best work. Some place it among the top movies of the 1990's. The Truman Show followed the life of title character Truman Burbank, who was constantly in the public eye as a television show running twenty-four hours a day. Carrey was again nominated for a Golden Globe award, but this time it was his turn to storm the stage with a tear filled eye. His acceptance speech for Best Actor was not without the Carrey charm and humor that everyone expects of him. "If you look back at my early days of Earth Girls are Easy and Once Bitten, you knew." Carrey said, while holding the trophy high in the air.

Unfortunately, in deplorable shame, the Academy Awards were not so kind to Carrey. Despite his win at the Golden Globes, he was not even nominated for an Oscar. He was asked to present an award at the show, and he exposed bitterness. "It's nice to be here presenting this award," he said with a smile. "Yup, presenting this award, and for no other reason what-so-ever."

Unfortunately, the irrational snobbery of the Academy shined through again one year later with the exact same occurrence. Carrey won the Golden Globe for Best Actor for his portrayal of his lifelong idol, Andy Kaufman in Man on the Moon, but was completely ignored by the Oscars. This time there would be no joking or smiling Carrey. He refused even to attend the ceremony.

Earlier this year, Carrey teamed back up with the Farelly Brothers in Me, Myself, and Irene. Though the film obtained moderate success, it was looked at extremely scrupulously, not only because it was a Jim Carrey film, but also because it was the first release from the Farellys after their hugely popular There's Something About Mary.

Carrey's involvement in How the Grinch Stole Christmas seemingly has more invested in it than any other aspect of the film. Though Ron Howard is a very successful director, and Dr. Seuss' story is a timeless classic, it will ultimately be Jim Carrey that pulls people into the theaters.

With a budget of over two hundred million dollars, and the possibility of record breaking profits at the box office, Jim Carrey stands on the verge of an incredible amount of pressure. For almost everyone alive it would be impossible for that pressure to be met with anything but a breaking point. For Jim Carrey, it will certainly be met with accomplishment.

When Carrey earned twenty-million dollars for his role in The Cable Guy, he could have cashed his cherished check out of his back pocket. Unfortunately, his father passed away around the same time as the film, so he decided to bury the check with him. However, one thing that is for sure is that the twenty-million dollar check represents everything. It stands for determination and brilliance. And, of course it symbolizes insanity.

COURTESY RON BATZDORFF

You're a mean one...
Jim Carrey as the Grinch.

COURTESY DR. SEUSS

...Mr. Grinch
Dr. Seuss' The Grinch from the 1966 television special.

■ Opie

continued from page 5

Andy Griffith Show." But many say he gained his claim to fame as Richie Cunningham in the 1970's hit television show, "Happy Days."

After his stint on "Happy Days," Howard acted in several movies, the most popular being American Graffiti. This film received five Academy Award nominations for its portrayal of a night in the lives of the class of 1962.

At the age of 25, Howard directed his first feature film, Grand Theft Auto, also writing the script. Grand Theft Auto is based on a car chase ensuing when a teenage girl elopes to Las Vegas with her boyfriend in a stolen car.

Soon after that he directed the 1985 hit Cocoon. The movie was centered on a group of senior citizens that receive the gift of eternal youth from Aliens. Cocoon won an Academy Award for best visual effects.

In 1986 Howard joined forces with Brian Grazer where he co-founded and co-chaired Imagine Entertainment Incorporated. Imagine was a public company that independently produced feature films. Under Imagine Entertainment Inc. Howard directed the comedy Parenthood. It was nominated for two Academy Awards.

He also directed the 1991 action movie, Backdraft, where two brothers carry on a family tradition in the Chicago Fire Department, and try to solve a puzzling series of arson attacks. Backdraft received four Academy Award nominations.

Since Imagine was formed, its films have grossed over $2.5 billion.

One of Howard's most successful directing projects was the 1995 box office smash, Apollo 13. The stellar cast included acting giants Tom Hanks, Kevin Bacon, Bill Paxton, Gary Sinise and Ed Harris. These

Turn to OPIE page 8

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
BEER • WINE LIQUOR
Cigarettes • Lottery
Phone Cards
Convenient Location
EASY FREE PARKING
LOW, LOW PRICES!
9 University Drive · Amherst · 549-5758
THIS WEEK'S SPECIALS
Kendall Jackson Chard 750 $9.99
Rubinoff Vodka 1.75 $9.99
Jim Beam 750 $9.99
Jack Daniel's 1 liter $19.99
Kahlua 750 $14.99
Absolut 1.75 $25.99

One Coupon per person, not valid on any other offers. Offer Expires 11/30
The All New CARLA'S CREATIONS Tanning Body & Nails
Best of 2000
Largest Tanning, Hair & Nail Salon in the Valley!
*All New, Top of the Line Tanning Equipment
*Nail Services *Waxing *Hair Services!
MEN WOMAN
10% off any Hair service w/this Ad
New Market Center • 6 University Drive • Amherst, MA • 549-8826

The School for International Training
&
The International Language Institute of MA
offer:
ESOL TEACHER CERTIFICATE COURSE
(SIT TESOL Certificate)
Jan 2-26, 2001
or 4 weeks between
Jan. 13 & April 16, 2001
at ILI, in downtown Northampton
SPACES LIMITED!
For info call: (413) 586-7569 or visit our website: www.languageschoolusa.org

Castaway Lounge
Routes 5 & 10, Whately, MA • (413) 665-8733
(North of 91 Exit 22 take route 5 & 10 North 2 miles, South of 91 Exit 24 take route 5 & 10 South 2 miles)
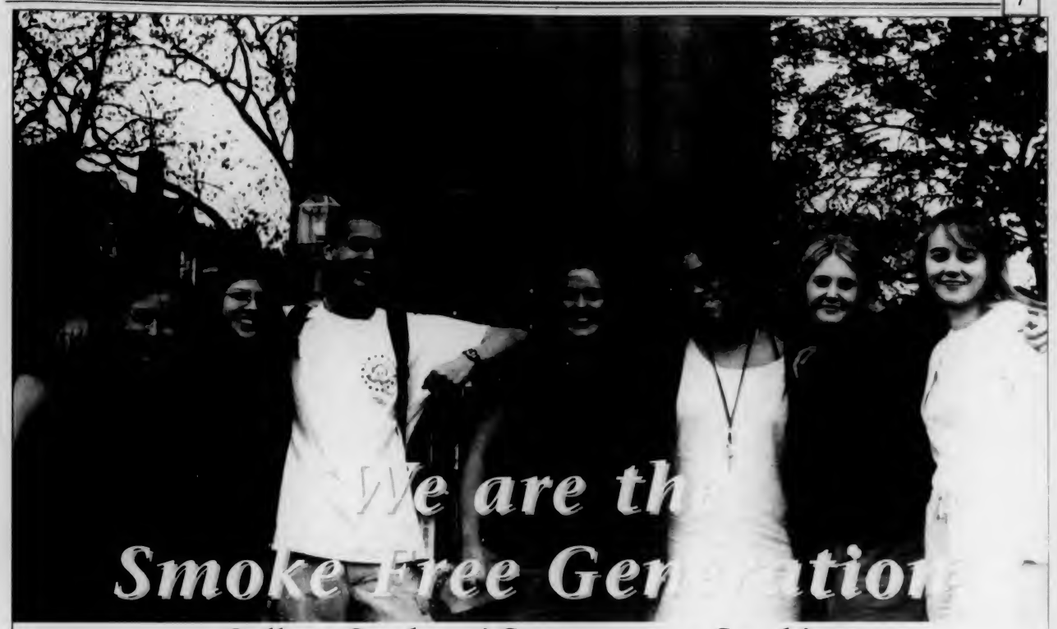
Open to all students over 21 years old
We are now hiring girls 18 and over who need to make big money in the entertainment business
We are now open for Monday Night Football @ 4pm
6 Dancers • Food • Prizes
VIP room always open for private parties

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M-Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M-Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com



College Students' Statement on Smoking

It's true that college life is filled with stress: office appointments with TA's and advisors, studying to maintain decent grades, selecting a major and overcoming the fear of writing a thesis. At the same time we are trying to develop new social and personal relationships that hopefully will last far beyond graduation.

In spite of the stress around us and because we understand the health dangers that smoking and second-hand smoke can cause, we choose to be smoke free.

If you are a smoker please respect our rights to breathe fresh air in public spaces. With your cooperation we will make the smoke free generation - more than a slogan - a reality for life.

Amherst College

Nicole Harrison
Elizabeth Bnans
John Frechette
Rebecca Starr '00
Stacey Whitaker, '00
Lynne Baer, '00
Joy Halinh, '00
Michael Ward, '00
Katherine Giese, '01
Antara Gandhi, '01
f. Foss, '01
Garrick Perry, '01
Vanessa Champion, '01
Courtney Jennings, '01
Sam Rice-Townsend, '01
Adrienne Socci, '01
Michael Proctor, '02
Marisol Thomer, '02
David Phillip Lameson, '02
Daniel King, '02
Bredford Tilden, '02
Sarah Johnson, '02
Andrew Schneider, '02
Wendy Okeyo, '02
Adam Nagorski, '02
Whitney Treseder, '02
Michael Baker, '02
Micaela Mendlow, '03
Amanda Gabai, '03
Kieran Collins, '03
Rachel Tischler, '03
Erik DiNardo, '03

Mount Holyoke College

Nina Lobo
Elizabeth Swanner
Beth Yanuskiewicz
Kalie Summers
Leigh Dumville, '00
Joyce Hopkins, '00
Akileh Noel, '00
Elizabeth Rifford, '00
Marion Blackwell, '00
Carrie Holland, '00
Christine Schoen, '00
Lidet Heile, '00
Lesley Shatkin, '00
Elizabeth Frechette, '00
Emily Gorstine, '00
Santresda Johnson, '00
Linda Weeks, '01
Joy McManaman, '01
Jessica Lazar, '01
Christina Montalvo, '01
Mary Olson, '01
Megan Schmidt, '02
Naomi Filoramo, '02
Laura Devaney, '02
Aaja Zujo, '02
Diana Turelsky, '02
Melissa Myers, '02
Melanie Gebeau, '02
Divya Errabelli, '02
Melenie Stanchina, '02
Ryoko Kaki, '02
Faith Kares, '03
Erin Kormann, '03
Kimberly McMahon, '03
Jessica Justice, '03
Shannon Lenz, '03
Brooke Herman, '03
Elisabeth Wirsing, '03
Elizabeth Wills, '03
Rachel Otty, '03
Janice Fung Chulee, '03
Elizabeth Steinberg, '03

Lora Pelech, '03
Mary Coleman, '03
Amy Koler, '03
Katherine Johnson, '03
Kelley Cunningham, '03
Abena Richards, '03
Audrey Moore, '03
Adriana Schor, '03
Jenny Gregory, '03

Hampshire College

Philip Kwok
Joseph Salim
Michael Wexler
Bernard Mchor-Jakowski
Trevor Jensen
Christopher Correa
Adam Shapiro
Jennifer Wilson
Christopher Clow, '00
Collin Lynch, '00
Alana Rivera, '00
Jacob Chabot, '00
Gareth Edel, '00
Wai-Tsang, '01
Gillian Beck, '01
Evan Baker, '01
Sarah Kim, '01
Elizabeth Clark, '01
Dana Maisel, '01
Michael Abrahamsen, '01
Eleanor Sanahman, '02
Bailey House, '02
Thomas Jacobs, '02
Justin Jackson, '02
Shiva Rosenhalt, '02
Laila Ames-Dmoch, '02
Megan Kennedy, '02
Evan Denko, '02
Tenzin Namgyal, '02
Greca Ballard, '02
Erik Hopp, '02
Jonathan Stribling-Uss, '02
Elliott Coon, '02
Eric Waters, '02
Chani West-Foyle, '02
Anna Gomberg, '03
Liam Flanagan, '03
Julia Temko, '03
Alexis Carroll, '03
Laura Torres, '03
Hannah Thomes, '03
Jasse Giffen, '03
Janet Sanchez, '03
Brenda Kombo, '03
Matthew Noonan, '03
Ernest Chapman, '03
Jeremy Draper, '03
Laura Leypoldt, '03
Jorgin Taveras, '03
Bradley Beggs, '03
Michaela Wood, '03
Kwabena Ennin Amperful, '03
Shaun Boyce, '03
Hemma Sheikh, '03
Julia Sklool, '03
Adrianne Lamge, '03
Daniel Turnbull, '04
Will Sands, '04

University of Massachusetts

Kate Kelly
Jamee Trahan
Winnie Watkins
Chns Mongean
Joe McAleev
Jamie Kaplowitz
Alexia Bueno
Lauren Cohen

Krystal Mirabile
Donise Lasley
Natalie Black
Phill Cunningham
Jason Tsavhs
Nick Chchiton
Syed Hasan
Nicole Beades
Kristen Ablondi
Teir Richardson
Marcus Bulaw
Walter Beede
Alexandra Doos
Bnan McGown
Robert Henderson
Nolan Formalaine
Krysta Johnson
Duane Barlow
Katie Ledda
Moira Bowen
Andres Portes
Merla Hartman
Seena Lamothe
Joe Gurowsky
Mark Leandro
Eric Silva
Bridget Flanagen
Kimberly Wong
Thomas Southworth, Jr.
Stephanie Audy
Sarah Holms
Sujei Santiago
Steve Crossby
Maegan Wilson
Andrea Histay
Heather Gamache
Tarah Guttman
Amy Root
Annemiehe de Bruijn
Megan Brown
Moshe Weyers
Pradeep Sukumar
Nancy Cayasso
Kirsten Doyle
Felicia Lundquist, '00
Leslie VanDewerk, '00
Alison Bennett, '00
Natalie Landry, '00
Candice Wagner, '00
Colleen Farrall, '00
Joseph Dunne, '00
Matthew Bergler, '00
Jessica Peters, '00
Jeanette Sergeant, '00
Lisa Cantin, '00
Evan Maraghy, '00
Shannon Hinklay, '01
Andrea Sagen, '01
Jessica Sitko, '01
Enka Lawson, '01
Narah Valcarcel, '01
Christia Higuera, '01
Rebecca Benoit, '01
Marielin Lopez, '01
Meegan Marcano, '01
Ben Gendler, '01
Tina Ferrandes, '01
Asha Chander, '01
Kimberly Hammond, '01
Annie-Renee Grehman, '01
Lynne Mahoney, '01
Julie Dana, '01
Laura Nichols, '01
Matthew Stearns, '01
Karen Rencus, '01
Jill Regan, '01
Laura Mckowski, '01
Will Wittbold, '01
Peter Menard, '01
Theresa Lane, '01

Michelle Lourenco, '01
Jessica Wood, '01
John Honkerdonk, '01
David Buchalter, '01
Amanda Mobley, '01
Ottavia D'Aiello, '01
Cecilia Proulx, '01
Sage Brousseau, '01
Michael Walton, '01
Michael Grove, '01
Rebecca Hasson, '01
David Siegel, '01
Kelly Greco, '01
Amnish Dias, '01
Thomas Cartier, '01
John Kazlauskas, '01
Even Weisman, '01
Hiltary Neylon, '01
Anna Grumbein, '01
Erica Rashap, '01
Mey Kachoogian, '01
Elizabeth Eaton, '01
Renee East, '01
Elizabeth Roppoh, '01
John Hayes, '02
Megan Beilenson, '02
Laura Malone, '02
Nicholas Azzolo, '02
Robin Piper, '02
Cynthe David, '02
Matthew Burke, '02
Donise Lasley, '02
Melissa Militano, '02
Shawn Gaffney, '02
Lauren Krawzyk, '02
Vanessa Marr, '02
Julie Lorden, '02
Alison Kispert, '02
Rebecca Schnabel, '02
Mark Rogers, '02
Rebecca Lucia, '02
Chris Young, '02
Bob Cardinal, '02
Michele Barry, '02
Michelle Musenlian, '02
Mana Rivera, '02
Jason Warner, '02
Justin Hoolley, '02
Megan Cerroll, '02
Kelley Gaffney, '02
Christine Guiney, '02
Sarah Hibshman, '02
Taneka Miller, '02
Naresh Thacker, '02
Michael Antico, '02
Lauren Denks, '02
Ben Sokol, '02
John Loo, '02
Blair Owen, '02
James Rocha, '02
Kylene Zeuk, '02
Lisa Gentile, '02
Michelle Carlevale, '02
Nezia Ahmed, '02
Marcy Sait, '02
Amy Winsor, '02
Chris Hibbs, '02
Justin O'Grady, '02
Denielle Rondazzo, '02
Kelly Lora, '02
Eric Grady, '02
Nicholas Andrews, '02

Stacy Kendall '02
Suzenne Reese '02
Stefanie Chiu, '02
Devarasi Sengupte, '02
Jesus Diaz '02
Todd Hill, '02
William O'Brien '02
Kata Grinnes, '02
Michele Doucet, '02
Michelle Musenlian, '02
Don Hettnck, '02
Enn Tormey, '02
Elizabeth Devine '02
Aileen Hollander, '02
Elizabeth Froment, '02
Mike Margarolk, '02
Meghan Anderson, '02
Kristen Foss, '02
Tracey Churray, '02
Melissa Mallah, '02
Kerry Flatley, '02
Rebecca Lucie, '02
Kailin Beene, '02
Nicole Pearl, '02
Jason Cote, '02
Matt Parvis, '02
Matthew Kepple, '02
Ellen Hochhauser, '02
Andrew Schweihs, '02
Victoria Houle, '02
Robert Daly, '02
Chrsanne Shirley, '02
Ralph Pallotte, '02
Stefanie Fried, '02
Lauren Canha, '02
Doug Tyburski, '02
Zev Gasell, '02
Jay Hmielowski, '02
Adam Cohen, '02
Tara Kahn, '02
Christen DeHaas, '02
Noah Kreitzman, '02
Marybeth Miele, '02
Enn Croteau, '02
Christina Campobillo, '02
Gretchen Mier, '02
Susan Solimine, '02
Christina Lazzara, '02
Melissa Cote, '02
Allyson Correia, '02
Anna Hamilton, '02
Amenda Weaver, '02
Lauren Buckley, '02
Jamie Sabo, '02
Kerry Richard, '02
Sarah Feldman, '02
Julie Ann Freve, '02
Brooke Caltanan, '02
Sean Gasell, '02
Rich Granger, '02
Michnel Bolduc, '02
Timothy Robertson, '02
Jessi Paone, '02
Christopher Corcione, '02
Nicole Saucier, '02
Tari Van Nostrand, '02
Leah Newton, '02
Lisa Swindon, '02
Alison Marszalek, '02
Christine Festa, '02
Brenda Roche, '02
Sarah Tapply, '02
Lisa Vandervalk, '02
Jill Hussey, '02
Lauren Bishop, '02
Elizabeth Jane Declan Farrell, '02
Nolan Condon, '02
Heather Renaud, '02
Imara Dean, '02
Scott Lessen, '02

Todd Obeda '02
Katie Murray, '02
Denise Gaudreault, '02
Alexis Rosenblatt, '02
Michael Cincotti, '02
Le Shanda Peaks, '02
Rebecca Levin, '02
Eleanor Cash, '02
Mia Gallas, '02
Jeff Stanley, '02
Jeffrey Ianello, '02
Patrice Bernadel, '02
Lauren Bloxey6, '02
Julie VanWie, '02
Sean Manasfield, '02
Enn Greeley, '02
Abigail Coon, '02
Brian Petersen, '03
Terri Cronin, '03
Marisa Turco, '03
Geraldo Moreira, '03
Jessica Smole, '03
Virginia Avedisian, '03
Patrick O'Brien, '03
Daniel Lawler, '03
Lindsay Mercier, '03
Wendy Brown, '03
Ashleigh Lunghi, '03
Jam Brownstein, '00
Stacey Singer, '03
Julie Robernymer, '03
Ali Gerson, '03
Laura Ilo, '03
Cynthia Santosuosso, '03
Shanna Ouellet, '03
Tracey Gardini, '03
Jen Milone, '03
Atossa Movahedi, '03
Abbie Res, '03
Enka Rugani, '03
Allison Rogers, '03
Jure McGee, '03
Jillian Stasnik, '03
Lauren Havey, '03
Brad Wehrwein, '03
Meghan Holmgren, '03
Jonathan Hanlon, '03
Mary Plante, '03
Merique Newell, '03
Paul Josloff, '03
Trisha Knox, '03
Melissa Sonfist, '03
Kristyne McDonnell, '03
Emilie Williams, '03
Amy Buchneister, '03
Kirsten Learson, '03
Janine Crowe, '03
John Gilroy, '03
Maia Gill, '03
Sara Meyers, '03
Anne Whipple, '03
Agnes Ulinski, '03
Helen Eggleston '03
Johanna Sprague, '03
Jason McArthur, '03
Heather Greene, '03
Nicole Alberino, '03
Katherine Bonzey, '03
Liz Remington, '03
Katrina Mitchell, '03
Heather Phillips, '03
Carolyn Clopeck, '03
Vanessa Donnelly, '03
Allisan Lehan, '03
Kathy O'Meara, '03
Daniel Miller, '03
Sean Robert Berthaunser, '03
Tricia DelBove, '03
Kristin Anderson, '03
Patrick McCoy, '03
Colleen Gilligan, '03
Kristen Gibbons, '03

Kathleen Landers, '03
Ashlye Cnesch, '03
Mary Plante, '03
Ashleigh Lunghi, '03
Jeffrey Veil, '03
Kara Slovin, '03
Melissa Sonfist '03
Cindy Hollister, '03
Simone Wilkinson, '03
Jaime Jones, '03
Jennifer Mikkola '03
Frank Tiscione, '03
Elizabeth Gallagher '03
Katie Ryan '03
Eric Soderstrom '03
Elizabeth Sanchez '03
Ryan Crist, '03
Heather Hume '03
Reginald Miles, '03
Deve Kyle, '03
Andy Dziedzic, '03
Brandon Mann, '03
Jennifer Liberto, '03
Jennifer Maskowitz '03

Smith College

Sasha Freedman
Judy Franklin
Angela Ghesquiere
Elisabeth Hubbard
Megan Wells Jamieson
Elizabeth Farnsworth
Courtney Turpin, '00
Eva Withers, '00
Lisa Johnson, '00
Claire Rusnak, '00
Leura Geoghegan, '00
Willow Regnery, '00
Erika Knepp '00
Bonnie McAdoo, '00
Emily Chandler, '00
Chelsea Shriver, '00
Irene Pashchenko, '00
Brandy King, '01
Kathleen Kovisk '01
Tiina Rihal, '01
Jennifer Aisenberg, '01
Sarah Hood, '01
Nina Moe '01
Kate Hutchinson, '02
Amy Kowilski, '02
Jaclyn Merlet, '02
Minet Marnn, '02
Laural Mutti, '02
Andrea Matus, '02
Julie Baber, '02
Sara Lisi, '02
Jennifer Eldridge '02
Renee Mertz '02
Ashsey Shever, '02
Beth Baltimore, '02
O.T. Creed, '02
Maggie Halley, '03
Anna Strowe '03
Heather Siegal '03
Katrina Mitchell, '03
Anna Feldman, '03
Holly Timme, '03
Beth Jackendoff '03
Lindsay Wasnick '03
Danielle Solan '03
Juliana Rain, '03
Nadine Schneider '03
Alexandra Kissel '03
Jennifer Frederick '03
Annette Pollert, '03
Ann Kabea, '03
Ariel Aberg Riger '03

This message is sponsored by the following Massachusetts Tobacco Control Programs: Tobacco Free Hampshire County Coalition; the Amherst, Easthampton, Northampton, South Hadley and Quabbin Health District Boards of Health, the Teenage Power Alliance of the YWCA and the Literacy Project. For more information call: (413) 586-3786

Face to Face and Amazing Crowns headline tonight's big Punktuation

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

A punk rock showcase is long overdue and very welcome at Umass. Face to Face leads the charge of Punktuation, a four-band show featuring punk acts from coast to coast and beyond, presented by University Productions and Concerts (UPC) on November 16 at the Student Union Ballroom, beginning at 6:30 PM. Providence's Amazing Crowns, Arizona's Chronic Future, and Canada's GOB round out the bill, which will also feature ESPN Winter X game representatives, Playstation 2 game demonstrations, and a full bar in which to drown your sorrows if you don't win one of the many available prizes- including a snowboard.

Face to Face is approaching ten years together as a band, and has been one of the most consistent and productive California punk bands, releasing records on punk-friendly independent labels like Victory and Fat Wreck Chords. The band scored a radio hit during the mid-nineties with the spunted "Disconnected" and shuffling through different labels found success with the albums Big Choice, Face to Face and Don't Turn Off. Their 7th album Reactionary finds the band returning closer to their straight-ahead punk roots, and its release featured an interesting Internet campaign where fans could choose online which songs made it on to the album. Face to Face are currently singer/guitarist Trever Keith, bassist Scott Shiflett, guitarist Chad Yaro, and drummer Pete Parada, although the band has tentatively stripped down to a three-piece for sections of the Reactionary tour due to prior commitments by Yaro.

The Amazing Crowns have been described as punkabilly as well as garage rock revivalists. The current line-up consists of vocalist Jason "King" Kendall, guitarist J.D. Burgess, bassist Jack "The Swinger" Hanlon, and drummer Judd Williams. Showing much love to their hometown of Providence, Rhode Island, the Crowns have recorded two five records there; 1998's Holiday Bootleg EP at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel as well as the more recent Payback Live! Requiring two releases to contain their frantic live show, the Crowns will definitely liven up the Student Union Ballroom.

Chronic Future is has been honing their musical chops since they were thirteen, when they recorded and released their self-titled debut. The Scottsdale, Arizona group's mix of funky rap-rock may arrive to a crowded scene, but the recent 4 Elements is a solid effort that validates previous high-profile opening slots for 311 and Sugar Ray. The driving "Jump to Jive" and cathartic "Majik" invite favorable comparisons to local favorites Reveille. Brandon Lee takes care of the turntablists as well as the bass, flows and melodies belong to vocalist Michael Basse, Ben Collins takes guitar duties, and drummer Barry Collins hits the skins.

Canada's GOB rocks a familiar style of 90s melodic punk and in addition to splits have two proper albums in addition to the recent The World According to GOB. How Far Shallow Takes You and Too Late...No Friends are the work of many changing line-ups for the band.

Tickets for the show are $3 Umass students with a valid ID and $5 for the general public. Tickets may be purchased at the door or through Tix Unlimited.

COURTESY DAVID PALMER

Chronic Future are part of tonight's Punktuation in the Student Union Ballroom.

COURTESY TOM MOLOWSKI

Percy Hill Plays the Skybox tomorrow night. Doors open at 7:30p.m.

Rustic Overtones to play Skybox

Rustic Overtones will take their fluid and stylistically scattered sound to the Skybox tonight, one of three bands set to play.

Originating in Portland, Maine, say the members of Rustic overtones, has allowed them to remain safely distanced from the trends of modern pop music and radio-friendly rock. "In Portland," says singer/guitarist Dave Gutter, "you can escape from anything you want, including the styles of today and the media's effect on music. That kept us innocent from the trends. That helped us solidify our own sound before we got out there and started touring."

Along with Gutter, Rustic Overtones is composed of bassist Jon Roods, keyboardist Spencer Albee, drummer Tony McNaboe, trombonist Dave Noves, alto saxist Ryan Zoidis and baritone saxist Jason Ward, their instruments intermingling with elegant and intelligent arrangements.

Also taking the stage will be the Austin, Texas-based Sister Seven, a four-piece rock outfit fronted by singer/guitarist Patrice Pike. The songs from their new release, Wrestling Over Tiny Matters, have the potential for an explosive translation into the live setting, being thickly tracked and heavy rock tunes.

Guitarist Wayne Sutton says of their roots that they used to be "kind of a hippie jam band," noting that Santana's music was a large influence for much of the band's ten-year history. With Wrestling Over Tiny Matters, however, the band placed much more emphasis on "lyrics and melodies, instead of having a great drum and bass part and trying to build a song around it." Sutton also cites bands such as Led Zeppelin and Pink Floyd, as well as modern acts such as Jeff Buckley and Radiohead, as influencing, or at least interesting, the band.

Among the notable songs on their latest release is the first single, "Under the Radar," a driving piece of alt-rock, and "Elijah," a twisting, moody track of edgy guitars and Pike's soaring vocals.

Sister Seven have toured in the past with the likes of John Fogerty, and played dates on the Lilith Fair.

The Skybox doors will open for the show at 6:30 p.m., and the show will begin at 7:00. Labb will open.

– David Troupes

■ Opie

continued from page 7

actors vividly depicted Apollo 13's real-life brush with disaster on the way to the moon. Apollo 13 was nominated for nine Academy Awards, winning two for Best Film Editing and Best Sound. It also won the People's Choice Award for Favorite Motion Picture and Favorite Dramatic Motion Picture.

Howard was back in the spotlight one year later when he directed the 1996 hit Ransom. Movie legend Mel Gibson played an airline tycoon who refused to pay the ransom for his son, and later used the cash to put a hit on the kidnappers. Ransom grossed $500 million worldwide. In 1998 Howard decided to give television production a try producing, the HBO miniseries "From the Earth to the Moon." Howard received an Emmy, a Golden Satellite and a Golden Globe award for best miniseries.

Howard turned back to the big screen in 1999, when he produced the comedy EDtv. Matthew McConaughey stared in this film as a video store clerk who allows a television executive to film his life 24 hours a day.

Tomorrow, Howard once again aims to transport the viewer into an unbelievable fantasy world. The enchanting story of The Grinch, paired with the outrageous talent of Jim Carrey, hopes to captivate audiences as they journey into the crazy world of Whoville.

w w w . d a i l y c o l l e g i a n . c o m

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES On-campus contact! Josh @ 413-549-4514
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

GREAT 1 2 3 4 5 6
Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
A great place to get contact lenses
FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
Contact Lenses mail ordered directly to your home or office
FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
UHS Eye Care Services
For Appointments or questions, call 577-5244
Special Offer: 10% off any second pair of complete prescription eyeglasses within three months of a first complete pair of prescription eyeglasses (excluding insurance provided eyeglasses) at the UHS for the same patient
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

Four Seasons WINE & LIQUOR
CONVENTLY LOCATED NEXT TO DUNKIN DONUTS
NOW OPEN SUNDAYS AT NOON!!!
333 Russell St. (RTE 9) Hadley, MA 584-8174 Hours Mon – Sat 9am – 11pm.
American Express, ATM, Debit, Discover, Master Card, and Visa accepted.
Not Responsible for typographical errors. I.D.'s checked by Legal Age Software.

Shear Bliss Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

Make a Difference in a Life
Live rent free in downtown Northampton.
Be a therapeutic housemate for a person in recovery from psychiatric disturbance
Female age 22+ needed. Salary, benefits, team support.
Call Mary Cape at Windhorse Associates 586-0207

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
student universe.com IT'S YOUR WORLD. EXPLORE IT
studentuniverse.com 800.272.9676

UMass Alumni Association
"Leaders in the Making" Scholarships
Applicants must be full-time junior undergraduate students to be eligible. Applications may be picked up Monday through Friday at the Alumni Relations Office in Memorial Hall from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. They must be completed and returned to Jason Germain in the Alumni Office no later than December 1, 2000. Winners will receive up to $2,000.00 and will be recognized at a ceremony in April.
For more information, please contact Jason Germain at 545-2317 or jag@admin.umass.edu
UMASS Alumni Association®
University of Massachusetts Amherst

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

The New World Theater will host the final installment of their three part series Project 2050: Open Studio/Open Dialogue on Monday night at Amherst High School. Project 2050 is an opportunity to perform and discuss the presence and work of multicultural artists.

Monday's event will feature work by playwright Alice Tuan, author of Last of the Suns and Ikebana. Tuan is the 2000 recipient of the Mark Taper Forum's Robert Sherwood Award.

Also participating as a commentator is professor Deirdre Royster. Local youth will also perform work in poetry, dance, music and theater in this forum.

Call 545-9591 or e-mail alvilda@acad.umass.edu for more information. The event begins at 7:30 and is free to the public.

ART

Blue, paintings by Jim Allen: through Dec. 12
Central Gallery

Memory: Personal and Social Testimonies: through Nov. 21
Augusta Savage Gallery

The Art of the Mezzotint: Two Contemporary Masters
Nov. 16 - Dec. 12
Opening Reception: Nov. 16, 4-6 p.m.
Hampden Gallery

Life's Opposite Ends, paintings by Janet Walerstein Winston
Nov. 25 – Dec. 14
Opening Reception: Dec. 3, 2-4 p.m.
Burnett Gallery, Jones Library

MUSIC

Rustic Overtones
With Sister Seven and Labb
Nov. 16, 7 p.m.
Skybox

Accentus, French a cappella choir
Nov. 17, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall
545-2511

Percy Hill
With Rane and Seth Yacovone Band
Nov. 17, 8 p.m.
Skybox

Apocalyptic Dreams: work by David Gillingham
Nov. 19, 3 p.m.
Concert Hall
545-2511

Four Corners: Tuba Concerti from Around the World
Nov. 19, 8 p.m.
Benzanson Recital Hall
545-2511

Singing Percussion: Chamber Choir and Percussion Ensemble
Nov. 21, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium
545-2511

Michael Feinstein
Nov. 21, 7:30 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium
545-2511

THEATRE/DANCE

Open Studio/Open Dialogue: The 2050 Project
With playwright Alice Tuan
Nov. 20, 7:30 p.m.
Amherst High School

Dr Faustus
Nov. 16-18, 8 p.m.
Rand Theater
545-2511

Romeo and Juliet
Nov. 15-18, 8 p.m.
Hallie Flanagan Theater, Smith College
585-ARTS

Sweet Charity
Nov. 16 – 18, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium
545-2511

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Thursday Night Dance Party
Nov. 16, 10 p.m.
Skybox

Comedian Anthony "Ant-Man"
Acosta
Nov. 17, 8 p.m.
Bluewall

ATTENTION

The source is always looking for area events to include in its weekly calendar. It's free AND it tastes good with peanut butter. Send your submissions to sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com or bring your information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Steve Irwin on hunting mission for crocodiles

with Nicholas Pizzolato

What's better than a man who wrestles crocodiles, wrangles snakes, captures octopi and cradles monkeys like they were his own children? It's a man who does all those things and speaks with an Australian accent. Who else would I be talking about but the one and only Steve Irwin, a.k.a. the Croc Hunter, a.k.a. the craziest man alive – straight from the country that started out as a prison colony for the British and since has brought us Elle McPherson, Paul Hogan (Crocodile Dundee), Men at Work, Boomerangs (the toy, not the movie), the future set of "Survivor II," Yahoo Serious and his breakthrough film Young Einstein. Jingos (and the babies they may eat), the phrase "G'day mate," and the last summer Olympics. Some may argue Mel Gibson, but he was born in New York and is such an American citizen, but I digress. The Croc Hunter proves to us all that with a love of animals, great expressions, and a death wish one can go far in American television.

If you've never seen "The Croc Hunter" you are missing something truly special. Each week Steve and his wife Terri go to a new and exotic habitat and either study the animals that participate in that eco-system or focuses on one particular type of animal. Steve then goes all about like a Tasmanian Devil (another character brought to us from that general area) rummaging through the area to show the viewer the creature that he has uncovered. Using phrases like "crickey" and "isn't she a beaut," he not only adds humor but also introduces educational facts to the children of all ages who are watching the show. Garbed in the outerwear of adventurers, khaki shorts and shirts, he tames the wild beasts of the Australian outback and runs the show that his father started back in the seventies.

Despite the educational value of the show, the reason why I watch it and the reason that I'm willing to bet the rest of the country watches it with such appeal is the fact that Steve Irwin is arguably insane. Week after week he jumps in waters infested by crocodiles and alligators and wrestles them for the sake of education. Holding their mouths open, he'll make the acknowledgment about how many large sharp teeth they have, and then stick his hand in the mouth to show us the croc's throat and uvula. Then while holding the reptilian beast down with one arm, he nonchalantly shows us how to tell how old the croc is by the extravagant patterns of scales on his back. Then like it was a dog he slaps it on the back and says "Ghet outta here baby."

Another personal favorite of mine is when he goes after the poisonous snakes with just a stick. A typical comment would be "Crickey, look at this beaut! Ya know, one teaspoon of her venom is powerful enough to kill the entire state of Rhode Island, and her three-inch fangs can go clear through normal boots. That's why I'm not wearing any – if this dahling is going to get me she's goin to get me." He then proceeds to manhandle the snake, always careful to place the head of the snake near the cameraman, allowing him to be portrayed as the most heroic zoologist ever. Despite all of his outings he says (and I'm not making this up), "I've been injured more times than you can poke a stick at. I've recently had shoulder surgery, I've had three surgeries on my knee. I've got scar tissue on scar tissue on my hands. But you know, I've never had a real serious bite from any animal." Never suffered a severe bite from an animal – malarkey I tell you. Why the hell does he have scar tissue on his hands, is the wild outback foliage attacking him while he sleeps? The guy has more stitches than Mick Foley, and the Crocodile Hunter is not acting.

But there is no denying it he loves his job, and it is one of the few shows on television that is educational and entertaining. It appeal to both young and old and if you see it on TV I highly recommend it.

WHAT TO WATCH

Of course ER and LD and start the countdown, not for Christmas but the debut for the NFL. Only two months and two weeks to go.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY DEPT. MUSIC U. MASS

Members of the UMass Wind Ensemble will perform on Sunday November 19 at 3:00p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SILVER SEASON
CELEBRATING 25 YEARS OF GREAT PERFORMANCES AND GREAT AUDIENCES
TICKETS ONLY $5 $7 $10 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
America's Ambassador of Song
MICHAEL FEINSTEIN
A pop vocalist, composer and arranger, Grammy-nominated Feinstein has released 17 albums and sold out shows worldwide. Feinstein will be joined by a septet performing arrangements from his current Concord release Big City Rhythm.
SPECIAL EVENT. NO DISCOUNTS
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21 AT 7:30PM, BOWKER AUDITORIUM
Fairytale on Ice
St. Petersburg Ice Ballet in Cinderella
A world premiere tour
A company of 35 champion ice dancers trained in the tradition of the world renown Kirov Ballet, this production features over 100 magnificent costumes and full opera house sets for the entire family. Join us at 6:30pm for a pre-show party with the staff of FamilyFun Magazine and make your own finger puppets. Free milk and cookies while they last.
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28 AT 7:30PM, CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY FAMILYFUN MAGAZINE
Some Like it Hot!
EDDIE PALMIERI AND HIS BAND with special guest David Sanchez
Warm up to the incendiary Latin jazz sounds of five-time Grammy Award winner Eddie Palmieri and his band. Pianist Eddie Palmieri is widely regarded as a living legend within the Latin & Afro-Cuban jazz standard and plays the piano like Muhammed Ali boxed. He will be joined by saxophonist David Sanchez, one of the most gifted and resourceful musicians on the international jazz scene.
"Palmieri ... can make a piano roar!" –THE NEW YORK TIMES
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY WFCR 88.5FM AND SCHOLZ, SCHWARTZ & FEINEN, P.C.
Exclusive Engagement
Buena Vista Social Club
presents Rubén González & Ibrahim Ferrer y su Grupo with Omara Portuondo
One of only eight U.S. shows this year!
These musicians have played to sold-out houses the world over and set the stage and audiences on fire with their passionate music.
SPECIAL EVENT. NO DISCOUNTS
WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3 AT 8PM, CONCERT HALL
SPONSORED BY THE BOSS, WFCR 88.5FM AND VALLEY ADVOCATE www.fineartscenter.com
Call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS for tickets
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

Equip smart.
A laser printer for the price of an inkjet?
Cool. Just $199.
Now you can have your very own laser printer. At a breakthrough price.
Fast. Sharp. Clean. Compact. With a toner cartridge that should last you all year. And at a per page cost that's 70% less than inkjet. Plus a Toner Save button that extends the life another 30%.
Papers that stand out in a teacher's grading stack. Professional resumes. Articles fit to submit for publication. All for the price of a half-dozen inkjet cartridges.
Better think twice. Everyone in the dorm's gonna want to use it.
Grab one at your campus bookstore. Order online. Or by phone at 800-459-3272. Go to www.samsungusa.com/Xtreme for more information.
The Samsung ML-4500 Laser Printer. "16-pages-on-1" print feature and Last Page Reprint button. Microsoft 2000 and Linux compatible.
SAMSUNG
Score this 15" flat-panel monitor.

311 fuels two-high energy shows

By James Schaffer
Collegian Correspondent

311
Avalon
Nov. 5

BOSTON – After the sixth or seventh body was violently ripped from the pit, tossed over the fence, and dragged out of the club everyone knew the show was ready to begin. Just ten minutes earlier, the band Zebrahead had begun to jam their opening set, pumping up the masses waiting for 311. Their punk style, with a touch of hardcore rock, unleashed the crowd's energy, turning the pit into a dangerous black hole. The crowd was into this concert, jumping, slamming, and screaming "I love you Nick," or "SA you – tule." This was without a doubt a club concert at its best.

The sets pop culture-quiet, yet always busy 311 stopped their busy Northeast tour to play an intense and entertaining session at the Avalon in Boston, and then at the Webster in Hartford, Connecticut. 311 did their best to mix the set up with many of their older songs from the Grassroots album, their multi-platinum self titled CD, 311, and numerous newer songs from Transistor, and Sound System. Along with the great mixture of their old and recent material was the addition of two new tracks, "Champagne," a boring effort capable of inducing a coma, and the more upbeat, hard, and awakening "Sick Tight."

JAMES SCHAFFER / COLLEGIAN

311 also played the Webster in Hartford on Nov. 06.

The show started off with a touch of old school 311 with tracks from Music and Grassroots, beginning with "Freak Out." "Lucky," and "Misdirected Hostility." 311 started to mix in the songs from the CD's that made them famous, such as "Down" and "Beautiful Disaster." As the concert progressed so did 311's quality. At first Nick seemed to be slurring his words, having problems getting rhythm and power behind his words. What caused this I cannot imagine, but it was quickly remedied and 311 without any further delay found their groove.

To make sure the fans where appeased after a lackluster response from the new tracks Hexsum made sure to mix in songs we have all come to love, such as the heavy copdamning "Offbeat Bareass" the anti-sellout song "Come Original," and the rare live performance of "Don't Stay Home." To mix things up, and give the hardcore 311 fans a little something special to hear, SA mixed his tracks with a different touch, scratching in some new effects in songs such as "Beautiful Disaster," "Come Original," and "Large in the Margin."

To prevent the all too common "let's play and get the hell out of here" mentality the drummer Chad Sexton took off on a five-minute solo, pounding furiously on his chrome-filled drum set. To support the drummer Nick and crew carried out a giant set of timpani drums, beating to the rhythm of the solo, slowly flowing it into a killer rendition of "Applied Science." This is a must-see and one of the most creative endeavors I have seen at a show, and another reason why 311's true power lies in their live performances.

With the show coming to an end and the crowd at its peak, 311 decided to conclude the show with "Feels So Good," and included P-Nut's notorious bass solo, beating a bass line that is quickly complemented by raging guitar riffs from guitarist Tim Mahoney. With little time left for us to chant for the bands return 311 gladly reappeared on stage. As they slowly assembled themselves onstage with their instruments while pounding bottled water the crowd chanted their all too common plea of "Who's got the herb?" Immediately following this Hexsum began his slow reggae beat of the fan favorite encore song, "Who's Got the Herb." In a typical 311 fashion the band concluded the show with Hexsum taking a powerhouse stage dive off a speaker, while SA Martinez and crew pumped out their energy injected song "Fuck the Bullshit."

In the end this show was incredible. 311 and their opener Zebrahead provided one of the most entertaining club shows I have been privileged to listen to in a good while. The intimacy of the club scene is one of the best places to watch a concert, especially from a finely tuned yet explosive band such as 311, who display incredible talent and yet are continually overlooked by mainstream America. Currently in legal battle with their record label Capricorn, this band has not been getting the airtime and promotion it needs, which the band compensates for with marathon tours that seem to never end. Their tour has brought them to the New England area over four times in the last year, making them an easy catch; so next time 311 comes around to fire up the college youth of New England make every effort possible to see their show.

Spice Girls return minus one member
Polesky assumes Ginger dwells in Utah

By Kurt Polesky
Collegian Staff

SPICE GIRLS
Forever
Virgin Records

When we last visited Spice World, things seemed to be going astray. Their second album, Spice, failed to stimulate the interests of the world's teenybopper population like their debut did. Geri "Ginger" Spice fled the group to pursue her true passion in life – soft-core pornography. Their "movie" Spice World certainly wasn't up for any Oscars, except for maybe Worst Original Screenplay. It appeared as though their fifteen minutes of fame were up, and they would be spending their sixteenth minute hanging out wherever the likes of New Kids on The Block and Kriss Kross spend their time these days. Two years and a few babies later, Posh, Scary, Baby and Sporty Spice are back minus one member, and minus the "girl power" that made them the phonemes that they were in the past.

On their new album, Forever, the Spice Girls left the brass, sass, girl power, and spice behind, in favor of a more Contemporary R&B flavor. Inane statements like "Ziga Zig-Ha" are missing from the album, but the music is still interchangeable, formulaic, and just begging to be played on the radio. I can't see Forever appealing much to the boy band crazed teenybopper who's highlight in life is watching TRL, collecting pull out posters of Nick Carter (no, not the WBCN DJ) from "Tiger Beat" and imagining what she and Justin Timberlake will name their children when they get married. However, some adults may enjoy the album, as it has a pretty low dosage of bubble gum pop.

It's plain to see that the Spice Girls are attempting to capture a more mature sound. Of course, like all great pop stars, the British quartet left all of the production and writing to somebody else. Everyone knows that writing your own stuff is just too gosh darn hard to do yourself! The girls enlisted the help of R&B producers Rodney Jenkins and Jimmy Jam &Terry Lewis obviously, trying to give themselves more of a Destinys Child appeal. Still, it's hard to differentiate between the vast majority of the tracks on Forever. They all seem to have been manufactured at the same pop music factory, with the same medium tempo beats, and pleasant but unspectacular vocals. Song titles such as "Weekend Love," "Holler" and "Tell Me Why" are about as hackneyed as they get. Perhaps the most fitting title on Forever is "Wasting My Time," which is a good description of this entire album.

On this album The Spice Girls hoped to achieve musical awesomeness. Quite simply, they fell short. Actually, they fell far, far away from awesomeness. Put It this way, if awesomeness were somewhere in Massachusetts, this album would be somewhere in Utah.

COURTESY VIRGIN RECORDS

The Spice Girls return minus Ginger Spice for their new album, Forever.

WE AT THE COLLEGIAN WANT TO BE POLITICALLY CORRECT BY BLOCKING OUT A MALE TO CORRECT OUR RUDE BEHAVIOR IN THE PICTURE TO THE RIGHT.

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
is

now
accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

FREE Give-Aways! PUNKTUATION. punk rock showcase

Thurs. Nov.16, 2000
Student Union Ballroom (Umass)
Doors @ 6:30pm
$3 DOOR CHARGE FOR UMASS
(GENERAL PUBLIC- $5)
tix unlimited* @ door (valid Umass student ID)

Model athlete finishes career
Robinson "assisted" UMass in classroom, on field

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

Some people are lucky enough to have it all, and Patty Robinson is one of those people. The Massachusetts senior has brains, looks and above all, an amazing amount of athletic ability that has allowed her to excel in every sport she has tried – especially field hockey.

When Robinson came to UMass as a freshman from Norwood in 1997, she was already a legend in her own right. In high school, she won a whole slew of field hockey honors, including a Bay State Conference Co-MVP award, a Daily Transcript Co-Player of the Year award and a 1995 Bay State Games gold medal.

However, it was not only in field hockey that Robinson outperformed the opposition. She was also the captain and MVP of her high school softball team, and if she hadn't spent the last four years under field hockey coach Patty Shea, than she probably would have been out on the softball diamond, competing under the watchful glare of softball coach Elaine Sortino.

Luckily for Shea and the rest of the Minutewomen, Robinson chose to spend her college days hitting field hockey balls instead of softballs. Judging by her four-year performance, it was the right move.

In her career, Robinson played in 91 games, starting in 88 of them. When looking at her career stats, one column really stands out, that being the 50 assists she collected over the years. This is a number that should stand out. When she fed Kristen Schmidt her last helper against North Carolina in the NCAA tournament this past Sunday, she was able to tie the career mark for assists.

"I try to distribute the ball as much as possible," said Robinson. "I'm just supposed to give the ball up to everyone else. I run around and sell at people and try and get people excited. I'm kind of a glorified cheerleader."

Obviously, modesty is another one of her strong points. In the history of sports, there has never been a glorified cheerleader that goes around rewriting the record books. M.L. Carr was a glorified cheerleader for the Celtics in the 80's. Robinson is in a class far above him – academically as well as athletically.

As long as her list is for athletic awards – and it is quite impressive, with All-Atlantic 10 first team awards in 1999 and 2000 topping the list – her list of academic honors is even longer.

Freshman year she was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll, and that was just the beginning. Sophomore year she was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll once again, and also qualified for the National Field Hockey Coaches Association Academic All-America and Atlantic 10 All-Academic Team selections. As a junior she duplicated this feat, and given the way Shea's players have performed in the classroom, she is almost a lock for these same awards again.

"She is great," said Robinson about her coach. "She is definitely hard on us, but she does it because she wants you to be a better player and she knows that we have it in us."

Improvement has been the mark of Robinson's career. When she was a freshman, she played outstanding defense, but was unable to tally a goal or an assist on the season. The next year, however, she exploded, scoring her first goal and dishing out 14 assists. Many of these came as a direct result of her being an integral part of the Minutewomen penalty corner team, a position she would keep for the remainder of her career.

In her junior year she teamed with fellow midfielder Lucy Koch and back Anke Bruemmer on the penalty corner team, and was able to work her way toward 18 assists that season. Over the next two years, it became commonplace to see Koch pass to Robinson off the penalty corner, who would then set up Bruemmer for the killer slapshot. By her senior year, the trio was running as smooth as the typical 6-4-3 double play, and she was able to pick up another 18 assists to tie the record.

"I don't think we practiced [corners] this year as much as we did last year," said Robinson. "We would have two hours out there stopping corners, and then running if we missed a goal. I thought I was going to die."

It must have worked, though, as Robinson, Koch and Bruemmer combined to form one of the most potent penalty corner teams that the UMass campus has ever seen.

As far as superstitions go, Robinson commented that she had too many to even tell about, but one of them included a water bottle that she has had throughout her career.

"I have had the same water bottle for four years and Lucy [Koch] and Anke [Bruemmer] are on a mission to destroy it," said Robinson. Another superstition includes the one that all the team's members abide by: her lucky sports bra.

Like her fellow seniors, it will not only be her time on the field that Robinson remembers, but also the time that she spent off the field with her teammates. The 2000 Minutewomen bonded in a way that few teams have, and they will in all likelihood remain in touch when they graduate this spring.

"We do a lot together," laughed Robinson.

Schmidt summed it up best, saying, "This is our family at school, and it's nothing I would ever trade for anything."

Before last weekend's NCAA tournament, Robinson expressed her desire to end her career with a Final Four appearance, but UMass fell just one round short.

"I'd like to be there," she said. "I have never been in anything like that in any sport I have played, so it's always been a goal."

Even though she fell short on that goal, it would be nothing but unfair to say that Robinson did not make the most out of her field hockey career, as well as her collegiate years in general.

Senior Patty Robinson wrapped up a momentous career with the UMass field hockey team last weekend in the NCAA tournament.

Thanksgiving feast
Turkey truth is exposed

Turkey Shooting

Hey, do you know where your Thanksgiving turkey came from? No? Well, to be perfectly honest, someone shot it. It's dead because someone put a bullet in it so you can eat it.

Are you sick and tired of eating turkeys that you didn't know were shot? I'm sure you're sitting there thinking "I can't believe that someone shot my turkey. It's just not fair. It's my turkey. I should get to shoot it!" Well, if you attended a local Turkey Shoot, you'd think you would have the opportunity. We recently had the chance to speak with David, a representative for the Boston Gun Range in Worcester, MA. He had quite a bit to say about the less than controversial turkey shooting competitions.

First of all, David insisted that turkey shooting does not involve actually shooting turkeys.

It's actually an event where you can win pre-killed turkeys. Well, basically what happens," he explained. "A person takes a shot at a turkey shaped target from a certain distance. This distance can be twenty feet. Even thirty. It's really simple."

The contest may be simple, but David insisted that there is no place for losers in this sport. "If they don't hit the target directly in the center, then they don't get a turkey." It seems a bit harsh.

David said that advertisement is the key to getting enough people at a turkey shoot. He explained that about eighty percent of the participants are men. He then felt the need to clarify to us. "That means that around twenty percent are female." If math is correct, then only males and females participate in turkey shoots.

When asked if a lot of college students participate in this event, David responded, "No, because they have families of their own" (Apparently only people without families are allowed to shoot turkeys) "We do get a lot of college students though." David said. "They like to come here and shoot."

When David was asked what other random items people like to shoot, he couldn't think of an answer. "We have other contests like this during the year," he mentioned. "Sometimes we give stuff away for free. We'll give away .22 caliber packages with ammunition for free. People are in it out and if they like it they can keep it. To prove his point to even more, David invited, "It's a trophy."

Unfortunately time to mention out for David and how to have a turkey shoot. He explained that the event could not happen on Thanksgiving Day.

[illegible] anyone who becomes sick [illegible] and tired of their family [illegible] this opportunity [illegible] up to [illegible] a turkey [illegible] afford [illegible] [illegible] David had some bad news. "We will not be open on Thanksgiving," he said.

Apparently you'll just have to get all of your shooting done at home – just like those guys with loaded guns at the Omaha Airport.

Announcements

This week's practice for the University of Pennsylvania Roller Hockey team will be held on the 90 degree Ocean in Newark, NJ. Unfortunately because of the rink's tight schedule their practice time is limited and varies from week to week. Note: Anyone who should break the news to the Roller Hockey team that Ice Roller Hockey ice isn't needed. Team members should meet outside of The Harrison College House no later than one hour before practice.

Kickoledding has officially been named the "physical activity for the new millennium."

Ryan Benhurrs is a Collegian Columnist

Dritte und Vierzig
Acht über den Zustanden
(THIRD AND FORTY-EIGHT ACROSS THE NATION)

KLEIN'S ALL SPORTS
Midnight Madness
25% OFF the original price
EVERYTHING* on sale!
SKIS • SNOWBOARDS • SNOWSHOES
HOCKEY • EXERCISE • GOLF
FOOTWEAR • CLOTHING • TEAM APPAREL AND MUCH MORE!
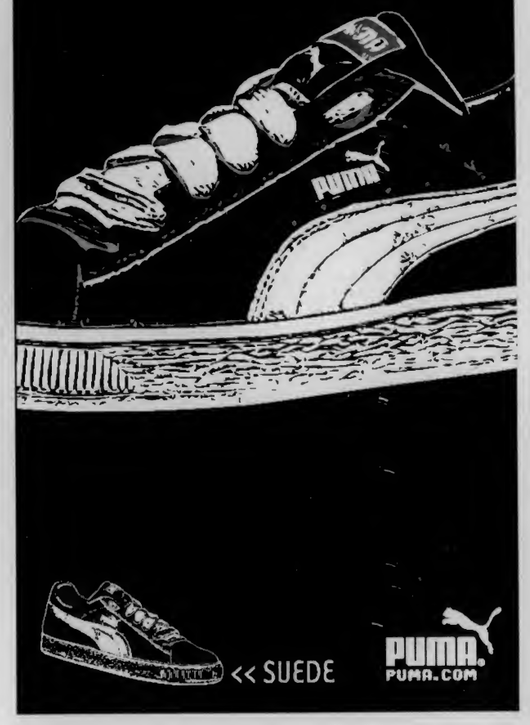
ONE DAY ONLY!
Friday, Nov. 17th
*Excludes all prior sales, gift certificates & Taylormade products. Sorry no layaways.
INSERT STORE LOCATION(S) HERE

<<<<<<<<< win a free pair at puma.com/umass
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> buy it at puma.com



<< SUEDE
PUMA.
PUMA.COM

SPORTS SPOTLIGHT

Class: Junior
Major: Turf Management
DOB: 12-19-78
Age: 21
Zodiac Sign: Sagittarius
Hometown: Daytona Beach, FL
Favorite Food: Steak
Favorite Junk Food: Reeses Peanut Butter Cups
Favorite TV Show: "Win Ben Stein's Money" - until Jimmy left
Favorite Movie: Happy Gilmore
Favorite Vacation Spot: Hawaii - even though I've never been there.
Favorite Class: Microbiology
Favorite Professor: Dr. Bramlage
Favorite Type of Music: Everything
What would you save in a fire: My dog, Minnie
Are you a righty or a lefty: Righty
Describe a funny experience at UMass: Staring out of the bathroom window in Thoreau and watching how many people took 'diggers' down the hill that goes from Sunset St. to Southwest.
Career Ambition: To run a golf course
Sports Rituals: Four Ibuprofens and a whole roll of tape to spat (tape the outside of) my cleats

Hoping to make the University of Florida football team as a walk-on, Eric Bross changed his mind when he heard the message on his answering machine from a University of Massachusetts football coach.

"I didn't even know UMass had a football team until I got recruited to come up here," said Bross. "So I came up for a visit. I saw snow for the first time and fell in love with the place."

He never had thought about going to college in the Northeast, especially since he had been out of his home state just a few times, but describes his transition to college as a shock.

"When I first got up here, everybody and everything moved a lot faster," he said. "I wasn't in laid back Florida anymore!"

Bross soon adjusted to dorm life, DC food, cold weather and a tough class schedule with the help of his teammates.

"We [freshman football players] all just kind of bonded right away and became a family with the rest of the guys on the team," Bross said. "They looked out for us and took us under their wing. If it wasn't for that, I probably wouldn't have made it because then it would have been really tough."

Bross was originally a sport management major, but he decided that turf management would be better for his career goal, which is to manage a golf course in Florida. His interest was sparked by his older brother, Daniel, 25, who works at a country club and has many contacts back home.

During the summer, he works on his golf swing, but admits he's not very good at it. Instead, he enjoys water sports, including surfing and water skiing.

Bross does not have much time to do anything during the school year because of a full course load and his commitment to football. When he does have free time, he likes to sleep.

-Julie Robenhymer

COURTESTY OF MEDIA RELATIONS

Eric Bross

■ hockey

continued from page 16

that we need to address on a regular basis," Cahoon said. "First and foremost, we have to get a great effort against UConn. Although that's not directed at the effort from last weekend, it's directed at our thoroughness and our effectiveness to make plays and complete passes. We were inconsistent with that over the weekend."

The Minutemen have been paced by the play of the Turner brothers in the first nine games of the season. Senior captain, Jeff, and sophomore winger Tim, have 11 points each to their credit thus far. Junior forward Martin Miljko is second on the club with nine points.

One of the positives that the Minutemen were able to take away from last weekend was the play of the goaltenders. Both senior Markus Helanen and junior Mike Johnson fared well in their starts, set UMass ended up on the losing end of the decision on both nights.

In returning home to the Mullins Center, the Minutemen will look to keep their unbeaten record in tact. UMass is 2-0-1 within the friendly confines of its own barn this year. Last season, the Maroon and White scored a 7-4 victory over the Huskies in Amherst.

"We want to be a good home ice team," Cahoon said. "We want to make this a difficult place to play, but we can't do that just by showing up. It can happen by putting our best foot forward."

Top players for UConn include senior forwards Michael Goldkind and Ciro Longobardi, the team's top two returning scorers from a year ago. Junior defenseman Matt Herthal [eight points] and freshman blueliner Eric Nelson [seven points] have also made a solid contribution offensively for the Huskies in the early going.

"With anything that you do early, you have a lot of learning to do," Marshall said. "We lost eight seniors from last year's team, so we're trying to redefine ourselves and work our way back to the things that worked well for us last season. For a team, it's such a long season, and we just want to keep getting better. We have a chance to do that tonight against a formidable opponent."

■ Koch

continued from page 16

Probably one of Koch's most distinguished duties on the Minutewoman squad is as the pusher in the penalty corner trio that also consists of Patty Robinson and Anke Bruemmer. This penalty corner combination was definitely a huge part of UMass' success this year, resulting in almost all of Bruemmer's 12 goals. Just don't ask her if "she sees them in her sleep." She's made it clear that she doesn't, even though she said that during the practice before this year's first round game against Boston University, they "practiced them like 100 times." Said Koch: " It's just another part of the game."

Koch was also a huge part of what came to be known as the No. 1 defense in the country. And although many would say that it was because of star goaltender Zowie Tucker, which isn't far-fetched, credit has to be given to the midfielders who are the first obstacle to the scoring cage. It's just a given that the number of shots a goalie faces is in direct relation to number of tallies that actually can find time on the scoreboard. Therefore, the lesser number of shots translates into less opponent scoring – it's what the defense likes to see.

And that's what happened in 2000. Opponents scored only 18 times in 22 games this year for the Maroon and White. Forget about that last game against North Carolina and the numbers were 13 enemy strikes in 21 battles. The defense also had 11 shutouts to its credit.

Head Coach Patty Shea really had nothing to complain about this year because the defense got stronger every game. And Koch had nothing bad to say about her coach either.

"I enjoy playing for her," Koch said. "She's not someone that you're so intimidated by that you can't ask her simple questions. She gives her all to us and the sport."

It seems like Koch also plans to give back to the sport of field hockey in a similar way that Shea has, as she thinks that one day she too will probably take the reigns of a team and play the role of coach.

"I think I'd like to coach high school," Koch said. "It's definitely something I'd like to do to give back the whole field hockey world, so-to-speak."

This year, Koch was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference Team for the second consecutive year. As a junior, she was also named to the Northeast Region All-American first team.

It's not that difficult to recognize that Koch is among the intelligent beings at UMass. As a freshman, she was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll. As a sophomore she was named to the Athletic Director's Honor Roll again (Spring and fall semesters).

She was also named to the National Field Hockey Coaches Association Academic All-America and A-10 All-Academic team, a feat she repeated her junior year. The same honors are expected this year.

"It's not easy, but it's not something that's impossible to do," Koch said of the juggling act between school and sport. "It just takes an extra effort."

So now, her career is done here at UMass and pretty soon she'll be walking down a small number of stairs with a diploma in one of her hands, inside of it – a bachelor's degree in management. Her other fellow seniors will be doing the same thing, graduating. Who knows what the future holds career-wise for Koch – it could be bumpy, but it probably won't. The things that remain the same, however, are the friendships she has built over her years in Amherst. And that's rock-solid.

"I consider the people on the team my closest friends," Koch said. "We've been around each other and we know each other so well – it's just something I'll never forget about."

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...

- ❒ A. Contracting an STI.
- ❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
- ❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, A 2 semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

This Weekend's Sports Schedule

Thursday

HOCKEY V. UCONN, 7 p.m.

Friday

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL V. UNC-CHARLOTTE, 7 p.m.

Saturday

MEN'S BASKETBALL V. IONA, 7 p.m.
Football at URI, 12 p.m.
Hockey at RPI, 7 p.m.
Water Polo v. Bucknell (Eastern Championships), 1:30 p.m.
Swimming and Diving at St. John's, 1 p.m.

Sunday

Women's Basketball at Georgia, 2:30 p.m.
Swimming and Diving at Columbia, 1 p.m.

HOME GAMES IN CAPS

Podhrasky shines in net for Minutewomen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Ask UMass women's soccer goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky about the 2000 season, and don't be surprised if the first thing that she mentions is something related to overall performance of the team – not about something related to the many individual accomplishments for which she can stake claim to.

Forget about the fact she was the Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year, a first-team All-Conference pick and an All-Tournament selection. In fact, the junior would just as well talk about the talented freshman class or what needs to be done to reach the NCAA tournament next year, than speak about the accolades that she has received.

"I always care about what I do, but whether I'm playing against La Salle or UConn, I'm so critical of myself," Podhrasky said. "Basically, I'm too hard on myself, and people tell me that all of the time. You can't step away from the game and see if you played bad or good, you have to take it from the team standpoint – what did we do?"

"That's why I'm here – the team," she added. "I'm definitely a team player, and that's what propels me to do my best as an individual. If I was stranded on a desert island by myself, I wouldn't be close to as successful as I would if I was with 10 other people."

While the team closed out the season with a final record of 11-7-1, Podhrasky made presence felt in her first year in the UMass net. A transfer from Clemson University, she posted a 7-7 record with a 1.31 goals against average.

But more importantly, the Dallas native won five of seven decisions inside the A-10 and kept the Minutewomen in every game that she started between the pipes.

"We knew that she was going to have to shake the rust off at the start and get back into making decisions and giving instructions on the field," UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said. "Now you look at her as the big cheese, and the team knows that she can play. And she's feeling more comfortable with her environment. Plus she's got a team that adores her and a coach that respects her."

Leaving for greener pasture

Following two years with the Tigers, Podhrasky elected to leave Clemson in favor of Amherst. With the departure of both of its goalkeepers from last year's team, the Incoming transfer was looked upon to make an impact right away for the Minutewomen.

However, Podhrasky was called upon to make an adjustment once again, just like she had two years prior for her debut with Clemson. It was the same situation all over again – finding her place with a new team, in a new environment and with a new coaching staff.

"You don't really know what to expect, or what you can pre-read into it," she said. On the market, they are selling you a product, and you have to wonder – how factual is that product?"

"One of the key things was [a concern about] what the team was going to be like," added Podhrasky. "But I was impressed with them. They are great people who are fun to be with, so that helped me to fall in with them really quickly."

But like the true warrior that she is, Podhrasky mastered the task with flying colors. Her effect on the program transcended both on and off the field, creating a perfect fit in the process.

Now that's not to say that her experience in South Carolina was all for naught. After all, the Tigers did reach the NCAA Tournament both seasons while playing in the toughest women's soccer conference in the nation, the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"From my personal experience, I got to watch a couple of great goalkeepers do things and I got to sit back and learn what it's like to be a role player," Podhrasky said. "I got to evaluate all of the facets of the game, and that pulled me up to a higher level of expectations for myself."

"I learned how much of an impact emotions can have in this game," she added. "You can be playing a team that is exactly like yourself, but if you put more into it emotionally, then that will put you over the top. That's one of the major things that I learned about at Clemson – commitment."

As fate would have it, though, Podhrasky was meant to be a Minutewoman all along – even if she didn't really take the time to consider all of the factors surrounding the decision first.

"It was weird, because when I was making my decision, I rushed into it," she said. "But I knew that for some reason I was supposed to come here. Now, for the first time, the education is fun because I've nailed the right professors. And the most remarkable thing is the people that I've been able to meet. I'm already astounded [about what I've experienced] and that has made the trip so worthwhile."

The old school mentality

As soon as Annette Gruber's overtime goal in the A-10 tournament semifinal sailed over the outstretched hands of Podhrasky and into the back of the goal, ending UMass' season, she was already thinking about finding a way to make sure that the same thing doesn't happen again next year.

Day in and day out, there is no question that the UMass keeper is one of the hardest workers on the team. And even though she came into camp in August with one goal in mind, she emerged from the wear and tear of a full season with much more accomplished than she originally planned.

"I just wanted to come in here and be myself," Podhrasky said. "I wanted to work hard and hopefully earn the starting role. That was my main focus."

Said Rudy, "I think that she has that point of view that separates some players from the rest. Things have to be put into perspective, but she knows that she's her hardest critic. Some players know that they can do better, and some know that they can't, but [the real question is] what can you do realistically? I don't know if she will ever be able to pull that Annette Gruber shot off, but I sure admire her for trying."

Commitment. Dedication. Hard work. Perseverance. Just a few of the traits that Podhrasky takes to the pitch every day. Add the fact that her approach during practice is just as, if not more intense than it is during games, and it's easy to see why she has been so successful.

"I learned that it's all about what you put into it if you want to achieve your goals," Podhrasky said. "That why I'm old school – run, run, run – and then you get to play."

Added Rudy: "Julie has a refreshing personality. She views life from a different perspective. Many of us view life with binoculars or an electron microscope, but she views things with a Hubbell telescope. Her view is much more expansive. She sees life without blinders on and from at all angles."

Sure enough, Podhrasky's efforts were rewarded following the regular season, as she left Cincinnati with plenty of hardware in her suitcase. However, for such a humble person, it came as a bit of a shock.

"Actually, I was very surprised," she said. "When they were reading off the stats [of the winner], Kara Cocca was looking at me and was shaking her head [yes] and I was shaking my head [no] back at her. I didn't expect to win anything at all."

Preparing for the things to come

Despite the fact that she already has two NCAA tournament appearances to her credit, Podhrasky wants to go for the hat trick next season in her final campaign with the Minutewomen.

That seems like an attainable goal, as UMass loses only two players from this year's squad to graduation. And as long as the Minutewomen can correct what went wrong this year and maintain a fierce commitment during the off-season and into the regular season, then a post-season berth looks to be even more of a lock.

"The big thing is that we need to mature as players, but that will happen over time," Podhrasky said. "Our core players also need to step up and make their voices heard. I put a lot of pressure on our freshman class because they have so much potential. Eventually, they really should become the core of our team."

From Rudy's perspective, he seems to have a pretty outstanding tandem returning between the pipes. Along with Podhrasky, Kelli Nigh will also be back for her sophomore season in 2001. However, it is clear that the team's success will be partially based on the play of Podhrasky – both as a leader and a goalkeeper.

"She should get that confidence that 'I can run the show, I'm the big cheese,'" Rudy said. "She's one of the finest goalkeepers in the country, and she's being pushed by a kid who may end up being one of the best goalkeepers in the country."

With that in mind, the Minutewomen are hoping that their keepers can key a return to glory next year, allowing the club to ascend once again to the status of a top level Division I program.

And if it's true that great teams win with great goalkeepers, then UMass sure seems to be on the right track.

DAN SAVITELLA/COLLEGIAN

Junior goalkeeper Julie Podhrasky made her presence felt during her first year at UMass, earning A-10 Defensive Player of the Year honors.

More controversy in the Heartland

OMAHA, NE – In one of our previous installments of Third and 48, we reported about the massive controversy in the world of collegiate livestock judging, specifically in regards to the accusations that there isn't a National Championship.

But as the diligent reporters that we are, the Collegian's top-notch staff has been hard at work to uncover additional information on this event. It is now evident that there clearly is a National Championship. And, contrary to popular belief, Kansas State University is the dominant powerhouse in collegiate livestock judging – not Casper College as was previously reported.

Many of the Big 12 Conference schools are involved in livestock judging. Now, while it is clear that KSU is the top dog in the college ranks, Iowa State is also among the top contenders. "It's really big at Kansas State, the biggest one in the country," Iowa State junior and livestock team member Tim Grindle said. "But we also have a very good program."

However, more controversy arose following the interview with Grindle at the Omaha Airport, where he was spotted wearing an Iowa State Livestock Judging Team jacket. More in-depth reporting has made it appear that Grindle tried to trick Collegian reporters by giving a fictitious name. Photo identification has led this newspaper to believe that Grindle is actually team member Eric Schulte.

That brings up a new question – are Livestock Judgers ashamed of their sport? All attempts to reach Schulte were unsuccessful, as he and the rest of the Cyclones were in Louisville for a major contest. However, we were able to speak with Kelcee Milton, a former member of the Judging team at the University of Wyoming, about the pride that comes with being a livestock judger. The conversation went as follows:

DC (Daily Collegian): Do you take pride in being a livestock judger?
Milton: I do.
DC: Do you have any idea why [Mr. Schulte] provided us with a pseudonym?
Did you ever play against the big schools like Kansas State or maybe even, Iowa State?
Milton: Yes, in every contest. (Milton informed us, however, that in the sport of livestock judging, you don't actually "play" against your opponents. You simply judge in the same contest as them.)
DC: Can Livestock Judging be career-booster?
Milton: It can be.

"Students will learn to accurately evaluate market and breeding livestock as well as gain the communication skills that are necessary in the livestock industry," said UW coach Kacey Bossler, as featured on the Wyoming Livestock Judging Team home page.

"The program also instills qualities such as confidence, decision making, teamwork, leadership, and dedication that can best be learned outside of a classroom setting. These skills help students to become more marketable to future employment prospects."

Anyone interested in becoming a part of this historic program can take the first step by signing up for Judging: Livestock ANSC 3350 at the University of Wyoming. This course is typically taken during the fall semester of your sophomore or junior year.

But getting back to this National Championship issue, Grindle (a.k.a. Schulte) confirmed that there is such as thing.

"There's definitely a national champion," he said. "If you can win the major ones, such as the American Royal and the ones in Louisville and Denver, then you are the National Champion."

Asked the Collegian: Is it hard to be a livestock judger?

"There's not a whole lot to it," Grindle said. "Basically, you either know it or you don't."

Michael Kobylanski and Eric Soderstrom are Collegian Columnists.

COURTESY IOWA STATE WEBSITE

The Iowa State Livestock Judging team is one of the top squads in the nation. Schulte, or Grindle, is encircled third from right.

Anniversary Sale Week
November 15th - 19th

Enter to Win a Zanna
$1000 Shopping Spree
Two $250 Shopping Sprees
Our 1998 winner was UMASS Student Suzanne Schmuul, Class of 2000. This year it could be YOU!
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
Rome Venice Florence Vienna Budapest Prague Bangkok Moscow Lisbon Madrid Barcelona Tel Aviv Johannesburg Delhi Hong Kong
Buenos Aires Lima Tokyo Santiago London Dublin Paris Nice Copenhagen Stockholm Oslo Amsterdam Berlin Munich Zurich Istanbul
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Spring Break 2001 • Spring Break 2001
Spring Break '01
Jamaica $449
BAHAMAS $499
CANCUN $449
Round Trip Air
Seven (7) nights lodging at choice hotel
Airport / Hotel Transfers
All Hotel Taxes and Gratuities
24 hour on-location Resort Staff
Spring Breaks Most Complete Schedule of Daily Parties, Activities, and Excursions
Plus much, much, more
Spring Break '01
Call now for complete details: 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Scholarships

Paul Albert
Elementary Education

Natasha Treem
Teaching of English

Each year, Teachers College, Columbia University, awards over $6 million in scholarships, paid assistantships, internships and fellowships to TC students.

The Tess Magsaysay and Ken Boxley Scholarship: The teaching profession needed a Scholarship on the order of the Rhodes, Fulbright and National Merit. Teachers College created one. Two of the ten winners of this full scholarship are pictured at left.

Rose Fellows: For TC students who have achieved academic merit in education, psychology or health education, an award of up to 18 points tuition plus a research fellowship.

Jewish Foundation for the Education of Women: For full-time female pre-service science or math teachers willing to teach for 3 years in NYC public schools. $15,000 scholarship.

Nicholson Family Scholarship: Provides support for TC students selected by the Dean and President of the College for outstanding academic merit.

TEACHERS COLLEGE
COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

Deadline: January 15, 2001
For admissions information, call
212-678-3423

Study Education, Psychology or Health Education at one of the nation's leading graduate schools. On-line catalog, www.tc.columbia.edu/~admissions/admis.html

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

OFFcampus Antics Find Laura wearing her favorite N Sync T-shirt on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Subletting 1 room in 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. January or February - August. Call Lisa 549-0467

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

88 Ford Escort Wagon. 65k miles. Moving, must sell now. $2000 or b/o 253-6375 (blue)

AUTO FOR SALE

1993 Jeep Wrangler, Black, 95k, 5spd. Hard/soft top, must see. $4995, call Matt 546-5078

Toyota Wagon, 1991, 4wd, 5-speed, one owner, new clutch, hitch. $4000/BO 253-9447

CHILDCARE

Care, experience, references, housework. Anytime from 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

Responsible caring person for 4yr. old girl. Three afternoons a week or more. Car, references. Thru June or summer. 259-1750

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted Campus Marketing Reps to promote efollett.com and the UMass bookstore. Earn $50 in-store credit towards future purchases (textbooks, supplies, merchandise, and more!) plus bonus incentives! A great resume builder and a chance to gain internship experience for further information or if you are interested send an email or call reps@efollett.com 1-800-633-5595 x 4790

Someone to use my snow blower to clear my drive way on Rocky Hill Rd. in Hadely 549-5361

EMPLOYMENT

Join our Team & Make a Difference in a Child's Life
5 great children summer camps in NY, ME, PA, and WV seek General counselors & Group Leaders, plus Activity Specialists who can teach/coach: tennis, swimming, water-skiing, sailing, caving, mountain biking, canoeing, windsurfing, woodworking, theatre, arts, photography, video, website design, fitness, golf, gymnastics, dance, volleyball, basketball, roller-hockey, lacrosse, baseball, and soccer. Nurses and kitchen and operation staff also needed. June 16-August 16. Benefits include training, room and board, laundry, and travel stipend. Apply on-line at www.horizoncamps.com, or call 1(800) 544-5448

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME
Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

EMPLOYMENT

Administrative Assistant. Use your skills and make a difference. International grassroots hunger lobby seeks computer literate, highly organized individual. 15hrs/week. Main St. Northampton. Email resume and writing sample to: empower@javanet.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups
Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Comfort Plus! Authentic Surgical Scrubs. Wear them to bed or wear them to class! Check out our website at www.authentic-srubs.com

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, housebroken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley-4.5 bedroom, on bus route. $1250/month + utility. 582-9075

LOST & FOUND

Lost Wallet - Black Mountain Hardware Wallet - Lost Sunday or Monday. Please call Meghan 549-9621

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom open in large house. Cheap Rent! 2min walk from campus. Available Jan. 1st, call Laura 549-5383

ROOMMATE WANTED

Three Girls on Main Street need roommate for spring. Call 256-3816

Wanted to Share 2 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. Start Jan 1 Call Beth 665-8572

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Want Academic Success? Want to take professional notes and pass exams? Get the academic guide to success! For more information send SASE to: TDS, P.O. Box 225 Sunderland, MA 01375

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break! Deluxe Hotels, Reliable Air, Free Food, Drinks and Parties! Cancun, Jamaica, Bahamas, Mazatlan, & Florida. Travel Free and Earn Cash! Do It On the Web! Go to StudentCity.com or call 800-293-1443 for info

Wanted! Spring Breakers! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica, & Florida. Call Sun Coast Vacations for a free brochure and ask how you can organize a small group & Eat, Drink, Travel Free & Earn Cash! Call 1-888-777-4642 or e-mail sales@suncoastvacations.com

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

AVOID SPRINGBREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring break.com

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 5 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash tours.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1 - HSCN Bulletin Board
2 - CBS/Hartford
3 - CBS/Boston
4 - ABC/WFSB Springfield
5 - PBS 57 Springfield
6 - HSCN Movie Channel
7 - UPN/Hartford
8 - HSCN New Movie Channel
9 - NBC/New Britain
10 - Fox/61 Hartford
11 - PBS/Hartford
12 - NBC/Springfield
13 - Instructional Channel
14 - USATV (Academic Channel)
15 - WB/New Haven
16 - Weather Channel
17 - Channel 8/Hartford
18 - C-Span
19 - CNN
20 - CNN Headline News
21 - Univision
22 - USA
23 - A&E
24 - TBS
25 - TNT
26 - ESPN
27 - Sci-Fi
28 - Nickelodeon
29 - Nick at Nite
30 - TV Land
31 - Comedy Central
32 - BET
33 - Lifetime
34 - Discovery Channel Network
35 - College TV Network
36 - MTV
37 - MTV2
38 - VH1
39 - The Learning Channel

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 16, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		On the Waterways (In Stereo)		Call, Geno Auriemma		Mystery: Hetty Wainthropp		Wait for God	This Old Hse.
WFSB	3	News		CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	48 Hours "Rage" (In Stereo)			City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	48 Hours "Rage" (In Stereo)			City of Angels (N) (In Stereo)	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News		ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Whose Line?	Whose Line?		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday	News
WLVI	56	Sabrina-Witch		Clueless		Friends (N)	Nanny	Gilmore Girls "Kiss Him Tell"		Charmed "Power Outage"		News	Friends
WHDH	7	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "The Visit" (N) (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WTXX	20	7th Heaven "Do Something"		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)				ER "The Visit" (N) (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WVIT	30	News		NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	News	Friends
WTIC	61	Simpsons		Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Cops: The Top 15 Moments of All Time (N) (In Stereo) (PA)			Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday	News
WWLP	22	News		NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends (N)	Cursed (N)		Will & Grace	Just Shoot Me	ER "The Visit" (N) (In Stereo)	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News		Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		This Old Hse.	Dns. on Call		Mystery: Hetty Wainthropp		Grafters (In Stereo)	Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News		ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Whose Line?	Whose Line?		Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Primetime Thursday	News
WSBK	38	Judge Judy		Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	WWF Smackdown! (In Stereo)					Frasier	Frasier
WTBS	72	Roseanne		Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Stargate (1994, Science Fiction) Kurt Russell, James Spader.					Friends	Friends
A&E	69	Night Court		Newsradio	Law & Order "Asylum"		Biography: Clint Black			Murder One "Chapter Eleven"		Murder One "Chapter Twelve"	Law & Order "Bad Faith"
CNN	29	Worldview		Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today			Larry King Live		Newsstand	Sports	Moneyline
COM	59	Saturday Night Live			Daily Show	Stein's Money	Saturday Night Live			Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	49	Wild Discovery: Whales			Wild Discovery: Killer Whales		On the Inside: N.Y.C. Police			Hospital "Small Miracles" (N)		Shipwreck -- Edmund	Justice Files "Hard Evidence"
ESPN	51	Sportscenter			2-Minute Drill	Coll. Football	College Football: Wyoming at Colorado State. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE	45	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait	"Perk Overall"	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)				Direct Effect (In Stereo)		True Life "I'm a Candidate" (N)	Truth (N)	Green Day
MTV	53	Cribs		Scoop (In Stereo)		TRL (In Stereo)				Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
NICK	46	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Spongeb	Brady Bunch	Strangers	Laverne	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	60	Sliders "Just Say Yes"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Invisible Men "Reunion"		Farscape (In Stereo)		Lexx: The Series "791"		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	44	Laverne & Shirley Reunion		48 Hours "Trauma"		Paramedics "Air Care" (N)		Police Force: Gangland				Women Behind Bars	Paramedics "Air Care"
TNT	52	ER "Day for Knight" (In Stereo)		Pretender "The Assassin"		NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at Sacramento Kings. (In Stereo Live)				NBA			"Used Cars" (1980)
USA	62	Welker, Texas Ranger		JAG "The Return" (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges "Hide and Seek"		"Nothing to Lose" (1997, Comedy) Martin Lawrence.				Martin
HBO	65	"Big Daddy" (1999, Comedy) Adam Sandler. PG-13				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		"The Substitute 4: Failure Is Not an Option" R		Temperatures			Inside the NFL
MAX	66	"Baby Geniuses" (1999, Comedy) Kathleen Turner. PG				"Arlington Road" (1999, Suspense) Jeff Bridges.							"Toy Soldiers"
SHOW	67	"With Honors" (1994, Comedy-Drama) Joe Pesci. PG-13				"The Last Debate" (2000) James Garner.			Extras-Story	Rude Awaken.		"Hamburger Hill" (1987) Anthony Barrile. R

Dilbert By Scott Adams

DO YOU WANT A STOCK TIP?
ARE YOU ASKING ME TO BELIEVE YOU'RE A LOSER AT EVERY ASPECT OF LIFE EXCEPT PICKING STOCK?
THAT'S NOT WHAT I'M ASKING.
IT'S IMPLIED.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

A COURSE IT'S REAL!
YOU THINK?
BLAM! BLAM! AHAHAHA!!!
IT'S ONE OF THEM NON REALITY SHOWS
ZING! BOOM!
THIS IS OWN
AND THE RECLINED SHALL LEAD THE RECLINED AND BOTH SHALL FALL INTO A DITCH

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

OH, HONEY... LOOK AT THE LITTLE TRICK-OR-TREATERS... A CUTE RACCOON COSTUME AND A...
VERNE AS RJ AS VERNE
...A DUST MITE?
YAMZ
THAT'S OKAY, BUDDY... IT'S OBVIOUS TO ME YOU'RE A...A...
SHIFF
...TURTLE!
WHATEVER YOU SAY.
DUH, BEETLE!

Robotman By Jim Meddick

HI, I'M HERE TO SEE THE SHRINK. "DR NUTZ"
I AM NOT A SHRINK. I AM A BOARD CERTIFIED PSYCHOTHERAPIST
NO YES NO
NO MY KNIFE ISN'T PERPENDICULAR TO MY DIRECTION OF TRAVEL. NO, NO, NO! I AM NOT! I AM NOT!
WHAT'S A'TH MA
HE'S A LITTLE BIT WACKY

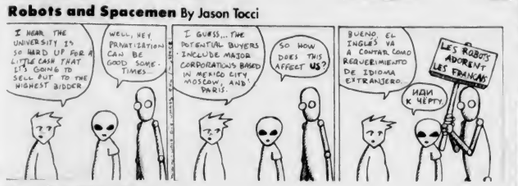
Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WELL YOU FINALLY DROVE SATCHEL'S GAMEBUDDY AWAY. I DON'T KNOW WHY YOU CAN'T JUST LEAVE STUFF ALONE. I MEAN, WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM?
THE VET SAID IT WAS "BEHAVIORAL." BUT I PREFER TO THINK OF IT AS "GENETIC." IT CUTS DOWN ON LIABILITY.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

WE GET TO READ THE MOST WONDERFUL BOOK FOR HOMEWORK THIS WEEK!
THE WHOLE CLASS APPLAUDED WHEN MISS CHRISTOPHER HELD IT UP!
WHAT IS IT? DICKENS? AUSTEN? VONNEGUT?
I FORGET
BUT IT'S THIN. MOTHER! THIS THIN!
IF ENGLISH MAJORS ARE A DYING BREED, IT'S ONLY BECAUSE THEIR CHILDREN ARE KILLING THEM

Robots and Spacemen By Jason Tocci



I HEAR THE UNIVERSITY IS SO HARD UP FOR A LITTLE CASH THAT IT'S GOING TO SELL PUT TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER.
WELL, HEY PRIVATIZATION CAN BE GOOD SOMETIMES.
I GUESS... THE POTENTIAL BUYERS INCLUDE MAJOR CORPORATIONS BASED IN MEXICO CITY, MOSCOW, AND PARIS.
SO HOW DOES THIS AFFECT US?
BUENO. EL INGLES YA A CONTAR CASO REQUERIMIENTO DE IDIOMA EXTRANJERO.
LES ROBOTS ADORENT LES FRANCAIS
HAHA K'NEPPY

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

A COURSE IT'S REAL!
YOU THINK?
BLAM! BLAM! AHAHAHA!!!
IT'S ONE OF THEM NON REALITY SHOWS
ZING! BOOM!
THIS IS OWN
AND THE RECLINED SHALL LEAD THE RECLINED AND BOTH SHALL FALL INTO A DITCH

Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) - What others are so sure of today may not be quite so concrete to you. This is a good day to do a little in-depth exploration on your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) - You may be called upon to do something for someone who is in need of a little help. Indeed, you know just what is called for right now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) - Don't be nervous about encountering something threatening or scary today. You have what it takes to rise to the occasion and shine in every way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) - Patience is a virtue today — but you may be in danger of waiting too long for those things that you want for yourself. Know when to speak up!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) - You must be willing to work toward a common goal today – but you must not insist on being in charge at all times. Share duties with others.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) - You mustn't hesitate today when a door is opened up to you unexpectedly. You may have only one chance to take advantage of this opportunity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - You're overly concerned with your prestige and social standing at this time. You may have to find a new measure of success for the weeks to come.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Assert your individuality today, and maintain confidence in your own ways and means. You can learn just as much from failure as from success.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Forgive and forget today – or be ready to carry a great emotional load for quite some time. In reality, it's no time for such a burden.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Someone is likely to size up quite accurately today upon first meeting. Don't be caught off-guard! You have nothing to hide at this time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Style isn't everything today, but without sacrificing substance you can surely play with your image with surprising results.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Though you are usually realistic, objective and intellectual, today you may fall through certain emotional cracks and it all hang out.

Amherst Weather

Thursday	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 47 LOW: 33	HIGH: 47 LOW: 29	HIGH:44 LOW: 24

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership
Call 545-3500 for details.

Quote of the Day

"Rarely is the question asked: Is our children learning?"

–George W. Bush

ACROSS
1 Defects
6 Want fast
10 Wild goat
14 Perk up
15 Gucci of fashion
16 "For Pete's —!"
17 Florida city
18 Letterhead part
19 Cleim on property
20 Pitcher or catcher
22 Gossip columnist Maxwell
23 Standards
24 Motel
26 Private school
30 Huge house
34 — energy
35 Beams
36 Expected to arrive
37 Snooty person
39 Vegas actions
41 Double part
42 Backrush
43 Courage
44 Evening-gown fabric
46 Holds gently
48 Singer Yoko
49 Nautical hello
50 Midwest Strip
53 Steven Spielberg, e.g.
59 Molecule part
60 Seaweed product
61 Relish-tray item
62 Singing cowboy Autry
63 Voyage
64 Ebbed
65 Type of pearl
66 Congers
67 Yield and Stop

DOWN
1 Untidy one
2 Type size
3 Racetrack
4 Inform
5 Turtle, at times
6 Wage
7 Tactics
8 Perimeter
9 Entrances
10 Specks in the ocean
11 Accused-person's need
12 — out, makes do with 13 TV Warrior Princess
21 On the — fleeing
25 Naval off
26 Valuable quality
27 Chain dance
28 Distant
29 Dull (on)
30 Glacier
31 Faceless
32 Unconventional
33 Tree dwellings
35 Director Howard
36 Let robots do the work
39 By means of
40 Flower plot
42 Stimpy's pal
43 Barn lofts
45 Bubbled up
46 Noises from 33 Down
47 Caviar
49 Take advantage of
50 Jokers
51 To — precisely
52 Aries
54 Villain
56 Mid-month
57 Elvis' title
58 Bright colors

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	A	L	A	D		S	P	R	I	G		P	L	Y
O	P	E	R	A		A	R	E	N	A		D	O	E
B	E	N	T	O		C	A	N	A	L		B	A	R
			O	K	I	E		O	T	T	O
D	R	A	G	O	N		O	X	I	D	E
R	O	D	E	N	T		P	O	L	Y	P
O	M	E		M	A		A	L	A	S
P	E	R		N	O		S	E	R	E
S				O	N	O		D	E	S	S	A
				O	D	E		O	D	E	S	S	A
C	H	E	E	S	E		P	A	R		S	H	E	N
L	A	U	R	E	L		P	R	E		E	L	V	I
O	R	B		T	A	B	O	O		N	E	P	T
P	E	S		O	R	E	O		F	R	E	O
S	H	E		R	O	S	E	S		E	L	G	I	N

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Sorry, no menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Learn Some French

l'institutrice — une règle

The teacher has a ruler
L'institutrice a une règle.

l'homme — le téléphone

The man is talking on the phone.
L'homme parle au téléphone.

GOOD KIDS GO TO DISNEY WORLD
BAD KIDS GO TO "MODESTO THE CLOWN'S UNINSURED FRIGHT FACTORY." © 2000

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Photo Technician	Jaret Barr
Copy Editor	David Troupes
Production Supervisor	Alan Bosque
Production Staff	Jasmine Trabelsi, Sarah Wingardner

Inside: UMass Athlete features, a Sports Spotlight and two Third and 48s. Heaven.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Thursday, November 16, 2000 16

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Rivals to battle at Mullins

Minutemen look to get back on track against Huskies

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Sometimes, the best remedy for a disappointing setback is to get right back on your horse and seek out a shot at redemption.

That is what the Massachusetts hockey team will attempt to do tonight when it hosts regional rival Connecticut in a 7 p.m. faceoff at the William D. Mullins Center. The Minutemen are coming off a pair of disappointing losses to Nebraska-Omaha over the weekend and are looking to redeem themselves with a win over the Huskies.

On paper, a win over UConn may not hold as much weight as one over a Hockey East power such as Boston University or New Hampshire, but the fact of the matter is that tonight's contest is a crucial one for the Minutemen.

"This is a rivalry that we can't look by just because it's UConn," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "We have to respect our opponent. Any way that you slice it, this is a big game. Whether we're playing top-rated teams like BC or Wisconsin, or a MAAC [Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference] team or a Division III team, all of the games are important. We have to play at a high level if we want to make gains in our overall game."

The Huskies (3-4-1, 3-1-1 in the MAAC) are the defending MAAC tournament champs and come into tonight's game riding a three-game winning streak. So far, they are 0-3 against Hockey East teams this season, losing to UMass-Lowell and Merrimack twice. Needless to say, UConn is hoping to pull off the upset against the Minutemen in its fourth and final game against a HEA opponent.

"We have to minimize our mistakes," UConn hockey coach Bruce Marshall said. "From what we found out playing Merrimack and Lowell, every mistake that we made found the back of the net. We can't give a team like UMass those opportunities."

Meanwhile, the Minutemen are trying to get back on the winning track, following the losses in Nebraska-Omaha. UNO won the series by scores of 3-2 and 3-1 to drop UMass to 3-3-1 on the season.

"I think that there are many things

J.R. Zavisza and the Minutemen are pitted against rival UConn tonight at the Mullins Center.

DAN SMITH/COLLEGIAN

Turn to HOCKEY, page 12

Not as clutch without Ms. Koch

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

You could call her the unsung hero. You could say she worked behind the scenes, doing all the dirty work that had to be done in order to win games. You could say that she wasn't afraid to hit the turf. You could even say that she was one of the vocal leaders of the Minutewomen squad.

You could say all of these things. And more. Or you could just say that Lucy Koch had a solid career as a member of the Massachusetts field hockey team. Because that's the veracity of it all.

For four years, she solidified the midfield for the Maroon and White, providing the defense with that extra push when it was needed. She played through the minor injuries, playing in every possible game of her career. She started in 90 of 91 contests, wearing No. 15 on her back the whole time.

"In general, everyone strives for excellence in hopefully everything they do," Koch said. "That's just been my attitude on life."

She's disappointed that she never made the Final Four but no one can take the four A-10 Championships and four NCAA Tournament appearances away from her. This Ipswich, Mass. native has been rock solid.

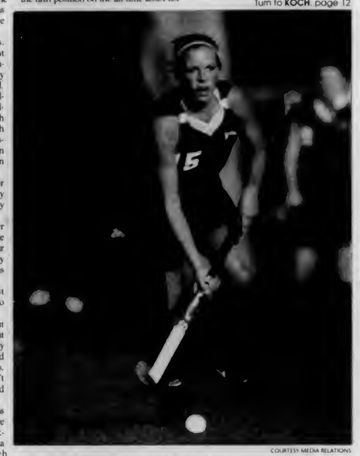
Her role on the team for the past four years has an almost ironic twist to it, however.

"I talk too much," she admitted. But she's not the one who was talked about a lot by the outsiders. And that's only because there is a national lack of field hockey knowledge in the United States. Without her, the UMass wall wouldn't have been as sturdy. She will be missed greatly in the middle.

So here's why this senior middy was indeed special. The obvious advantage she had on opponents was her quickness. And with her speed, she had a great stick-handling ability which allowed her to carry the ball quite effectively downfield. She had a great field presence and always seemed to find the open man. She even found the net at least once a year and has two game-winning goals to her credit (Boston College, Ball State). Koch netted three goals this year en route to a 6-goal total for her career. Her 29 career assists place her in the fifth position on the all-time assist list at UMass.

"I got hit in the lip once but that's not really a highlight," Koch said, in jest, when asked if there was any moment that stood out from her four years of field hockey. "But I'd have to say that this whole year has been a highlight."

Turn to KOCH, page 12



Senior Lucy Koch helped lead the Minutewomen to a spot in the NCAA Championship this season.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

OFF campus ON line
www.masslive.com/offcampus

Deanna, Ruth and Laura:
"Our lives are not classified! Check us out day or night and listen in on our secrets."

3 students
1 Web cam
24/7!

Get a clue...check the classifieds!

Desperately seeking clues! Check out the Collegian Classifieds and enter daily to win a MassLive prize pack!

mass live
www.masslive.com

Get On It!

www.masslive.com/offcampus

This Friday in Arts Dan Bern inspires in Northampton, Jam bands invade the Bay State, and Ugly Duckling stays so fresh and so clean.

ARTS p. 5

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

UMass hockey ties in definitive game. Read about it today in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 52 www.dailycollegian.com Friday, November 17, 2000

SGA works on internal disputes

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Accusations lead off last night's Student Government Association's second Judiciary hearing, with allegations flying before the gavel even hit the table. Chief Justice, Gabriel Tavares was approached prior to the meeting with a memo instating title four by Speaker Jim Eltringham. The overall response to the memo was acknowledged by Tavares by saying, "You know this shit is stupid. I'm not going to listen to you. Don't come here and fucking waste my time with this bullshit."

This then lead to announcements where Tavares threw out Senate member Henan Picalomino, for comments made at Monday night's Judiciary hearing.

"You called Rebecca [Central at large Senator Rebecca Austern] a bitch three times on Monday, get the hell out," Tavares said.

When Picalomino defended himself by explaining that he did not state that she was a bitch, Tavares explained that he would take his word for it.

Thus, with tensions running high from the get go, witnesses continued to be called by SGA President Jeff Howe and Austern. The cross examination of Sam Blasiak as well as Mike Mann continued into the first part of the hearing.

Advocate T.J. Roy and Eltringham presented their case last night. Arguing, as they explained, what they feel this case is really about.

"The issue at hand here is that we're dealing with an election. People went to the poles and they made their voice heard," Eltringham said. "One question the Judiciary needs to ask themselves is whether the allegations of problems are true and second whether they're greaves that it would warrant overturning the democratic process."

Roy supported this statement by expressing his points of view on the situation at hand.

"This is not an open and shut case. What happened in these elections was not a part of the responsibilities that lie with in the Speaker," Roy said.

Roy went on to talk about problems and issues surrounding the commuter seats in direct correlation to the Greek Community.

"The Greek community has long been functioning on this campus. This idea of Greeks being in a box per se, is making a label that says, 'Only Greek'," Roy said. "Not Asian, African American, or friend, it's not about being Greek. It's about being individual people."

Eltringham and Roy continued to bring forth their case stressing issues around being a commuter resident. Roy stressed the fact that the fraternity, Sigma Phi Epsilon, along with every other fraternity and sorority were not owned by the University of Massachusetts.

Sigma Phi Epsilon President Picalomino was questioned on the livelihood of fraternities as well as on the issues of fraternities and sororities being recognized as off-campus housing.

"I lived in an apartment on Fearing St. Twenty feet from the fraternity Lamda Chi Alpha," said Picalomino.

Picalomino was then asked by Howe if he felt there was any relation between the two residences as far as off campus housing would be considered by the SGA constitution.

"I don't see any difference. They're 20 feet away from one another, and they own their own house, the University does not," explained Picalomino.

The SGA struggled through internal differences during last night's meeting.

SAM WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

The Elections Committee Chancellor Jeremy Rouille was also questioned on issues surrounding September's election. He was questioned on a list of Senate candidates sent to the members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity prior to the election.

"I saw the list and it was brought to me. It was on my jurisdiction whether or not it was allowed," Rouille said. "I felt it wasn't a campaign document, but an internal document. And as I said before, it was out of my jurisdiction."

He then went on to comment on issues regarding his committee and their handling of the election. Questions were brought up because the committee failed to meet quorum prior to the elections.

"Although we failed to meet quorum we had to move on. I was on a time schedule and we had to approve the nominations," Rouille said. "This is my election and it's my job to make sure that it stays intact."

Rouille was then questioned on the issue of the absence of committee members on the day of the election. He was asked if and how this affected the outcome of the elections.

"We only had six members of the Election Committee. The Senate is supposed to give us two people, but this has not happened. We would prefer to have two individuals at quorum prior to the elections, not during the elections."

Annual HASA CASA festivities to fill SUB Saturday night

By Jennifer Eastwood
Collegian Staff

The 7th Annual HASA CASA festival will be held on Nov. 18 from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom for Five College Students and Amherst community members.

The UMass Haitian Students Association and Casa Dominican organization will host this festival in order to celebrate their two cultures.

The festival will include three ethnic dances for entertainment. Loudelyne Petit explained, "Our choreographer, Erline Archille, has designed two dances with the Haitian culture in mind (the Merengue and Haitian Folklore dances) and one with a combined theme of both the Haitian and Dominican cultures (the Soukoko dance)."

According to Petit, the Folklore dance will also have a more Afro centric theme to it than the Merengue, whereas the Soukous will have a more Afro-Caribbean feel. While all three will represent native dances, each will have some contemporary steps in them to give them a more modern-day feel.

Chairperson of the Dominican organization Shalreia Payaero and President of the Haitian Association Natalie Transtamar explained the history of the festival, "In 1992, both of our organizations came together to form an alliance due to the fact that tension between our two cultures on our island was very high."

"However, it's different on this campus," Payaero commented, "We try to dissipate the tension here, keeping in mind that we're all from the same island."

Transtamar added, "We also host the festival to clear up some misconceptions about our culture. Both of our countries are the poorest nations in the Western Hemisphere, and the media usually only concentrates on our financial situation. We want to show that there's more to our cultures than that, and this event gives us that chance."

Both girls described the celebration as a gala: fun, food, dance, and music.

"We share many national dishes in common, using rice, beans, pork and potatoes in various ways. The main difference in our foods occurs in the preparation stage. For example, where the Haitians may fry their pork for their dishes, we tend to bake it," Payaero said.

Both the Haitian and Dominican dishes will be available for tasting during the HASA CASA, she added.

The majority of music will include Haitian and Dominican cultural folk music with a light touch of Reggae and Hip-Hop added in as well, Payaero explained.

"However, we want to focus on our ethnic music as much as possible because that's what this event is all about," Transtamar added.

Ethnic table centerpieces, designed by the staff, will add to the carnival atmosphere by displaying feathered masks on golden foil blocks with gold and red streamers.

"These pieces represent our different expressions and symbolize our African heritage," Vice President of the Haitian Student Association Danushea Pardo said. "We're trying to get away from the typical colors that we usually use in this event–red, white, and blue."

Alan Percy added, "We're trying to make it have even more of a fun festival feel this year."

Turn to HASA-CASA, page 3

U'wa spread cultural awareness

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

Roberto Perez and Armando Valbuena represented the U'wa Native Americans last night in an attempt to educate UMass on the struggles going on within their indigenous community's located in northern Colombia. For the last week, the pair have been traveling to different colleges in New England, such as Colby College in Maine, Yale University in Connecticut, and continuing today with Harvard University.

Sponsored by the Rain Forest Action Network, Mass Action and Western Mass. Global Network, the U'wa have the opportunity to tell of the struggles between the U'wa and Occidental Petroleum (Oxy) of Bakersfield, CA.

Oxy is a U.S. international corporation that is supported by the Colombian government because of financial gains due to the exploitation of the rainforests and natural resources.

The U'wa are known as the thinking people, and are a traditional nation of 5,000 people living in the cloud forests of northeastern Colombia. The U'wa believe oil is the blood of Mother Earth, and to extract it is to threaten the spiritual balance of the world, and the physical safety from Colombia's civil war.

"Everything that is under the Earth, meaning the oil and the petroleum is what is being taken," said Perez. "The uses of medicinal plants are being patented, and animals are also being controlled by International companies, and even the blood of the indigenous people is being controlled."

The U'wa have waged an eight-year-long, non-violent campaign to block two petroleum wells that are on their indigenous lands. According to Perez and Valbuena, much propaganda is given in the news and media about the "drug wars" going on in Colombia. They adamantly say that this is not the real war going on in Colombia, and that the real war is over the control of the natural resources in the earth's soil.

The U'wa claim that the US gives the Colombian government millions of dollars to pay war taxes, to provide food and transportation to the Colombian army and to fight against the guerrillas. In turn, the Colombian army allegedly protects all oil installations in Colombia, which provide huge revenues for the Colombian government.

"All of the killing is for the resources under the Earth. Twenty, 30 or 40 people are dying a day because of that reason," said Perez.

Because of this oil drilling, the U'wa people have been isolated onto reservations and moved to cities initiated by the Colombian governments. Many of the people have in effect given up much hope, and are scrapping around to survive.

"In the name of development, we have been exterminated and forced to go to the cities and live on the streets," said Valbuena. "We have been left begging, with tuberculosis, venereal diseases and the young women have been forced into prostitution."

Not only are the people suffering from this drilling, but the environment is as well. According to Valbuena, pollution has penetrated the top level of the water running in the rivers, but also sub-terrain levels propagating to other areas.

One of the actions that the U'wa, farmers and supporters have taken against the U.S. and Colombian governments is what they call a strike. Protesters block certain streets until the government is forced to send a negotiator. As a way to pressure the government, the strike lasted for six months, having no positive results. The Colombian army killed three children, and no response has been given from the Colombian government. Because the strike has not helped, they have decided to plan a bigger strike, gaining help from students, professors and other indigenous communities.

Unfortunately, strikes are very expensive because of the lack of income they are receiving. The U'wa feel that this is the only way to get attention, and it is made possible by donations, and pressure from grass routes organizations around the world.

Oxy has continued to drill, and is expanding at a rapid rate, exploring areas in Ecuador, Peru and other Latin American countries. It is because of this drilling that the U'wa will be planning alliances with indigenous communities and farming communities in other countries.

The Colombian government continues to defend itself by stating that it is more important to benefit 40 million Colombian's than to protect five million Colombians living in the area of the drilling.

Another solution the U'wa have instituted is the buy back of their land. They have been successful in the purchase of a small finca (farm) near the reservation that they live on.

Two months ago, government archives were searched and the U'wa found rights to land that the Spanish gave to the U'wa during Spanish rule, giving the U'wa territorial rights. Because the government, and Oxy will not give up the land easily, the U'wa will eventually take these new found rights to International Court.

"We are asking for the solidarity of American people because our people have been exploited and killed by American corporations," said Valbuena. "We are defending our cultural base and our origin. We have professors and doctors, fathers and mothers who educate us, and for this

Turn to U'wa, page 3

Students on wheels

A.J. Shah, a freshmen SOM major, rides his scooter around the Campus Center

SCOTT LAWRENCE/COLLEGIAN

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts campus stretches for what seems like miles between the Southwest towers and Marcus Hall. It feels as though it takes hours to trek up the infamous Orchard Hill. While most students prefer to walk, others have looked into alternative forms of transportation. Scooters, roller blades, and bicycles are some of the most popular forms seen as students race against the clock to arrive to class on time.

The latest rage to hit the US this fall has been the razor scooter. These silver scooters are thin, and are capable of folding up so that they can be slung across the owner's shoulder or stored away easily.

Advertisements for these scooters can be seen in almost every magazine imaginable, promoting use for

Turn to scooters page 5

Gas leak in Lederle contained

By Katy LoConte
Collegian Correspondent

When sulfur oxide escaped the basement of the Lederle Graduate Research Tower on Nov. 7, it drew the attention of the Amherst Police and Fire Departments, the Environmental Health and Safety department, and many students and professors within the building.

EHS personnel were allegedly handling cylinders of sulfur oxide in the EHS lab that were labeled empty when the spill occurred. According to Jim Fox of the EHS, when a small amount of the gas is in a cylinder, it is a "liquid under relatively low pressure."

Because the cylinders were not completely empty, a small amount of liquid leaked out around the valve that the personnel were in the process of closing, Fox explained that the substance escaped and began spreading.

"[It] leaked through the grates at the ground level [of the building]," Fox said. "It was then sucked into the air intake and was sucked into the building."

The gas proceeded to circulate throughout the building, sending the smell of rotten eggs to each room and hallway. An alarm then was sounded and the building evacuated.

The alarm reached the APD and AFD, and two fire engines and a fire chief arrived responded to the scene.

According to Michael Zlogar, Assistant Chief of the AFD, the men then used a meter to scan for any hazardous levels of the gas. There was no immediate risk, he commented.

"The levels were well below danger," Zlogar said.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations for the safety of sulfur oxide is under six parts per million. Zlogar explained that Sunday's leak at Lederle never reached anywhere near those levels.

According to Fox, firemen with self contained breathing apparati identified the cylinder that had leaked the gas and moved it to a fume hood designed to collect, filter, and treat any gases.

"Plant personnel put the building on full exhaust to clear the building, and everything seemed to be fine," said Fox.

Sophomore electrical engineering major Randall Lapierre, who was among the students on the fourth floor of Lederle on Sunday, thought things were definitely not fine.

"The smell throughout the bottom floors of the building was strong," he said. "I believe that the spill that caused such an intense scent must have carried some degree of danger with it."

Lapierre also said that despite the fact that the students remained outside for about an hour, the smell of the gas still lingered when they returned inside.

Nevertheless, when the valve was reclosed it appeared as if the incident was over. Later that day however, Fox claimed that the EHS received reports from Lederle that the smell of rotten eggs arrived once again.

"The building had been on total exhaust for a while on Sunday," said Fox. "There were probably some dead spaces, which got recirculated back in and caused the odor."

When personnel from the EHS arrived at Lederle for a second time, Fox said a total exhaust was done for the towers and that the problem was solved.

The smell was determined to be due to a ventilation problem.

Despite setbacks, Zlogar felt that the system worked as it was supposed to. He commented further saying this was almost like a good test. If anything more serious were to happen in the future, Zlogar said, the situation could be handled properly by qualified men who have worked and trained together.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Lederle Graduate Tower had a gas leak on Sunday.

MassPIRG takes students outdoors

By Suzanne Furst
Collegian Staff

This weekend MassPIRG is taking UMass students on an outdoors adventure. The public research group, whose interests lie in the public's view regarding the preservation of social, political and environmental issues, is heading to the White Mountains of New Hampshire for a fun-filled, educational trip.

Megan Rilla, a representative for the University of Massachusetts chapter of MassPIRG, explained that the group is headed north to New Hampshire because Massachusetts does not have any National Forests. The trip is part of the group's recent effort urging President Clinton to pass an executive order protecting the remaining 31 percent of National Forest Land from further logging and road building.

While MassPIRG is not working against logging and industrial development, it is showing its concern over wildlife areas. Only 18 percent of our nation's National Forests are currently protected.

An excerpt from the Forest Service Issues Wild Forest Protection Plan states, "The Forest Service 'preferred alternative' in the Final Environment Impact Statement (FEIS) would end commodity logging in roadless areas while delaying for four years such protections for the Tongass Rainforest in Alaska – the largest National Forest in the U.S. The preferred alternative would still allow stewardship activities in roadless areas; in recent years, about two-thirds of the timber volume cut from National Forest lands has been derived form these 'stewardship' activities."

The plan goes on to say, "We are pleased to see programs in the Forest Service plan, though it still falls short of the full protection the American people have asked for. The Fire Service has loaded the bases by moving in the right direction. Now, it's up to President Clinton to hit the grand slam for the forest protection that he committed to 14 months ago by prohibiting wild forest logging and protecting the Tongass Rainforest."

MassPIRG has a State Campaign to preserve America's National Forests. According to Rilla, MassPIRG sees the National Forests as invaluable resources to the environment and society.

"The forests are required for the world's ecological stability, it provides us with clean air, clean water, recreation, and is a home to numerous diverse flora and fauna," said Rilla.

Megan Rilla hopes the adventure will educate people about National Forests and give them the opportunity to actually see one. The program has invited elementary and high schools to join them. MassPIRG is still allowing those interested in the trip to sign up. It will take place this weekend, Nov. 18-19. The cost is $25, and it includes lodging, gas money (participants are car-pooling) and food. Additional information can be found by calling the MassPIRG office at 545-0199.

SGA

continued from page 1

the polling stations at all times, but it didn't work out that way," Rouille said. "As far as being impacted by this, I would have to say that maybe 20-25 students did not wait to cast there vote due to a line. A line that would be one to two minutes long," Rouille explained.

"In regards to if we lost voters, it was their choice. By deciding to leave they gave up there right to vote," said Rouille.

Rouille was also questioned about the fact that Senate members allegedly approached him in regard to the election's final outcome.

"I was approached by Seth Avakian who asked how I could keep the elections on a purely moral basis. He also stated that the Greek community does not accurately represent the commuter district as a whole," Rouille said.

Cut short by time, the Judiciary hearing will continue tonight at 5 p.m. in the RSO Resource Center.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tremble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingendner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

We test our system; you get free therapy.

- Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy
- Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from one of our Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
- If you are a Massachusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
- To sign up, visit www.webtherapy.com

webtherapy.com

UMass athletics at the mullins center

MEN'S BASKETBALL HOME OPENER
NOVEMBER 18th
SATURDAY
7:00 pm
IONA
THE ROAD TO THE NCAA TOURNEY BEGINS HERE!

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
NOVEMBER 17th
FRIDAY
7:00 pm
CHARLOTTE

HOCKEY THE MASS ATTACK
NOVEMBER 16th
THURSDAY
7:00 pm

STUDENT TICKETS FREE
FOR UNDERGRADUATE STUDENTS WITH UMASS ID
545-0810

Campaigns go to court to determine fate of FL

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

The campaigns of George W. Bush and Al Gore pursued legal action yesterday to determine whether or not the manual recounts of ballots in four Florida counties will go forward.

With Bush enjoying a slim lead of 300 votes in Florida, the recounts in Miami-Dade, Palm Beach, Broward, and Collier counties could tip the electoral balance in Gore's favor, awarding him Florida's 25 electoral votes and the presidency.

The campaign's legal sparring followed Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris' announcement Wednesday night that she will not accept recounted totals from four Florida counties past Tuesday's legal deadline.

"The reasons given are insufficient to warrant waiver of the deadline for those counties that wish to submit late returns," Harris said.

Harris' decision left the issue of manual recounts in the hands of Florida's Supreme Court which issued a temporary order giving Florida's counties the right to go ahead with hand counts.

George W. Bush

"This decision is a victory for everyone who wants to see every vote counted clearly and fairly here in Florida," said Gore Campaign Chairman Richard Daley.

Al Gore

In a separate action, Republican Secretary of State Katherine Harris told the Florida Supreme Court that she, not it, had the power to determine if Palm Beach County can conduct a hand recount.

The Supreme Court did not rule on whether or not Harris will have to include the recounted tallies in the certified Florida total – leaving the fate of the recounted numbers uncertain.

Lawyers representing the Gore campaign suggested that alter the recount was complete they would again petition the Supreme Court this time to force Harris to accept the new vote totals. The court is expected to rule on Friday concerning whether or not Harris exceeded her authority in certifying the Tuesday returns.

Palm Beach County began a manual counting of its more than 430,000 ballots at 6 p.m. yesterday. "They have given us that authority, so we intend on proceeding until such time as the recount is concluded," Judge Charles Burton, the chairman of Palm Beach County's canvassing board said.

Broward County began recounting its votes on Wednesday.

The Bush campaign brought the argument that the manual ballot counting was illegal to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday. The court received written arguments from the Gore campaign as well and gave both sides until 7 a.m. this morning to respond in writing to the opposition's arguments. Attorneys for Bush are claiming his rights under the 14th amendment to the Constitution were violated. The amendment guarantees equal protections under the law for all citizens and is usually invoked in discrimination suits.

If the hand recounts are not allowed into the official Florida total, the election could hinge on the counting of Florida's absentee ballots which can arrive no later than Friday. Harris has said that the absentee ballots will be counted by Saturday when the state's electoral votes will be conferred on either Bush or Gore.

The campaigns' legal wrangling followed the candidates jockeying in the court of public opinion on Wednesday night as both candidates made their first public addresses since last Tuesday's election.

Gore suggested that the manual recount should go forward to reach a resolution that is "fair and final." Gore said that he would accept the results of the recount and wouldn't mount any legal challenges.

"I am also prepared, if Governor Bush prefers, to include in this recount all the counties in the entire state of Florida," Gore said. "I would also be willing to abide by that result and agree not to take any legal action to challenge that result."

Gore contended that such a recount could be completed within one eek. Gore also stated his desire to meet with Bush to "improve the tone" of the dialogue between the campaigns.

Bush said that he would not meet with the Vice-President until the election was resolved. Bush also rejected Gore's recount proposal claiming it would be neither "fair nor accurate" to conduct a hand recounting of Florida votes. Bush did welcome Gore's call for a swift conclusion to the election.

Seeking to put pressure on the Gore campaign, Bush campaign Chairman Don Evans announced today that his campaign will not call for a recount of ballots in Iowa, a state Gore won by over 4,000 votes, saying that they desired to bring the election to a speedy close.

In other election news, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) announced that it will turn over a report documenting electoral fraud to the Justice Department next week. The report includes the testimony of 20 Florida voters who claim police and election staff kept them away from the polls. The NAACP has appealed to Attorney General Janet Reno to look into possible irregularities in last Tuesday's election in Florida.

hasa-casa

continued from page 1

Unlike past years when the groups called upon a speaker to talk about the similarities in both cultures, the organizations decided to try something else.

Payaero and Translamar stated, "A video showing Haitian and Dominican UMass students interacting with each other and explaining how and why the festival has grown over the past years will be shown on the ballroom's large video screen."

Above all, the organizations wanted to stress the fact that everyone is welcome to the festival Translamar said. "The celebration is also for those outside of our cultures, for we want to educate them about our ethnic background and cultural history."

Admission to the festival will be $8 for Five College Students with a valid college ID and $10 for the general public.

U'wa

continued from page 1

we have and will maintain our traditions."

The U'wa people keep their hope and thank everyone for their donations, help and interest in their struggle. As individuals there are several ways you can help. For more information please call 617-782-3556, or 1-800-989-RAIN, or e-mail at www.ran.org, amazonwatch.org, or the U'wa email, onic@colmedo.ap.org. Additional help is welcomed with letters and phone calls to the CEO's of Occ Vice President, and presidential candidate Al Gore who holds $1 million in Occ stock and to the Colombian government.

Anniversary Sale Week
November 15th - 19th

Enter to Win a Zanna
$1000 Shopping Spree
Two $250 Shopping Sprees
Our 1998 winner was UMASS Student Suzanne Schmuel, Class of 2000.
This year it could be YOU!
ZANNA
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

The School for International Training
&
The International Language Institute of MA
offer:
ESOL TEACHER CERTIFICATE COURSE
(SIT TESOL Certificate)
Jan 2-26, 2001
or 4 weekends between
Jan. 13 & April 16, 2001
at ILI, in downtown Northampton
SPACES LIMITED!
For info call: (413) 586-7569 or visit our website: www.languageschoolusa.org

UMass Student Legal Services Office
CALL TODAY
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995

Are You an SOM major?
What are You doing to give yourself the experience you need for a competitive edge in the Real World? Get this experience in a great setting on campus!
The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN
is
now
accepting applications for an Assistant Business Manager.
Please turn them into the Collegian Office in room 113 of the Campus Center, Contact: Erin Renner

Learning Support Services
10th floor WEB DuBois Library
STUDENTS HELPING STUDENTS ACHIEVE ACADEMIC SUCCESS
Peer tutoring and Supplemental Instruction
HOURS
Monday - Thursday 1-9 PM
Sunday 5-9 PM
Just walk in
Assistance available in many general education and required courses such as Math, Physics, Biology, Chemistry, Languages and more!!!
Questions?? Please call us:
545.5334

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

SGA's Mercorio
setting bad precedent

The Student Government Association has a long tradition of behaving foolishly. They have embarrassed themselves as a body time and time again.

They have also tasted success, albeit too rarely, and this year is no exception. What a year it could have been, but the shining possibilities in late August have been replaced, as always, by petty bickering and infighting, name calling and rumor spreading, the kind of unproductive behavior that never makes things better.

At least part of the issue has been a new batch of senators elected to serve in the Senate from the Commuter Area. As members of fraternities and sororities, there was some initial fear that these senators would simply behave as a group rather than as 33 individual senators. And in large part, they have. Rather than thinking on their own, for the most part, they've worked together and operated as a single body, swaying votes one way or the other for their own personal gain.

However, there has been one Senator, a standout amongst the others, who has proven not only the ability to think on his own but also the ability to clearly and cogently speak his mind. But we at the Collegian really wish he wouldn't.

Michael Mercorio has embarrassed himself and the Senate with his outlandish and insulting behavior. His sexist oratory against fellow Senator Rebecca Austern and his subsequent refusal to apologize for his immature and unnecessary behavior only further proves our point. He has offered nothing to the quality of the debate itself, instead encouraging all of the nasty stereotypes that most members of fraternities at least claim to want to avoid. Mercorio's behavior goes far beyond unacceptable; it's damaging to the Senate itself. He has caused unnecessary tension within a Student Government Association that doesn't need any help doing such things. Instead of maturely attempting to help solve the Senate's problems, Mercorio has only offered fuel for the fire.

What he doesn't seem to understand is that, despite all of the immaturity within the Senate, he doesn't have to slop around in that muck. Instead, he could rise above such petty name calling in an attempt to do what is right for the student body.

But no.

Mercorio has failed in his responsibility to students, has failed in his responsibility to any and all of us. His behavior is well beyond unacceptable and should be treated as such.

However, will the new Senators have the guts to blackball one of their own? Will they be willing to admit that one of their own was wrong and, instead of circling the wagon, will they back his detractors who have opposed the new Senator?

Unfortunately, commuter residents have no reason to believe that these new senators will do any such thing. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian hopes that the Greeks in Senate prove us wrong. If they do not, it isn't their own image on the line, it's the image of an imperiled Student Government Association.

We can only hope that these new Senators realize.

Write for Ed/Op!

Criticizing the Critic

KRISTI CECCAROSSI

You know what's funny? I get paid to observe all kinds of art and write my opinion of it. Even funnier, a lot of other people get paid to do the same thing and most of them get paid a lot more than me. Some of them even have their own TV shows.

Why is this? As far as I can tell, critics have subsisted as long and as well as artists have. Does that mean people have always been as dumb and incapable of forming their own ideas as they are now? I heard they didn't get that was until cable was invented.

It seems painfully obvious to me that art is completely subjective. Just as well, judging any of it as unequivocally bad or good seems like a waste of time. If nothing else, the advent of modern art has stated this loud and clear. A man can put a simple black square on a white canvas and call it "Diptheria" and people will go wild for it. There are no limits for what we can do in art and there is no art that will not appeal to at least one person.

The conclusion then is that nothing is definitively bad or good. The line that would separate these classes is forever arbitrary and subject to thousands of interpretations.

Oh, yeah. So why does my job exist?

Not that I'm complaining. But I really don't understand why anyone still employs critics. Their only function is to sift what they see as worthwhile art from a mess of ill-conceived projects. What often results is that potential fans of a certain piece might never experience it because a supposedly educated observer deemed it useless.

And think about the artist! Imagine spending days, months, years, preparing an expression only to have it verbally annihilated—in a public arena, no less. God, that must suck. If that happened me, I'd be pretty pissed off.

Finally. A segue to what I really wanted to write about. These pissed off artists.

Turns out a few people on campus don't like me because I gave them, what they felt, were unfair reviews in the Collegian.

This irks me for several reasons. Nobody likes to hear that they have enemies. Incidentally, that includes me. But in this situation, I'm kind of at a loss. I go to plays, for example, with about eight years of intense study, participation, and love for theater. I go home and write what I think of these plays using all that I know and have seen before as a measure for their value. If I write that a production didn't impress me or could have been done better—anything remotely negative—I'm just being honest. My honesty doesn't equal truth, though. It's just what I think.

It's really kind of flattering to think that some people take my opinion very seriously. So seriously that they get really angry when they find out my opinion isn't very positive.

While I can understand why it would bother someone whose art has been described as less than brilliant by a publication as widely read and respected as the Collegian, I think it's kind of lame.

E.M. Forster said, "Some reviews give pain. This is regrettable, but no author has the right to whine. He was not obliged to be an author. He invited publicity, and he must take the publicity that comes along."

In part, this is what I'm getting at.

I'll go ahead and say that most artists want their art to be seen. Stephen Sondheim's "Sunday in the Park with George" is all over this idea. In it, the main character says, "If no one gets to see it, it's as good as dead. It has to come to life."

So art is put on the table for a good reason. But once you make yourself in/with your work public, don't be surprised when people start having opinions about it. Sure, it would be nice if everyone liked what you did, but that isn't going to happen. Also, I don't think that's supposed to be the point of art.

And yet, people dislike me.

As far as I know, nobody believes that 100 percent of what's printed in the Collegian is undeniably accurate. Especially articles that are exclusively opinion based. From what I gather, few people even read the Collegian and even fewer would actually not see a play or an art show or buy an album because of something they read in the paper. But I might be wrong. In which case, I have a lot of power and that's pretty damn hot.

Moreover, why does one person's opinion, in this context, matter at all? It doesn't.

I don't believe for a second that critics are useful beyond providing structural guidance to English papers, which are entirely fruitless, too. A range of views can help an artist improve, no doubt. But elevating one view above another is unnecessary.

But in the meantime, I'm still getting paid to see stuff and tell everyone how I feel about it. I have a lot of respect for people who create things. I also know what I like. And until everyone realizes that what I like, or what anyone likes, isn't important, my opinions get to exist outside of my head and adapt all kinds of dimension on the page.

Kristi Ceccarossi is a Collegian staff member.

LIFE IN HELL
©1993 BY MATT GROENING
SO HOW WAS SCHOOL TODAY?
LOOK, MOM! MY CLASSROOM IS PACKED TO THE GILLS WITH UNDERFED, NEGLECTED KIDS.
BECAUSE OF BUDGET CUTBACKS, THE SCHOOL LIBRARY IS CLOSED, WHICH NOBODY NOTICES BECAUSE NOBODY READS.
THE SCHOOL BUILDING IS FALLING APART, WE'VE GOT NO ART SUPPLIES, THERE'S A CHALK SHORTAGE AND THE ONLY OUTDATED COMPUTER IS BROKEN.
THE TEACHERS ARE STRESSED OUT BECAUSE OF THE LONG HOURS, THE OVERCROWDING AND THE LATEST PAY CUTS.
THE KIDS ALTERNATE BETWEEN LISTLESSNESS AND STUPEFACTION, WAITING FOR THE BELL TO RING.
WE HAVE NO SENSE OF LOGIC, NO HISTORICAL AWARENESS, NO ANALYTICAL SKILLS, NO COMMAND OF LANGUAGE AND THE ATTENTION SPAN OF A GNAT.
SO I MTH LEND OF DROPPN OUT.
BUT WITHOUT A GOOD EDUCATION, YOUR LIFE WILL GO NOWHERE.

Of potpourri and Patriots

RYAN BENHARRIS

I realize that it has only been two whole days since you were forced to look at my nasty face, and I sincerely hope that your eyes feel better, but if they don't, too bad. Anyway, it's Friday and I'm back for more, without anything really pressing to say. I don't want to ruin your weekend with tangents about that joke of a presidential election. I suppose I'll try to write something a little bit different than what I usually do. For a change, I'm not going to tell you crazy stories about what I'm doing for Thanksgiving, or which "random" words I hate. I won't write deeply significant retrospective examinations of my life, or even less meaningful interpretations of yours. It's Friday—I'll just kick back and tell you everything on my mind. Though, I may need help, because if I only wrote about what was on my mind, the column would be about four sentences long.

When did the Patriots get so terrible? As a life long, die-hard fan I can honestly say that this is the worst season I have ever suffered through. That includes the year they went 2-14. I've always been a Bleds-oe supporter, and have never been a person who hates him when we lose a game and loves him when we don't, but I'm really starting to question one of his abilities. He clearly has the talent to be one of the best quarterbacks in the league. Without a doubt he is one of the best quarterbacks around, but as someone who has been on a team for eight years, he is simply not a leader. Someone needs to motivate the rest of the team, and either he doesn't have what it takes, or just isn't trying. He suffered through being silent during the Parcells' years, and losing during the years of that human wasteland, Pete Carroll. Now he has a coach in Belichick who trusts Bledsoe as the spiritual chief. Unfortunately, the quarterback is not fulfilling his duties.

This next issue I address with extreme caution. After writing this, I am subject to lynching and assaults, but here it goes. First of all, I love the band. I think that at any school you go to, a strong band makes for a much higher energy at a football or basketball game. That being said, please do not take this as a personal insult to the any member of the enormous organization (I'd hate to get a really mature phone call every single night at 2:00 a.m. from someone saying, "Is Rob...uh, I mean Ryan there?" Insert scream.). As a person who has attended almost every UMass home game, and some away games in the past three years, I say this with all due respect. The band should not be at the hockey games. It's hockey, and a band is not supposed to be there. I understand that they bring school spirit, and everything else, but the Mullins Center has had a tradition of playing some really exciting and high-energy music over the P.A. during breaks and after goals. Now, instead of Metallica and Guns N' Roses, fans are forced to listen to Santana's "Smooth" twelve times a game. I hate that song when Santana plays it, let alone by the UMass band. I honestly understand that you've all taken time to learn the songs, and do an excellent job playing them, but do we really need you there to give support to the team? However, over the past few weeks, you've done customary cheers wrong, and though we respect the band a lot, it's not fair to march into a tradition that you had no part of in the past, and change it drastically.

Why doesn't UMass have a livestock judging team? Livestock judging is the most intense sport this country has ever seen, and with powerhouses like Kansas State stealing all of the fun, it's just time for UMass to switch over. Think about It. You could be able to tell your grandchildren that you went to school with one of the greatest livestock judgers every to judge livestock. It would be a whole lot better than telling them lame-ass stories about Dr. J.

You know what I really hate? I hate it when people say the only good thing about a newspaper (and by newspaper, I obviously mean no specific newspaper at all) is to "do the crossword puzzle." It just trashes on the countless hours that people spend in a dark, dreary office every single day working harder than some people could possibly imagine. Think of it this way, you'd never say, "I only check out theatrical plays on campus to sit in the cushiony chairs at the Fine Arts Center," or, "The best part about the UMass cycling club is going to one of their events and watching them skin their knees on the ground." That line of thinking is just plain atrocious!

Mr. Rogers quit television last week, ending a long string of entertainment greatness. He claims he retired because he was 71 years old and it was just time to leave. We all know the truth though. It was the damn alcohol that did him in! He probably showed up to the set screaming, "No! I'm just not changing my shoes today! And another thing, I'm sick of waiting for the f-king trolley. Either you tell it to get here on time or the conductor can go back to living on the street. I've got a nasty hangover. My hemorrhoids have been flaring up for weeks, and I piss 17 times an hour!" All this screaming was only the groundwork for the unacceptable ass whooping that he administered to King Friday. Should we really let our children learn from this man?

I'm a senior, and as an upperclassman, I've realized a few things. In your junior year you discover the wonder of "GPA boosters." You think you're actually tricking everyone and beating the system by taking Moron 100 and Sleeping 111. You don't beat the system though, because in your senior year, you fail the GPA boosters. I'm going home for Thanksgiving. I hate going home for several reasons, and one of them has to do with my hometown. I have nothing against the people there, or even the town itself. It's the feeling I get when I go home that I hate. I have literally no friends there, and my family consists of the five people who live in my house, plus my grandfather. I'll begin to miss everything about college on the car ride home. So what am I thankful for? I guess just the fact that I took high school algebra, so I can count the minutes until the drive back to school. Oh, and I'm thankful for wild turkeys, because according to Catherine, they don't have those in Minneapolis.

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian columnist.

Bela Fleck and Psychedelic Breakfast lead Jam-packed local music weekend

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

This coming weekend is shaping up to be jam-packed! It begins today with a plethora of choices to fulfill your jamming needs. Local band Psychedelic Breakfast is playing a two-set show on the top of the hill in Butterfield Dorm. Their set begins at 9 p.m. with a positive 18+ I.D. and a mere $4 cover charge. Psychedelic Breakfast brings an interesting blend of originals mixed with interpretations of some classics from their many diverse influences including Grateful Dead, Phish, George Clinton and Jimi Hendrix.

COURTESY OF JEFF HAGER
"Bela Fleck"

Next up, if you are willing to leave your living area, is Percy Hill at the Skybox at the top of the Campus Center. Hopefully Percy Hill's smooth free-form jazz and groove will pack the house as it did last year, making it one of Skybox's biggest shows. Performing one of only a few shows after coming off of a short hiatus, I am sure that Percy Hill will be ready to explode. The show will be opened by Connecticut's Rane who recently sold-out the famed Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

Finally, for those willing to actually leave the Pioneer Valley, we have a great show at the Worcester Palladium with the famed moe. One of the most popular bands in the current jam-band scene, moe. has been wrapping up some big shows as they continue their tour, concluding in Atlantic City on New Year's Eve. Their show begins at the Palladium at 8 p.m. and costs $18, which is cheap for a band of this caliber.

Headlining the weekend is one of the most talented and exciting bands touring today, Bela Fleck and the Flecktones at the Calvin Theater in Northampton. Coming off a huge four-night stay at the Somerville Theater, the Flecktones are sure to put on a killer show. They bring a very unique blend of country, bluegrass, funk and straight jam music that is sure to be liked by anyone who is lucky enough to have it grace their ears. They are led by Bela Fleck, the nation's best banjo player who has played with many great musicians including MMW and Phish, just to name a few. On bass is the extraordinary Victor Wooten. His playing can be explained by simply stating that one of his goals is to make the bass guitar a lead soloing instrument while it usually is used in a compulsory, background role. He jams out like nobody ever has and by the smile on his face you know that he loves what he is doing. Victor's brother, Future Man, plays the self invented Drumitar, which looks like an electronic drum machine attached to the front board of a guitar. Watch as he jams out on it, making the complete sound of many instruments with just a few flicks of his wrist. Finally, Jeff Coffin simply plays a mean saxophone. He adds a whole new dimension to the Flecktones' already full, robust sound.

As a reminder, be sure that you pick up your tickets for Medeski, Martin and Wood playing at the Calvin on Nov. 29. It might be too late to get tickets after we come back from Thanksgiving because this show is sure to sell out.

Sydney Dance moves FAC

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Some say that expressive dance is a mirroring of the human soul and that interpretative movement itself is the most profound form of artistic expression. Although it is arguable whether or not this is true, the production of Air and Other Invisible Forces, performed by the Sydney Dance Company, can be described as nothing less than art.

The production itself was often hard to follow, with a surreal and dreamlike quality to it that made some portions seem more like a nightmare. The entire production was set to the music of Gita Kantheti and included sounds from outer space, recorded by NASA's Voyager, and some portions of spoken word.

Based upon Buddhist tradition, the work moved through emotions of tenderness, hope, loss and rage in a seemingly chaotic way. Although the goals of the production remained both lofty and hopeful, often the message of the work seemed almost lost on the audience.

The opening portions of the production focused on the role of man in nature. Starting off in virtual darkness, members of the dance company rolled out onto the stage barefoot, wearing only simple white robes. The set coordinated with the minimalist theme of the early portion of the show featuring only pieces of wire bent to form mountains that were made to look snow-capped with the addition of a white sheet covering. Lighting also seemed not to be a priority, leaving a stark, sometimes meaningless contrast between light and dark.

Darkness versus light seemed to be a predominant theme throughout the entire show with costumes that consisted of both black and white colors and dance moves that illustrated rising up and re-birth from a black death-like state.

Also connecting to the theme of life and death were the earlier sequences that dealt with nature and the progression of the seasons. These included green hues, and the use of billowing sheets to put forth the message.

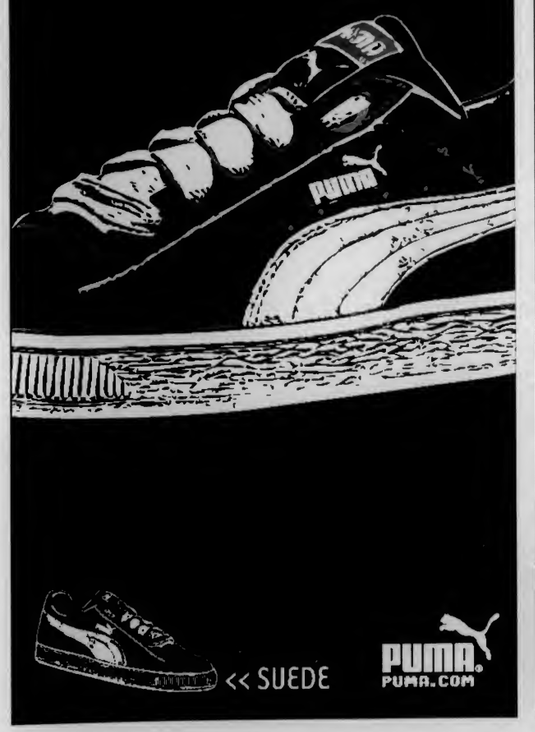
The dance itself was exquisite and by far the best element of the show. The dancers worked together, often moving in perfect time with each other and following the rhythm of the music. The group progressed from primitive and simple dance moves, such as dramatic arm movements, to more complicated barrel rolls and leaps further on in the production. It was clear that these dancers were both experienced and had practiced together a great deal for their performance.

Although aesthetically flawless, this performance took a great deal of time to get into. The music, which often provided an almost eerie quality to the production as a whole, served to be distracting for a great deal of the show. Overall this could have been a terrific performance had it simply centered around the sheer brilliance of the dancers—however as it was presented, it was simply confusing.

.dailycollegian.com

Done your homework for LIFE 101 lately?
Purpose for Life = Loving God + Loving People
Sunday Morning Celebration 11am in the Jones Library Conference Room (43 Amity St-downtown)
MERCYhouse It's a Church! 374-7532 www.knowmercy.org

<<<<<<<< win a free pair at puma.com/umass
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> buy it at puma.com



Make a Difference in a Life
Live rent free in downtown Northampton.
Be a therapeutic housemate for a person in recovery from psychiatric disturbance
Female age 22+needed. Salary, benefits, team support
Call Mary Cape at Windhorse Associates 586-0207

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com
Josh @ 413-549-4514

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA
The Largest Movie Theatre In Hampshire County!
OPENS NOV. 22!
Coca-Cola Celebrates
The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!
Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.
FEATURING
• 2 Box Offices
• 2 Concession Stands
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens
Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet. Go to cinemark.com

■ scooters

continued from page 1

all ages. A trip to the mall reveals these scooters can be bought virtually anywhere and prices range between $79-$99.

The razor scooter operates by the owner pumping his or her leg, and once the rider has gained enough momentum, they can coast to their final destination.

These scooters first gained their popularity in cities and among children, but a vast number of UMass students can now be seen pumping and coasting to class. But is it really easier to get to class with a razor scooter?

"I arrive to my destination five minutes earlier when I use my scooter," said Lam-Kin Chen, a freshman Computer Engineering major. "I bought my scooter because I thought it would help me get to class quicker, but mostly I use it at night so that I don't have to walk back."

The only problem Chen encountered with his razor scooter was, "the University's often uneven and bumps pavement."

Another popular way of quickly covering the distance across campus is by using rollerblades. Rollerblades used to be a trendy accessory, but they have lasted longer than most fads and have become a staple across the country. There are various state parks that have been expanded to include rollerblading trails for the teetering, inexperienced rollerblader, to the experienced, stylized rollerblader.

The Norwottock Trail, which stretches eight miles from South Amherst to Northampton, offers safe recreational trails for cyclists and pedestrians. Trails such as this often offer a smooth ground where skaters do not have to be too concerned about things such as curbs, hills and traffic.

"When I use my rollerblades on campus I sometimes have to use alternate routes," said Alison Hamby, a freshman Communications major. "But other than that, there aren't any inconveniences."

While scooters and rollerblades are widely used, the most common alternative form of transportation is the bicycle.

Since their invention in 1890 by Kirkpatrick Macmillion, bicycles have been serving people everywhere. Bikes provide transportation and exercise. Their widespread popularity has created competitive events like those in the Olympics, and the prestigious Tour de France cycling race.

At school, it is almost impossible not to see a student riding a bike. Some students peddle lazily as they head towards their class, while others peddle furiously across campus.

Many students do not want to worry about the hassle of transporting their bike to school, and finding a place to lock it up. But to other students, bikes help to make their lives a little less stressful.

"I use my bike because there is no other way to get to Hadley Farm; the student run shuttle is often unreliable," said freshman Animal Science Major Mary Cloutier. "I also use my bike to get to Paige Laboratory and at night."

While there are many positive sides to using alternative forms of transportation, there are a few negative sides.

"Using my bike is more convenient, but it's a lot less social," said Cloutier.

Utilizing one of these forms of transportation has its pros and cons, but it's up to students to decide the most useful way for them to bike across campus.

COURTESY OF DAVE WOLFF

The ecstasy of diner food

Pitchshifter is showcased on the excellent compilation The Ecstasy of the Agony

Bern inspires wonder

DAN BERN
Iron Horse
Nov. 11

By Aaron Pfannebecker
Collegian Correspondent

I am in love. I have been for quite sometime. And it has been through thick and thin. My love has saved me from the badness and has given me everything from here to there and all that is in-between. I have seen Nirvana, and I have tasted Chocolate and Cheese. Notes, crescendos, beats, jive, the blues, John Lee Hooker, Graceland, Harlem, Miles, the muse, gusto, Beatles with an "a." Yes, one day I am going to slice through the American air fast and with ease. I'm going all the way to Las Vegas to be wed in holy matrimony care of a neon chapel while eating a burger, smoking a cigarette and marrying the one I intend on going all the way with that night: music. Yes, sweet and catastrophic music. Notes, chords, writers, and musicians. I will always love music.

I love music so much I even climb into an automobile to go find it. I have discovered something that blew me away like I only imagined my wedding day could. I thought I knew what I was getting into.

I saw Dan Bern and his band last Saturday night at the Iron Horse music club in downtown Northampton. It was a ride, baby.

Dan Bern, for your information is one of the most brilliant songwriters and humorists of today. He could definatly be a spokesperson for any one with enough music. I honestly and arrogantly claim him to be my

COURTESY OF SONY DAN BERN WEBSITE

Dan Bern

Bob Dylan; my poet, my icon. All mine. I don't necessarily worship the legacy of Bob Dylan, but Dan Bern plays a guitar so-so like Dylan, plays a harmonica so-so like Dylan, but they both can write a beautiful and meaningful song about the slightest of our planet's wonders. He can, however do, something Bob Dylan has been accused of not being able to accomplish. Dan Bern has a sweet and wonderful voice. Dan Bern is a storyteller and a poet of the highest explosive caliber.

He played for a good two hours, and claimed that this past Saturday was his 83rd day on the road. It wasn't, he lied. He apologized and everyone laughed. He spoke of being him, of growing up in his family, of being born into a religion, of our current presidential tie. He spoke of all of these with a twist. He made them all funny. And then Dan Bern jumped into the audience and sang to everyone there. He took requests, improvised stories, and talked to the people that bought the tickets to see him, the audience. One of the most interactively successful shows this young brunette in Chuck Taylor all stars' has ever seen.

All the locals came and the colleges came. The crowd was jam-packed and the beat levitated right off of everyone's perspiring foreheads. Everyone was dancing. Everyone was laughing. Everyone was letting go and having such a good time. Dan Bern has several album releases at your local music supplier. He also is a frequenter of the live music scene. See him or forever he bored. Hold your peace baby.

Compilations bring treasures

ONE BAG, TWO LUMPS, THREE COZIES
Various Artists
Beggars Banquet

DISARMING VIOLENCE
Various Artists
Fastmusic

THE ECSTASY OF THE AGONY
Various Artists
Alternative Tentacles

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

Soundtracks are getting worse. MTV is certainly no help. The radio has been collecting dust for quite some time. Where does one find cool new music these days?

The Internet is a good start, but only savvy hunters will be able to sift through to the primo stuff and avoid Joe from Woburn's ten-minute epic of distorted xylophone and kazoo noises. One can still travel above the underground and not get caught in the vast web of main-stream tripe by simply heading over to a certain section of the music store the dreaded compilation section. The clothes often make the man on these doozies, as the cheap packaging and cheap prices are a good indication of the yawn inside. But nudging away the salivating rave kid searching for DJ Mixo's Drum n' Bass Volume XXVII can reveal some interesting label compilations that showcase some cool bands that were too cool to hit the mainstream but too good to be left making music at home.

Thankfully, there will no wading through endless compilations for the privileged few that read this article, since yours truly will point in the direction of some worthy label samplers. High readership and visibility means that the Collegian gets lots of cool music, as record labels and executives are relentless in securing my Midas touch on their releases. To avoid becoming power mad, I now relegate my work to the infamous Friday edition of the Collegian, where readership drops from 20,000 to 29 and even those that solely pick up the Collegian for the crossword puzzle scoff and use it as a jumbo beer coaster.

I feel like I need a Ph.D. or at least higher SAT scores to listen to the Beggars Banquet compilation One Bag Two Lumps, Three Cozies. Beggars can certainly be credited with recruiting some of the best (and artsiest) bands in its time, and this compilation certainly proves that. The variety is there, and the disc coasts gracefully from avant-rock to hip-hop to metal. For the most part, it's a healthy dose of indie rock with other styles thrown in for posterity.

It is humorous to watch One Bag wrestle with being too avant-garde by trying to offset the artsy cover art and experimental nature of not-immediately-accessible artists like Magnetophone and Simon Fisher Turner. So they throw in the bland metal of The Cult and the clunky rock of Brassy (cool mid-song break beats, though), but they're not fooling anyone. The funky beats of Scanner's "Spnique" and the challenging hip-hop of Divine Styler are why we came. Standouts on the album are Laika's beautifully lonely "Uneasy" and Badly Drawn Boy's amazing "Once Around the Block."

Disarming Violence is a punk party captured on 25 tracks. A variety of punk bands both known and obscure contribute tracks for a joint effort between Fastmusic, a punk website and PAX, a non-profit anti-gun violence organization. To see this many bands rally around a cause that probably won't get much publicity and not use it as a podium to try and outdo each other is a heartening sight of unity and social awareness in the punk community.

The best part about Disarming Violence is that you don't have to listen to any of these bands for more than one song. Let's be honest, full albums from many of these bands, and all but the most elite punk bands, are a lesson in patience. But for one song, it's heaven. Therefore the album stays fresh for the long-winded 25 tracks, and with restructured playlists, it is a champ for repeated listens. Heavy punk-pop is the order of the day for the majority of the album, with NOFX contributing fifty seconds of fury and Lucky Strike adding a dash of estrogen. DC punk vets Dag Nasty reunited simply to record the solid "Incinerate" for the album, and All puts on an uncharacteristically memorable show with "College Town." Don't expect a musical epiphany, but there is something inspiring and personal about this style, and in small doses it's easier to appreciate. Good fun, good cause, and good music.

The best of the bunch out of these compilations belongs to the eternally cool Alternative Tentacles and their compilation The Ecstasy of the Agony. The space-rock in Jell-O attack of The Causes Way's "Geological Lust" and the frenetic "Eat That Cake" from Bad Fair & Jason Willett are exactly the far-out and brilliant fare that one expects from the label of The Dead Kennedys and LARD. Label head Jello Biafra contributes a recent LARD track as well as a snippet from his upcoming Become the Media spoken word release and a blistering cut with The No-WTO Combo.

$5.99 for this many cool songs is a crime. Ecstasy picks up where Disarming Violence leaves off, adding memorable tunes, excellent musicianship, and channels the energy of the music into potential activism instead of a blanket cause. Sprinkled throughout the compilation are spoken word gems from Noam Chomsky and Howard Zinn about American foreign policy and powerful prison issues addressed by Mumia Abu-Jamal and Angela Davis that stay with you after it is done spinning.

The music is more expansive and filling than Thanksgiving dinner. Fourteen second death punk courtesy of Ratos De Porao, the incomparable Wesley Willis, and the haunting "Jackson" from Slim Cessna's Auto Club stand proudly beside obviously excellent material from Pitchshifter and NoMeansNo. If you believe one cliché this year, believe that money saved from NOW 5 is better spent on The Ecstasy of the Agony.

Duckling's Journey to fresh styles

UGLY DUCKLING
Journey To Anywhere
1500 Records

By Casey Hayman
Collegian Correspondent

In 1995, in Long Beach, CA, as the West Coast's "gangsta rap" movement was sweeping the nation, a group called Ugly Duckling was formed. Yearning for hip-hop's days of old, the group, consisting of MCs Andy Capp and Dizzy Dustin and DJ/Producer Young Einstein, came together, forming with a mission to return to the old-school values that were nearing extinction in mainstream rap.

Unfortunately, this goal did not afford the members of UD much opportunity for monetary gain, but they stayed true, playing for any audience that would hear them. The group honed their skills through live performance and finally received underground and even a good deal of overseas acclaim for their 1997 LP, Fresh Mode.

COURTESY OF FRESHMODE.COM

Ugly Duckling takes a journey to the old school on their most recent release.

Now in 2000, after touring worldwide in order to further spread the Ugly Duckling name, the group returns with a full-length release, Journey To Anywhere. For those who grew up on hip-hop albums such as De La Soul's Three Feet High And Rising and A Tribe Called Quest's People's Instinctive Travels & Paths of Rhythm, Journey To Anywhere should come as a wonderful breath of fresh air. Young Einstein provides simple, funky loops as Andy and Dustin cleverly play off of each other in a style that can't help but make one nostalgic for the "good old days".

Perhaps the best thing about the album, though, is that much like Three Feet High And Rising, it has a playful, lighthearted mood laced with irreverent wit. While mainstream and underground hip-hop are too often divided between players and haters, UD takes the high road, giving positive messages without an overload of bitterness towards mainstream rappers. Though the duo does resort to some hip-hop social criticism on tracks such as "The Pike" and "A Little Samba," they do so in fun, and one gets the feeling that Dizzy and Andy are not so much hating as observing from their perch above the melee. On "If You Wanna Know," one of the album's highlights, Andy decries hip-hop's thug mentality, rhyming: "I'm leaving./Competition's cool and all of that./But I didn't get into rap to be attacked./I'm packin' my backpack strapped to bust a thinkin' cap/And just laugh at the people who don't know how to act."

On Journey To Anywhere, Ugly Duckling sticks to its old-school guns, paying homage to hip-hop's roots (check out "Eye On The Gold Chain," a tribute to Young Einstein's old-school "dookie gold rope"). Like nearly any album, Journey has its weak tracks, but they are few and far between. I could try to poke holes in this album, but to intellectualize about it would be to spoil the fun. Journey To Anywhere is a perfect Friday night record, packed with feel-good hip-hop songs to help you unwind and reminisce on the ghosts of hip-hop past.

You don't have to be a child prodigy to be a Collegian Photographer.....

Not that we have anything against them.

No wait. We do. Look at her.

If you enjoy photography and are interested in getting involved with the Collegian, come down to the Collegian and ask for Jaret Barr.

(Jeez, give the microscope some breathing room kiddo)

*The Collegian in no way endorses moving fun of this little girl. It's all me baby!

DAN SANTELLA/ COLLEGIAN

With a strong performance this weekend at thi weekend's Eastern Championships , Greg Trayer and the Massachusetts men's water polo team could be headed to Malibu for the NCAA Championships.

Malibu dreams for UMass

By Justin Pearson
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's water polo team heads to Providence, R.I. this weekend to take on some of the East Coast's best teams at the Eastern Championships. Two weeks ago the Minutemen qualified for the Eastern's with a strong second place performance at the CWPA North Division Playoffs. Victory this weekend in Providence will clinch an automatic bid to the NCAA Championships to be held in two weeks in Malibu, Calif. However, it will not be an easy ride for the Minutemen (23-11, 11-3 CWPA) as they face the possibility of challenging teams who handed them seven of their 11 loses this season.

No. 12 UMass starts things off on Saturday afternoon against Bucknell. The Bison qualified for the Eastern Championships by placing third at the CWPA Southern Division Championships in Annapolis, MD. The Minutemen defeated Bucknell (21-18) in their only previous meeting by a score of 13-11 back on September 30. Junior Carlos Ramos, the leading scorer for the Maroon and White this season, spear-headed the attack that day for the Minutemen with four goals, two assists and a pair of steals. At the other end of the pool junior goalie, co-captain J.R. Vanderwall was strong, making seven saves in between the pipes for the Minutemen.

In order to advance to the quarterfinals the UMass defense will have to shut down Bucknell's leading scorer, senior Kevin Permisohn. Permisohn tallied a hat-trick in the Bison's loss to the Minutemen back in September.

Should the Minutemen move on they would then face the winner of the game between No. 13 Navy and No. 20 Harvard. The Maroon and White would rather face the Crimson who it has defeated on all four occasions that the teams have met this season. In those four games the Minutemen outscored the Crimson 49-21, including a 12-2 thumping two weeks ago in Cambridge.

However, UMass has not shared similar success this season against Navy. The Midshipmen have taken two of three meetings with the Minutemen so far this year. The last time these two met the Minutemen were able to edge out an 11-8 victory behind five goals from junior Mike Foley and two goals and three assists from fellow junior Adam Moore. All three meetings between these two have been decided by three goals or less, including an 8-6 double overtime triumph for the Midshipmen back in late September.

Should UMass move on to the semifinals to be held on Sunday, it would either face No. 11 St. Francis, No. 15 Queens College, No. 16 Princeton, all of whom have defeated the Minutemen at some point this season, or Johns Hopkins.

In order for the Minutemen to book their tickets to Malibu they will need to get another strong showing in goal from Vanderwall, as well as some clutch goal scoring from the likes of Foley, Ramos, and Moore.

The mission is simple, all that's left for the Minutemen is to go out and finish the job. The march to Malibu starts now.

NFL Week 12 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	8-6-1 (69-68-6)	8-6-1 (77-60-6)	7-7-1 (72-65-6)	9-5-1(71-66-6)	10-4-1 (69-68-6)
Cincinnati @ New England	New England by 7	New England	Cincinnati	New England	Cincinnati	Cincinnatl
Indianapolis @ Green Bay	Indianapolis by 6 1/2	Indianapolis	Green Bay	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Green Bay
Carolina @ Minnesota	Minnesota by 9 1/2	Minnesota	Carolina	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
Arizona @ Philadelphia	Philadelphia by 7	Philadelphia	Arizona	Philadelphia	Philadelphia	Philadelphia
Buffalo @ Kansas City	Kansas City by 2 1/2	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City
Tamapa Bay @ Chicago	Tampa Bay by 7 1/2	Chicago	Chicago	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay
Cleveland @ Tennessee	Tennessee by 16	Cleveland	Cleveland	Cleveland	Tenneessee	Tennessee
Detroit @ NY Giants	NY Giants by 5	NY Giants	Detroit	Ny Giants	Detroit	NY Giants
Oakland @ New Orleans	Oakland by 3	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	New Orleans
NY Jets @ Miami	Miami by 3 1/2	Miami	Miami	NY Jets	Miami	Miami
Atlanta @ San Francisco	San Francisco by 5 1/2	Atlanta	Atlanta	San Francisco	San Francisco	San Francisco
Dallas @ Baltimore	Baltimore by 7	Dallas	Dallas	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore
San Diego @ Denver	Denver by 9 1/2	San Diego	San Diego	Denver	Denver	Denver
Jacksonville @ Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh by 3	Jacksonville	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Jacksonville
Washington @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 5	St. Louis	St. Louis	Washington	Washington	St. Louis

TRASH TALK

You know how there are some things that you wish will never happen? For four morons named Adam, Sam, Bryan and Adam, that nightmare was that I would win the NFL Picks and write this article. Guess what boys, your nightmare has come true.

After a de (o) pressing performance so far this season, I took my picture out of the picks and broke out of a slump to go 10-4-1 and win week eleven. And after four tests this week, defending this title might be the easiest thing that I do this week.

I would first like to thank myself for getting my head out of my ass, and waking up this week. But enough about me, there are four people that I need to get back at for weeks of aggravation.

Wilkinson, you want to take a shot at my 49ers. Guess what game won me the week? My 49ers beating the Chiefs. However, you are right about one part, this article proves one thing, that any big ugly kid from West Virginia can turn into a genius. Except for the strange reason that you picked the Bears last week at Buffalo. Even though you are in the lead right now just remember, this is just an NFL prediction article and your IQ is still in between a sheep from your state and Smitty.

Oh speaking of which, I just gave you a preview of what my next tattoo is going to be: me kicking your ass. You are pathetic. Your new claim to fame is his claim to second place in this article, Smitty, guess what, that makes you the first loser. I mean, look at his picture, he looks like he just had a couple of 12 packs before hand. Think about it, he took the Patriots last week. Why don't just throw yourself in front of a moving train? Sounds dumb, but that would be smarter than that pick. To say you are not always drunk is like saying Richard Simmons likes wearing long pants: we would just be lying to you.

As for "Bella Caroll" Martignetti, you took the Giants against the Rams and the Patriots against the Browns last week. Scarecrow, you really don't have a brain up there do you? That has got to be the dumbest pair of picks ever. Come on now, "YOU CAN DO IT." You can make smarter picks than that, even without a brain. I have a plan for you, why don't you just steal Smitty's brain when he has passed out after another drunken stupor? Wait, you might not want to do that, you would just be dumber than you already are. Face it, Adam, "You have no hope."

This is the first time that you are reading a trash talk article by yours truly this year, since my first one was conveniently left out of the paper. Why was my first victory not graced with a trash talk article? I think is it just a case of the man holdin' a brother down, and isn't it convenient that the editor-in-chief's last name is WHITE. Coincidence, I think not. WHITE, I love the fact that you are falling faster than a redwood after Sam "Paul Bunyon" Wilkinson chops it down. Your two weeks of fame have turned into 10 weeks of ineptitude that can only be describe as pitiful. Oh, don't ever shave your head again; looking at that license photo gives me a headache.

Now for a couple of picks, I will take San Francisco giving five and a half points to Atlanta, New Orleans, even without Ricky Williams, getting three points at home against Oakland and the NY Giants giving five points to Detroit.

Although I have been smashing the other four morons in this article, I have one bit of good news for them. If you guys can put your collective IQ's together, you can run for President of the United States. But knowing whether your IQ level would reach the goal is simply "Too Close to Call."

David Rose

■ football

continued from page 10

The Rams also have a potent passing attack with Vince Nedimyer at the helm. The sophomore quarterback has passed for 954 yards to go along with three touchdown tosses.

"Their front four are really good. Lance Small is giving them a lot of leadership. I like how they played last year, and they have built on that," Whipple said. "They have a lot of confidence playing at home. Their offense is better than they were earlier in the season. They understand what the coaches want them to do, and have executed at a much higher level the last couple of weeks. We have to change our course and stop the run. We have to make some plays on offense and not give up a big play on defense."

In the contest Whipple is looking to pick up his 100th career win. He is now in his third year at the helm of the Minuteman squad and has posted a 27-11 record while patrolling the sidelines for the Maroon and White. He has a career record of 99-44 in his 13 years as a collegiate head coach.

More important than picking up his centennial victory is the prospect that it could be the last time that Whipple takes to the sidelines as the head coach of UMass. Whipple has been rumored to be the leading candidate for the head-coaching job at Div. I Rutgers University. The Scarlet Knights are looking to replace Terry Shea. Shea, the 1998 Big East Coach of the Year, is under fire because of his inadequacies at the helm of Rutgers. Shea has an overall coaching record of 26-47-2.

■ men's b-ball

continued from page 10

leading scorer from a year ago, Tariq Kirksay. In last season's opening game contest between the two teams, Kirksay was able to drop 20 points on Massachusetts, but the Maroon and White were still able to pull out the 85-77 win.

Even without Kirksay, however, Iona does return a large portion of the offense, and has three players that scored in double digits during the 1999-00 season. Dyree Wilson should lead the offense, with a 14.6 ppg average coming back from last year, while 6-foot-7 guard Phil Grant and his 10.6 points per game should solidify the guard position and provide match up problems for the Minutemen.

Center Nakiea Miller was also a solid contributor last year, scoring 13.8 points a game, despite only starting in four of 30 contests.

"It will be a challenging first game," said Flint. "If we go out there, play our game and rebound the basketball than we have a good chance of winning."

However, Flint also warned against giving up on the season if UMass happened to lose a few games at the beginning of the year. "There are a lot of games," he said. "I don't want people to be panicking if we lose a couple of them. It's a long season."

■ hockey

continued from page 10

key completely off."

The third period collapse was the result of a "lack of interest" in the game.

"When I look in the locker room and I see that I've got kids that decide that they're going to play on their terms, then I know that I just have to get new kids," Cahoon said. "That's as simple as it can be. I've said right from the beginning, 'you play well you get rewarded with further play. You don't play well then you better start working hard t play.'

"I'm very discouraged that the kids would come to the rink and not make a better account of themselves."

Johnson [1-3-1] had his best game of the season between the pipes for the Minutemen as he stopped 17 of 19 shots on net.

Imbriano [2-2-2] also had a solid game in goal for the Huskies as he turned aside 28 Maroon and White shots.

"We have to realize that whether we win tonight 8-0 or tie 2-2, it's still one night," Turner said. "One night doesn't make the season. We can't let this keep us down."

The Minutemen will look to get back on the winning track when they battle RPI on Saturday night in Troy, NY.

■ hockside

continued from page 10

with a low blast to make it 2-1.

UConn 13-4-2, 3-1-1 in the MAAC] followed that score up with the game tying tally a short while later. Eric Gocłowski caught the Minutemen on a line change and raced down the left-wing boards before lofting the disc to Mike Boylan in the shot. The junior defenseman then fired a shot past Johnson to knot the game at 2-2.

"It's early in the year, and to be down 2-0 in a visiting team's barn and come back, that shows a lot of character," UConn hockey coach Bruce Marshall said. "Hopefully these kids will start believing in themselves."

The next test for the Huskies will come on Wednesday night, when they take on a solid Mercyhurst club at the UConn Ice Arena. The Lakers are 5-1-1 and are unbeaten in the MAAC at 5-0-1. When UConn takes the ice that night, it will once again try to prove its worth – this time within its own league – and show that it should not be taken lightly.

"Hopefully this sends a message to the rest of the league that we're ready to play," Longobardi said. "For the past four years, no one on this team has made a first or second All-conference team, yet we won the [MAAC] tournament title last year. It [the reason for success] has all been because of hard work."

■ women's b-ball

continued from page 10

Mullins Center with a win.

"They're very athletic, and they go the offensive boards as well as I've seen anybody," O'Brien said. "In two exhibition games, they got 21 offensive rebounds in one, and 24 in the other, which is ridiculous. We've got to play good defense."

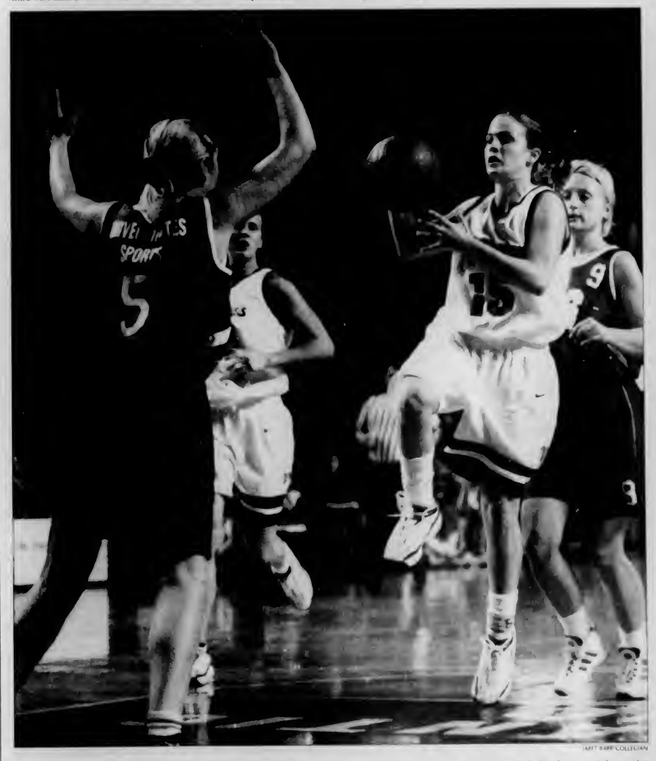
The weekend doesn't get any easier for the Maroon and White after Charlotte leaves town. UMass boards a plane on Saturday en route to Athens, GA, where the Lady Bulldogs call Stegeman Coliseum home. Georgia, ranked as the third best team in the nation, lost to No. 1 UConn last week, and will be hungry for its first win. The Lady Bulldogs will pose some major challenges for the Minutewomen, especially considering they suit up four pre-season All-Americans.

"That's actually going to be a lot of fun," said O'Brien. "The key to that game is going to be containing the basketball. They run up and down the floor. On offense, we have to execute our stuff."

Of all the players, it was a freshman that led Georgia in the UConn loss. Christi Thomas railed in 16 points and 12 boards during her first night in a Lads Bulldog uniform.

"I think we're going to prove a lot of people wrong," starting forward Jen Butler said. "People are going to think we're the same team from last year. And they're going to think we've gone a step down because we've lost Nekole. I think everybody is going to step up, and this is going to be a better team."

Said O'Brien: "We're going to walk in this season a little more calm, a little more collected. It's got to be their fight. They have to fight to win.



ART BARR/ COLLEGIAN

Senior co-captain Kathy Coyner will lead the Massachusetts women's basketball team into battle with UNC-Charlotte tonight as the Minutewomen open up their 2000-01 campaign. They will travel to Athens, Ga. this weekend to face the No. 3 Lady Bulldogs of Georgia.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register. Learn to save a life!

OFFcampus Antics Find Ruth flying Bud the blimp on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take over lease. Townhouses. 2 bedroom. Available 1/10. $775/month 549-4762

Subletting 1 room in 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. January or February - August. Call Lisa 549-0467

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

88 Ford Escort Wagon. 65k miles. Moving, must sell now. $2000 or b/o 253-6375 (blue)

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework. 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

Responsible caring person for 4yr. old girl. Three afternoons a week or more. Car, references. Thru June or summer. 259-1750

EMPLOYMENT

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are available 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

Wanted Campus Marketing Reps to promote efollett.com and the UMass bookstore. Earn $50 in-store credit towards future purchases (textbooks, supplies, merchandise, and more!) plus bonus incentives! A great resume builder and a chance to gain internship experience for further information or if you are interested send an email or call reps@efollett.com 1-800-633-5595 x 4790

EMPLOYMENT

Administrative Assistant. Use your skills and make a difference. International grassroots hunger lobby seeks computer literate, highly organized individual. 15hrs/week. Main St. Northampton. Email resume and writing sample to: empower@javanet.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Comfort Plus! Authentic Surgical Scrubs. Wear them to bed or wear them to class! Check out our website at www.authenticsrubs.com

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley-4.5 bedroom, on bus route. $1250/month + utility. 582-9075

LOST & FOUND

Lost Wallet - Black Mountain Hardware Wallet - Lost Sunday or Monday. Please call Meghan 549-9621

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom open in large house. Cheap Rent! 2min walk from campus. Available Jan. 1st, call Laura 549-5383

ROOMMATE WANTED

Three Girls on Main Street need roommate for spring. Call 256-3816

SERVICES

Want Academic Success? Want to take professional notes and pass exams? Get the academic guide to success! For more information send SASE to: TDS, P.O. Box 225 Sunderland, MA 01375

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

Need a Roommate?

Get exactly who you want...

Place an AD today!

The Daily Collegian Classifieds

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1- HSCN Bulletin Board
2- CBS 3 Hartford
3- ABC 40 Springfield
4- CBS 57 Springfield
5- HSCN Movie Channel
6- CBS 30 Hartford
7- UMASS Educational Channel
8- NBC 22 Springfield
9- Independent Channel
10- UMASS Educational Channel
11- WB 56 New Haven
12- ESPN
13- Lifetime
14- CVCTV (Student Channel)
15- World Channel
16- Good to Cook
17- C-Span
18- CNN
19- CNN Headline News
20- Entertainment
21- USA
22- Bravo
23- TNT
24- Discovery
25- Nickelodeon
26- Cartoon Network
27- Nick at Nite
28- TV Land
29- Comedy Central
30- BET
31- Univision
32- Bloomberg Financial Network
33- College TV Network
34- MTV
35- VH1
36- The Learning Channel

FRIDAY EVENING C - Campus NOVEMBER 17, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Connecticut Journal		Senor Tengo (In Stereo)	James Cagney: City-Country
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "End Game"	News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Fugitive (N) (In Stereo)		CSI: Crime Scene Investgtn.		Nash Bridges "End Game"	News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Beatles Revolution (N) (In Stereo)				20/20 (N)	News	Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Sabrina-Witch	Sabrina-Witch	Popular (N) (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven "Like a Harlot"		Jim Calhoun	College Basketball: Quinnipiac at Connecticut (Live)				Arrest & Trial	News	College Basketball
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Friends	Police Videos (In Stereo) (PA)			Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		Law & Order: Special Victims	News	Tonight Show
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Providence (N) (In Stereo)		Dateline (N) (In Stereo)		News	Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGBY	57	6	BBC World	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	State We're In	Time Goes By	Vicar of Dibley	Manor Born
WGGB	40	25	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Beatles Revolution (N) (In Stereo)				20/20 (N)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Freedom "Enemy" (In Stereo)		Level 9 "Reboot" (In Stereo)		Frasier	Mad Abt. You	Spin City
WTBS	72		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "Stroggoef" (1988, Comedy)		Bill Murray, Karen Allen,			★★½ "Murder at 1600" (1997)	Wesley Snipes.
A&E	51		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography: Buck Owens		Point "Murder in the Mews"		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Humiliation"
CNN	20	23	Worldview	Moneyline	Newshour (N)	Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Unconventional Wisdom (N)	Sports	Moneyline
COM	35	36	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Strein & Money	Saturday Night Live		Toothbrush	Whose Line?	★★½ "Up in Smoke" (1978, Comedy)		Thomas Chong,
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Beavers		Wild Discovery: Porcupine		On the Inside: Air Traffic Ctlr		News	Into Unknown	Storm Warning! (N)	Justice Files
ESPN	31		Sportscenter		College Basketball: Preseason NIT Second Round -- Teams TBA				College Basketball		Temple at Memphis. (Live)	Sportscenter
LIFE	62		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Figure Skating: Skate Canada International			Once and Again (In Stereo)
MTV	33		Diary	Lyricist	Jackass	Cribs	Jay & Silent Bob		Journey of Dr. Dre (In Stereo)		Undressed	Undressed	Undressed
NICK	53		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	U Pick Toons	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company
SCIFI	59		Sliders (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Invisible Man "Cat & Mouse"		Farscape "The Ugly Truth"		Lexx: The Series "Twilight"		Invisible Man "Cat & Mouse"
TLC	67	26	Happy Days Reunion		Medical Miracles		Dangerous Pursuits		World's Most Powerful		Demolition Day: Seattle		Dangerous Pursuits
TNT	42		ER "Split Second" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Mr. Lee" (In Stereo)		★ "Fathers' Day" (1997, Comedy)		Robin Williams, Billy Crystal.		★ "Fathers' Day" (1997, Comedy)	Robin Williams, Billy Crystal.
USA	17		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Front and Center"		Nash Bridges "Boomtown"		★★ "Boomerang" (1992, Comedy)		Eddie Murphy. (In Stereo)	Farmclub.com (In Stereo)
HBO	43		(5:00)	Making-Love	Inside the NFL (In Stereo)		★½ "Heartbreak Ridge" (1986, Drama)		Clint Eastwood. R		Men of Honor	★½ "Devil in the Flesh" (1997)	Rose McGowan.
MAX	45		(5:00)	★★½ "Office Space" (1999)	Ron Livingston. R		★★★ "The Package" (1989, Drama)		Gene Hackman. R		★★★ "The Matrix" (1999, Science Fiction)	Keanu Reeves. R
SHOW	46		"Once a Thief: Family Business" (1998, Drama)	Ivan Sergei. R			★★½ "Beverly Hills Cop II" (1987, Comedy)		Eddie Murphy. R		Stargate SG-1	Outer Limits "The Grid"	Beggars

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

LIGHTENING STORM UNIMPRESSED BY MODERN JAZZ BANDS
BOWL OF RICE CONSIDERING GOING INTO BUSINESS FOR ITSELF.
PICKLE ACUTELY AWARE OF ITS OWN PHALLIC NATURE

Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I'M TRYING TO FIND SOMEONE WHO CAN HELP ME WITH A PAYROLL PROBLEM.
YOU'RE CLOSE. I'M THE GUY WHO FORWARDS YOUR CALL TO THE WRONG PERSON.
I'D LIKE TO SPEAK WITH YOUR SUPERVISOR.
I'LL FORWARD YOUR CALL.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

WHO'S THAT GUY?
RALPH NADER... PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE FROM THE GREEN PARTY...
...HE'S A TIRELESS CRUSADER STANDING UP TO THE MONOLITHIC INDIFFERENCE OF THE GLOBAL CORPORATE-GOVERNMENTAL PARTNERSHIP.
WHY HAVEN'T I EVER HEARD OF HIM?
...HE'S A TIRELESS CRUSADER STANDING UP TO THE MONOLITHIC INDIFFERENCE OF THE GLOBAL CORPORATE-GOVERNMENTAL PARTNERSHIP.
OH. RIGHT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

I'M SORRY THAT BUCKY BROKE YOUR GAMEBUDDY, SATCH. WE CAN GET YOU ANOTHER ONE IF YOU--
NO, NO. I DON'T WANT ONE. NEVER LIKED IT. I'M NOT A BIG FAN OF ELECTRONIC STUFF. YOU KNOW? BEEPS. BEEPS FREAK ME OUT. THEY'RE BAD. MOST TECHNOLOGY IS BAD.
WHOA, DUDE. CALM DOWN. YOU SOUND LIKE YOU LIVE IN A CABIN IN THE WOODS.
HEY! THERE'S NOTHING WRONG WITH LIVING IN THE WOODS!
SATCHEL'S THE UNABARKER.
LOWE TECH

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – In a dream the answer will come to you today. You must seize the opportunity at exactly 12:09 p.m., which is approximately the time when Chancellor Scott eats his Fruity Pebbles...hint: He likes them soggy, so compromise.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You will meet someone from your past today in Bartlett Hall. His name is Dave: he's tall with brown hair and blue eyes. He kinda looks like Brad Pitt. Remember the beautiful days when he was your imaginary boyfriend, and you had an imaginary relationship, and you had imaginary sex with him? That was H-O-T, S-E-X-Y, and G-U-M-B-Y-I-F-I-E-D.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Concentration is most important today. Hey, look, your shoelaces are untied! And the potato sack race is about to start! If I get some cotton candy will you lick it off of me?

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Mother always said not to talk to strangers, but today maybe you should talk to this "Mr. Weebles" fellow and see why he wears an eyepatch and a parrot on his shoulder.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Hi, my name is Crystal Pepsi. I used to be cool back in the days when people liked clear soda, but then people said I was "gross" and didn't buy me any more. Say hi to my friend, Mr. Now-or-Later.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Oh, I wish I had a better apartment. Let me tell you, just having a pumpkin and some leaves in the living room doesn't equal personality. If only we had lived in Sunderland...

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Fame and fortune awaits you. That will be the day you take your money off of Boston sports. I mean, Chris Shynes??? Chris Shynes???

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Thanks for the ride yesterday, Hubert. You drive so well with your big hands and the way your foot caresses the pedal...Oh! I just broke a nail.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Try your luck today by buying a scratch ticket from 7-11. If you win $1, buy another scratch ticket. If you win $5, I think buying Playboy and some slimjims isn't a bad idea, either.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Hey, lion people. You should let people hear your roar today. Roar like a crazy lion! Practice now! ROAR!! ROAR!! Ok, I'm drunk now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Charles Dickens once said, "Writing is like cupcakes. I'd love to sleep with Little Debby." Charles was a pretty fun guy when he wasn't writing crap.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Lion Rehanris says you should vote in the upcoming election. Oops! It's already over. Oh, Lion, you're always watching out for us kids and our notions. By the way, Cherry Coke isn't so good with the cherries taken out.

Amherst Weather

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 49 LOW: 29	HIGH: 43 LOW: 22	HIGH: 36 LOW: 24

Kampus Kid By Adam Souliere

Are you SERIOUS!?! How is this possible?!? I'm going to be sick!!
I feel so dirty and violated... this whole time! I can't even look at you anymore.
How long has this been going on? HOW could you POSSIBLY like N'SYNC!?!

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

I MUST HAVE BEEN CRAZY TO LET ALEX BUY FOR THE SITE. WE NOW LOOK LIKE THE WORLD'S BIGGEST E-JUNK VARS!
YEAH, WELL, THAT MAY BE BUT I JUST CRUNCHED THE NUMBERS, AND AFTER ONLY THREE MONTHS WE'RE ALREADY MAKING MONEY.
SURE-NIGHTY? YOU CAN DROP THE EFFECTIVE PEOPLE SKIRTS.
THANKS, DADDY.

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

FROOT LOOPS...EMPTY. COCOA PUFFS...EMPTY.
CHEERIOS...EMPTY. RICE CHEX...EMPTY.
GRAPE-NUTS...EMPTY. CAP'N CRUNCH...EMPTY.
I'M LIVING WITH A CEREAL KILLER. THE GRAPE-NUTS WERE HALF-GONE ALREADY.
Cheerios

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

BTW, THIS IS SATCHEL FROM THE OTHER ROOM. BUCKY DIDN'T MAKE THAT MESS IN THERE. I DID. SATCHEL BUCKY TRIED TO STOP ME. ACTUALLY-- UM, THAT'S NOT ME SAYING THAT.

Quote of the Day

"If you ever have a free moment, you might consider checking out the travel brochures for the town in which you live. You might be amazed. You might not want to live there anymore."

–Douglas Coupland

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Reuben Sandwich

Pizza
Casserole

Carrot & Onion Schine (vegetarian) (Berkshire & Worcester)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Meatball Sub (Worcester)

Beans and Rice (vegan) (Worcester)

Dinner

Sicilian Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)

Pork Chops

Baked Teriyaki Tofu (vegan)

Jamaican 3-Bean Stew (vegan)

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership

Call 545-3500 for details.

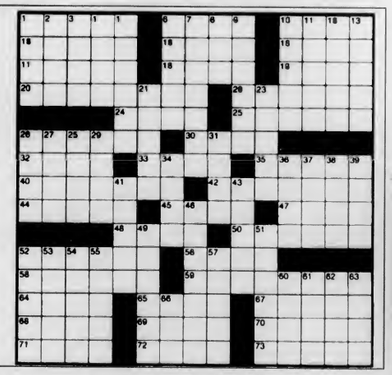
ACROSS
1 Ascend
6 Gap-filling wedge
10 Stomach problem
14 Calf-roping event
15 Hubbub
16 2000 Subway Series site
17 Embellish
18 Musical's country
19 Orchard fruit
20 "Typee" author
22 Rifler
24 Row of seats
25 Chopped
26 Warrior women
30 Cold War ABM
32 Gondolier's need
33 Lady of Spain
35 Tenderfoots
40 Outside time
42 Employer's cost
44 Phony duck, e.g.
45 Soothe
47 Japanese wrestling
48 Detroit footballer
50 Scam
52 December birthstone
58 Whirlybird inventor
61 Sikorsky
58 Lover and —
59 Go different ways
64 Bouquet
65 Sign of the future
67 Twangy
68 Small amount
69 In — of replacing
70 Ice
71 Back talk

DOWN
1 Study at the last minute
2 Mine find
3 Adored one
4 Media maven Griffin
5 Tuna's kin
6 Evening wrap
7 Smash hit
8 Spud at
9 June end July
10 Tomato jelly
11 Part of the face
12 Throw
13 Dog — shabby
21 Ronstadt or Evans
23 Robust
26 Imitated
27 Speck
28 Kim's hubby
29 Not any
31 Drains, as energy
34 Margarine
36 — Major: connestation
37 Gloomy
38 Shade trees
39 Kind of gin
41 Drip-dry fabric
43 Fable writer
46 Licorice-like flavoring
49 Shoe part
51 Horse's gait
52 Skyrockets
53 Guru's domain
54 Braves
55 Middles
57 Biological subdivision
60 Cheers
61 Sale disclaimer
62 Legend
63 Wings
66 Lease amt

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

S	P	O	T	S		S	P	E	C		I	B	E	X
L	I	V	E	N		A	L	D	O		S	A	K	E
O	C	A	L	A		L	O	G	O		E	L	E	N
B	A	L	L	P	A	R	K		C	O	L	O	G	A
			A	R	T				A	M	E	S
A	G	A	D	E		M	Y	E	S		J	O	H	N
S	O	L	A	R		P	A	Y	S		D	U	E
H	O	P	E		P	R	I	N	C	E	S	S
E	G	O			U	N	I	T	E	D
			T	A	P	E		C	R	A	D	L	E	S
G	A	Z	A		M	O	V	I	E		M	A	K	E
A	T	O	M		A	R	M		L	I	V	E
G	E	T		T	R	I	P		W	A	N	D
B	E	D		S	H	E	L	L		S	I	G	N	S

© 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor: Kristi Ceccarossi
Photo Technician: Scott Eldridge II
Copy Editor: Bryan McAllister
Production Supervisor: Roberto Delgado
Production Staff: Elana Premack, Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Friday, November 17, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Tie doesn't sit well

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

Last night's hockey game between Massachusetts and Connecticut lasted 65 minutes and no winner was decided. Unfortunately for the Minutemen they only came to play for 20 minutes and as a result narrowly escaped the William D. Mullins Center with a 2-2 tie.

A valiant third period effort by UConn bolstered the Huskies to the deadlock. Trailing 2-0 heading into the final frame, UConn had all they had on the line and battled back. It took the Huskies only 38 seconds to reverse the two-goal deficit with goals by Mike Anderson and Mike Boylan.

The goal by Anderson was the first that UMass has allowed at home since Chad McDonald scored at the 12:15 mark of the third period in the Minutemen's 4-4 tie with Colgate. The home scoreless streak lasted 184:48.

"To be down 2-0 in a visiting team's barn and come back shows a little bit of character, and it shows some hard work," UConn Head Coach Bruce Marshall said. "You need those games in the bank so you can say hey, we've done this before. [The players] start believing in themselves a little more."

"It was a character tie for us tonight," Anderson said. "We really pulled together in the third [period] and showed what we are capable of."

Anderson scored the goal that brought UConn [3-3-2, 3-1-1 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference] back to life when he tallied on a one-timer from the slot. Anderson was the beneficiary of a great centering pass by Matt Herhal from the left corner, and he made no mistake when the puck reached the tape of his stick.

Thirty-eight seconds later the Huskies would get the equalizer when they caught the Minutemen in a line change. Boylan took advantage of the odd-man opportunity as he received a pass from Eric Goclowski at the right wing boards and drove to the net and slipped a shot past a defenseless Mike Johnson for the goal.

"The old saying is that a two-goal lead is the hardest lead to hold," UMass captain Jeff Turner said.

"People are probably going to second guess [us]," UConn senior center Ciro Longobardi said. "They'll turn around and say that [UMass] didn't play its top line or they didn't take [the game] seriously. I don't know if we proved anything. I hope we did."

UConn, having played in games similar to last night's contest, raised its level of play while the Maroon and White played down to the level of its opponent. The Huskies, a team from the MAAC, which has little respect among the top four conferences in college hockey played like a team that was not afraid to lose.

"You're looking at a team [UMass] that has 18 scholarships, we have none," Longobardi said. "That is pretty good. You obviously draw more talent with money, but with a school like UConn money would help. Money makes the world go around. We have a lot of talent, but we have a lot of heart, too. If I was a coach I would take heart over talent any day."

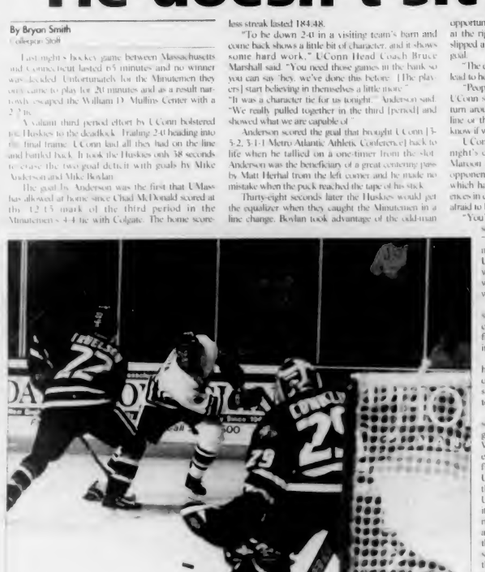
UMass, on the other hand, played a timid style of hockey. The intangibles of the game came hard for the Minutemen as they had difficulty finishing passes, getting the puck out of its own zone and completing line changes.

"We had some expectations of what should have happened tonight and it was probably obvious by the way we played that the enthusiasm and the work ethic wasn't there tonight," Turner said.

After a scoreless first period the Minutemen scored a pair of goals on the middle frame to grab the lead. The first of the Maroon and White's goals came just as power play had expired when defenseman Luke Duplessis fired a shot from the right point that beat UConn netminder Artie Imbrianno through the five-hole. Just over four minutes later, UMass would tack on another goal to double its lead as Thomas Pock found the back of the net at the end of an excellent individual effort after a Duplessis shot had been blocked from the point. From that point on the Minutemen sat back and let the game come to them, as they were unable to control the flow of the game.

"I was hoping that we would continue to get a little better as the game went on," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "We just sat on that two-goal lead and turned the

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7



JAN J. BARK/COLLEGIAN

J.R. Zavisza and the Massachusetts hockey team's 2-0 lead after two periods wouldn't be enough, as Connecticut found the net twice in the third period, sending the game to a 2-2 tie.

Round one: Iona; Mack still M.I.A.

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The question on everybody's mind is this: Can the Massachusetts men's basketball team win without its most consistent scorer and Atlantic 10 Player of the Year candidate, Monty Mack?

Well, the short answer is this: It definitely won't be easy, and the Minutemen will need someone to step up and replace the 20 points a game that Mack would be sure to provide if they are going to get the season off on the right foot with a win against the Iona Gaels at 7:00 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center.

"I'd rather that he be out there," said UMass Head Coach Bruiser Flint. "But it would be a boost to our confidence if we win. One of the most important games of the Final Four year (1998) was the game against USC because we won without Marcus (Camby)."

The most likely player to fill the suspended Mack's role will be junior Shannon Crooks, who last year averaged 11.6 points a game. Against Iona, he will play shooting guard instead of his customary point guard position, while Jonathan DePina will start in his place at the one.

Considering that no other player for the Maroon and White averaged over eight points a game last year, the pressure will be on Crooks to carry the main load of the UMass offense. One thing is for sure – he will get his chance to bomb away.

"If you are a two guard in our system then you are going to be very happy," said Flint. "You will get a lot of shots."

One area where the Minutemen look to be significantly deeper than last year is at the forward position, where newcomers Jackie Rogers, Eric Williams, Willie Jenkins and Jameel Pugh will all most likely see a considerable amount of playing time.

Combined with centers Kitwana Rhymer and Micah Brand, UMass should be able to pound the ball inside more effectively than last year's club, although the loss of Chris Kirkland to graduation, last year's second leading scorer, will hurt the offensive firepower of the Maroon and White.

In the preseason, Rogers shined, scoring 18 points against Statmaster.com, and impressed the crowd with his hustle and willingness to dive all over the floor.

"Jackie Rogers just plays hard," said Flint. "He dives, plus he tends to rebound the ball and people usually appreciate that."

The Gaels, in contrast to the Minutemen, are attempting to make a return trip to the NCAA tournament, but it won't be easy without their

Turn to MEN'S B-BALL, page 7

JARET BARK/COLLEGIAN

Ronell Blizzard hopes to spark the Minuteman defense with his shot-blocking presence in the middle on Saturday night against Iona.

UConn's effort another step forward for MAAC

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

Coming into the 2000-01 season, the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference was looking for respect from its fellow Division I hockey counterparts – the Central Collegiate Hockey Association, the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference, the Hockey East Association and the Western Collegiate Hockey Association. None of the original 10 MAAC teams had registered a win in the two-year history of the league... but there was a feeling that things were about to change.

Finally, on Nov. 4, Sacred Heart upended UAC member Cornell to earn the first win for the MAAC against the "Big Four." That victory came one night after Quinnipiac University – who had posted an overall record of 55-12-5 over the past two years – received a 58-save performance from Justin Eddy to drive St. Lawrence's Appleton Arena with a 1-1 tie.

Last night at the William D. Mullins Center, another MAAC team came ready to play against a member of one of the major Division I conference. Defending tournament champion Connecticut rallied back from a two-goal third period deficit to leave Amherst with a 2-2 tie, providing another small step on the road to legitimacy.

Prior to last night's game, the Huskies had been 0-3 this year against Hockey East teams, and 0-5 since making the move to the Division I level. And, even though UConn didn't go back to Storrs with a win, it did manage to gain some confidence about the direction of the program – from where it has come, to where it hopes it can be.

"The program has taken great strides since I've been here," UConn senior center Ciro Longobardi said. "The first year I was here, we played in an outdoor rink [as a Division III program], but sophomore year we were in a new [Division I] league that everyone doubted. Not everyone is giving out scholarships like the other four true Division I conferences are. It's kind of like we're the little fish in the big pond."

The Pioneers win over the Big Red two weeks ago proved to be a bit of a surprise. Most of the critics left the Quinnipiac would earn win No. 1 against one of the upper echelon programs in the country. However, Sacred Heart beat them to the punch before the Braves could complete the task.

Nevertheless, ties by QU and UConn over that same two-week span have proved that the MAAC isn't a one-team wonder. That should prove to be interesting come March, when the top four teams from the regular season battle it out in the conference tournament.

The past two years, Quinnipiac has rolled through the regular season only to get bounced in the tourney semifinals. The main difference for this campaign, though, is the fact that the MAAC tournament winner gets an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament, a luxury that was not present in years past.

One thing is for certain – there is a major difference in strategies between some of the top MAAC clubs. While Quinnipiac uses its explosive offensive attack to win games, UConn keeps close thanks to defense, goaltending and most importantly – heart.

The Huskies rallied back last night at a point when it seemed like they were on their way to a loss. Trailing 2-0 with under 10 minutes to play, UConn scored twice in a span of 38 seconds to silence a stunned crowd of 2,791 at the Mullins Center.

Senior co-captain Mike Anderson netted the first Huskies goal off a feed from Matt Herhal in the right-wing corner. Herhal battled two UMass players to gain control of the puck, then flipped a pass to Anderson at the left point, who beat UMass goalie Mike Johnson

Turn to HOCKSIDE, page 7

Shipp, Ayi, seniors say farewell

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

With hopes of a playoff berth gone with two blows of a referee's whistle, the Massachusetts football team will look to playout its season tomorrow when they take on Atlantic 10 opponent Rhode Island.

Tomorrow's contest will be the final game for 34 UMass seniors, including two of the best ever in Marcel Shipp and Kole Ayi.

"I am not worried about replacing them for another week," UMass Head Coach Mark Whipple said. "There will not be another guy like Marcel Shipp. Nobody would be wearing rings around here without that guy. The first scholarship I gave out was to Ayi, and he is a great football player. I have never had two guys like them anywhere I have coached."

Shipp, in his illustrious career in Amherst has rushed for 6,188 yards on a 1,179 carries. As if the senior tri-captain's totals on the ground were not enough he has posted 1,087 yards pulling down 124 catches. Shipp also has rewritten the scoring books at UMass recording 54 touchdowns and 334 total points.

Despite being hampered by a bad ankle for much of this season, the Paterson, NJ native has totaled 1,044 yards on 221 carries. Shipp has also caught 21 passes for 200 yards. He has scored eight touchdowns and has amassed 48 points.

Ayi, the frontrunner for the Buck Buchanan Award, will be competing in his final contest for UMass. The senior tri-captain has totaled 461 career tackles. The Nashua, NH native has posted 41 tackles for loss, 13 sacks and four interceptions.

After last week's devastating loss to No. 2 Delaware, 31-19, the Minutemen are looking to end the season on a high note. The team was in low spirits after the heartbreaking loss at the hands of the Blue Hens and Whipple was concerned that his team might pack it in.

"They were down on Sunday night, and were as low as I have ever seen them," Whipple said. "We just have to get them practicing and running around. Rhode Island is playing as well as they have all year. They are well coached. Our guys watched tape on them, so they are focused on Rhode Island. Finishing 7-4 is a lot better than 6-5."

UMass [6-4, 4-3 A-10] will also be looking to keep their conference record above the .500 mark.

Rhode Island [3-7, 2-5 A-10] is playing its best football as of late having won three of its last five games. Last week the Rams defeated Division I opponent UConn in Storrs, CT by a score of 26-21.

URI is led on the ground by junior running back David Jamison. The Swedesboro, NJ native has rushed for 961 yards on 205 carries. He leads the team with four rushing touchdowns.

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

Season begins with big weekend

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Let's get ready to rumble.

It all begins tonight, at 7 p.m. in the William D. Mullins Center. Head Coach Joanie O'Brien will walk onto the court for her 10th season as the leader of the University of Massachusetts women's basketball program. She'll be escorting a remarkably young team that is projected to finish fourth in the Atlantic 10. This year's team already has a lot of critics they have to silence, and the season hasn't begun yet.

"They're too young," the critics are saying. "They're too small, they're schedule is too tough." And some naysayers will tell you that this is the same team from last year. As always, time will prove if the critics are right or wrong.

UMass will take the floor featuring only one senior, point guard co-captain Kathy Coyner, and one junior, forward Caroline Nehls. The other nine players are either freshmen or sophomores, and there are four new faces donning maroon and white uniforms this year. With the loss of co-captain forward Nekole Smith, it's obvious that the younger players on this season's squad will have to learn how to play Division One college ball quickly.

The University of North Carolina at Charlotte faces off with the Minutewomen tonight in the first contest of the regular season for both teams. It seems fitting that UMass will begin its journey with the taste of revenge already on its tongue. The 49ers defeated the Maroon and White last year in their first meeting ever, 65-54, down in Charlotte.

Last season, UMass got off to a horrible start, losing it's first six, five of which were on the road. The loss of junior Smith resonates the feeling of an unexpected challenge, similar to last year's tough start, but the team has responded to the loss of Smith with the kind of aggression and determination that is evident in champions.

Nevertheless, tonight will prove to O'Brien and the UMass faithful how far this team has come, one short month into the season.

"I think we're about as prepared as we're going to get," O'Brien said. "We've been practicing for a month, and we get sick of playing against each other."

In enters Charlotte, a team that showcases preseason All-Conference USA senior point guard Tonya Phifer. The senior averaged over 13 points per contest last season and will be matched up against Coyner. The battle with Phifer will give Coyner an opportunity to show the world that she is capable of playing with the best point guards in the country.

Besides sharing senior points guards at the top of the key, both teams will feature younger players in the post. UMass will have to keep the 49ers off the boards if it wants to come out of the

Turn to WOMEN'S B-BALL, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 53 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday, November 20, 2000

Will the Grinch steal the box office? Read our review of Jim Carrey's latest block-buster in Arts.

ARTS p. 5

UMass beat Iona in its season opener Saturday night at the Mullins Center.

SPORTS p. 10

Hearing ends, SGA waits

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

After a week-long saga of personal attacks, case presentations and questioning, the Student Government Association Judiciary hearing ended Friday night with closing statements.

Speaker Jim Eltringham took the stand for the second time in a continuation of Thursday's hearing. Further questioning focused on his involvement with the number of commuter seats allotted during September's SGA elections.

President Jeff Howe questioned Eltringham specifically on the numbers received for off-campus students. He spoke about suggested documentation submitted by Advocate T.J. Roy and Eltringham claiming that there were 18,228 undergraduate students. Howe argued that these numbers were incorrect and that he had received different numbers when he asked for the exact same information. In response, Eltringham felt that his numbers were accurate, claiming that he had received the same numbers from two sources.

"The numbers presented I received from the Student Registrars Office and the Housing Assistance Office, both were phone conversations," Eltringham said. "I know that I got the best numbers that I could get with the time that I had."

In regards to documentation, Eltringham claimed that he did not have signed documentation for the two sources.

"I didn't expect to be quivering over numbers right now," Eltringham said.

Eltringham was further questioned on his official position as well his involvement with the elections themselves.

"Does it state in your job description to interpret and implement the constitution," Howe asked.

"My job is to be the Chief Presiding Officer of the SGA and help aid in the implementation of the Senate's duties," Ertringham responded.

Howe went on to question Eltringham by asking him if he felt that the Elections Commission had held up to the constitution.

"They are not in violation of the constitution and by-laws in consistency with the precedence of overturning this election," Eltringham said.

Questioning continued on the topic of the Electoral Commission, and more specifically on the fact that they did not meet with quorum prior to the elections.

Howe asked Eltringham if he knew that the Electoral Commission was going through nomination forms and if he was aware that it was an official meeting.

"It's irrelevant if it was official meeting or not because I had no way to know if it was an official meeting. I understand their workings, but not the workings of their meetings," Eltringham said.

Roy went on to cross-examine Eltringham in which he brought up issues regarding Eltringham's ability to uphold the constitution. Eltringham responded by saying that he had upheld the constitution to the best of his ability.

This lead into closing statements, where Eltringham and Roy expressed their opinions on the case.

"Those living in off campus housing are considered off campus residents," Eltringham said. "You must take into consideration whether these accusations made before you are worth enough to overturn the will of the voters."

He then went on to direct the Judiciary by explaining that he would hate to be in their shoes and have to consider these harmless errors as a means to overturning the elections.

Turn to SGA, page 3

KRISTEN SHREWSBURY'S COLLEGIAN

Chief Justice Gabriel Tavares looks on as testimony is given during Friday's SGA Judiciary hearing. The hearings came to a close Friday and a decision on the fate of the senate body is impending.

Costas lectures on future of baseball

COURTESY SUZY GORMAN

Bob Costas lectured on the future of baseball Friday afternoon at Smith College.

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Bob Costas, Marvin Miller and six other dignitaries of the baseball community spoke at Smith College on Friday afternoon on the issues of competitive balance and labor relations in Major League Baseball.

Costas, an Emmy award winning sports broadcaster, and Miller, the founder of the Major League Players Association, were joined by other panelists including Clark Griffith, a former baseball owner and lawyer, Roger Noll, economist and sports consultant, Allen Sanderson, sports economist and consultant, Randy Vataha, president of sports consulting firm and former Stanford University and New England Patriots football player, John Genzale of the Sports Business Journal and Andrew Zimbalist, economist and sports consultant.

Costas' recent book, Fair Ball, covers all of the subjects discussed in the lecture as well as others including realignment. He opened the discussion with his keynote address.

"Baseball is at somewhat of a crossroads," Costas said in the opening.

Referring to the current state of baseball in which the bigger market teams with inflated payrolls, such as the New York Yankees, seemingly have an advantage over the smaller market teams such as the Houston Astros and the Minnesota Twins, Costas cited one of the problems with baseball today.

"The owners for the most part have been somewhat bumbling and dishonest," Costas said.

He believes that something is wrong with baseball the way it is today and he believes that the fans feel the same way he does. His solutions are all laid out in his new book, although many of his peers, including Miller, do not totally agree with him.

Costas ended his address with a statement: its sole purpose was in gaining the approval of the audience.

"One owner voted against the wild card and that owner was George W. Bush," Costas said. "If you guarantee me that he will run the federal government with that type of insight, then I say call off all recounts right now."

Marvin Miller was the next formal discussant and he had no qualms about taking direct shots at Costas and his ideals.

The first point made against Costas was his idea of massive revenue sharing.

Miller made a deliberate sarcastic comment, saying, "massive revenue sharing, that's how you would solve all the problems in baseball."

The first example he gave in support of the relative ineptitude of revenue sharing had to do with franchise profits. Miller, as he would do numerous times in his speech, used statistical evidence to back his claims. He cited the fact that only three teams had actually made a profit in the last five years. Those three teams made only 75 million dollars and Miller did not see how sharing that money with 27 other teams would fix the problems in baseball.

Miller said of Costas' book, "It is an extremely readable book. The problem is I disagree with it, but it's baseball."

The next Costas ideal that Miller locked on to was the floor to ceiling cap that was proposed in Fair Ball.

The idea for a cap is not actually a new idea, as it was proposed and rejected thirty years ago. Costas also proposes salary ranges, which were rejected in 1980 before the strike in 1981.

The next Costas target is competitive balance. Miller agrees that there is no competitive balance in baseball but he argues that it has always been that way.

Miller went through every one of Costas' ideas before immediately shooting them down with a plethora of textual evidence.

The problems many observe of Miller's arguments is that he uses specific examples that can only support what he is saying, a strategy Costas finds so blatantly obvious that he must use that fact to defend his own arguments.

Miller also accuses Costas of being an advocate of shutting down the league. Costas defends himself saying that he is only a supporter of shutting it down if it leads to greater good for baseball.

Before his rebuttal, Costas showed his respect for Miller, saying, "He should be in the Hall of Fame, he is one of the three most important non- players in baseball history."

In Miller's speech, he said that there has always been a disparity in payroll, but Costas argues that now the disparity is so big that teams such as the Kansas City Royals cannot hope to compete with the likes of the

Turn to COSTAS, page 3

Pew brings changes to few; aids bio learning

By Kate Schiff
Collegian Correspondent

A $200,000 grant was awarded to the University of Massachusetts on Tuesday, Oct. 3 by the Pew Grant Program in Course Redesign.

The money from the grant will be used to improve technology and increase student participation in the introductory biology courses at the University.

After a rigorous and competitive application process, UMass was one of 10 schools selected for the grant based on its readiness for technology, large introductory courses and ability to demonstrate that the grant would aid student learning, as well as reduce university costs.

According to Biology Professor Randy Phillis, the Pew Grant will not create instantaneous and drastic changes in the introductory courses, but rather contribute to "the progression of changes" that have been implemented in the biology department over the last several years.

Phillis, along with professors Steve Brewer, Steve Goodwin and Introductory Biology Coordinator Elizabeth Connor, will be orchestrating the redesign of Biology 100 and 101. These changes primarily revolve around the departments "Learning Goals for Undergraduate Majors," which were developed and implemented in 1998.

"What we are doing," says Professor Phillis, "is changing from expecting students to be memorizing facts about biology to understanding the logic of biological systems and using that knowledge to analyze biological problems."

In 1998, the biology department began using ClassTalk, an interactive medium for students, which had been brought to campus classrooms by Bill Gerace of the Physics department in the mid-1990s. Using a general-purpose calculator, students plug into a networked computer system which is linked to a terminal where the teacher receives student responses to problems posed during class.

Elizabeth Connor explained that the network is beneficial to both students and professors.

"Students log in at the beginning of class and work in groups of two to four to answer questions I pose," said Connor. "After a few minutes, the answers are sent in and color coded on the teacher screen and I know how to proceed from there."

Although ClassTalk has received positive feedback from the majority of the students using it, the number one complaint is that it can take up a lot of class time.

Rachel Dunn, a junior biology major who took BIO 101 in the spring of 1999, summed up her sentiment by saying that ClassTalk wasted time during the lecture because it wasn't working properly.

"Sometimes I waited up to 20 minutes for the teacher to get set up," said Dunn.

Heather Walker, a senior biology major, took BIO 101 in 1998 when ClassTalk was initially instituted by the biology department.

"I liked that it gave me a good idea of what to expect on the exams and that it brings you together with other people in the class so you can help each other out," said Walker. "But it took a lot of time away from the lecture and there was a lot of chaos in the beginning of class."

The Pew Grant will help to streamline ClassTalk and resolve content issues both for teachers and for students. Brewer explained some of the changes that the Pew Grant will facilitate in the introductory biology courses.

"[The grant] will provide students with 'pre-lecture preparation' resources on the web. Students will consult a web-page prior to class that includes announcements, a reading assignments, learning resources [such as] figures, diagrams and animations and an on-line quiz that must be completed prior to attending the lecture," Brewer said. "The goal is for students to come to class with an increased level of preparation, which will allow us to discuss topics at a more sophisticated level."

Professor Goodwin's current section of BIO 100 is acting as the guinea pig course for the pre-lecture preparation web page.

Rachael Pollina, a sophomore environmental science major, is in that class and looks favorably at ClassTalk and the web page.

"I really like it. I look forward to taking the quizzes. It makes me do the reading because the quizzes are graded before class," said Pollina. "You really have to know it, not just memorize it, and the explanations for the quiz questions really help a lot."

That kind of active learning is concurrent with the learning goals held by the department, and have motivated many of the past, present and future changes in the biology curriculum. Some future changes students can expect to see are: the expansion of the pre-lecture preparation web-page to other biology courses as well as the introduction of ClassTalk into general genetics in 2001 as well as other courses in the department.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Brushstrokes
Artist Bob Klem shows off his work to one of his fans yesterday in Amherst center.

Whoop-ing, there it is; Cough plagues Campus

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

A half a dozen cases of pertussis (whooping cough) were confirmed last week by the University of Massachusetts Health Services, with five of the six occurring to students in residence halls and one to a staff member.

According to information provided by Health Services, the disease, which is caused by bacteria, often affects infants and young children, but can cause problems for adults as well.

Anne Lardner, a public health nurse for UHS, commented in a statement that pertussis typically begins with typical flu-like symptoms. These can include a runny nose, a dry cough, low-grade fever and sneezing.

The next stage occurs within two weeks of the onset of the first symptoms. The cough becomes severe and is often accompanied by episodes of frequent coughing that are often followed by a high-pitched whoop. When the illness progresses into uncontrollable coughing, it often results in vomiting or a thick clear mucous discharge.

This stage can last for four to six weeks, with coughing spells occurring most often at night. Between coughing spells it is possible for no other symptoms to be present, and adults or partially immunized children often suffer from a milder form of the illness.

Lardner explained germs that live in the nose, mouth and throat and enter the air when a person sneezes or coughs cause pertussis. Symptoms can show up as soon as one week or as late as 21 days after exposure.

Although most children are vaccinated against the illness when they are in kindergarten, the effects of the vaccine wanes over time and adolescents and adults become susceptible to the illness. Antibiotics can be administered to those in close contact with confirmed cases in order to prevent further illness.

"Pertussis occurs worldwide and peaks every two to five years," Lardner said in a statement. "In Massachusetts, it usually peaks between October and December."

Some of the consequences of pertussis may include pneumonia, middle ear infection, loss of appetite, dehydration, seizures, encephalopathy (disorders of the brain), apneic episodes (brief cessation of breathing) and death.

Anyone experiencing symptoms of whooping cough or who has come in recent contact with someone who has needs to contact a healthcare provider to be treated or placed on antibiotics.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Pizza Pies

Junior Dave Click takes some time off to enjoy some pizza from Antonio's this weekend.

Bush supporters await Florida vote certification in counties

By Justin Silverman
Daily Orange (Syracuse U.)

(U-WIRE) WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Snowflies in Florida. It does not walk between countries, slowing for media to catch up in coverage. It does not give warning to residents who plan rallies in its protest.

In this state election melee when political power and discretion exchange hourly with the latest court ruling, the only news constantly discussed is whether or not a manual ballot recount should begin.

On Thursday night, the count commenced. To supporters of Gov. George W. Bush that afternoon, however, the news came not in ballot numbers but with about 700 protesters who forced a street closing outside the county's Emergency Operations Center.

A chorus of "God Bless America" welcomed Palm Beach resident Doris Coryea as she arrived at the center with her son, Rich Sanders. The two joined the week's largest Republican rally, greeting fellow residents, most of whom only decided Thursday to become vocal, Coryea said.

Republican Secretary of State Katherine Harris, who denied Wednesday the certification of manual recounts, needs support now more than ever before, Coryea explained.

"She has the Constitution and the state of Florida behind her," Coryea said. "It is too bad that the Democrats are trashing her like they are."

Three days after the Rev. Jesse Jackson led about 4,000 supporters of Vice President Al Gore in a mid-afternoon prayer and plea for a county vote hand count, few Democrats were present Thursday at the center.

The Gore campaign, arguing a weaker case, shipped the reverend to Florida to provide a spark, one not available Thursday at the center, Sanders said.

"He is nothing but a rabble-rouser," Sanders said of Jackson. "He should be arrested for inciting a riot."

Coryea's car displays two stickers. One showing support for Long Island Rep. Rick Lazio, who recently lost a U.S. senatorial bid to First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, and another calling for a Bush-Dick Cheney administration.

Evident in Thursday's rally, Coryea said, is that Republicans are more common than Jackson's visit allowed to be seen.

"They've been there, they just haven't come out," she said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Mondays through Fridays during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenue generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the Collegian Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broad sheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 week days between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perreault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Tramble Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Janet Burr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Magerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA
The Largest Movie Theatre In Hampshire County!
OPENS FRIDAY!
FEATURING
• 2 Box Offices
• 2 Concession Stands
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens
Coca-Cola Celebrates The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!
Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Cruisin

Skateboarders may be forced to trade in their skateboards for snowboards later on this week.

SGA

continued from page 1

"The Senate as it stands right now was elected for their seats by the constituents, their constituents put them in those positions to represent them," Eltringham said. "That does not preclude any of the actions, but it certainly makes consideration of any action."

Roy went on to speak about that electoral flaws and a persons right to equal choice and vote.

"From the evidence that has been presented so far, this process was obviously flawed," Roy said. "In this case, we've watched the Elections Commission name the defendant, but never once have they been served or was anyone been named in there capacity and I find that questionable."

"From the petitioners' argument: we who are members of an organization that has certain beliefs cannot represent the commuter district as a whole. That is nonsense," Roy said. "It's the same as saying that a lewish man cannot represent a Catholic man, a black man cannot represent a white man. It's the same whack logic."

Howe and Central at large Senator Rebecca Austern presented their opinions focusing specifically on aspects of the constitution, which they claim were violated. They also focused on the issues of representation and how classifying one another is not what they are trying to do.

"We have shown you 13 alleged violations within the constitution and its by-laws. These were not procedural violations," Howe said. "The Senate, yes on the surface represents the same as before, but no one should be classified by RSO, by where they live or their geographical residence, but be presented to the student body as a whole."

Howe went on to talk about the Senate as a whole. He regarded it as being in the poorest form and explained his opinion on what actions the Senate needs to take.

"Looking now at our Senate as it is now composed, we have one commuter resident, and 33 residing in University of Massachusetts non-residential hall on campus living," Howe said. "That in its purist form is eloquently a misrepresentation and violation of our constitution. This represents our body in the poorest form."

The issue of the Elections commission was also discussed as Howe and Austern looked at what aspects could have made this election different.

"We should have taken the time when the elections were originally ratified and had a person look at the numbers before that day," Howe said. "Both of the last elections were violated as well and we had time to do what was right."

Chief Justice Gabriel Tavares closed the evening with a personal comment directed towards both parties.

"It makes me sick two the extent that this has become a personal issue within the SGA. Emails, disgusting statements, I don't see how you let any of that threw," Tavares said. "I'm saddened today by the way the SGA has gone. There has been a lot of petty bitching. But this needs to stop and you need to make motions and start affecting the lives of students in a positive manor."

Although the Judiciary hearing was completed, the decision has yet to be made by the Judiciary.

Retractions

In the Nov. 16 issue of the Daily Collegian, Sheila Tunney was incorrectly quoted as saying "All Greeks live in boxes." The remark should have been attributed to Juliet Okafor.

In the Nov. 7 Daily Collegian, the cheerleaders pictured on the front cover at the Nader rally were incorrectly labeled both "rebel cheerleaders" and "girls." Although they are rebellious, their official title is "Radical Cheerleaders" and they prefer the gender neutral term "kids."

Costas

continued from page 1

Yankees. Costas says that in the 1970's luck and tenacity can make up for the disparity but now the gap is just too large.

"There is an obvious competitive imbalance in the game; the game would be better if steps were taken to correct it," Costas said to end his rebuttal.

Roger Noll opened the second session with another attack on Costas' ideas. The economist noted that Costas' proposed cap would not be effective because teams would not have the ability to recover from an injury bug. For example, if the Yankees lost their two best players for the year, with the cap they would not be able to afford replacements.

According to Noll, "it is in the interest of all of baseball to have good teams in New York."

He also was adamant about the fact that "baseball does not have a financial problem."

Noll believes that the solution for baseball's problems lies in player salaries.

"The problem in re-engineering baseball is that it is a business and that is why you must suppress player salaries," Noll said.

After fellow economists Sanderson and Zimbalist reiterated what Noll said, Costas offered a final word to the afternoon's discussion.

Once again he stressed how important it is for teams to be on a relatively even playing field. He also mentioned that he thinks most baseball fans realize that something is "out of whack" in the game today.

In his mind competitive balance is essential because it means, "each team would have a reasonable chance to win."

"My objective has been to bring some of these issues to a mainstream audience," Costas said.

And through his appearance at Smith, Costas feels that he has accomplished that goal.

YOUR AD HERE

Another valuable lesson learned from Hollywood: 14 of 74

Everyone speaks English. Especially Russians.

Introducing Nibblebox.com. Tomorrow's entertainment today.
Log on for original episodic shows, interactive entertainment, and the best of college radio created by college students with help from people like John Leguizamo (actor, Summer of Sam), Doug Liman (director, Swingers and Go), and Amy Heckerling (director, Clueless). Because while it's fun making cynical comments about entertainment clichés, it's more fun to see what students are actually doing about it.
nibblebox.com
digital entertainment in short, tasty bytes.

Peer Health Education

What would tick you off?
Having unprotected sex and...
❒ A. Contracting an STI.
❒ B. Getting Pregnant.
❒ C. Knowing you could have prevented it.

Get Involved
Make a Difference
Earn 6 credits

Take Com HL 213, Peer Health Education, A 2 semester course that proactively addresses public health issues at UMass.

Call the Health Education Department during pre-registration at 577-5181 to make an appointment to discuss enrollment with students and instructor.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

In Time for the Holidays: Thanksgiving Advice

The holidays are once again upon us, and while they bring with them the traditional joys of family and food, we must realize that there are pitfalls to be avoided which come with the onset of these special days.

Everyone's going to go home for Thanksgiving, but no one has to be unduly hasty in their leaving. In your lust to get the hell away from UMass, don't forget that the last day of classes is Wednesday. It is true that skipping classes right around now has a certain appeal to it – you get to go home early, or sleep in, or spend some extra time packing. The negatives, however, clearly outweigh the positives in this circumstance.

Teachers know that you want to get out, which is why some of them cancel classes outright. Others, though, want to send a message that learning comes before all, and that slacking entails a price. There will be quizzes, some scheduled, but mostly those of the infamous 'pop' variety. Grades will suffer as a result of missed classes this week – of this you can be sure. Also, even in classes where there are no graded assignments, you can be sure that your professors will be watching. Those who show up will get crazy mind brownie points and a little extra leeway as the semester goes on, you can be sure. Professors can deny this up and down, but the truth remains that going to class, even if nothing happens, gets you ahead.

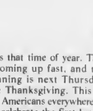
Also, remember that the dorms close at 6 p.m. on Wednesday. You have to be gone by then, or all hell will break loose and you don't even want to know what will happen to you. Still, don't rush – remember that you will not be allowed back into the dorm after that fateful hour, no matter when the reason. In other words, if you forget your winter coat, then you're going to be cold until Sunday...but you can probably live with that. If you forget your heart pills... perhaps you actually can't live with that. So, be very careful about what you do and don't bring, but leave nothing behind that you cannot do without. Some simple prior planning about when you're leaving and what you have to take can solve so very many headaches in the long run.

Lastly, and this is probably the most important If the least immediate, enjoy your break. When you come back, finals, papers, and insanity are going to crack down hard. The stress of Christmas is going to descend like the darkness of midnight. Thanksgiving break is your last real chance to get some relaxing in before the madness of the end of the semester begins.

Take time to see your friends from high school. Check in with your family, for at least a little while. Sleep in every day. Eat yourself to death on Thanksgiving, and don't regret it the next day. It only makes sense that you will want to make the most of your break, but the absolute best thing you can do is simply to relax. It will be your last chance for quite a while.

In short, go to class, get out of here on time, bring everything you need and have some fun while you're gone. When you return, rededicate yourself to having a productive and GPA-positive semester, at least until the next batch of holidays springs up.

Spring Up



CAROLYN DONG

The "American dream" of upward mobility and reward applies only to a chosen few. While our culture makes it "appear" so attainable, those born without the right color skin or in the wrong economic situation remain at the bottom of the capitalistic pile. In our own society where we pride ourselves in being so technologically advanced, well educated and politically correct, there are inherent and profound inequalities. As a citizen of this country, I am aware that poverty exists in the world, yet I still have little concept of what this means. How can I hope to change or improve a world of which I have so little understanding?

The Alternative Spring Break class (ASB), a student-run and student-led service learning course through the anthropology department at UMass, helped me begin clarify the questions of equality and social justice and given me the opportunity to explore these issues more in depth.

In particular, one of the concepts I have often examined is my definition of charity. When I donate clothes or food to an organization, I consider that charity. I do not interact with the people who will use these items, so the giving is mostly for my own gain. However, I do not believe that an act of charity should be considered less than noble. Sharing our wealth with one another helps build a sense of community and in a material world people can benefit in receiving material things.

On the other hand, I do not believe that charity should be confused with service learning. Aristotle once said that "what we learn to do, we learn by doing." No matter how much money is given or how many clothes are donated, the lessons from connecting with real people remain essential. When service involves social interaction, there is potential for everyone involved to benefit from the exchange.

The Alternative Spring Break curriculum is centered upon the basic concept of grassroots community development. Grassroots organizations rely on local knowledge, theology and direction. Such organizations work towards effecting social change for the common good of the community. For successful development there must be continuity and commonality among the people. While outside resources and influences may help initiate or enhance a community's grassroots development, it is from the people that the true heart of a movement stems.

Without question, the event that made these issues real and pertinent was my spring break trip down to Caroline County, Virginia. I even now I distinctly remember standing before a shack of a home and seeing the bowing roofline, crumbling foundation, and yard littered with used baby diapers and broken appliances. Not a quarter mile down the road stood a neat, well-painted house with a two-door garage. It angered and frustrated me to think that this neighbor did not help out a woman and her two small children living in the disintegrating shanty right next door. The more I looked at the affluent house, the more I saw my own home, my own life and my own indifference. I could far too easily be that neighbor.

How frustrating it is to be faced with such apparent economic dichotomy and social inequality. Upon my return from Virginia, I was left with more questions than answers. After spending a semester discussing the idealized model of a grassroots community, the imperfect reality made me question our presence in Caroline County. What right did we, as New England college-educated students, have to enter a community and impose our concepts and ideals on the local people?

We visited these communities to learn and to experience. We do not go down to Virginia to change the world or bring together a community. The trip and the curriculum were about changing perspectives and experiencing different cultures and belief systems. It was about taking back what we learned in the classroom and over spring break and applying that knowledge to our everyday lives.

Each step we take is one step closer to creating social change or inciting social justice. Throughout the process we are constantly learning from one another through both the successes and the failures. We learn to see the world from different perspectives. Experiencing lessons first hand are what grounds our theories in reality (or refutes them completely, as the case may be) and this kind of education is what makes learning so fascinating. By working hands-on, we experience the reality of our situations and by making the effort to get involved we become active participants in the game of life. Each experience we undergo adds another lens to our broadening perspective of the world. Every action we undertake is another thread in the complex web of the human connection.

[If you would like to participate in Alternative Spring Break 2001, information and applications are available at the People's Market, Hillel House, United Christian Foundation, the CSL office in Goodell and the UACT office in Machmer 212.]

Carolyn Dong is a UMass student

The case against markets

CHRIS MASTERJOHN

When 75,000 or so people descended on the streets of Seattle last year to confront the World Trade Organization, progressive and radical movements were blessed with an enormous amount of momentum that has forced otherwise-ignored vital issues into mainstream consciousness, brought thousands of new people into movements for positive change and energized those already committed to change. Likewise, the Nader campaign carried that momentum, also bringing in thousands more people into the Green Party, and other movements, spawning a plethora of Green Party locals and connecting the issues of corporate-globalization and the WTO that those in Seattle rose with the IMF and World Bank that those in the streets of DC rose with the myriad other issues of the campaign: corporate power in general, the electoral system, the Drug War, the prison-industrial complex, anti-labor laws, health care, and the list goes on.

Those of us who protested the WTO or the IMF and World Bank, and those of us who worked on the Nader campaign, challenged the fundamental values that, in truth, are the pillars of capitalism, and were only one small step away from challenging capitalism itself. We said human rights are more important than corporate rights, capitalism says you have no rights except the right to whatever you can gain in a free and competitive market. We said "human need, not corporate greed," but capitalism remunerates wealth according to property and power, regardless of human need. We said we should care about the Third World and whether they can eat and live a decent life; capitalism says we care about ourselves and our own individual advancement.

I believe a serious case can be made that capitalism, and markets in general, are vile systems themselves, and inferior to what is possible. We should oppose capitalism itself, not only because of this, but because it is in the short-term and long-term interest of other causes more immediately attainable. If we manage to win the reforms we now seek, if we do not root out the concentrations of power that have produced the conditions we are fighting against, what gains we make now will only be torn apart in the future. Moreover, if those in power see a movement growing that seeks to challenge not only specific policies they make but their elite status and position of power itself, they will be more likely to make concessions in order to pacify the movement. We can see this from our recent history – just look at the 30s and 60s, where so many of our gains have been made, which are now being steadily eroded.

So here are a few key reasons—not all of them, of course—to oppose market systems:

1.) Markets are horribly inefficient in allocating resources. OK, so this runs counter to everything you've ever been told. But consider this: since profit is dependent on selling as much as possible, there is a great incentive to use resources to manipulate demand through advertising. One out of every six dollars in the US is spent on advertising. The market has allocated an entire SIXTH of our resources towards a thoroughly unproductive activity! Those resources could have been spent on producing more goods, providing better health care, giving aid to Third World countries, or simply reducing the workload of the American people. And if the advertising was needed to produce the demand for products, then the resources that went into producing those products themselves could have gone towards producing things people actually wanted in the first place, or again, could have just reduced the workload of American workers.

2.) Market prices do not take "externalities" into account, and therefore reproduce socially and environmentally damaging conditions. "Externalities" are social costs or benefits that do not individually impact the buyer or seller in a market transaction and therefore are not reflected in the market price of the good or service. For example, conventional agriculture causes horrible destruction of the environment, from pesticide runoff to soil erosion and on down the list. But these are social costs. It isn't the buyer or seller individually who ends up with the cancer, the foods with depleted mineral content, or whatever costs may come. And so when you go to buy food at the grocery store, the organic food, which doesn't cause these harms, is up to two or three times as expensive! If the social costs and benefits of the food were reflected in the price, as they should be, organic foods would be cheaper than conventional foods. So market prices actually encourage environmental destruction, sweatshop labor, and so on, because the market price reflects these conditions as gains in efficiency.

3.) Markets suppress diversity. When you turn on the radio, what do you hear? Well, for the most part, on commercial radio stations (which is about all you can get when you're not in a college town), there's a good deal of stations that come in that have just about three general formats: there's the classic rock stations, the modern soft rock stations, and the modern hard rock stations (sometimes you can find country). Where's the punk, the classical, the reggae, the world music, the jazz? It's few and far between on commercial radio stations. That's because markets define what gets heard by what's profitable. It doesn't mean no one listens to it. Just not quite enough to turn a profit. There's plenty of space for it on the stations, but if investors can make more money opening yet a second hard rock station in an area, they'll forsake diversity for profit.

4.) Markets inherently produce hierarchical divisions of labor. Capitalism is supposed to be about freedom and democracy, right? So we're told. But look around you. Check out the average workplace. It's top-down. The workers have no say in, well, anything. The workers take orders from the boss, the boss takes orders from the bigger boss, and the bigger boss takes orders from the even bigger boss, up to the CEO whose job is to make the workers serve the shareholders. Markets favor businesses like these over democratically run workplaces. Why? Because it's more "efficient." In other words, if you have a top-down order where those in managerial positions are rewarded with decent pay and working conditions, they are free to impose oppressive conditions on workers, saving resources for something more important like advertising. But it's hard for workers to oppress themselves. We saw this in the old Yugoslav "market socialism" economy, where democratically run workplaces deteriorated into capitalist-style modes of operation, because firms that chose to operate capitalistically would out-compete others, who in turn would have to hire business managers to impose the necessary reduced working conditions, while receiving enough pay to shield themselves from the discomfort their decisions caused.

5.) Markets produce inequitable outcomes. For example, the top one percent of households in the US own about as much financial wealth than the bottom 95 percent. Some people say that markets reward creativity, innovation, and hard work, but they're—and this is a matter of fact, not opinion—dead wrong. Markets only directly reward property and power. Sometimes it takes innovation, creativity, or hard work to accrue property or power, or sometimes it just takes inheritance, low interests rates (for workers!), high interest rates (for bosses),a union, union-busting, manipulation, deception, or just plain luck. In fact, most innovators are simply rewarded with high salaries or royalties, while the big profits are reaped by the shareholders who happen to "own" the company that produces the good. Who makes more money, the author or the CEO and shareholders of the publishing company? In any case, people should be rewarded for the effort they expend, not the power they accrue. People that are forced to work in the worst conditions should get paid the most, not the least. Better yet, work should be divided more equitably and higher education should be a basic right for all people, so no one is left to a life of onerous work.

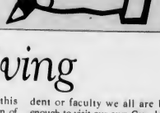
What can we do about it? Even with these horrible flaws pointed out, many will say there is no alternative that isn't worse, or some would simply say that these problems are unavoidable without infringing on the rights of the individual. But I believe there are valid, superior, alternatives to markets that preserve privacy and the freedom of the individual far better than does capitalism, while also operating on cooperative, democratic, non-hierarchical, equitable values. But I'll save that for next time.

Chris Masterjohn is a UMass student.

LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
HOW CAN YOU BE HAPPY WHEN I'M SAD?
HOW CAN YOU BE CHEERFUL WHEN I'M CHEERLESS?
HOW CAN YOU SMILE WHEN I'M FROWNING?
HOW CAN YOU STAND EXPERIENCING JOY WHEN I MOPE IN THE DARK?
HOW CAN YOU HAVE FUN WHEN I HAVE NO FUN?
HOW CAN YOU BE HAPPY & GUILTY WHEN I'M DEPRESSED?
HOW CAN YOU MAKE EVERY STUPID STEP WHEN I'M HOPELESS?
HEY, I'M MISERABLE TOO.
NOW WE'RE GETTING SOMEWHERE.

WRITE FOR ED-OP
WRITE FOR ED-OP
WRITE FOR ED-OP

A take on Thanksgiving



ETHAN BERGERON

It's that time of year. The holidays are coming up fast, and the official beginning is next Thursday. That's right: Thanksgiving. This is the day when Americans everywhere get together to celebrate the first harvest shared with the Native Americans. In return for the gifts of corn and vegetables, we thanked them, in that special American way, with small pox and a nice new place to live called a reservation. This is the perfect reason to go out to your local market, buy a farm raised fat bird and cook it for what seems like three days. The wafting smell of basting juices will soon fill the kitchen and nostrils of the campus's population. This seems like a good time to review what there is to give thanks for this year, and the blessings are plenty.

First, let me say I am glad that democracy has triumphed and we as a nation have come together to elect a leader. America is truly a land of dreams: the people can get together and have their voices ring from the purple mountain majesty. Oh, that's right, we still don't have a president. The two self-interested "candidates" are too busy filing motion to appeal and declaring themselves the winner. I cannot predict who will take the oath of office on January 20th, but I can tell you who lost – the country. This whole fiasco has been so stocked full of outlandish occurrences that I'm waiting for Warren Christopher to come out and announce that they have just resurrected Abraham Lincoln to over see the recounts in Florida. After all, he was a Democrat. Why not? Honest Abe could catch a plane (after we explained the nature of air travel) from Illinois to Florida and get his hands in the manual recount. It would be great to watch the great emancipator try to deal with all the spin doctoring and eighty page legal briefs, then go out in front of the press pool and field questions. This is about the only way I'm going to become interested in the outcome of this "race." I put race in quotation marks because a race would imply a speedy tempo and a finish, and this election seems to have neither.

How about giving thanks that here in Massachusetts we spend more money per person on lottery and scratch tickets then any other state in the union. Put yourself on the back the next time you roll the dice with a two-dollar fat cash ticket. Breathe deeply as you search your pocket for a penny to remove the hidden treasure just waiting to be discovered under the silver cloud of destiny. Maybe you can't wait until you find that penny or nickel and the fingernail will have to satisfy the gambler in your blood. As the first box reveals a six your heart pumps faster, on to box two, oh dear God another six. Now your only one six away from all the Budweiser you can drink and the realization of all your armchair quarterback fantasies. Savor this moment, and as you skim the skin of that last box which is sure to fulfill your dreams... oh no, a joker. Know that the joker is the Massachusetts state lottery commission laughing at you. I only bring this up because the lottery is the largest scam mistaken for a savior in modern culture. If the lottery were privately run, the government would have found a method to shut it down decades ago. Just look at the placement of the lottery machines and scratch tickets; they're in convenience stores and markets. These are the places where the populace has that extra dollar because they just broke a ten or five buying milk. Now they stop, either junior receives the change for lunch money tomorrow, or I could risk it Vegas style on a three-dollar "Stepping Up". This is the moment where we, as a society, should walk out and keep our money, because there is no quick fix to life's issues. People seem to believe that the state wants to make people rich; I assure you this is not the case. In keeping with our theme, let's give thanks to all the times we hung on to our money and let it ride, instinct silent. Remember the next time you have the desire to give money to someone, don't give it to the state, mail it to me care of The Daily Collegian. I promise I will put it good use.

Enough sarcasm. There are boundless fields to be thankful for. Whether you fit in the category of professor, student or faculty we all are blessed enough to visit our own Camelot called the University of Massachusetts each week. As I approach the end of my journey through the beautiful world of undergraduate studies, I realize how incredible the time here is. College, regardless of the occasional struggles, has been a fast-paced, white knuckled ride of all-encompassing knowledge. Give thanks that the opportunity to grow, experiment and experience young adulthood in a safe cross section of society has presented itself. As you return to your families to enjoy the roasted bird and pumpkin pie, remember that this place has altered you. Give thanks in the Cape Cod lounge, Southwest and the SOM as you pick up this paper, I assure you people have worked hard to make sure enjoyment and knowledge are part of your Daily Collegian. I can also guarantee all those persons who bust to get this printed are thankful to our readers Without you our words would just float around campus trapped under bushes and live in the bottom of recycling containers. I would like to give thanks to my audience because without you, I have no voice. So attend the next few days of classes, get on your sky trains and go home, relax, listen to Uncle whoever talk about whatever it is he talks about every year and give thanks for these times, they are passing rapidly. Happy Thanksgiving, UMass!

Ethan Bergeron is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY RON BATZDORF

Jim Carrey's portrayal of Dr. Seuss' Grinch is nothing short of spectacular. He adds imaginative energy and improvised comedy to an already exciting character.

The UMass Index
UMASS Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
OCTOBER 23RD-27TH
Make your appointment now by calling
1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or
Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

Every Who should rejoice

DR. SEUSS' HOW THE GRINCH STOLE CHRISTMAS
[Directed by Ron Howard with Jim Carrey, Taylor Momsen, Jeffrey Tambor, and Clint Howard]
Playing at Mountain Farms Four

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

It took the collaboration of Jim Carrey and Ron Howard to bring Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas to the big screen. It also took enough makeup artists, set designers and props to fill a small country. There was no getting around the fact that the film was enormously hyped. However, there is always the ultimate question of whether or not it will stand the test of critical analysis.

Deep down to the core of it, The Grinch is a story of a tactless villain who can only change his attitude through the innocence of childhood happiness. The tale has been honored throughout time from generation to generation. Even the thought of turning it into a film creates a tense stream of determination and poise.

One of the biggest challenges with The Grinch was turning a short television special and even shorter book into a ninety-minute film. Much of the added effect comes from tremendously glamorous visual effects and extended musical numbers. A lot of the added story does relatively nothing for the plot. The new content inserted into the narrative includes an explanation for why the Grinch lives on top of a mountain. It is told that an awful childhood love experience resulted in his self-banishment from and hatred toward the town of Whoville.

The Grinch's love interest, Martha May Whovier, played by Christine Baranski, spent her whole life involved with Jeffrey Tambor's character, the Mayor of Whoville. Brilliant as usual, Tambor brings an added villain to Seuss classic which actually brings a conflict to the fable's message. However, the writers do a nice job overshadowing the Mayor's nastiness with a much more important character development by the Grinch.

Jim Carrey was, and remains the absolute best actor alive to portray The Grinch. He has the ability to add depth to a character that is already filled with raw emotion and hostility. Carrey clearly had a huge role in the writing of the script. Much like his previously comedic characters, Carrey has a very unique style of humor. Though he is buried underneath mounds of make up and pounds of costume, Jim Carrey is easily identified. The one problem that he does produce is developing a quality accent for the character. Throughout most of the film, his words are mutilered and he is very difficult to understand. Children will have an awful time trying to pay attention.

Perhaps Carrey's best addition to the film is his singing of "You're a Mean One Grinch." The easily recognized song has extra added humor just based on the fact that it is Jim Carrey performing it.

The introduction of Taylor Momsen as Little Cindy Lou Who brings a very gifted child actor to a wealth of talented adults. She even gets a chance to display her singing talents in a rendition of "Christmas, Who Can't I Find You."

Though the film was masterfully directed and immensely enjoyable, it was not without its faults. The plot dragged on quite a bit, and would certainly be dead without Carrey's enormous presence. There is also a part in the film when a taxi will not stop for the Grinch, and he shouts, "It's because I'm Green, isn't it?" Whether racism has an appropriate place in How the Grinch Stole Christmas is extremely questionable. Also to make light of a problem that has plagued minorities for centuries in a children's film is simply unacceptable.

All of the promotion for the film definitely paid off. It brought in an incredible $55.1 million at the box office this weekend. That is the second biggest opening of the year behind Mission: Impossible 2, and by far the best first weekend for any film Carrey or Ron Howard film. It is also the largest non-sequel and the fifth highest opening ever. Only Star Wars: Episode I: Mission: Impossible 2, Jurassic 2 and The Lost World: Jurassic Park had better premier weekends.

The Grinch will face some healthy competition this Wednesday when the Disney films 102 Dalmations and Unbreakable hit the market. Regardless of quality, there will be a plethora of family films to keep audiences entertained throughout the upcoming holiday. Along with those three films, then is Rugrats in Paris which was well deemed last weekend by a thrashing from The Grinch.

Definitely spend a few hours this weekend while you're home checking out Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas. If not for the fulfillment of a new twist on a holiday classic, then see it for the simple reason that it is much better than any of the worthless crap that the American public has been tortured with all year.

COURTESY RON BATZDORF

The Grinch made 55 million dollars at the box office this weekend. The tally was the fifth highest opening weekend ever.

Theater Guild looks for lovability though Sweet Charity production

SWEET CHARITY
Bowker Auditorium
Nov. 18

By Kristi Ceccarossi
Collegian Staff

The UMass Theater Guild brought the story of a dance hall hostess looking for love to Bowker Auditorium this weekend in their production of the Cy Coleman musical Sweet Charity.

With the predictable elements of a Coleman musical and a Theater Guild production, Sweet Charity provided two-and-a-half hours of simple entertainment to the audience member seeking a blatant disregard of reality.

Despite being a woman of ill repute, Charity, in her excessive naivete or optimism, pursues happiness in relationships with disinterested or cold men. While her dance hall friends are resigned to their profession and low-end lives in circa 1950 New York City, Charity remains painfully hopeful.

By the end of the show it seems like she's found what she's looking for in Oscar Linquist, the archetypal lovable dork. But in an odd turn of Neil Simon's script, Oscar calls his and Charity's wedding off and leaves her just as indifferently as everyone else has just before the curtain comes down.

Directed by Kristin Stewart, Sweet Charity, like too many Theater Guild productions, relied heavily on over-acting and cheap humor to appeal to its audience. But given the tenor of the musical, this approach to performance was more acceptable in Sweet Charity than it has been in others.

Leading the cast in an unfortunately one-dimensional portrayal of the title role, Jessi Calantropo as Charity did a fine job being ridiculously happy but failed to alter her mood or facial expression at all throughout the length of the show. Though she deserves applause for her consistency, Calantropo would have fared better to notice subtle changes in her character at least once in a while.

Jon Goldman as Vittorio Vidal, international film star who picks Charity, literally, off the street when his date, Ursula (Melissa Spinks) walks out on him, exemplified the Guild's tendency towards amateur histrionics. Although the audience found his delivery of every line as a melodramatic soap star humorous, it reeked of high school theater. His counterpart Ursula was played wonderfully by Spinks, however, and left one disappointed that her role didn't allow for more stage time.

Charity's main love interest, the jittery and introverted Oscar, was played endearingly by Josh Funk. If better directed, perhaps, Funk might have secured a hold on the role as he illustrated obvious talent, but not enough confidence in what he was doing.

Highlighting the cast vocally and with their noticeably more professional presence were Kelly Ristaino as Nickie and Kate Walczyk as Helene, resident dance hall girls. During their numbers, particularly "Better Than This," they elevated the entire production.

Also rising above high school quality set pieces and extreme character acting was Lindsay McCarthy as Daddy Brubeck, who only appeared, unfortunately, in one rather irrelevant scene. McCarthy's vocals overshadowed the rest of the show. The entire male cast of dancers, too, warrant recognition for their work in "I'm a Brass Band" where their dedication to the choreography was remarkably tight.

Regrettably, however, Molly Corkern's choreography throughout the evening was inconsistent. Though most of it was creative, the crowded stage and the cast's wide range on the talent scale compromised much of the work Corkern clearly put into the show.

Vocal direction by Mike Hopewell was fair but never seemed to reach its full potential to unite the cast's talent in an unforgettable way – though they came very close in "The Rhythm of Life." The orchestra was relatively strong as well, and thankfully did not drown out the performers on stage.

It would be unfair to say that Stewart's direction should go completely without praise, for there were moments when her innovation and effort were clear. However, where she and other artistic designers for the Guild have gone wrong is not something one can ignore. Too often, Sweet Charity slipped into a formulaic interpretation of a work that is otherwise capable of more dynamics than the Guild brought to it. Too many scenes weren't approached with a natural read of Simon's script and instead, obnoxious accents and enormous over-expression dominated the production. Although the Guild should be respected for the amount of work put into Sweet Charity, it would be a wonderful surprise to see them utilize their talents with a bit more deference next time.

Romantic comedy 'Bounce' not as impressive as others in genre

©PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Gwyneth Paltrow and Ben Affleck star in the romantic comedy Bounce.

Bounce
Directed by Don Roos
with Gwyneth Paltrow and Ben Affleck
Playing at Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Romantic comedy is the oft-scoffed at genre of the movie industry, probably because it is so incredibly easy to make a bad one. In fact, Hollywood mass produces bad romantic comedies – movies that fall into trite jokes and tired emotional cliches in their attempts to win over the audience.

However, every once in a while a romantic comedy comes along that is truly original, genuinely touching and deeply moving. Only then can we realize how special a good romantic comedy is — how movies like Shakespeare in Love and Jerry Maguire can capture and universalize the experience, perhaps the absurdity, of love.

After seeing Bounce, I can only appreciate the likes of these latter movies even more.

Bounce fails to do in almost every conceivable manner what good romantic comedies should do: namely, engage the audience with the two romantic leads. On top of that, the movie is not funny. In fact, it's painfully not funny.

Bounce revels in the pain, misery and tragedy caused by one unfortunate plane crash and these anguishes are reflected in the neuroses of the characters. They wear their personal demons on their distressed faces like crosses that they are forced to bear.

Ben Affleck plays Buddy Amaral, a slick-talking advertising executive with a flair for one-night stands and glasses of bourbon. One day he meets Greg Ianello during a snowstorm in Chicago's Ohare Airport. Buddy offers him his plane ticket so Greg can go home to his wife, Abby, and two boys. The plane crashes and Bubby embarks on a year-long drinking spree to kill the memories.

Then, one day, he decides to find Abby (Gwyneth Paltrow). Greg's emotionally estranged widow. She's alone. He's alone. And so, the problem develops: two people, both afraid to face the same event, both afraid to let themselves be with the other.

However, romance never truly develops. Bounce is really a non-romance. Once Abby and Buddy actually meet, it's like they don't know how to act toward one another. Their relationship is incredibly awkward and forced. Buddy even admits to his newly hired protege that he doesn't want to see Abby anymore.

He does though. He keeps seeing her, and inevitably they fall in love, only to have their relationship broken up by the equally inevitable truth about the plane crash.

Despite their previous and much-celebrated real life dating, Affleck and Paltrow share little on-screen chemistry. Affleck has taken his cool, disaffected style one step to far. He's not funny here and comes off as being almost completely devoid of any emotion. Paltrow does almost exactly the opposite. She tries too hard with her role as the widow. She carries a look of pained grief around constantly as if she's always on the verge of tears.

I'll admit, the trailer for Bounce brought me to the verge of tears today, [inc. I cried], but the movie completely lacks any of this emotional involvement. A lackluster relationship develops between two fairly lackluster characters and just kind of fizzles out by the end of the film.

Neither character has any purpose other than to fall hopelessly and painfully for the other. Abby and Buddy are so self-involved that they never move beyond themselves. There is no universalizing emotion here, no capturing the joy and hope brought by love that makes good romantic comedies good. Unfortunately, Bounce continues to give the genre a bad name.

■ hockey

continued from page 10

As a team, we had a great night. It was a great team effort."

Added RPI hockey coach Dan Fridgen: "I don't think that it [one player scoring four goals in a period] happens very often, but it's good to see that he [Murley] didn't let up. Sometimes when you get two goals early, you sit back and think that you've still got another 40 minutes to get the third one. But Matt didn't back off at all."

While Murley and the rest of his teammates had the Midas touch in the opening 20 minutes, nothing went right for UMass over that same span. RPI scored four power play goals in the first period to bolt out to the insurmountable six-goal lead.

All in all, the Engineers put up five goals with the man advantage during the course of the evening. Coming into the game with the Minutemen, they had only scored five times on the power play all season.

"One thing about the power play is that if we hadn't been generating any offensive opportunities, then I'd be concerned," Fridgen said. "But it was one of those situations where the bounces weren't going our way. I knew that if we kept working, then it was going to come around."

The turning point of the game occurred with 7:21 remaining in the first period when a melee led to the disqualification of six players for fighting. Following a scramble in front of UMass goalie Markus Helanen, players from both sides squared off. Punches were thrown and in the end, three players from each team were tossed – Luke Duplessis, Randy Drohan and Thomas Pock for UMass; Ben Barr, Danny Eberly and Scott Basiuk for RPI. All six players must now sit out the next game per NCAA rules.

Trailing 2-0 at the time of the skirmish and already in a shorthanded situation, the Minutemen found themselves in an even bigger hole when the smoke cleared. Duplessis was also issued a cross-checking penalty, while UMass was given a bench minor for unsportsmanlike conduct. Those additional calls handed the Engineers a 5-on-3 advantage for two minutes, and the home team cashed in on the opportunity.

Junior defenseman Jim Vickers padded the RPI lead to 3-0 at the 15:57 mark off a blistering slap shot from the left point. Then, a mere 34 seconds later, Murley's blast from the high slot beat Helanen to make it 4-0.

However, the Engineers weren't done just yet. Freshman winger Ryan Shields increased the advantage to five goals off a wrister from in between the circles at the 15:15 point, forcing Cahoon to pull Helanen in favor of Mike Johnson. That move didn't seem to help much, though, as Murley capped off an unforgettable first period with his fourth goal of the evening only 15 seconds after Shields' goal.

Needless to say, allowing six goals in the first period was not what the Minutemen had planned. However, the final four goals of the stanza were clearly a direct product of the brawl and its aftermath.

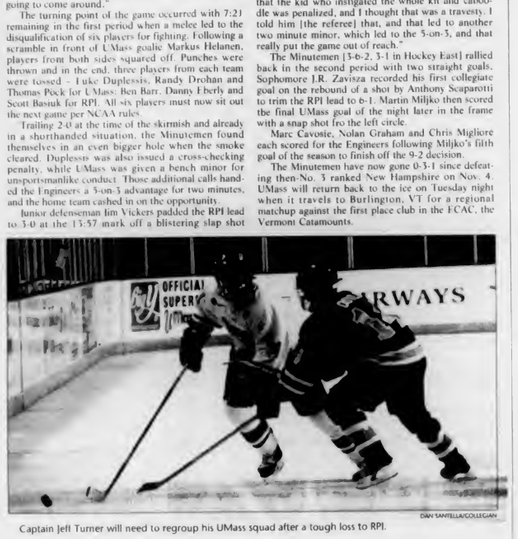
"We've been fighting the penalty problem, especially away from home, all year long," Cahoon said. "We talked about it all week, but we still took a lot of penalties.

"In that one situation where that brillo broke out in front of the net, I had some thoughts about how that whole thing started," he added. "I didn't think that the kid who instigated the whole kit and caboodle was penalized, and I thought that was a travesty. I told him [the referee] that, and that led to another two minute minor, which led to the 5-on-3, and that really put the game out of reach."

The Minutemen [3-6-2, 3-1 in Hockey East] rallied back in the second period with two straight goals. Sophomore J.R. Zavisva recorded his first collegiate goal on the rebound of a shot by Anthony Scaparotti to trim the RPI lead to 6-1. Martin Miljko then scored the final UMass goal of the night later in the frame with a snap shot fro the left circle.

Marc Cavoste, Nolan Graham and Chris Migliore each scored for the Engineers following Miljko's filth goal of the season to finish off the 9-2 decision.

The Minutemen have now gone 0-3-1 since defeating then-No. 3 ranked New Hampshire on Nov. 4. UMass will return back to the ice on Tuesday night when it travels to Burlington, VT for a regional matchup against the first place club in the ECAC, the Vermont Catamounts.



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Captain Jeff Turner will need to regroup his UMass squad after a tough loss to RPI.

■ power play

continued from page 10

came in the second period rather than the first.

Junior assistant captain Matt Murley stole the show, as he equaled his season output of goals in the period, tallying four times. Jim Vickers and Ryan Shield also had goals in the period.

In all three of these games, UMass has been victimized on special teams. Saturday, RPI netted five power play goals in the game and also scored a shorthanded goal.

Against Wisconsin, the Minutemen allowed three power play goals and the Eagles scored four goals when playing with a man, or in some cases, a two-man advantage.

"We've been fighting the penalty problem, especially away from home, all year long," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said. "We've been averaging nine penalties or 10 a game on the road, that's a third of the game, 20 minutes a game on the road.

"We talked about it all week, we talked about it before game and then we went out and still took a lot of penalties."

UMass took 65 minutes in penalties in the game, with the lions share coming during a fight that broke out in front of Helanen. As a result of the altercation six players were ejected: three from both the Minutemen and Engineers. Despite the same amount of players receiving game misconducts, the Maroon and White ended up getting an extra four minutes of penalties.

Referee Dan Murphy called UMass defenseman Luke Duplessis for a crosscheck for two of the minutes and the team was assessed a bench minor when Cahoon argued that the player that started the skirmish was not even ejected.

"That one situation where that brillo broke out in front of the net, I had some thoughts about how that whole thing started," Cahoon said. "I didn't think that the kid who instigated the whole kit and caboodle was penalized, and I thought that was a travesty.

"I told him [Murphy] that. You didn't even get the guy who started the whole thing, he's still in the game. That led to another two minute minor, which led to the 5-on-3, and that really put the game out of reach."

RPI Head Coach Dan Fridgen had the opposite to say of the brawl feeling that his team was protecting Marc Cavoste from injury.

"I though that was a situation that might have really hurt [Cavoste]," Fridgen said. "It's tough in this league and at this level because [fighting] is something you can't do."

RPI scored two goals on the ensuing 5-on-3 opportunity and from that point on the Minutemen were unable to recover.

"We've had a couple of games where we really competed, but we've had more games where we haven't," Cahoon said. "Right now, I'm just sitting back watching and trying to figure out who wants to play and who's willing to play within our systems. We've got a few that do, but we've got many more that probably don't."

If this UMass team wants to win games, it has to avoid spending a great deal of time playing with fewer players on the ice than the other team.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com
CHECK IT OUT
www.dailycollegian.com

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
Thanksgiving Party
Wed. November 22nd
Noon-???
Free Buffet
25 Entertainers
Prizes and Surprises!
500 New Ludlow Rd. South Hadley
Clubline: 413-532-3621 Hotline: 413-538-6969
www.anthonys.net

CURRY AUTO BODY
ALL MAKES & MODELS
Your Full Service Auto Body & Collision Repair Center
- Computerized Paint Matching
- Unibody Specialists
- Insurance Approved
- Glass Replacement
- Towing
- Loaner Car

MA Registered Shop RS 3583 www.curryhonda.com
769 Memorial Dr Chicopee (RT33) Just Off Mass Pike Exit 5
413-593-6721 Ext. 200
1-877-GO-CURRY
David Cahillane - Manager
We work with all Out-of-State and Massachusetts Insurance Companies to repair your vehicle to your satisfaction!
Curry Auto Body is a division of Curry Honda—Isuzu—Subaru

■ basketball

continued from page 10

three years in a row. I should be ready."

Crooks appeared ready to put the Gaels away with a swipe and breakaway sequence, but Iona senior Phil Grant swatted away the Everett native's layup attempt to keep the Gael run alive. The visitors keyed off the block and had the UMass advantage whittled down to one by the 10:35 mark, behind big buckets from Miller and sophomore swingman Courtney Fields.

Fields scored all of his field goal points in the second half, something that Flint and company admittedly weren't prepared for.

"One thing that threw us off was that people told me Fields couldn't shoot," Flint said. "The kid hit the biggest threes of the night to keep them in the game."

The second of Fields' big threes, launched flat-footed from the top of the key, pulled Iona within four at 61-57 with 4:01 to play. Crooks and Miller then traded layups before both teams reeled into an absolute scoring funk, broken over two minutes later by a Miller free throw at the 30-second mark.

Crooks converted 3-of-4 freebies as Iona played the fouling game over the next 17 ticks, leaving the Gaels with a 66-62 deficit and only 13 seconds of life left. That's when DePina did the unthinkable, fouling Iona guard Earl Johnson on a three-point attempt near the right elbow to breathe new life into the fading Gaels.

"I kind of knew there was a screen coming, but nobody called [it] out," DePina said. "I tried to get over it, and he just leaned into me. They were calling any contact."

Johnson calmly converted all three free throws, then fouled Crooks with :02.5 showing on the clock. The junior missed his first shot but benefited from a shooter's role on the second, leaving Iona with a two-point deficit and one last gasp.

But Norris' Hail Mary inbound pass was picked off by Smith, sealing up the closer-than-necessary win for UMass.

"We practice that; it's the Duke play, with Laetner," Ruland said of his team's final desperation set. "He takes three steps toward the rim, and comes back to the ball."

UMass won despite making only 10 of its 22 foul shots, including five of 15 in the second half. In spite of that fact the team took comfort in knowing it could pull together and prevail despite having its marquee player, Mack, on the pine.

"We'll be a lot better when he gets back," DePina said of the pre-season Atlantic 10 Player of the Year. "But it just shows that if he's playing and he gets in foul trouble, we can win without him."

*****

The Minutemen get little time to savor the victory, as they return to action tonight at Marquette's Bradley Center. The Golden Eagles (0-1) present UMass with its second playoff team in as many games; Tom Crean's crew parlayed a 15-14 record last season into a National Invitation Tournament berth.

UMass will get Mack back just in time, as his scoring punch will be necessary against the Blue and Gold. Senior Brian Wardle leads the Marquette charge; the 6-foot-5 guard posted nasty numbers (16.6 points, 4.6 rebounds) for the Golden Eagles last year and has reached double figures in 12 of his last 13 home contests.

The Illinois original poured in a team-high 17 points in Marquette's season-opening 67-54 loss to South Alabama on Nov. 14.

Wardle enters the game just 13 points from moving past Damon Cobb (Alabama Birmingham, 1998-99) into 10th place on Conference USA's all-time scoring list.

Though only in his second season at Marquette, Crean is a 10-year veteran of the college hoops clipboard. A former assistant at Pittsburgh, Western Kentucky and Michigan State (twice), Crean employs a seemingly endless array of offensive sets to maximize his team's output.

"I thought we run a lot of plays," Flint said. "They run an unbelievable amount of plays."

Tip-off is slated for 7 p.m.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

In the UMass' victory over Iona on Saturday night, senior tri-captain Jonathan DePina scored nine points and dished out seven assists.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Jonathan DePina (left) played 40 minutes, while his backcourt mate Shannon Crooks (right) logged 39 minutes of court time.

■ hoop

continued from page 10

especially tough to guard. Winston [Smith] did a great job defensively."

For the game, Smith held Wilson to only eight points on 4 for 10 shooting, while Shannon Crooks also held Grant to a measly eight points, on only 2 for 7 shooting.

This in-your-face defense was the thing that especially frustrated Iona Head Coach Jeff Ruland. "They did a nice job on defense," he said. When they get Monty [Mack] back, they will be quite a basketball team."

The Gaels also played solid defense throughout the game, but it was with a completely different style of play than the Maroon and White. While UMass went with its customary man-to-man pressure defense, Iona attempted to disrupt Minuteman point guard Jonathan DePina with a full court press, and then dropped into a 2-3 zone when Massachusetts moved the ball past the half court line.

"I just wanted my guys to be aggressive and to show what we can do," said Flint. "But at times we were a little tentative. When teams play zone and back off on you, you've got to take it to them. They couldn't guard us man-to-man and that is why they played zone."

Of course, having Mack out on the floor would have done a lot to disrupt the zone that the Gaels were playing. Fortunately for UMass, though, Crooks and DePina were both able to step up and sink just enough outside shots to keep Iona from sagging in on Williams and his frontcourt mates.

And this was a good thing, considering the fact that no one did as much to beat the zone as Williams. For the game, he went 5-5 from the field, and by the end of the contest, was the main post threat for the Minutemen. In addition, not only did he fail to miss anything he took from the field, but he was also one of the few players wearing maroon and white that actually remembered how to shoot free throws, going 4-6 from the charity stripe.

"Eric played great," said Flint. "He can score and we knew we had an advantage over them in the post. He got a lot of rebounds and a couple of put backs."

By game's end, Williams was able to post a solid 14 points, as well as a team-leading nine rebounds.

Even though the Minutemen did an adequate job of beating the Iona zone, Ruland still believed that it was the right move after the game.

"At times tonight it was pretty successful," he said. "We knew with the new rules that foul trouble could be a problem, and we had to keep [Miller] in there."

When UMass heads to Milwaukee tomorrow, in order to challenge the Marquette Golden Eagles, it will be a different kind of defense that the Maroon and White will be forced to play. Instead of rotating big men in an attempt to stop the other team's center, Massachusetts will be faced with the task of guarding two talented guards.

In this matchup, Mack and Crooks will be forced to match up against the tandem of Brian Wardle and Cordell Henry. Both of these guards enjoy chucking up threes, and in this contest, it will be the perimeter defense of the Maroon and White that decides the game, not the Minuteman post presence.

Jesse Greenspun is a Collegian Columnist

■ football

continued from page 10

Wellington beat UMass corner Rob Green on a slant and go pattern, as Green had no deep help from his safeties.

"He threw a perfect ball," said Wellington of the perfectly placed bomb thrown by his quarterback.

With the team in dire straits, down 14-7, the senior Shipp combined with backfield mate Pete Cariello to carry the load for the offense. Shipp ran three times and caught one pass for a total of 28 yards and a touchdown. Cariello on the other hand made a huge play on 2nd and 17 when he snared an off target screen pass before muscling three URI defenders for a 43 yard gain. The extra point was blocked, as UMass remained down 14-13.

Avi and his defense came up big at the outset of the second half, as a defensive stop was sorely needed to give the offense a chance to take the lead. Avi, Corey Potter and senior Joe Ferrer made stops on the drive forcing URI to punt after only three plays.

The UMass offense took full advantage of the stop, with the weight seemed placed on Shipp's broad shoulders. Of the seven plays on the drive, six were for Shipp, as he caught one pass for 13 yards and he carried the ball five times for 21 yards including a two yard touchdown run giving the Maroon and White a six point lead.

Rhode Island would again counter the UMass score with a long scoring drive of their own. The Rams, on the legs of Jamison, went 80 yards on 14 plays for another touchdown giving the home team a one point edge.

The Minutemen went ahead for good on the next drive as the Maroon and White drove 55 yards on 10 plays to set up a 30-yard field goal by Doug White. White's kick put UMass ahead 23-21 and thanks to the defense, that's how it would stay.

Ferrer, Avi and company halted Rhody's next drive when it seemed the Rams were headed towards another go-ahead score.

After the ensuing UMass drive sputtered, the defense stepped up again as URI looked to mount another comeback. With the Rams on their own 24-yard line, Nedmyer was flushed from the pocket (sack) and Jamison was caught by Avi for a loss of 8 yards, forcing another Rhode Island punt.

UMass was unable to keep possession, but the David Sanger punt was fumbled by Rhody's Lance Small and recovered by Jeremy Cam giving the Minutemen possession on the opposing 24-yard line. With Shipp running the ball the outcome was merely academic, as five plays later he iced the game with his fourth touchdown of the day.

By finishing with 156 yards on the day, Shipp broke Jerry Azumah's all-time Atlantic 10 conference record.

"I was really happy that he was able to get the record," said Whipple.

Shipp was particularly happy for his offensive line, saying "Maybe I'll buy them a slice of pizza."

Whipple also added that it was a "really satisfying win," and he was "really really happy for our seniors."

All and all the Minutemen finish with a 7-4 record and a 5-3 mark in A-10 play. Shipp and Avi finish their careers each having another stellar season.

The class of 2001 has truly proven themselves to be winners. They were champions as sophomores and in their final collegiate game once again they walk away on top.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Adonis Kinsey had a lot to celebrate as the Minutemen defeated Rhode Island in the season finale. UMass finised the campaign with a 7-4 record.

The All New
CARLA'S CREATIONS
Tanning Nails & Nails
Largest Tanning, Hair & Nail Salon in the Valley!
"All New, Top of the Line Tanning Equipment"
"Nail Specials "Waxing "Hair Services"
MEN WOMEN
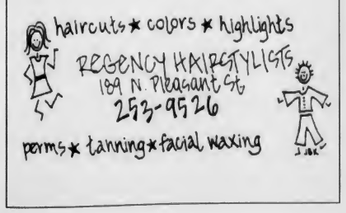
10% off any HAIR SERVICE W/THIS Ad
New Market Center • 6 University Drive • Amherst, MA • 549-8806



Marshall STEINBECK
COLLISION REPAIR & AUTOBODY
53 S. Prospect, Amherst Center
256-8157 • 256-1385
- Imports & other unibody vehicles are our specialty
- State of the art equipment for precision frame and unibody straightening (+/- 0.5mm)
- Over 90 years staff experience
- Accepted by all insurance companies for collision repair or glass replacement
- Advanced European technology painting and refinishing systems
- We provide substitute transportation
- Users of Sikkens paint products

Remember it's YOUR car and YOUR choice of repair facilities
Shop Registration #RS1212

We test our system: you get free therapy.

"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."
Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.
webtherapy.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

OFFcampus Antics Find results of the manicure on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2Girls looking for 3rd female to share Puffton apartment. Contact Dawn or Rebecca 549-2676

Take over lease. Townhouses. 2 bedroom. Available 1/10. $775/month. 549-4762

Subletting 1 room in 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. January or February - August. Call Lisa 549-0467

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

88 Ford Escort Wagon. 65k miles. Moving, must sell now. $2000 or b/o 253-6375 (blue)

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework. 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

Responsible caring person for 4yr. old girl. Three afternoons a week or more. Car, references. Thru June or summer. 259-1750

EMPLOYMENT

Coordinate gym class for homeschooled kids. 1day/week. Time is flexible. Call 323-5227

EMPLOYMENT

Paid Business Internship Soph, Jr, + Sr. Preffered. For info and application Go to http://www.jablon.com

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Dion Tack & Gallery A complete tack shop for Hunt, Dressage, and Eventing. 245 Russell St, Route 9, Hadley (413)584-0953

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley-4.5 bedroom, on bus route. $1250/month + utility. 582-9075

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights! Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Cliffside Apts. 665-8712

ROOMMATE WATNED

To share large bedroom in three bedroom apt. On bus route. Starting Jan 1. Call Amanda 397-8999

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplashtours.com

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRINGBREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

You found the place 545-3500

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR??

NEED A ROOMMATE NOW?

NEED TO SELL YOU CAR?

LOOK NO FURTHER

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

0 - HSCN Bulletin Board
1 - Cable Channel
4 - CBS 4 Boston
5 - ABC-5 Burlington
6 - TBS-72 Burlington
7 - NBC-7 Boston
8 - ABC-8 Hartford
9 - HSCN Jobs Channel
10 - NBC-30 New Britain
11 - Fox-61 Hartford
12 - PBS-24 Hartford
13 - WB-18 Springfield
14 - International Channel
15 - UPN-20 (Archives Channel)
16 - WB-56 New Haven
17 - CNBC
18 - ESPN2
19 - HSCN Bulletin Board
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Guest to Guest
22 - C-Span
24 - CNN
25 - CNN Headline News
26 - Lifetime
27 - USA
28 - TNN
29 - TNT
30 - Sci-Fi
31 - Nickelodeon
32 - Nogin
33 - Cartoon Network
34 - Nick at Nite
35 - TV Land
36 - Comedy Central
37 - BET
38 - Univision
39 - Spanish Language Network
40 - College TV Network
41 - MTV
42 - MTV2
43 - VH1
44 - The Learning Channel

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 20, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH (2)	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℡		Antiques Roadshow ℡		Young Elizabeth		Young Elizabeth		Connecticut Journal
WFSB (3)	3	News ℡	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	King	Yes, Dear ℡	Raymond	Becker (N) ℡	Family Law "Family Values" ℡		News ℡	Late Show ℡
WBZ (4)	4	News ℡	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	King	Yes, Dear ℡	Raymond	Becker (N) ℡	Family Law "Family Values" ℡		News ℡	Late Show ℡
WCVB (5)	5	News ℡	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℡	20/20 Downtown ℡		NFL Football: Washington Redskins at St. Louis Rams. (In Stereo Live) ℡
WLVI (56)		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ℡	Friends ℡	Nanny ℡	7th Heaven "Gossip" (In Stereo)		Roswell "Meet the Dupes" ℡		News ℡		Friends ℡	Sudden-Susan
WHDH (7)	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℡	Dixie Chicks: On the Fly (N) ℡		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		Third Watch "After Hours" ℡		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	6	Basketball	Blind Date	Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Moesha (N) ℡	Parkers (N) ℡	Hughleys ℡	Girlfriends ℡	News	Arrest & Trial	College Basketball
WVIT	30	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ℡	Hollywood	Dixie Chicks: On the Fly (N) ℡		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		Third Watch "After Hours" ℡		News	Tonight Show
WTIC (8)	11	Simpsons ℡	Frasier ℡	Seinfeld ℡	Friends ℡	Boston Public "Chapter Five"		Ally McBeal "The Last Virgin"		News		Friends ℡	Freaier ℡
WWLP (61)	22	News ℡	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℡	Dixie Chicks: On the Fly (N) ℡		Law & Order "Fools for Love"		Third Wetch "After Hours" ℡		News ℡	Tonight Show
WGBY (57)	6	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℡		Antiques Roadshow ℡		American Experience "Eleanor Roosevelt" (In Stereo) ℡					Charlie Rose
WGGB (40)	20	News ℡	ABC News	Seinfeld ℡	Frasier ℡	20/20 Downtown ℡		NFL Football: Washington Redskins at St. Louis Rams. (In Stereo Live) ℡
WSBK (38)		Judge Judy ℡	Judge Judy ℡	Seinfeld ℡	Frasier ℡	Moeshe (N) ℡	Parkers (N) ℡	Hughleys ℡	Girlfriends ℡	Frasier ℡	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ℡	Spin City ℡
WTBS (72)		Rosesnne ℡	Rosaanne ℡	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	★★★ "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle" (1991) Annabella Sciorra.				★★ "Heaven's Prisoners" (1996, Drama) Alec Baldwin.
A&E (14)		Night Court	Newsradio ℡	Law & Order "We Like Mike" ℡		Biography: David Crosby		City Confidential ℡		Investigative Reports (N) ℡		Law & Order "Act of God" ℡
CNN (29)	23	Worldview ℡	Moneyline Newshour (N) ℡		Crossfire ℡	World Today ℡		Larry King Live ℡		Newsstand ℡		Sports	Moneyline ℡
COM (35)	10	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show ℡	Stein's Money	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Whose Line?	Strangers	Com.-Presents	Daily Show ℡	Stein's Money
DISC (52)		Wild Discovery: Polar Bear		Wild Discovery: Snakes		On the Inside: Combata Elite		Bleckbeard's Treesure		Prosecutors-Justice		Justice Files
ESPN (31)		Sportscenter ℡		2-Minute Drill	Mondey Night Countdown (N)			College Basketball: Louisville vs. Maryland				Dog Show (N)	ESPNews
LIFE (92)		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimats Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Badge of Betrayal" (1997, Drama) Michelle Greene.				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV (53)		Direct Effect	Tupac Tribute	Cribs	Cribs	MTV Europe Music Awards (N) (In Stereo)				100 Greatest Pop Songs (N)		Diary	Cribs
NICK (58)		Rocket Power	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ℡	Rugrats ℡	Rocket Power	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isls	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI (65)		Sliders "Slidecage" (In Stereo)		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Outer Limits "Haven" ℡		Outer Limits (In Stereo) ℡		Outer Limits "The Inheritors" ℡		Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC (67)	28	Weird Places		Critical Condition: British E.R.		Code Blue: Fighting		Why Doctors Make Mistakes		Why Doctors Make Mistakes		Code Blue: Fighting
TNT (45)		ER (In Stereo) ℡		Pretender "Unsinkable" ℡		WCW Monday Nitro (In Stereo) ℡		Bull "How Green Is Your Mail?"		Pretender "Ranger Jarod" ℡
USA (62)		Walker, Texas Ranger ℡		JAG "Psychic Warror" ℡		Nash Bridges "Angel of Mercy"		★★ "Regarding Henry" (1991, Drama) Harrison Ford. (In Stereo) ℡		Martin ℡		Martin ℡
HBO (93)		★½ "Crazy in Alabama" (1999) Melanie Griffith. 'PG-13' ℡				★★ "Judas Kiss" (1998, Mystery) Simon Baker-Denny. 'R' ℡				Best of Autopsy (In Stereo) ℡		★½ "Three to Tango" (1999) ℡
MAX (94)		(4:45) "Meet"		★★★ "The Brandon Teena Story" (1998) 'NR' ℡		★★★½ "Boys Don't Cry" (1999, Drama) Hilary Swank. 'R' ℡				★★★★ "Saving Private Ryan" (1998, Drama) Tom Hanks. 'R' ℡
SHOW (95)		★★½ "The Price of Kissing" (1997, Drama) Pauley Perrett. 'PG-13'				★★ "Sirens" (1999, Drama) Dana Delany. (In Stereo) 'R' ℡				Resurrection Blvd. "Hermanos"		★★ "Scorned" (1994) 'R'

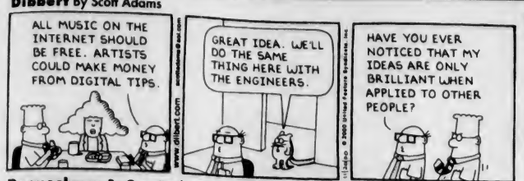
Dibbert By Scott Adams



ALL MUSIC ON THE INTERNET SHOULD BE FREE. ARTISTS COULD MAKE MONEY FROM DIGITAL TIPS.
GREAT IDEA. WE'LL DO THE SAME THING HERE WITH THE ENGINEERS.
HAVE YOU EVER NOTICED THAT MY IDEAS ARE ONLY BRILLIANT WHEN APPLIED TO OTHER PEOPLE?

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

I CARVE OTHER PEOPLE'S INITIALS INTO PARK BENCHES
OR SOMETIMES MESSAGES LIKE, "URGENT! SEND GRAVY, PREF. W/ ONION."
HEY- ANYONE WANT TO BUY A WOOL UNITARD? SLIGHTLY USED

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

NO, LIFE WASN'T EASY AS A SHAREHOLDER... YOU GETTING THIS DOWN, HONEY?
NO, SIR.
NOT!
YOU ARE AND YOU DID. SHE NEVER BE PARTY TO AN 11TH HOUR RE INVENTION!
I'LL NEVER FORGET THE DAY I ROUND OUT 1 MORE BLACK.
HAVE A NICE REST, SIR.

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis

HEY! NATE AND NOREME ARE BACK TOGETHER...
NO. HE'S JUST IN TO SEE CLARA AND GET A FEW OF HIS THINGS.
CLARA, HONEY... JUST BECAUSE DADDY ISN'T HERE ALL THE TIME, DOESN'T MEAN HE DOESN'T LOVE YOU.
AH... REMOTE PARENTING. I'VE HEARD OF IT.
DOES IT WORK?
HONEY, DON'T CRY.
IT DOESN'T.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHAT IS THIS? WHAT ARE YOU WATCHING?
IT'S THE OLYMPIC HIGHLIGHTS SHOW.
WELL, I'M HERE NOW AND I DON'T LIKE IT GET RID OF IT
BUT SYNCHRONIZED DIVING IS NEXT.
OK. NOW YOU GUYS ARE BEING SYNCHRONIZED ANNOYING. GIVE ME THE REMOTE!
NO! GET OFF!

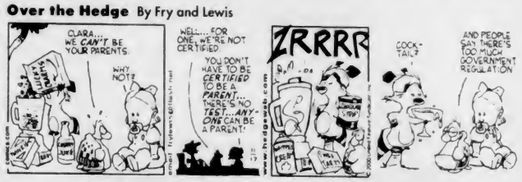
Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis

CLARA, MOMMY AND DADDY HAVE TO WORK SOME THINGS OUT AND IT'S BETTER IF WE DO THAT APART.
WELL, I USED TO BE TOLD THAT PARENTS SHOULD STAY TOGETHER FOR THE SAKE OF CHILDREN.
WHAT HAPPENS TODAY?
KIDS SHOULDN'T STAY KIDS FOR THE SAKE OF THEIR PARENTS.
THEY SAY YOU GROW UP FAST IN THE BURBS.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

WHOA, YOU GUYS ARE OUT OF CANDY ALREADY?! HALLOWEEN WAS JUST TUESDAY!
MAYBE WE COULD WHACK SATCHEL WITH A STICK AND SEE IF WE GET MORE.
LOWE CH
THAT'S A PIÑATA, MAN. YOU CAN'T JUST WHACK SOMETHING AND GET CANDY OUT OF IT!
HE ATE A TON OF CANDY. I'M JUST SAYIN' MAYBE WE CAN GET SOME BACK
YOU CAN'T GET CANDY OUT OF SATCHEL, BUCKY.
WELL, MAYBE IF WE HIT HIM LONG ENOUGH, HE'LL BARF US SOME CANDY.
I FEEL ILL...

Over the Hedge By Fry and Lewis



CLARA... WE CAN'T BE YOUR PARENTS.
WHY NOT?
WELL... FOR ONE, WE'RE NOT CERTIFIED.
YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE CERTIFIED TO BE A PARENT. THERE'S NO TEST... ANYONE CAN BE A PARENT.
ZRRRR
COCK-TAIL?
AND PEOPLE SAY THERE'S TOO MUCH GOVERNMENT REGULATION.

Dilbert By Scott Adams

CATBERT EVIL H.R. DIRECTOR
WHAT'S THE MOST EVIL WAY TO USE OUR DATABASE OF CUSTOMER INFORMATION?
SHOULD WE SELL OUR MAILING LISTS, SPAM WITHOUT MERCY, OR JUST BLACK-MAIL CUSTOMERS?
UM... DO YOU HAVE ME IN THAT DATA-BASE?
WE KNOW ALL ABOUT YOUR CLUMPING PROBLEMS.

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)- You're likely to hear from someone today who owes you a great deal. However, you'll be suprised to know he or she now has an offer which can make everyhing "even Steven."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)-Your own curiosity is likely to lead you into a situation that proves to be too much for you, in a relatively short period of time. Back awa quickly!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)-Be courteous at all times today. Be sure to let others know just what you are doing, and why. Be straight with everyone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)-You may have a great deal of work to do today, but more importantly, there is a chance to get together with a special friend.

PISCES (Feb. 19- March 20)-You'll have to work closely wih others today to make plans that can hold up to any change in circumstances later on. Communicate openly.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)-Seek only those outlets which allow you to behave in a way which feels natural. If it adds to daily stress, it's not for you!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)-You're likely to live up to your reputation s a home-lover today. You may even choose to forsake a professional opportunity to stay at home.

GEMINI (may 21-June 20)-Take care that you're not trying to "show off" for someone who is actually better equipped to say and do the right things at this time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)-Your deepest feelings are nearing the surface at this time. It's best for you to avoid any situations which may rub you the wrong way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)-It's been a long time since you had the chance to say what is on your mind with no risk of reprisals of any kind. Today, you can really "let go!"

VIRGO (Aug. 230Sept. 22)-A special gathering affords you a rare opportunity to do something that you've been tempted to tr for some time. Your support group can help you out.

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22)-You're not likely to stop once you get a taste of something you've resisted for some time. Take care you don't lose control and overindulge.

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 45 LOW: 29	HIGH: 40 LOW: 23	HIGH: 32 LOW: 15

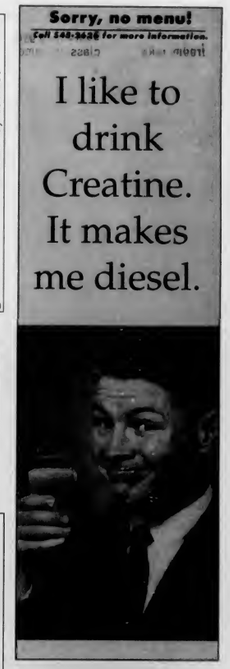
AFTER VIEWING THE ANIMATION CLASSIC, THE SECRET OF NIMH, ELMER GETS THE HINT AND PROTECTS HIS OWN TRACTOR.
© 2000

Quote of the Day

"He was more fun when he used to black out."

-Overheard

Sorry, no menu!
Call 548-3626 for more information.



YOUR AD could be here!

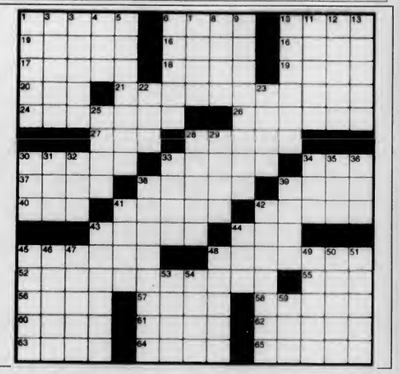
28,000 Readership

Call 545-3500 for details.

ACROSS
1 "Golden Hind" captain
5 Yellow
10 Flaky
14 Not as common
15 Actress Meredith
18 Alfred Hendry
19 Picture
20 A bird of it --
21 Just
22 Wane
23 Nightclub add-on
24 Spot on a leopard
26 Took a break
27 Obtain
28 Smooth and lustrous
30 Got up
33 Film companion
37 Youngsters
38 Mythical deities
39 Chocolate cookie
40 Decorate a cake
41 Cherubs and zephyrs
42 Mencurrer's board
43 Robust
44 — mode
45 Goes 90 mph
48 Pastry
52 Rec-room game
54 Ms. Lint
55 Unit of matter
57 Dyers song
58 Carried off
60 Penalty
61 Mischief makers
62 Inactive
63 Indy winner A.J.
64 Run
65 Social class

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DOWN
1 Paint additive
2 Ballona cola
3 Bedouins
4 Barrel
5 Constructed
6 Orchard
7 Hoarfrost
8 Roman road
9 Source of insulin
10 Performed labor
11 Sidestep
12 Enumerated
13 Wood fabric
22 Hold-of-amer Mer
23 Pay attention
25 Selves
28 Investigatic
29 Microscope part
30 Winter sports item
31 Sistern
32 Certain verse
33 Beach material
34 "Shmoo" start
35 Poet's always
36 Miniature, as a dog
38 Kind of kit
39 Mideast gulf
41 Play in the water
42 Springy
43 Bleat's headgear
44 — Baba
45 Employees
46 Outdoor area
47 Silica
48 Grind one's teeth
49 Some oodles
50 Turn inside out
51 "Divine Comedy" author
53 Columnist Bombeck
54 Bites
59 "Wheel of Fortune" buy



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Matt Despres
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	J. Soren Nash, Margie Smelkinson

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Monday, November 20, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Hoops hauls in win

By Adam White
Collegian Staff

A good first step toward making it to the Big Dance is beating one of last year's guests. That is precisely what the Massachusetts men's basketball team did Saturday night, downing Iona 67-65 in the regular season opener at the William D. Mullins Center.

UMass	67
Iowa	65

UMass seized a 28-26 edge with 4:10 to go in the first half and never trailed thereafter, holding off a late Gael charge and locking up the victory at the free throw line. UMass guard Shannon Crooks netted a team-high 20 points in place of Monty Mack, who completed his three game suspension by watching the win from the bench.

"We pretty much had the lead from the first half, without our best dude," UMass Head Coach Bruiser Flint said. "We make some foul shots, and this game's over with three minutes to go."

The teams came in with a certain degree of familiarity, having locked horns in last year's season opener at Iona's Mulcahy Center and the year before at Mullins. UMass prevailed last year, 85-77, behind 21 points from Mack.

"This is the third year in a row that they've played us," Iona Head Coach Jeff Ruland said. "I don't think Bruiser or myself have reinvented the wheel or anything."

UMass took a few minutes to get rolling on Saturday, as the Gaels rode a six-point burst from senior center Nakiea Miller to an early 8-2 edge. That lead was short-lived, however, as the Minutemen came alive and attacked the Iona hoop with crisp, patient passes and thundering dunks.

Pointman Jonathan DePina started the show, swiping the ball at half court and finishing off the ensuing transition by sticking a pull-up off a Winston Smith feed. Smith dropped another dime on his next trip down the floor, rerouting a lackie Rogers miss back out to Micah Brand for a foul line jumper. A third assist from the senior tri-captain set up Rogers for a fast break flush that closed the gap to two, and Rogers then locked the game at 10-all by slamming home a Crooks pass.

"When we execute our stuff, we're going to get what we want," Flint said. "Penetrate, pitch - create the action a little bit."

A 15-foot jumper by forward Eric Williams gave the home team its first lead at 14-12, a margin that would balloon to seven over the next 1:28. Iona then put together a 10-2 run and retook the lead on a three-point bomb by guard Leland Norris from the top of the UMass key that made it 26-25.

That was the last lead the Gaels would enjoy. DePina tore the edge away from Iona by drilling a three from the left elbow, then following up two trips later by taking a Ronell Blizzard block the length of the court and dishing to Crooks, who buried a three from the right corner.

DePina didn't stop there, as he piloted another UMass breakaway that Blizzard finished off and then knocked down a trifecta from just left of the top of the key with time winding down on the half. The tri-captain hit the locker room with nine points and six assists, a big reason for the Maroon and White's 40-33 lead at the break.

"We gave up 59 percent shooting in the first half, and we couldn't recover from that," Ruland said of UMass' 16-for-27 field goal performance in the initial set. "They shot the ball better than I thought they would."

Williams owned the opening action of the second half, as the 6-foot-8 Brooklyn native came up big on both ends of the floor in three straight series. He first cleaned up a Rogers miss with an airborne put-back, then tipped an errant Iona entry pass into the hands of Rogers.

The exclamation point came when Williams found himself facing Miller one-on-one in the low post; the junior transfer spun past his Gael foe for an easy deuce that gave UMass its biggest lead of the night, 44-35.

Williams' perfect 5-for-5 night from the floor marked a big coming-out party for a player who has watched a lot more hoop than he's played over the last few seasons.

"Sitting out has let me learn a lot of things," said Williams, who spent last year on the UMass bench to fulfill transfer regulations. "I never played at Syracuse, so I really sat out

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Micah Brand soars above the rim to grab one of his team-high six rebounds in UMass' 67-65 win over Iona.

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 7

Depth in front line vaults Minutemen

The student body should have been chanting "defense" instead of the choice words they instead threw at the Iona players.

Because as the offense of the Massachusetts men's basketball team began to sputter in the second half of Saturday's contest against the Gaels, it was the defense that kept the team on top. And if not for the defense, then the Maroon and White would have never been able come away with the win after shooting an atrocious 30-22 from the line.

With a new assortment of big bodies at his disposal, namely Eric Williams and Jackie Rogers, UMass Head Coach Bruiser Flint was able to throw a large amount of post players at Iona's 6'10" senior center Nakiea Miller. And it was this, along with the continued success of the Minuteman perimeter defense, that kept Flint's squad on top throughout the game, even though it was able to garner only 27 second half points.

"We had enough guys to throw at [Miller]," said Flint after the game. "Eric [Williams] did a good job on him because he didn't just stand behind him. He beat him to the spot and made him work a little."

JESSE GREENSPAN

Even though Miller's final totals included 20 points and 13 rebounds, it was mainly a matter of his shots just falling, and not a result of poor defense by the Maroon and White. For the game, Miller was exceptional from the field, going 6-8 with most of his points coming off turn around jumpers. He was also solid from the line, where he connected on 8 of 12 foul shots.

Another reason Miller was able to have some success against the Minuteman defense was because he had been used to playing against a variety of players in practice. So, when Flint decided to use a combination of Kiwuna Rhymer, Micah Brand and Williams on the Iona center, it did not have the desired effect. However, it was still a far cry from last season, when Rhymer was left in charge to single-handedly face any opposing big man threat.

"I go against two or three different players in practice and get beat up," said Miller. "So I am used to the contact by now and going up against different players."

Holding a quality player like Miller to 20 when he is shooting well must have been somewhat of a relief to Flint, especially after watching last year's team get out muscled and out played by such mediocre big men as Virginia Tech power forward Dennis Mims and Marshall center J.R. VanHoose.

Miller's point total begins to look like even less, considering that foul trouble limited Rhymer to only 11 minutes throughout the game.

While the post defense was good, the perimeter defense might have been even better. Although Miller was able to get his points inside, the Minutemen were able to almost completely shut down the Gaels' other scoring threats, forward Dyree Wilson and guard Phil Grant.

"We did a great job on Wilson and a great job on Grant," said Flint. "Those guys are going to get better as the year goes on...and [Wilson] is

Turn to HOOP, page 7

Minutemen finish in positive fashion

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, RI – As the setting sun began to cast a shadow over the field of Meade Stadium, so the curtain fell on the storybook careers of the seniors on the Massachusetts football team.

"I was really nervous about this game," said Head Coach Mark Whipple following the contest.

UMass	29
URI	21

The final whistle signaled the conclusion of a 29-21 Minutemen victory over Rhode Island; it also marked the end of two careers that will live on in the memories of their teammates and in the hearts of all UMass football fans.

"It was fitting they were able to go out this way," Whipple said of all his graduating seniors.

Although running Back Marcel Shipp and Linebacker Kole Ayi conduct their business on opposite sides of the ball, the pain they inflict on their opponents is much the same.

Walter Payton award candidate Shipp carried the ball 36 times for 156 yards and four touchdowns in pacing the Maroon and White offense.

Ayi, a Buck Buchanan award candidate, bolstered the UMass front seven with 13 tackles, including three for a loss, and the Maroon and White's lone sack on the afternoon.

When asked about his last game in a UMass uniform, Ayi said, "You think about that all night, you don't sleep."

The Minutemen used power running by Shipp to punish the Rain defense and sustain long drives that would keep the opposing offense off the field for extended amounts of time.

As it did it the previous game against Delaware, UMass opened the game with a mammoth scoring drive that knocked almost five minutes off the clock.

Shipp began the last game of his career with a 17-yard run that was very much a microcosm of his four years in Amherst. Shipp took the handoff from Richard Lucero (160 yards, 2 INTs and he bounced outside, shedding numerous tackles on his way to a first down.

The key play of the drive, however, came on 2nd and 13 from the URI 29 yard line. Senior Jeff Howard ran a curl pattern towards the right sideline past the linebackers and underneath the defensive backs. Lucero lobbed a perfect ball into the hole Howard had created in the home team's zone coverage for a 25-yard gain. Shipp than punched it in from four yards out for his first score of the day.

After the score, Rhode Island countered with a marathon drive of their own. Fueled by the hard nosed running of David Jamison, who ran 22 times for 111 yards on the day, URI marched 71 yards on 11 plays. Quarterback Vince Nedimyer capped off the drive with a seven-yard scamper to pay dirt.

The next two offensive possessions for both teams resulted in punts while the third UMass drive ended in a Lucero interception. Nearing halftime, the Maroon and White quarterback immediately looked down the right sideline to a streaking Kinney. The wide out had beaten his man with pure speed, but Lucero under threw the ball and the Rams' Chuck Wesley picked it off.

On the second play of the Rams ensuing drive, Nedintyer found Salim Wellington deep over the middle for a 76-yard touchdown strike, giving the Rams a seven-point lead at the half.

Turn to FOOTBALL, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

In his final game in a Minuteman uniform, Marcel Shipp torched Rhode Island for four touchdowns in UMass' 29-21 victory over the Rams.

Murley nets four goals in win over Minutemen

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

TROY, NY – Fans entering Houston Field House on Saturday night thought that they had purchased tickets to see a hockey game between the hometown boys from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and UMass.

RPI	9
UMass	2

I little did the faithful know that their stubs were a bit deceiving. After all, when it came time to drop the puck, they got to see two shows for the price of one. Not only did the Engineers dominate in a 9-2 victory, but RPI junior winger Matt Murley put on a display of his own against the Minutemen.

Murley netted four markers in the first period to key a six-goal outburst in the opening frame for RPI. The hometown product then tacked on an assist in the third period to reach the 100-point plateau for his career, joining current pros and RPI alums Joe Juneau and Adam Oates on that list.

"It was a great first period where I had the goal scorers' touch," Murley said. "Everything that I shot went in.

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

After losing defensemen Luke Duplessis and Randy Drohan because of a first period fight, Joey Culgin, who did not dress for the game against RPI, would have been put to good use.

Turn to HOCKEY, page 6

Penalty killing unit has troubles playing on road

TROY, NY – Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute: a tough name to say, an even tougher place to play.

The Massachusetts hockey team has found out that winning is not easy on the road; when it takes a lot of penalties, it becomes even more daunting of a task.

Saturday night in front of 3,248 screaming fans at the Houston Field House, RPI got its engines running and put nine goals past the goaltending tandem of Markus Helainen and Mike Johnson.

BRYAN SMITH

UMass (3-6-2, 3-1 Hockey East), for the third time this season, has given up nine goals in an opponent's home rink. The Minutemen allowed nine in the season opener against No. 3 Wisconsin at the Kohl Center and four games later gave up the same amount to No. 2 Boston College at the Conte Forum.

RPI engineered a period that the Maroon and White would like to forget, as six goals came in the first 20 minutes of the contest; the frame also had a goal disallowed in it because an Engineer was in the crease as the puck entered the net. The period was reminiscent of a second period explosion that the Badgers had in the opener when they also scored six goals. The only difference was that their six goals

Turn to POWER PLAY, page 6

Lisa Loeb played a uninspired show at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel recently. Check out our acoustic take.

ARTS p. 7

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The UMass Women's hoop team played tough this weekend, but eventually got bit by the Lady Bulldogs of Georgia.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 54 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday, November 21, 2000

Escort van hits vehicle with ticket

COURTESY DAVID LORD

Escort operator Justin C. Ononibaku accidently hit a student vehicle before hitting it with a parking violation. Ononibaku's ticket later showed discrepancies surrounding the incident.

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts Security Officer's attempt to ticket a vehicle parked illegally outside of Chadbourne Residence Hall early Saturday morning led to disaster.

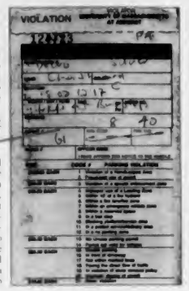
Justin C. Ononibaku, an institutional security officer, was driving the Escort Van Rover Two late that evening, enforcing parking regulations and other security measures. Escort Rover One is the fixed Escort route that makes frequent stops at the Campus Center and campus residence halls.

Eyewitnesses in Chadbourne said Ononibaku was passing through Central late Friday evening and observed a 1990 silver Volkswagon parked on the side of the road next to the entrance of Chadbourne. The owner, Amy Soffer, a senior early childhood education and sociology major, had turned on the vehicle's emergency flashers as a cautionary measure for what she said she didn't believe was going to be a long time.

Eyewitnesses said they watched as Ononibaku pulled up behind the Volkswagon and proceeded to write the parking ticket citation inside the Escort van. Disregarding the emergency flashers, Ononibaku wrote a $40 dollar parking ticket stating that the vehicle was illegally parked.

According to freshman undeclared major Glenn Robertson, when Ononibaku stepped out of the Escort van, "He must have forgotten to put the vehicle in park because it proceeded to roll forward towards the Volkswagon."

In what eyewitnesses describe as a state of panic,



Ononibaku jumped into the rolling vehicle and attempted to slam on the brake. Instead, however, his foot slammed into the accelerator, causing the vehicle to accelerate into Soffer's vehicle. The Escort van slammed Soffer's vehicle into a 90 white Mazda pickup truck parked nearby.

According to accident photos taken by the UMass Police, the Escort van left behind skid marks approximately three feet long that eyewitnesses described was the distance the Escort van carried the Volkswagon and the Mazda together at the time of impact.

"The van pushed the Volvo into the truck and once they were all piled up together, the van started peeling out and pushed the two cars at least three feet," Robertson said, recalling the sequence of the incident.

The owner of the truck, David Lord, a junior undeclared major, was inside the vehicle while it was struck. He claims that he had been sitting by the side of Chadbourne for no longer than a couple minutes before his truck was "bumped."

"I really didn't see it coming," Lord said. "I was looking down and suddenly I felt my car get bumped."

There were no reported injuries in the incident. However, in a series of events that followed, the victims described Ononibaku as taking the parking citation and placing it on the windshield of Soffer's damaged car. He then attempted to write a parking violation for Lord's Mazda truck, which he had assumed was also parked illegally.

"I started yelling at him," Lord said recalling the series of events. "I was sitting in my car and I felt like asking him why he was going to give me a ticket. When his supervisor showed up, he decided not to give me one."

UMass Police Officers Orasev, and O'Donnell responded to the scene within five minutes of the incident. When Soffer surfaced from the entrance of Chadbourne, she didn't know what had happened to her vehicle, which was pinned between two other vehicles.

Officer O'Donnell informed her that her vehicle had been struck after the security officer had failed to place the van's transmission in park in the process of ticketing her. Nowhere did he mention the fact that Ononibaku had accelerated into her vehicle.

In fact, the police report processed a das later failed to mention this fact. According to Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMPD, he had never heard of the incident and likewise had never been notified.

The police report that had been filed stated, "The [Escort] vehicle went into another vehicle. There are requests for a camera to photograph the damage. Operator of the other vehicle had been located."

The third vehicle failed to be mentioned in the report even though police assessed its damage at the scene of the incident. The assessed damage to Soffer's Volkswagon is more than $1,000, accounting for a damaged rear bumper, front grill and headlights. The damages to Lord's vehicles have not been assessed, but the only physical damage to his truck included a bent license plate and a damaged right front blinker.

According to Officer Orasev, the University's insurance will cover all damages ensued during the incident. Meanwhile, Soffer said she is going to fight a parking violation that she claims is invalid.

The violation citation was written in such a way that information was misplaced and nothing fits what is being asked. The location of the incident was written under "make" of vehicle. In addition, the violations cited in two instances on the ticket contradict each other. Ononibaku stated in the citation that Soffer's vehicle was illegally parked at a bus stop.

"I wasn't parked anywhere near the bus stop," Soffer said, defending herself.

In another part of the citation, Soffer is cited for parking within a reserved space. But she contends that there were no reserved spaces of any sort near the proximity of which she had parked.

"I think it's quite bizarre," Soffer said. "He [Ononibaku] must have been really confused. There must be a procedure to follow in writing the ticket and he felt that he had to complete the whole procedure and that is the only reason I can think that would warrant him to ticket me after slamming into my car."

Ononibaku could not be reached for comment as of press time.

Gen-ed program to be discussed

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The General Education Council for the Faculty Senate will discuss a proposal to change the general education requirements at a meeting in early December.

The proposal, created by the General Education Task Force over a three-year period, explains its purpose.

"Each year, the University of Massachusetts brings in about four thousand new students. On average, three-quarters of their courses during the first year are General Education courses," the proposition states. "This means that General Education courses constitute each student's important transition from the culture of the high school and home supervision to the culture of the University and independence."

The proposal focuses on making General Education requirements part of a student's yearly curriculum.

Among the areas outlined for revision is the diversity requirement and the creation of an upper level curriculum, which would encourage a more in depth course of study that the current survey style classes.

The proposal specifies that students would take at least one domestic diversity class and at least one foreign diversity class.

"Right now [students] have to take two courses from a minority or non western prospective," Ralph Faulkingham, anthropology professor and Co-Chair of the General Education Council said. "Women's Studies and African-American department classes would be domestic, while a class such as African Civilizations would be foreign."

The report states that this would be done to ensure that students had background in both forms of diversity.

"We wish to ensure that students have exposure to both domestic and global diversity, not one or the other," the report explains.

The proposal splits General Education into two levels. The proposition states that while the lower level courses are in place, upper level courses "allow students to pursue advanced courses outside their majors and to continue the integrative thinking begun in the first year."

An additional writing intensive course, two upper level non-major classes, and nine credits of "integrative experience," would round out a student's junior and senior years.

Faulkingham cautions students not to expect any radical changes.

"Frankly, the General Education Council has not voted on anything the Task Force has proposed," he said.

The Council has been working on the proposal since it received it in February, and will discuss what it plans on proposing to the Faculty Senate at the Council's December first meeting.

There have been many stumbling blocks along the way.

"We'll come up with three or four options, all of which involve more money. With Question 4 passing, I don't want to say it's a problem, more of a challenge. A real challenge," Faulkingham said.

Question 4, recently passed during the Nov. 7 elections, implemented a tax cut which would primarily impact public schools.

"I like to describe it as the Yugo, the Chevy and the BMW. The hope is that we would have small classes, which is critical for a general education program," said Faulkingham. "We are just going to have to find a way to improve."

"We hope to get student representation," Faulkingham explained. "More than any other Council, this is such an important Council to have students on. The faculty doesn't fully grasp the idea of navigating the Gen-Ed system."

A lack of student participation seems to be a recurring theme on many Faculty Senate Councils.

"We have a big problem getting [students] appointed in the first place," Ernest May, Chair of the Music and Dance Department and Secretary of the Faculty Senate, said. May believes scheduling to be the biggest reason for this dilemma.

"Organizations are just getting themselves organized. The trickle down style of leadership in the Student Government association and the Graduate Student Senate takes a while to get up and situated," he explained.

"The SGA advertises every year for these positions," Student Trustee Seth Avakian said. "We've even gone so far as to set up a system so [students] can get one academic credit. I don't know how [else] to create interest."

Campus, Amherst respond to Domestic Violence

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Domestic violence is a crime that potentially affects both men and women on campus and in the Amherst area on a daily basis. Although some of these crimes go unreported, victims that do come forward have many services available to them.

Working in conjunction with other organizations on campus, the University of Massachusetts Police Department provides legal options to students and staff that are victims of domestic violence. According to Sergeant Robert Thrasher of the UMPD, the police work hand-in-hand with other organizations on campus and in the community to ensure the safety of the victims of violence.

"We work closely with the Amherst Police Department, the Everywoman's Center, University Health Services, Mental Health Services and the Dean's Office," he said. "All of the agencies come together in a concerted effort to help the victim."

He explained that the police department helps victims of domestic violence by either arresting an individual that has committed an act of violence for domestic assault and battery or by helping the victim with a protective order.

"We will do whatever we can to make sure that it is safe for [the victim] to go to school," he said.

In order for a complaint for protection against abuse to be processed, Thrasher explained, certain situations must be present. First, the defendant and the plaintiff must be married to each other, formerly married to each other or not married but related by blood. They could also be the parents of one or more children together, not related but live in the same household, be former members of the same household, or are/were in dating or in an engagement relationship.

He explained that before 1991, the police department did not have the legal backing to petition for a restraining order unless the parties were a married couple or in a substantive dating relationship, but now due to new laws, roommate and dating violence can be better prosecuted.

"We do a fair amount of restraining orders on campus," he said. "We went from filling out five or six a year [protective orders] in married housing to 60 per year after 1991."

The other criteria that must be met in order to fill out a protective order are that the abuser must have either attempted physical harm, caused physical harm, placed someone in fear of imminent serious physical harm or caused the victim to engage in sexual relations by force, threat of force or duress.

"[The protective order] is a tool that we have to tell the offender to stop," Thrasher said. "We take a very pro-active stance, we don't allow domestic violence here."

Turn to VIOLENCE page 2

Florida Court doesn't pass ruling

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

The Florida Supreme Court heard arguments yesterday in a case that could potentially decide the Presidency of the United States.

Party lines were drawn down the center of the courtroom as the Florida Democratic Party squared off against Republican Secretary of State Katherine Harris.

Florida's Supreme Court consists of six people. Democratic governors appointed the two female and four male justices; of the five, only one is not a Democrat. Justice Major B. Harding is an independent.

The Democrats are appealing Judge Lewis' decision to allow Secretary Harris complete discretion in certifying ballot tallies. Secretary Harris had ordered that all counties must have their returns in by last Tuesday. After the Second Circuit Court's decision, she allowed three counties to submit a letter by 2:00 p.m. last Wednesday explaining any extenuating circumstances. After reviewing the letters, Harris decided that none of the counties merited a manual recount.

Volusia and Palm Beach Counties are now petitioning the State Supreme Court to order Harris to accept the results of any manual recount. Volusia County filed a motion to dismiss itself as a petitioner on Saturday. Daniel Eckert, the Volusia County Attorney, clarified.

"This notice is not made on behalf of Palm Beach County Canvassing Board which joined the Volusia Canvassing Board's notice of appeal," the motion stated. The Court granted the motion.

Lawyers for George W. Bush, who holds a slight lead in Florida, filed a brief with the State Supreme Court on behalf of Harris. The brief sites several Florida laws and judicial precedents.

"There is no requirement in law that the Secretary of State must wait for such results before certifying election returns – indeed, the legislature has made it clear that she may ignore results that are not submitted on time without waiting for their submission," the brief argued.

The Attorney General, a Democrat, filed a response to "note some of the inaccuracies, inconsistencies, and other irregularities contained in the Secretary's submission."

"Nothing in the elections code authorizes the secretary to review, to countermand, to interfere with or to reject such a decision. However, the secretary apparently asserts that [Florida law] somehow gives her such authority," the response asserted. "But her authority to reject recount totals pursuant to these statutes is narrow. Her discretion is circumscribed by the purposes behind these statutes. Their purpose is to encourage county canvassing boards to submit timely returns. Thus, the secretary's discretion is limited to determining whether, under all the facts and circumstances, the boards are submitting their returns in a timely manner."

The Justices took the issue of 'a timely manner' into serious consideration. Several times during the televised hearing, justices asked when Florida's 25 electoral votes would be threatened in the Electoral College.

Any decision in the court matter is not expected for at least another day.

■ Violence

continued from page 1

In addition, the police department honors protective orders from any of the 50 states. The police, for violations of the protective order, then make arrests.

Working in direct conjunction with the police department is the Everywoman's Center. Carol Wallace, the director of Everywoman's Center, explained that the center has recently received a grant that will allow them to work with the police to further prevent violence against women on campus. According to her, one of the components of service offered by the center includes a program called the Counselor/Advocate Program that has a 24-hour number staffed by trained counselors for anyone effected by domestic violence and needs to talk about it, including victims and friends and families of victims. In addition to the 24 hour crisis hotline they offer short-term individual counseling as well as medical and legal advocacy.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Sergeant Robert Thrasher of the UMPD is one of the many community members working to fight against domestic violence.

She explained that the group also helps to provide educational training in the area of violence and rape crisis to police officers, campus students and resident assistants. She explained that the center directly assisted all groups on campus in dealing with any type of violence against women.

"We work very closely with all of the departments on campus that are involved in sexual assault," she said. "We are unique in that we have an excellent working relationship with all of those services."

Another service that is available on campus for staff and faculty members is the Faculty and Staff Assistance Program. Elizabeth Holtzman, an employee of the program, explained that the group serves anyone on campus who is not a student, and offers free assessment for both staff and faculty on campus. She explained that the group provides services, which include assessment and solutions for a wide variety of issues. The group also takes an active interest in workplace violence and puts out a pamphlet that details what a staff member can do if they are faced with this. She explained that at times the group also deals with women in abusive relationships and directs them on where to go for help.

"We end up seeing women who come in around the issues of housing or taxes," she said. "It turns out that abuse is an issue."

The Men's Resource Center in Amherst also serves as a place that addresses violent crimes committed by and against men. Rob Okun, the associate director of the center, explained that they have many programs that address violence.

"We have several programs that we run that allow men to talk about what is going on in their lives," he said. In addition the group also operates a program called MOVE (Men Acting Violently in Relationships), a group that is designed to help men that are acting violently learn new tools to cope with their anger.

"This has been a group specifically for men that are acting violently," he said. "We recognize that there is a good human being inside and that the potential to be a good husband or a good father is there."

He explained that the program is often state-mandated, but in its case, half of the participants are mandated by the state and half participate voluntarily at the insistence of their friends or family. The program is designated to allow men to make a change in their lives by using tools that help them to act non-violently. The group offers a partner's group to curb violence.

"A lot of this is about building self-awareness to make a change," he said. "Significant change can happen."

Another group that works toward preventing domestic violence is Safe Passage. According to Meredith Papa, an employee of Safe Passage, the group is a non-profit organization that helps to remove women and children from abusive situations through shelter and walk-in counselor advocacy. The organization offers both parenting and financial groups and can also house between three and four women at a time who need a place to stay to escape from a violent relationship.

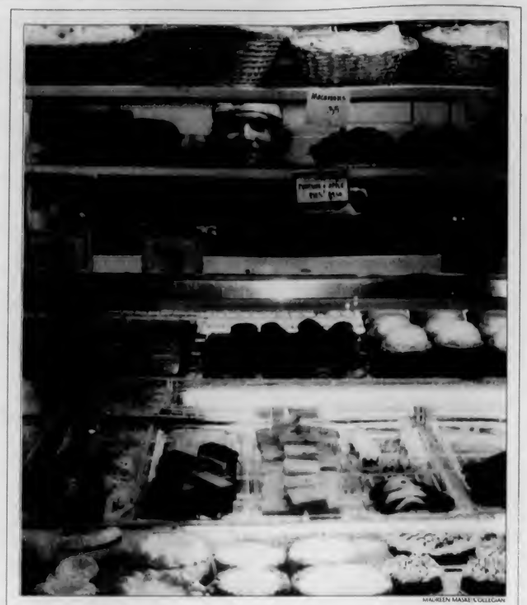
"We try to get the women out of whatever danger that they are in," Papa said.

These groups all provide services that allow anyone who is experiencing abuse to escape from their situation.

"The victims need to know that if they are afraid that there is somewhere that they can go," Thrasher said.

"They just need to come forward."

Anyone that is the victim of violence can call the UMass Police Department 545-2121 or Safelink 586-5066.



MAUREEN MASKE/COLLEGIAN

Sweeth tooth's heaven.

Tim Stone peers through shelves of gurmey desert in the Blacksheep Deli.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life. became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Five Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor–in–Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Gorkowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Serderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beish Assistant Advertising Manager

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA
The Largest Movie Theatre In Hampshire County!
OPENS TOMORROW!
FEATURING
• 2 Box Offices
• 2 Concession Stands
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens
Coca-Cola Celebrates The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!
Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.

Hope for human rights in China

By Jason Spears
Collegian Correspondent

The United Nations High Commissioner for human rights signed a cooperation agreement with Chinese Vice Foreign Minister to provide cooperation between the United Nations and China in the area of human rights, on Monday.

The agreement signed by United Nations High Commissioner Mary Robinson and Vice Foreign Minister Wang Guangya will help prepare the Chinese legal system for ratification of human rights covenants.

"This is a very significant move and I would like to acknowledge it as such, it is a very positive step and I believe we can build on this cooperation to encourage ratification on the two covenants," said Robinson according to the BBC.

The two covenants Robinson is referring to are the United Nations covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the covenant on Politics and Civil rights.

When a country ratifies the two covenants, it is obligated to accept "a series of legal obligations to uphold the rights and provisions" stated in the documents to the United Nations.

The United Nations says the laws of countries that ratify the covenants must comply with the covenants. The country is accountable to the international community for violations of the covenants.

China has signed both covenants, but has not ratified them.

China started moving towards the cooperation agreement two years ago. In September of 1998, China signed a memorandum of intent on the cooperation agreement with Robinson.

The United Nations sent a technical mission to China in March of 1999 to determine its human rights need. Robinson returned to China during February and March of this year for more talks, but failed to reach any agreements until now.

Even though Robinson calls the cooperation agreement an achievement, she admits there are still human rights problems in the country.

According to the BBC, China has made no progress in the areas of freedom of expression, association and religious beliefs.

Amnesty International claims that China detains thousands of activists and government opponents. The organization says some of those are detained without trial, or in political trials that do not meet international standards. Amnesty International describes torture and ill treatment as remaining "endemic, in some cases resulting in death."

Wang says he would continue talks with the United Nations.

"As it is known to all, the Chinese government has always given importance to the promotion and protection of human rights," he said.

However, he also said, that as a developing country, China could only develop rights that work for its "historic situation."

Adam Brookes of the BBC reports that diplomats are divided on whether the cooperation agreement will have any positive effects.

Some diplomats see the agreements as pulling China further into the "human rights mechanisms," helping the entry of United Nations human right investigators into China and paving the way for other human rights agreements.

Other diplomats, criticize the cooperation agreement for not forcing China to accomplish any specific improvements in its human rights practices.

Still, others see the cooperation agreement as an achievement.

"The significance is that this is the first time we have had a formal agreement with China on cooperation in the field of human rights," said U.N. human rights spokesman Jose Diaz to reports in Geneva according to CNN.

Information for this article was complied from the BBC, CNN, Amnesty International and United Nations websites.

More problems with Mori

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

It seems that countries all over the world are in the midst of leadership changes. Taking a cue from Peru, the parliament in Japan has reportedly been arguing whether or not to pursue a no-confidence vote against Prime Minister Yoshiro Mori.

Mori, who took over for Keizo Obuchi in April after his death, has been steadily losing public support. Recently his ratings have dropped below 20 percent. He has been weakened not only by the staggering economy, but also by gaffes and government scandals.

Mori has had a reputation of embarrassing the government by making nationalist comments, stumbling over diplomatic issues and even choosing a spokesman who resigned after an alleged extra-marital affair.

With too many strikes against him, members of parliament called for a change and offered up a motion that would require Mori to either step down, or a general election would be called within ten days.

After hours upon hours of arguments, lasting from Monday night well into Tuesday morning, the motion was beaten by a margin of 237-190.

The fights were so heated that at one point during a speech, parliament turned into a circus after a ruling party supporter threw a glass of water on his opposition. Immediately a mob rushed the podium and a recess was ordered to be called so that both sides could calm down.

The motion has become a symbol of a growing divide within parliament and within the ruling party, the Liberal Democrats Party, which has ruled the country since 1955.

The vote was put down after a top member of the opposition decided to drop his bid. Koichi Kato, a senior member of the LDP, had originally lead the rebellion against the government but was pressured to end his fight by other officials threatened expulsion from the party.

Kato has said to be interested in becoming Prime Minister, and believes that the country is in dire need of new leadership. He is a proponent of changing the system from the inside out.

He has called for an end to big government and incessant spending that has left the country with the largest foreign debt in the developed world. He has also pressed the ruling government for strict political and economic reforms.

It would seem that others relate to his sentiment. Fifty-three lawmakers sided with Kato in his opposition and Japanese newspapers report that Kato has between 34 and 38 percent of the public following.

The split within the party has been cited as the most controversial since 1993 when former Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa was ousted after a no-confidence vote passed. At that time a group of lawmakers left the party, effectively dislodging the power of the ruling government.

The LDP has been losing clout for the last decade and seems to be on its last legs. Though few lawmakers within the party viewed Mori as a long-term leader, most loyal members refrained from voicing dissent in an effort to maintain their power.

Party Secretary General Hiromu Nonaka threatened that anyone voting against Mori would be in essence voting against the government and would therefore be expelled from Parliament.

In reaction to such a threat, Kato urged the younger members not to buy into the pressure and remain in favor of a no-confidence vote. However, it seems that Kato played the hypocrite after he conceded his position when his power was threatened.

In an effort to block the no-confidence motion, Nonaka agreed to hold leadership elections that could oust Mori, thus placating the disgruntled lawmakers.

Though the problem may have been resolved for now, and Mori continues to remain the Prime Minister, more trouble is not out of sight. With so many lawmakers against the ruling party leaders, and the public against the regime, it will not be long until Japan is faced with an emergency election.

Information for this article was compiled from CNN online, New York Times online and The BBC online.

Peruvian government faces monumental trouble after president Fujimori resigns

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The United States is not the only country to be in deliberations about the future of their presidency, with Peru experiencing a governmental free-fall as they face the resignation of President Alberto Fujimori.

The country of Peru was left in a state of confusion yesterday when Fujimori, the country's president for ten years, announced his resignation in a letter addressed to the Congress of President Valentin Paniagua.

"I submit to you, Mr. President of Congress, my formal resignation as President of the republic," Fujimori stated in his resignation letter. "I am the first to recognize that there is a new political scenario in the country."

Controversy surrounding the Presidency of Fujimori began last year when video footage of former intelligence chief Vladimiro Montesinos, Fujimori's right-hand man, surfaced on a local television station showing Montesinos offering an opposing Congressman $15,000 to join forces with the ruling block and switch political parties.

Following this was a motion by some in the 120-person seat-legislator for removal of Fujimori on the grounds of "moral incapacity."

The country is now left in virtual upheaval regarding who will be the interim president until official elections can begin on April 8, 2001 with official inauguration occurring on July 28th of that year.

According to the Constitution, the first Vice-President of the country is to take over the position of President if he is to resign. However, first Vice-President Francisco Tudela already resigned in October of this year due to issues surrounding the incident with Montesinos. The Congress has not yet accepted the resignation.

Second In command Vice-President Ricardo Marquez has stepped forward and offered to take the position of interim-President, but some disagree with the succession claiming that it is unfair.

"Marquez is a person linked to Fujimore's inner circle," Congresswoman Milagros Huaman commented in a statement to CNN. "We are going to ask for Marquez's resignation."

Also in contention for the office of the President is current President of Congress Paniagua, who some claim to be the rightful next President of Peru.

The United States has also expressed concern with the current state of Peru following a telephone call from Prime Minister Federico Salas to the United States Ambassador to Peru John R Hamilton explaining to him that Fujimori would remain in his ancestral homeland of Japan indefinitely.

Following this call, Arturo Valenzuela the director for Latin American affairs on the National Security Council and Peter Romero the Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs flew to Lima to meet and discuss the current state of the government and the options that the country has for a future President.

"What's important for Peru is that the transition to the April 8 elections proceeds smoothly and peacefully," White House spokeswoman Mary Ellen Countryman said in a statement to CNN. "And we will continue to work with the OAS on that process."

Information for this article was obtained from CNN

ANTHONY'S
HI-NRG ADULT ENTERTAINMENT & MORE!
Thanksgiving Party
Wed. November 22nd
Noon-???
Free Buffet
25 Entertainers
Prizes and Surprises!
500 New Ludlow Rd. South Hadley
Clubline: 413-532-3621 Hotline: 413-538-6969
www.anthonys.net

Congratulations!
Omicron Alpha Pi Chapter of Kappa Omicron National Honor Society congratulates the following new members for their outstanding ... and thanks their families who attended the ... ceremony on ... 2000 in Skinner Hall.

Lauren Bianchetto	Apparel Marketing
Ilene Chesler	Apparel Marketing
Crystal Collette	Family & Consumer Sciences
Melanie Damsker	Family & Consumer Sciences
Chantelle Davis	Apparel Marketing
Amy Gallagher	Family & Consumer Sciences
Theresa Howland	Family & Consumer Sciences
Anita Kessler	Apparel Marketing
Malaina Lesage	Family & Consumer Sciences
Michele Miller	Apparel Marketing
Hila Nitzan	Apparel Marketing
Sarah Paddock	Apparel Marketing
Theresa Roeder	Family & Consumer Sciences
Katie Villata	Family & Consumer Sciences

Best Wishes for Great Success from Betsy Frisch, President ; Rebecca Gross, Vice President
Dr. M.A. Albrecht, Faculty Advisor

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
BEGINNING NOV 27TH
Make your appointment now by callin
1-800-OUR-YEAR or log
on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Compa
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or
Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Respect:
Fairness in the classroom

Every student, at some point in their career, comes across a professor with whom they don't get along. This is normal. Most professors, at some point in their career, come across students that they don't particularly enjoy to have in class. This is also normal. We are all humans, and humans don't always get along. However, it is important to remember that even though we may be having a tough time with someone in class, we must respect them.

Students: your professors work hard for you. Many of them have done years of research and have studied very hard to obtain the material they are presenting to you. They attend conferences, and they spent hours writing grant proposals for projects they hope will succeed in inspiring you. They prepare lectures and overheads and presentations for you. It is their job to teach you and interact with you so that you receive a well-rounded education.

Likewise, professors: your students work hard for you, too. Many of them come to every class and take careful notes on your lectures. They read the thousands of pages of reading you assign. They spend hours in the lab trying to obtain data that will correspond with the material they are being taught. They write draft after draft of papers for you. They stay up to wee hours of the night preparing for your exams and your classes. Students are working hard so that some day they can have jobs and be successful, like professors.

Both professors and students are working hard for each other and it is important to realize that. Before you go thinking about hacking into OIT and changing your grade, try to think about the effort you've put into a class. If you're having trouble, then go to your professor's office hours. Students have to also remember that professors are people too, and do need their weekends just like everybody else. Students should respect their teachers, attend the classes they are spending so much money on, and turn in their assignments on time.

Professors must respect students as well. Please take into account the effort that students are making for your class. Please also take into account that the student probably has four other classes for which they are expected to prepare. Remember back in the days when you were just an undergrad and you stayed up until three in the morning finishing a paper or reading a book. Respect your students by being in your office during your allotted hours and, please, please, try your hardest to respect your students and the work they do by returning their papers and midterms back within a reasonable amount of time.

Although both undergraduates and doctors may have infinite frustrations with their classes, the only way to really alleviate any discomfort is to try to understand each other and communicate. The University setting can be overwhelming and stressful. Being courteous and respectful can make it easier to reach that student or talk to that professor. A little decency and responsibility can go very far in the academic setting, and in life.

Long-neglected eyes opened

MATTHEW DESPRES

Two weeks ago, perhaps more, I found myself on a bus bound from the center of Amherst back to campus. It's a trip that I've made dozens of times in my two-and-a-half years at this school, a short exercise in public transportation made out of necessity only. The night was remarkably cold, remember: the sort of weather that brings a certain sharpness to everything it touches.

A small amount of the people that had been waiting with me boarded as well, eager to escape the cold. One of the passengers was a slight man, clothed in dirty denim and a dark jacket. His body lurched quietly back and forth as he adjusted to the warmth of the bus, trying to shake off the last of the cold that had draped itself around him. He settled in as the bus pulled away, and struck up a conversation with the two passengers in front of him. Pieces of the dialogue caught my attention as the words floated endlessly out of his mouth. The two students he had directed his attention toward were clearly uncomfortable that this man, a perfect stranger, had decided to engage them in conversation. The look of relief on their faces swelled as their stop neared, offering them a chance to escape the awkward situation they had stumbled into.

After spitting the students back into the cold, the bus moved forward and the man spoke again. This time he looked toward me. Something in his eyes held my attention, the sense of urgency that shot forth from them, long enough for him to make a proper introduction. He told me that he was 33-years-old, and had spent most of his life from the age of 16 drifting from place to place. The bulk of this time, he said, had been spent in New York City, living on the streets. It was Hell, he said, being there in the early 80s, walking daily in an underground ravaged by drugs and violence. He said that it had taken him all of three minutes to be mugged upon his entrance into the city. A baseball bat held frighteningly close to the head had been his welcome mat to the real world.

Something about his story grabbed me immediately. Partly it was the ease with which he told it, the words just slipping off his tongue as he recited the tales. Looking back, however, it was the honesty with which he spoke that drew my immediate attention. The directness and willingness he had to convey such a story to a stranger. It was at the same time both a cry for help and a proclamation of the change he had begun to instill in his own life. It was clear that this man had lived every word.

I asked him why he was here, in Amherst, wondering how he had discovered a path out of the Big Apple that led to Western Massachusetts. He told me that he was from Holyoke, and had returned to the area to attend school and to set his life straight. To try to reshape a course that had seemingly been determined long ago. He said that he still had friends that ran in the dangerous circles of NYC, but had tired of it himself. For half of his life, he had been without a proper home, a place he could return to.

As my stop approached and I set for the door, he turned in his seat and sent me off with the following: "I'm not out to fix or change the world, you know? Just myself. I'm just trying to change myself." The smile on his face stretched beyond description; it was, perhaps, the most genuine thing I have ever witnessed. I wished him well and stepped off the bus.

My head was left spinning for quite some time, turning every which way with feelings of guilt, appreciation and other emotions. This stranger had lived an impossibly hard life; the physical wear his body had suffered and the slow, deliberate speech that he spoke with were evidence of that. He had every reason to be down and out, a shell of something that had once possessed life and ambition. And yet, despite the circumstances that had so obviously taken a toll on him, he had taken a stand against where his life had gone.

The short encounter left me thinking about the roads I have taken in my own life. Not the obvious moments, but the smaller, everyday events that I have routinely overlooked. The fact that I have a home to return to. The fact that I have friends I can talk to. The fact that I'm in college at a young age, trying to make something of myself. I've spent 20 years casting these things aside; this individual on the bus has spent just as many putting them all back into place. The scene in my head struck a chord. While I admire what this man has been able to do, and the change he has been able to bring about, I don't want to be him. I don't want to be left, however many years from now, trying to recover things that are at my side now.

In a way, I woke up that night. I was suddenly aware of what I had and where I have been. The miserable attitude I have so often veiled myself in no longer seemed an appropriate disguise to pull out at the first sign of trouble. After all, what do I have to be discouraged about? There's not a thing in my life that gives me a legitimate reason to walk around with my head down. All things considered, I have it pretty damn good.

I sat down to write this, unsure of what my true intentions were. Reading back, I realize I simply wanted to share a piece of what I was given that night. A closer look at my own life. My eyes were opened to things I have long neglected, and they were opened by a complete stranger. That was the strength behind the situation, the factor that made me sit back and think about it so deeply.

I head home this afternoon for Thanksgiving, awake in a way I've never been before. It's a sappy, Hallmark type of sentiment, but that sort of thing chases down everyone now and then. I can imagine that most of you, aside from the problems that confront us on a daily basis, are living fortunate lives as well. It could just as easily have been something different, something worse, and I was thankfully reminded of that.

Matthew J. Despres is a Collegian Columnist.

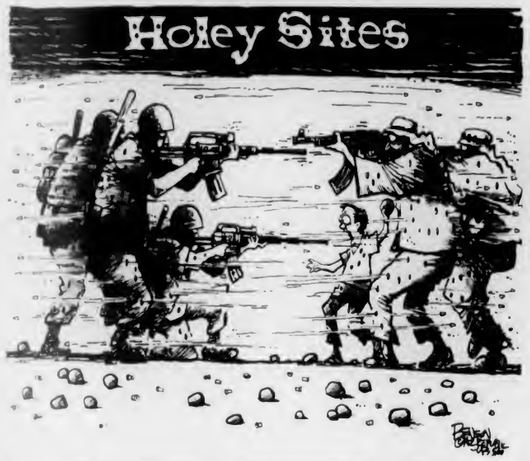
Holey Sites



Acceptable self-expression

CHRIS COLLINS

Okay, I'm only going over this once, so I would appreciate those on the campus who need to hear this to take notice.

Welcome to Life on Campus 101: Learning How to Express Our Dislike for One Another without Committing Any Crimes that Involve the F-Word. Today's Topic: why defacing property with an acceptable form of self-expression.

First to begin, I have no love for the Republican Club. Frankly, I have a couple of major problems with a lot of the beliefs that they hold. And, I was thoroughly unimpressed with both their "Try Mumia" posters from last year, as well as the fact that none of them were willing to actually own up to creating those awful flyers. So frankly, I have no desire to defend the Republican Club. At least, I didn't have a desire until I found out that their office had been wrecked and defaced.

Now, I have to, because frankly, whoever did that to their office was wrong. Sure you might think their views are wrong, immoral, unprogressive and bad. Sure you are allowed to openly debate them in forums like the newspaper, actual debates and any other source you want. Sure you should be able to question a group's beliefs if you feel like you have a problem with them.

What you are not allowed to do is affect anyone's property. If you disagree with a group, you certainly can't rip posters down, nor can you do whatever the cowards who attacked the Republican Club did.

And to make matters worse, those cowards did absolutely nothing to help their situation. If you thought that somehow, you were making such a major blow to the Republicans, you were wrong. In fact, chances are, you actually have made people like me more likely to give the Republicans a little bit of sympathy because they have been unjustly attacked.

Now, assuming the people who did this, did it for a political reasons (if you did it for a non-political reason, I encourage you get a freaking hobby so that you don't continue to upset me by doing utterly stupid things), they really did not accomplish anything. First of all, people in general don't know who did it, so they haven't advanced any of their own agendas. Second, the Republican Club, to whom they are trying to send the message, does not know for sure who did it so they certainly aren't going to change their policy for them, so that is no good either. So frankly, why did they waste their time, energy and writing implements in this effort? It makes no sense whatsoever.

Okay, so now I'm actually going to write a tiny little bit about what I wanted to write about, up until some stupid idiots decided to deface the Republican's club's office space and got me angry enough to respond to their juvenile antics. And trust me, if I could have, this would have been elegant and impressive, but as it is, it will be short and sweet.

As Thanksgiving approaches, we all are given a day to reflect on how much we have and how lucky we are to have it. This sort of reflection should lead us to, well, a meaningful thought about how much we have given to others in the last year. If, when you have thought about it, if you discover you wish you have given more, then I urge you to make a commitment to giving more by either signing up for the Alternative Spring Break or the Community Service Learning Courses. For information about CSL, go to 504 Goodell and ASB can be found in Machmer. Much has been given to all of us, let's give back.

So have a good holiday!

And please, no more stupid, senseless acts of political protest. My doctor tells me I need to watch my blood pressure, and this sort of thing just infuriates me. Thank you in advance.

Chris Collins is a Collegian Columnist.

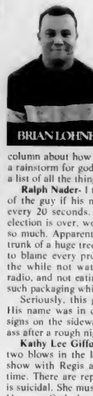
Thanks for nothing



BRIAN LOHNES

Well, I finally did it this week. I applied for Canadian citizenship. Well, that was until I found out that those evil bastards don't celebrate Thanksgiving. I figured that they would since becoming the newest state after we revoked Florida's voting privileges. I wonder how many electoral votes Canada would be worth, eh?

So let's talk Thanksgiving. Last year at this time I wrote a column about how dumb turkeys are; they can throw in a rainstorm for god's sake. This year I am going to make a list of all the things I'm not thankful for.

Ralph Nader- I think I might have a different opinion of the guy if his name wasn't driven down my throat every 20 seconds. Thankfully, it seems that since the election is over, we will not be forced to hear his name so much. Apparently, he will return to his home in the trunk of a huge tree in Oregon and formulate a new way to blame every problem on Earth on corporations, all the while not watching TV and not listening to the radio, and not eating food that comes in a can or other such packaging which wasn't made with union labor.

Seriously, this guy pervaded every inch of UMass. His name was in classes, in wonderfully drawn chalk signs on the sidewalk and, in my case, tattooed on my ass after a rough night. Damn you, Ralph.

Kathy Lee Gifford- As a huge Kathy fan, I was dealt two blows in the last few months. One she leaves the show with Regis and then her new album tanks...big time. There are reports in the various tabloids that she is suicidal. She must have actually listened to the album. Her son Cody has publicly admitted an addiction to sleeping pills and is now traveling with a band of gypsies around the country.

Kenny G- This guy is like some weird disease or something. I seriously think he lives in a cryogenic chamber, frozen for about nine months out of the year, and then when holiday season rolls around, he is poised to attack us with his sweet, soft and smooth saxophone melodies. Personally, I don't even think he really plays a sax; it looks like a gold plated clarinet.

The other evidence that he is frozen is his hair. Come on Kenny, follow the example of Michael Bolton and have a sax blowin,' hair cuttin' good time.

The SGA- The SGA seems to be the most chaotic group of people in the history of mankind. I wonder what other places are like about student government. I sure hope they are better than us. I would think that dropping an f-bomb during a meeting and then seeing it in the paper the next day would make others think twice about how dumb they will look if they do the same thing, but apparently no one reads the paper. Rumor has it that Jerry Springer will now just place hidden cameras around the meeting room and use that for his show.

The leaders are refusing to lead. There is some kind of trial situation happening now and the first semester isn't even over yet.

Cell Phones- I hate cell phones with every fiber of my being. After being nearly run off the Mass Pike by a woman in a Mercedes SUV, who was talking on the phone and fixing her hair, my hatred of cell phones was cemented. She was driving a three-ton truck with no hands on the wheel, then she shot me a look when she nearly sideswiped me. I did the mature thing and gave her the finger.

I understand the need to have a cell phone if you are a doctor, head of state or perhaps a king, but who the hell do you need to call at 10:10 a.m. right after your class got out? Do you really need to know if the sale at Zanna is over?

People who ride their bikes in the street- I can deal with the on-campus bikers but as soon as you leave campus, get your ass on a sidewalk. Amherst does not have extremely wide roads, most of them are just wide enough to get by without trading paint with someone in the oncoming lane, let alone a grad student on a ten speed.

I think it is wonderful that you are saving the environment by not burning any fossil fuels, but use your melon and get off the street. On a side note, aren't bike helmets the most ridiculous looking things in the world? Just by looking at them they don't seem like they would do squat to protect your brain from hitting the pavement.

Wacky fliers on campus- What the hell is the deal with all the fliers that talk about government conspiracies? "The School of Assassins" and "Secret wars with Canada" are just a couple of the things I have see posted around campus.

Forgive me for being cynical, but why would you protest the "School of Assassins?" "School of Assassins." Those are people that you don't want to anger. They are studying to be assassins. For the love of God, don't make them come up to this neck of the woods. I could see protesting the "School of Genetically Engineered Vegetable Growing" or the "School of Hormonally Enhanced Meat Products," but the School of Assassins? No freakin' way.

Cute babies- I am definitely not thankful for cute babies. Seriously, small, happy, cuddly babies? Miracle of life my ass. They can't even talk! They can't go to the bathroom at prescribed times at the prescribed places and, to top it all off, you have to feed them yourself! What kind of free loading, blood-sucking behavior is this to endorse? I think they have baby corporations that destroy the environment too.

"Hopefully you will have a wonderful Thanksgiving and enjoy the company of family and friends. If not, don't blame me; it's all Nader's fault.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

13TH CENTURY ELECTORAL COLLEGE
PEERING INTO THE MIND OF THE FOUNDERS
Hello? HELLO?... Something tells me we're not connecting...
POPULAR VOTE

One-act plays at Hillel: A night full of laughs

By Chanel Dubofsky
Collegian Correspondent

Come on, you know it's starting to happen to you. Must... turn...off...CNN...it's all the same anyway, right? Florida, smlorida.

Well, since I fall into the category of people who are convinced that a decision will miraculously be arrived at the second I turn off the television, I decided I had to get out of the house. But what to do in fair Amherst on Sunday, Nov. 18? Luckily, it was time for the One Act Plays at Hillel.

The afternoon and evening shows featured one act plays written by Jewish playwright David Ives and directed by UMass students Rachel Edelman and Leah Weiss. Hillel was transformed for the performances by creating a cabaret-style atmosphere complete with enthusiastic waiters and waitresses ready to cater to the every whim of the audience members. The result was a unique and intimate setting that kept the audience guessing and wanting more.

Work on the One Acts began with auditions on Oct. 24 and 25 at Hillel, and followed with three weeks of rehearsals, culminating with the Nov. 18 performance. The plays were chosen based on Ives' Jewish heritage and the his criteria that it was "good stuff to work with in terms of timing, rhythm and pace."

The Philadelphia, the first of the plays performed, was directed by Rachel Edelman and featured the theatrics of Sarrah Fulton, Amy Coleman and Adam Schepp. Edelman, a BDIC major in Child Development through Theatre in Education, also directed the UMass production of The Vagina Monologues last February. Fulton and Coleman play Marcie and Allie, two working women who meet for lunch in a restaurant to discuss the events of their day. Marcie, aggravated and confused, tells Allie that lately nothing has made any sense. In trying to order lunch at a kosher deli, she's informed that they don't have any pastrami, and when looking for the Times, she's told she has to read The Daily Collegian instead! Allie tells her triumphantly that Marcie isn't going crazy, she's simply trapped in a Philadelphia, a black hole where everything is the opposite of what it seems. But there's also a Los Angeles (better than a Philadelphia) and a Cleveland ("kind of like death, but without the advantages"). At the end of the show, Marcie seems to have learned how to cope in this alternate universe, while Allie realizes she's actually caught in a Baltimore, which is her worst nightmare. What's a girl to do? Well, flirt with the waiter and remember that no matter what you want, say the opposite. Make the most out the situation, because after all, "everybody has to be somewhere."

Two one-act plays written by David Ives were preformed at the Hillel House last Sunday.

Sure Thing directed by Leah Weiss is a two-role play about what would normally be an ordinary encounter in a restaurant. Aura Spivak and Ed Ahern play Bill and Betty, two people who meet on a rainy night in a cafe. What makes the play unique and original is the buzzers involved. Each time either character hits their respective buzzer the scene would start again. This made for an interesting act, especially when Bill and Betty run off together to the Woody Allen film festival at the end.

Both performances of the one acts were well attended, attracting Jews and non-Jews alike to Hillel. The enthusiasm of the audience paved the way for a bright future for Jewish theatre at UMass.

Hillel House Calendar

Tuesday November 28, 7pm

167 Campus Center
Jewish Student Elections

Friday December 1, 12-2 p.m.

Sushi with Sarah. Join Sarah Raful for lunch special at Panda East!

Saturday December 2, 8 p.m.-midnight

1009 Campus Center, $5 at TIX
It's a time to dress up, dance to tunes by DJ Fooze, schmooze with friends, and have fun before finals. Open to 5-College students.

Monday December 4, 7:30 p.m.

Meet at the Mountain Farms Theater. Let's go to the movies! Take some time out from the end of the semester rush and catch a flick with us!

Tuesday December 5, 7 p.m.

Hillel House
Improv with a Jewish Twist. A fun time playing and learning. No skills. Just be prepared to have a great time.

The rise of Corporate Judaism

By Natty Yagudin
Collegian Staff

The greatest insight I have gained from attending this year's General Assembly in Chicago was from a man I sat next to on the plane back to UMass. The General Assembly, an annual mega-conference attended by about 6,500 people this year (among them the most important Jewish leaders and organizations of North America), is an event that's considered a must-attend for anyone wishing to check the pulse of the Jewish people. But it has left me with a confused impression of the state of Judaism today.

It was hard to see what is really going on behind the thousands of colorful marketing materials, dictated speeches and the short visit of Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak, amidst snow and freezing Palestinian protesters. I wandered through most of the conference helpless and without direction, drowning in conflicting messages of hope and despair, prosperity and urgency for the Jewish nation.

The passenger on the plane, a middle-aged professional who works for one of the New York federations, engaged me in a conversation about his work inside a national welfare organization that are locally responsible for the collection and distribution of funds to promote Jewish life in the US. He commented on how much his work frustrated him sometimes, and how this was one event that has inspired him to go on and do what he does.

He spoke about the difficulty of getting donations, and about the need to get more administrative overhead in order to be able to more effectively solicit donations and direct them to fulfill the needs of the Jewish community. But there was a deeper exasperation in his voice and eyes as he said that many Jews simply don't understand the work of the federations.

"They just don't [get] what we do," he said.

And why should they? His frustrations represent a growing drift and fragmentation within the Jewish people, something that is more than disagreements between reform and orthodox, American and Israeli, liberal and conservative. I call it the rise of Corporate Judaism.

I couldn't help but snicker at the professional charitable wheeling and dealing at the conference, while banners calling for the elimination of hunger and poverty served as a backdrop. On the United Jewish Communities website, a recent short news article describes the 'merger' of its three Jewish agencies, and during the conference winners of the Sappir award[s] federations that raised more than a specific amount of money, got top seats for the Israeli prime minister's address. All of this seemed more like my finance class than my Jewish life.

I started to suspect that Judaism, indeed, might have a "top management." But can that elite group of rich philanthropists really guide the direction of a whole religion where they want it to go?

The answer is obviously not. Despite the fact that the federations raised a record amount of money this year, the estimated percentage of intermarriage is still a dismal 50 percent outside of Israel. Fewer Jews seem to actively choose their religion rather than to simply be born into it.

A part of what frustrated me at the conference was the excessive emphasis on numbers and money. In such an economically driven country, we learn little about how to survive other than as an economic entity. While there may be a magical (albeit complex) Darwinian formula for corporations, no one knows what it is for religions. While the very existence of the Hillel House and its economic well being are critical for the prosperity of Jewish life on campus, they don't guarantee it at all. It takes the students and the community to make it happen.

We need to come back to the shtetl and figure out what it is that they did right. Judaism is paradoxical in that our enemies strengthened our survival and shaped our definition of self, but in America there is no enemy to unite against, and so we seem to lose ourselves in numbers to figure out how to make it as the Jewish people for the next 2,000 years.

There is obviously no simple solution to all of this. But I feel that there is an urgent need to create a stronger movement of grassroots Judaism. It is housewives and mechanics that need to come to events such as the General Assembly, yet I have seen so hopelessly few of them around.

It is people in the community, not just Jewish professionals and rich philanthropists, who need to be included and empowered in the decision- making process about our future. Only then will they fully appreciate the work of Jewish organizations, including what my co-passenger does for a living. Only then will he be relieved of his eternal frustration, which eventually touches and hurts all of us.

Natty Yagudin is a Collegian Staff Member

WRITE FOR JEWISH AFFAIRS!

Why we don't need diversity pages

SASHA SENDEROVICH

In the last several months many people have approached me with a question, "should we fight for keeping the diversity pages?" And, with even more concerned questions, "should we fight for the Jewish Affairs page?" To explain the unclear, and to bring clarification to what is confusing, I would like to offer this editorial comment.

It is true that the Collegian will not have diversity pages next semester. Several pages, including Women's Issues, World Affairs and Business have been eliminated in the fall, leaving room for Jewish Affairs, GLBT Affairs and Black Affairs to exist until the end of this semester. I would like, though, to ask the Collegian readers to reconsider their immediate reaction of disagreement; indeed, the Collegian will not have diversity pages, but this does not mean that Collegian will not have diversity coverage. Moreover, in a move that will, for many, contradict my position as a Jewish Affairs editor, I would like to suggest that, based on the reasons provided by the Collegian editors, I fully agree with the necessity and philosophy behind eliminating remaining diversity pages.

I first heard about the upcoming elimination of the diversity pages in late August, when I got to campus earlier than most students. I was presented a reason for the decision: that the Collegian wants to incorporate all of the diversity coverage into the regular news coverage, as a professional newspaper should do. In those several days before the beginning of the semester, I have witnessed that these were not simple words offered as groundless promises. The Collegian's managing editor was in fact talking with representatives and leaders of various diversity groups on campus, explaining to them that Intentions of the newspaper are in no way meant to do away with diversity coverage.

Those who question the Collegian's interest in diversity coverage often refer to a statement that a newspaper that has made no attempt to cover diversity issues on the regular basis, will not start doing it all of a sudden. I would like to refute that as well; this semester alone the Collegian has increased its diversity coverage a great extent, and well beyond the remaining diversity pages. Jewish-related articles alone have gotten a spotlight of a front page four times. This way, extending diversity coverage beyond a specific diversity page, also proves a point of convenience; respective communities seeking coverage have an opportunity to use publicity for their event as it happens, and not on bi-monthly basis as the diversity pages comes out. Therefore, it is much more fitting to have an article on Rosh Hashana or on Yom Kippur meal donation drive as these events occur, and not two weeks post factum.

In my trying to place Jewish coverage into the regular news section of the newspaper, I have not ever met with a challenge.

On the contrary, respective articles were included into the body of the newspaper without any problem. It appears that the Collegian will cover whatever issue there is to be covered - whether diversity issue or not - on a need basis. That is, if there is enough motivation on behalf of a group seeking representation, such coverage could be easily arranged. When I suggested this to someone who was organizing one of the Collegian-bashing meetings, a peculiar argument was presented. I was told that not everyone has my motivation in an attempt to represent a particular group on campus. Then, maybe this is exactly the problem. It is easy to bash the Collegian, but hard to actually go to the Collegian offices in the Campus Center and actively seek representation for certain groups. Before we go to great lengths for blaming others, we might be better off trying to figure out what the problem is within ourselves.

I would also like to address the argument over the diversity pages in more philosophical terms. First and foremost, we must figure out what it is that we are referring to as diversity. From the arguments presented by groups who feel hurt by the Collegian's decision to stop running diversity pages, it appears that our concept of diversity is not more than having our little secure corner to which we can always cling and feel comfortable. Undoubtedly, to certain groups (including Jewish students on this campus) whose functioning on this campus has not always been safe, it is important to have this kind of security. It is a known fact that anti-Semitism was an issue on this campus, and that the existence of Jewish Affairs page has helped in raising awareness of the problem, as well as appreciation of Jewish life on campus in the past years. But the problem remains: Jewish Affairs, GLBT page and Black Affairs represent just such a miniscule portion of diversity on this campus, that the very fact of their existence is incredibly superficial. What happened to the Muslim Affairs? Why can't pagan students have their own page? What about Hindu students? If many groups start making claims that they have just as much of a stake in having their own page (which, by all means, would be a legitimate argument), then the paper becomes the opposite of being diverse. Such pages do not create interaction; they create isolation for each of the groups.

I have a little bit of experience to make my claims a little more substantial that a pure argument. I did diversity. For a year and a half I have been an active participant in the Inter-Religious Project on campus, taking part in several interfaith service learning trips to New York City and Alabama. I have been in the same room with a Palestinian student when we had to transcend any possible points of contention for the sake of achieving common goal. I have shared the same floor of a church in the South with students from various backgrounds. I have tried to learn by working in a Pentecostal African American community in Birmingham in which I was looked at as someone to be converted. My idea of diversity is much different now that it was before I exposed myself to the challenge of engaging in diversity experiences. Addressing diversity does us no good. Talking about diversity solves no problems. Diversity has to be done. Then, having diversity pages the was they exist today simply addresses diversity, and creates a superficial impression that diversity is duly represented. But without one group going over to another and working together, no diversity is achieved. Diversity is not about pointing out the differences, and not about putting labels, such as diversity page headings.

I decided to write this editorial during a Sabbath morning service in New York last weekend. I was one of nine people spending a weekend in the city during which we attended four different synagogues, as well as a few of many homeless shelters in order to connect ideals of morality, faith and service. We stayed in a Methodist church on the upper West side in Manhattan - no building as well as its sanctuary shared by Jewish Congregation B'nai Jeshrun. The motto of this combined congregation was a famous Hebrew verse: "How good it is when brothers and sisters dwell together in harmony." Weekly Torah portion dealt with Abraham's first son - Ishmael, the forefather of Islam, born to Abraham's servant Hagar before the birth of Isaac by Abraham's wife Sarah. A double-sided insert was included in the prayer books - one side, citing Islamic sources from the Koran, and another - rabbinical Jewish texts that downplayed the importance of Ishmael in connection to Islam as a separate religion. Most amazingly, the rabbi - a man who had fought in Israel's 1973 war, offered an interpretation of the Torah portion. His statement was clear. The rabbi suggested that after almost 1,400 years of Islam as its own unique culture, Jewish interpretation of the passage couldn't be done without taking into consideration what this culture has to say about itself through the words of Koran. Taking this idea further to the current Middle Eastern crisis, the rabbi suggested that "unless Isaac meets Ishmael, there is no real redemption." He further suggested that we must "overcome a part of ourselves for the sake of embracing the other" and that we cannot live without both sides of the page of an insert citing to very different stories. He concluded his message with a statement that we should "not create a cocoon of safety around ourselves," and that besides fate there exists responsibility.

I would dare to say that the rabbi has addressed something very similar to the root of the debate over the fate diversity pages. I know how idealistic and romantic this is, and how easy it is to claim that such notions would not stand in the face of reality. Yet, we can be idealistic and romantic at times, if we at least realize that diversity is not a safety cocoon around different groups, but their interaction. From that point, we can start working on making the Collegian truly diverse – whether that entails creating a position of Diversity Editor, making changes to the Constitution or what not.

It is safe for different groups to have their own secure corner, it is much more challenging for each of these groups – for each of us – to exist without our protective labels. Sitting in a sanctuary of a Methodist Church during a conservative Jewish service, listening to the passages from Koran being read, I heard the rabbi talk about a rabbinical source which neglected Islamic interpretation of the story of Ishmael: "If we continue making such one-sided arguments, without considering the other opinion, maybe we are missing the point completely!" Thus, to those who want to fight for keeping Collegian's diversity pages the way they are – segregated and not representative of diversity – I could only offer that rabbi's question. If nothing else, it is merely a question of contemplation.

What if we are missing the point completely?

Sasha Senderovich is a Collegian Staff member

The type you bring home to mama

Oh, look at the two of you lovebirds. Sitting on the Campus Center couch, holding hands, reading the Collegian together. Aren't you just too adorable? (Yes, that has mocking undertones, in case you are incapable of detecting sarcasm). Well Honeybear and Snookums, I hate to burst your mutual bubble, but Thursday is Thanksgiving. Yes, that's right... that fun let's bring the boyfriend/girlfriend home holiday that generally ends with all parties involved being completely miserable. Okay, simmer down. Consider this a test, if you can make it through this, you're golden. But if you can't get past the Hot Wheels collection in your guy's bedroom, it was never meant to be.

It's just going to be up to you to decide who has to put up with their families' weird quirkiness being displayed to the love of their life (or the love of their semester), and who's going to be the one that dad looks at with intense suspicion ("Oh, hello young man, why don't we take a walk through my game room? I have a couple heads on plaques that you might be interested in seeing.)

Take a look at yourself in the mirror. If you are a guy, do you look like: A) a deranged criminal, B) Marilyn Manson or C) like you've never heard of soap, water and this crazy new invention called an iron? If this is the case, you might want to rethink your look before Thursday. Now unless your girlfriend's address is 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. and her name is Chelsea, you probably won't need to wear a suit. Most families have a semi-dressy to casual Thanksgiving thing kicking. A shirt and tie or khakis and a nice sweater will most likely suffice, but make sure that you ask your girlfriend ahead of time.

Does your girlfriend have brothers? Then think hard about that tight turtleneck sweater look. They might inadvertently take you for a Backstreet Boy and beat you up between courses. But if she has sisters, the sweater would be a good option. As you drive up, they'll be waiting out front with boards of their twelve-year-old friends holding signs that say: "I love you (insert your name here)!" And every time you glance in their direction, they'll burst into appreciative tears. If she has a mixture of siblings, weigh the options carefully. If the guys beat you up, the girls will be all over you in a heartbeat. But how will your chica feel about this?

Girls, remember your days of wearing the velvet/taffeta dress for Thanksgiving dinner? Now that was probably back in the days of big teased bangs, so you should opt to leave those there. While you want to show the parents that you care about how you look, don't go overboard with the whole "Easter Bonnet" look. Sleek fall colors and styles make you look elegant and sophisticated – the kind of girl that every mom hopes her son brings home. But keep a close eye on the length and tightness ratio of your clothing. Short and tight is not an equation that many parents think very highly of.

Okay, dilemma. What do you do in the supremely embarrassing moment that you are wearing the same outfit as his mother? Apparently this actually happened last Easter when both my brothers brought their girlfriends home, and my mom was there cooking up a storm in her posh new outfit of khaki boots, cut cargo pants and stretchy three-quarter length T shirt. Both girlfriends were wearing the same outfit, in different colors. So, you are thinking: "Oh my god, I am wearing the same outfit as a 45-year-old woman. I want to die." Don't. Most families love that whole matchy thing, think of the eight cheesy portraits of you and your sister dressed in matching velvet dresses every Christmas. The mother is going to be absolutely thrilled. She'll feel hip and young, and feel a special connection to you. So, don't flip if it happens, but avoid the matchy thing if at all possible.

When writing this article, I polled a panel of parents, or more accurately, I just called my parents and found out what would horrify them. A note on my parents before I continue. My parents are two of the most liberal people you'll ever meet. Looking at them, you'd just think: "Look like your every-day parents to me," but it is not so. I asked my mom what kind of guy would upset her if I brought him home. There was a long pause on the other end of the line, and then she nonchalantly said, "I just really wouldn't be able to deal if he had a tattoo across his forehead, because I would feel that he was a slave to images and not really looking to his future." (All right, guess I can't bring Spike home for Thanksgiving after all!) But the truly amazing thing is, that really would be the only thing that would bother her about someone's image. At the end of the conversation, she decided to tack on White Supremacist Intignuas, Love/Hate written across his knuckles and a dangly Playboy bunny earring.

My dad said that wrinkled clothing would bother him, as would a girl or guy lighting up a cigarette at the dinner table, and then putting it in their mashed potatoes. I'm really glad that my parents don't expect much of my brothers and I. All I need to do is find a guy that irons his dress shirts, doesn't have "Die!" across his forehead and has the decency to use an ashtray. I think it's safe to say that I won't have any problem finding that.

Good luck with your venture to the parents' house this Thanksgiving. Be yourself, but show some respect by dressing with care for the big dinner. And if you're unattached like me this holiday season, just snicker at your friends as they agonize over the perfect dress or tie. Not meeting the parents is just one more thing to be thankful for this November.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian Columnist

Style FILE
with Shauna Billings

Belo Fleck brings banjo-driven jazz to Noho

Bela Fleck and the Flecktones
Calvin Theater
Nov. 19

By David Siegel
Collegian Staff

In preparing for this show, I was not at all sure what to expect. I had seen Bela Fleck and the Flecktones numerous times, most recently tearing up the stage at this past summer's Berkshire Music Festival. The sheer talent that this usually four-piece ensemble demonstrates through their expertly composed compositions has repeatedly blown me away. On this night however, there was something different in the air.

As I arrived at the Calvin, I noticed that the usual neo-hippie crowd did not make up the majority, rather a very diverse cross section of the area's population shuffled into the beautiful theater. Before going to the show, I realized that it was offered on the Calvin Theater subscription plan and had a very high (in comparison to other jam band shows) ticket price. I was not sure what size crowd to expect and was delighted at the near sell-out capacity crowd that awaited me. Unlike any of the other Flecktones show that I had attended, this one was a reserved seating, sit-down performance.

As I awaited the show, I noticed a plethora of new instruments that I know I have never seen on the Flecktones' stage before. As the show began, I immediately became aware that there were going to be three special guests sitting in with the band for the majority of the show. The original line-up of Bela Fleck and the Flecktones is the famed for: Bela Fleck on banjo, Victor Wooten on bass guitar, Jeff Coffin on horns and Future Man on the synthesized drumitar (half guitar/ half electric drum kit). The special guests included Paul Hanson on the bassoon, John Clark on the French horn and Andy Narell on the steel drums. These guests added a whole new dimension to the quartet as there were now even more instruments with which to awe the crowd. This became evident during the very first song as spectacular bassist Victor Wooten faced off with saxophonist Jeff Coffin for a tremendous exchange as they dueled each other with their instruments. This first song also offered a fantastic bassoon solo by Paul Hanson, and I realized that I had actually never heard what a bassoon sounds like before. Nonetheless, I was more than pleasantly surprised.

Throughout the night, the crowd was consistently reminded of the superb talents of all of the musicians on stage. Countless times, Victor Wooten took control of the stage and jammed out on his bass including on "Hall of Mirrors," which is off of the Flecktones most recent album Outbound. At this point, the six other performers left the stage leaving Wooten holding the lone spotlight. He delighted the crowd, as we awaited every single note that was to come. Obviously Victor was in a holiday mood as he even teased a delicate "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" as well as "Chestnuts Roasting on an Open Fire." The rest of the band rejoined Vic on stage as they closed the first set with "Imagine This" featuring Jeff Coffin on the flute.

The second set opened up with Victor's brother known as "Future Man," alone on stage soloing on a collection of wood blocks that made a full robust sound reverberate through the theater. The solo was completely riveting, as he played over recorded singing, which seemed to carry a very tribal feel. After a few minutes, the other three original Flecktones joined Future Man on stage and they directly segued into "Shubbie's Doobie" off of their Live Art live album. You really got a sense of the great talent that this band has to offer. They seamlessly jammed into and out of the original harmony as they too had fun teasing the crowd with "Wipe-out" as well as "The Addams Family Theme Song."

After being rejoined on the stage by the trio of special guests for a great round circle of soloing, it was Bela's time to shine. As Victor Wooten announce Bela as the "Jed Clampett of the New Millennium," the crowd waited in anticipation as to what Bela would do. He did not disappoint as he took the crowd on a breathtaking journey into the land of the banjo, free styling effortlessly on the bluegrass staple. The remainder of the performers then piled onstage for the set closer, an interpretation of Aaron Copeland's "Hoe-down." For those that now even more instruments with which to awe the crowd. This became evident during the very first song as spectacular bassist Victor Wooten faced off with saxophonist Jeff Coffin for a tremendous exchange as they dueled each other with their instruments. This first song also offered a fantastic bassoon solo by Paul Hanson, and I realized that I had actually never heard what a bassoon sounds like before. Nonetheless, I was more than pleasantly surprised.

Throughout the night, the crowd was consistently reminded of the superb talents of all of the musicians on stage. Countless times, Victor Wooten took control of the stage and jammed out on his bass including on "Hall of Mirrors," which is off of the Flecktones most recent album Outbound. At this point, the six other performers left the stage leaving Wooten holding the lone spotlight. He delighted the crowd, as we awaited every single note that was to come. Obviously Victor was in a holiday mood as he even teased a delicate "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" as well as "Chestnuts Roasting on an Open Fire." The rest of the band rejoined Vic on stage as they closed the first set with "Imagine This" featuring Jeff Coffin on the flute.

The second set opened up with Victor's brother known as "Future Man," alone on stage soloing on a collection of wood blocks that made a full robust sound reverberate through the theater. The solo was completely riveting, as he played over recorded singing, which seemed to carry a very tribal feel. After a few minutes, the other three original Flecktones joined Future Man on stage and they directly segued into "Shubbie's Doobie" off of their Live Art live album. You really got a sense of the great talent that this band has to offer. They seamlessly jammed into and out of the original harmony as they too had fun teasing the crowd with "Wipe-out" as well as "The Addams Family Theme Song."

After being rejoined on the stage by the trio of special guests for a great round circle of soloing, it was Bela's time to shine. As Victor Wooten announce Bela as the "Jed Clampett of the New Millennium," the crowd waited in anticipation as to what Bela would do. He did not disappoint as he took the crowd on a breathtaking journey into the land of the banjo, free styling effortlessly on the bluegrass staple. The remainder of the performers then piled onstage for the set closer, an interpretation of Aaron Copeland's "Hoe-down." For those that know

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

OFFcampus Antics Find the Web gals bending the big green noodle on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2Girls looking for 3rd female to share Puffton apartment. Contact Dawn or Rebecca 549-2676

Take over lease. Townhouses. 2 bedroom. Available 1/10. $775/month. 549-4762

Subletting 1 room in 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. January or February - August. Call Lisa 549-0467

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework. 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

EMPLOYMENT

Coordinate gym class for home-schooled kids. 1day/week. Time is flexible. Call 323-5227

Fraternities * Sororities Clubs * Student Groups Earn $1,000-$2,000 this quarter with the easy Campusfundraiser.com three hour fundraising event. No sales required. Fundraising dates are filling quickly, so call today! Contact Campusfundraiser.com at (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR SALE

Snowboard. Sims snowboard with bindings excellent condition. Ready for the season. B.O. 546-7070

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOMEWANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good temperment, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley-4.5 bedroom, on bus route. $1250/month + utility. 582-9075

MUSIC LESSONS

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Cliffside Apts. 665-8712

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female for Brandywine Apt. Call 549-0854 for more info.

Roommate Wanted to share two bedroom apartment one mile from Umass. Starts in mid-January. Call Pedro at 253-1723

To share large bedroom in three bedroom apt. On bus route. Starting Jan 1. Call Amanda 397-8999

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spend Winter Break in Mont Tremblant, Canada! 5 days ski/ride, 5 nites, roundtrip coach. Club party nites! 1/7-1/12 #1 resort in east! From $309! Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club @ 5-3437 or visit Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash-tours.com

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

What are you waiting for??

Get your Ads in NOW before it is too late!!

Call 545-3500

NEED A ROOMMATE ?

NEED TO SELL YOU CAR?

LOOK NO FURTHER

545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 - HSC's Brothers Board
3 - CBHS Shepherd
4 - CATS 3 Movies
5 - ABC/40 Springfield
6 - FOX 22 Springfield
7 - HSCN Movie Channel
8 - 11th Hour
9 - 25&29 New Movie Channel
10 - NBC 30 New Britain
11 - Fox 61 Hartford
12 - PBS Hartford
13 - WB50/38 Springfield
14 - Entertainment Channel
15 - UPN 18 (Audition Channel)
16 - WB 59 New Haven
17 - Spare
18 - FOX2
19 - UPN 20 (Another Channel)
20 - Weather Channel
21 - Travel w Cloyd
22 - E! News
23 - CNN
24 - CNN Headline News
25 - Espresso
26 - USA
27 - Vh1
28 - Sci-Fi
29 - Discovery
30 - Nickelodeon
31 - Cartoon Network
32 - Nick at Nite
33 - TV Land
34 - Comedy Central
35 - BET
36 - Lifetime
37 - Bloomberg Financial Network
38 - CNBC
39 - MTV
40 - VH1
41 - The Learning Channel

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 21, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	10 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Runaway Universe" ℠		Women's College Basketball		Connecticut at Pepperdine (Live)
WFSB	3	3 News ℠	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "A Separate Peace" (N) ℠		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ℠		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WBZ	4	4 News ℠	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "A Separate Peace" (N) ℠		60 Minutes II (In Stereo) ℠		Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WCVB	5	5 News ℠	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℠	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ℠	Friends ℠	Nanny ℠	Buffy the Vampire Slayer ℠		Angel "The Shroud of Rahmon"		News ℠		Friends ℠	Sudden-Susen
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N) ℠	DAG (N) ℠	Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "The Legacy" ℠		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	★★★ "Love Jones" (1997, Drama)		Larou-z Tate. (In Stereo) ℠		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ℠		Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N) ℠	DAG (N) ℠	Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ℠	Frasier ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Friends ℠	70s Show	Titus (N) ℠	Dark Angel "Prodigy" (N) ℠		News		Friends ℠	Frasier ℠
WWLP	22	News ℠	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Frasier (N) ℠	DAG (N) ℠	Dateline (N) (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Scientific American Frontiers		Nova "Runaway Universe" ℠		Frontline "Real Justice" (N) ℠		Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ℠
WGGB	40	News ℠	ABC News	Seinfeld ℠	Frasier ℠	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (In Stereo) ℠		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ℠	Judge Judy ℠	NHL Hockey	Boston Bruins at Ottawa Senators (Live)					Frasier ℠	Med Abt. You	Spin City ℠	Spin City ℠
WTBS	72	Roseanne ℠	Roseanne ℠	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball	New York Knicks at Orlando Magic. (Live)				Inside NBA	★★★ "48 HRS." (1982)
A&E	45	Night Court	Newsradio ℠	Law & Order "Prisoner of Love"		Biography Marquis de Sade		American Justice		Investigative Reports ℠		Law & Order "Night and Fog" ℠
CNN	20	21 Worldview ℠	Moneyline News	hour (N) ℠	Crossfire ℠	World Today ℠		Larry King Live ℠		Newsstand ℠		Sports	Moneyline ℠
COM	53	76 Saturday Night Live		Daily Show ℠	Stein's Money	★★½ "Beautiful Girls" (1996, Comedy-Drama) Timothy Hutton.				Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show ℠	Stein's Money
DISC	70	Wild Discovery Creatures		Wild Discovery: Snakes		Shoot Not to Kill		New Detectives "Missing" (N)		FBI Files "A Hunter's Game"		Justice Files
ESPN	51	Sportscenter ℠		College Basketball: Maui Inv. Semifinal – Teams TBA				Basketball	College Basketball: Maui Inv. Semifinal – Teams TBA				Sportscenter
LIFE	52	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait "Janis Joplin"		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A Face to Die For" (1996, Drama)		Yesmine Bleeth. ℠		Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31	Direct Effect	Cribs	Making Video	Best of Backstreet		Backstreet Over	Broadway	Together	100 Greatest Pop Songs (N)		Diary	Cribs
NICK	33	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ℠	Rugrats ℠	Pelswick (N)	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bav. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	43	Sliders "Asylum" (In Stereo) ℠		Babylon 5 "Knives" (In Stereo)		Space: Above and Beyond ℠		★★½ "The Tommyknockers" (1993, Horror) Jimmy Smits ℠				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	63	28 Mysteries of Magic		Critical Condition: Epidemics		Trauma: Life in the ER ℠		Why Doctors Make Mistakes		Why Doctors Make Mistakes		Trauma: Life in the ER ℠
TNT	23	ER "Vanishing Act" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Pool" (In Stereo) ℠		PGA Golf: Grand Slam of Golf – First Day (In Stereo) ℠						Ball "In the Back" ℠
USA	62	Walker, Texas Ranger ℠		JAG "Rogue" (In Stereo) ℠		Nash Bridges "Power Play" ℠		★★★½ "Blade Runner" (1982, Science Fiction) Harrison Ford. (In Stereo)					Martin ℠
HBO	35	★★½ "In the Mood" (1987) Patrick Dempsey. 'PG-13' ℠				Real Sports (In Stereo) ℠		"For Love or Country: The Arturo Sandoval Story" (2000, Drama)				Curb-Enthem	"Broken"
MAX	61	(5:45) ★★½ "Forces of Nature" (1999) 'PG-13' ℠		★★★½ "Fight Club" (1999, Drama) Brad Pitt, Edward Norton. (In Stereo) 'R' ℠						★★★ "The Last of the Mohicans" (1992) Daniel Day-Lewis. 'R' ℠
SHOW	55	★★½ "Night of the Comet" (1984)		Catherine Mary Stewart. 'PG-13'		★★★½ "Being John Malkovich" (1999, Comedy) John Cusack. 'R'				Beggars and Choosers ℠		"Carnal Desires" (1999) 'NR' ℠

Dilbert By Scott Adams

THE DOGBERT TEMP AGENCY USES GENETIC ENGINEERING TO GROW OUR OWN WORKERS.
ISN'T THAT DANGEROUS?
I WEAR SAFETY GOGGLES.
I'M THE NEW TEMP.
UM... I'M ALICE.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

ALL RIGHT, ALREADY. I HEAR YOU—I LOST...
I'M SORRY. REALLY.
NOT AS SORRY AS THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE GOING TO BE IN FOUR YEARS, THEY'LL BE BEGGING ME TO GET BACK IN— BRINGING ME!
I ONLY WISH I COULD GET THE NAMES OF EACH AND EVERY PERSON WHO VOTED FOR ME!
TO KEEP YOUR MOUTH ABOUT— ALIVE!
NO, TO SELL TO A CATALOG COMPANY OR SOMETHING.
GOOD THOUGHT! WE MIGHT NEED A NEW NOT.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

CAN'T YOU AT LEAST THANK SATCHEL FOR DOING ALL THAT WORK FOR YOU?
...JUST SAY "THANK YOU, SATCHEL!"
YOU'RE PUSHING YOUR LUCK TODAY, KITTY... HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE GROUNDED FOR YOUR ENTIRE LIFE?
GO NUTS. I GOT NINE OF 'EM.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HEY, DO YOU SMELL THAT? IT'S LIKE... OH, BUCKY IS HERE.
YEAH, NO OFFENSE, BUT YOU REALLY REEK, BUCK.
WELL CATCHER'S NOT ONE TO TALK. HE SMELLS LIKE A BASSET HOUND.
WOW. REALLY? A "BASSET"? ME? I'M NOT EVEN DOING ANYTHING NEW...
THAT'S A COMPLIMENT TO HIM, YOU KNOW.
YEAHHH. I REALIZED THAT AS I WAS SAYIN' IT.

Over The Hedge By Fry & Lewis

Horoscopes

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Today, you may want to call in some outstanding debts. It is important, however, that you do so in a patient, tactful, undemanding way.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You can avoid a ho-hum kind of day simply by steering clear of those things you know bring you down. It's as simple as staying alert!
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Someone close to you may claim to have just the thing for you today, but you'd better trust your own instincts in this regard.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Creativity and imagination are essential to success today. Doing things the same old way is the surest route to boredom and frustration.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Expectations are high today, and the potential for success may be even higher, but you must choose your companions with great care.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take care you don't let constructive criticism become judgmental. Call it the way you see it – but steer clear of name-calling.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You will have the urge to travel today, but the means may not be available to you at this time. Let your imagination point the way for you.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You're in no mood to be lectured or bossed around today, but you must avoid coming across as arrogant or defensive.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You're in the mood to play a dominant role today – in your work and in your home life. Being in control is more important to you today than usual.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Your sensitivity may be challenged by your interest in getting the job done efficiently today. Conflict may result in the home.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Give a little and take a little today, but remember: Moderation is the key. Don't let yourself become overindulgent.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Now is no time for a jealous outburst. Do what you can to control such negative feelings – in yourself and those around you.

Amherst Weather

Today	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 39 LOW: 24	HIGH: 33 LOW: 16	HIGH: 31 LOW: 17

Robotman By Jim Meddick

THE #5 ZINC-PLATED 3½" PHILLIPS HEAD WOOD SCREW BIN IS EMPTY
OKEY-DOKEY THAT SHOULDN'T BE A PROBLEM.
I...THINK I... YES! I THINK WE HAVE THEM IN STOCK!
IF YOU'LL BEAR WITH ME, SIR, I'LL HAVE ONE FOR YOU AS SOON AS POSSIBLE!
20 MINUTES LATER
HERE YA GO, SIR. ONE #5 ZINC-PLATED 3½" WOOD SCREW...
I SAID PHILLIPS HEAD!

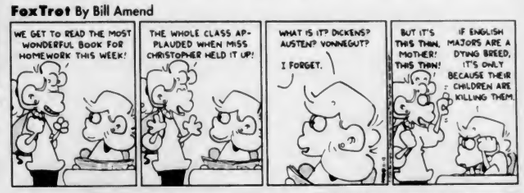
Flea Bitten By Mike Kulak

I don't care anymore
So who do you want to be president?
Well Bosh's dad had a dog, so why not him?
Didn't Gore invent the flea collar?
Good point

Dilbert By Scott Adams

HERE'S THE NEW GUY. I DON'T KNOW HIS NAME.
HE'S EITHER RUDE OR SHY. NO ONE KNOWS FOR SURE.
IF YOU FIGURE IT OUT, NAME HIM EITHER SHILO OR RUDY.

FoxTrot By Bill Amend



WE GET TO READ THE MOST WONDERFUL BOOK FOR HOMEWORK THIS WEEK!
THE WHOLE CLASS APPLAUDED WHEN MISS CHRISTOPHER HELD IT UP!
WHAT IS IT? DICKENS? AUSTEN? VONNEGUT?
I FORGET.
BUT IT'S THIS THIN, MOTHER! THIS THIN!
IF ENGLISH MAJORS ARE A DYING BREED, IT'S ONLY BECAUSE THEIR CHILDREN ARE KILLING THEM.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBJ
ERNEST NEVER HAD BAD DREAMS WHEN HE SLEPT IN THE COMFORTING ARMS OF HIS DYING-OF-EBOLA ACTION FIGURE © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"If the world is so wrong, yeah, you can break them all with one song."
–Hole

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Minuteman Croissant Sandwich (B, F, H)

Quarter Lb. Burger (B, F, H)

Vegetable Croissant Sandwich (vegetarian) (B, F)

California Vegetable Chili (vegan) (B, H)

Sloppy Joe (W)

Vegetable Sloppy Joe (vegan) (W)

Seitan Bourguignon (vegan) (W)

Dinner

Cajun Fish

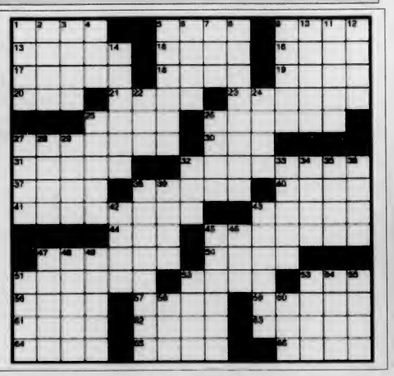
Cavatelli Supreme (B, F, H)

Savory Stuffed Peppers (vegan) (B, H, W)

Bow Tie Pasta and Vegetable Casserole (vegetarian) (B, F, W)

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership
Call 545-3500 for details.



Staff

Night Editor — Adam Martigneth
Photo Technician — Maureen Maske
Copy Editor — Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor — Mike Kulak, Adi Huseinovic
Production Staff — Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, November 21, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass shovels win over 49ers

Women's Hoops starts season with pivotal first victory

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Before Friday night's opener versus the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said that she didn't know what to expect from her newly fashioned Massachusetts women's basketball team.

UMass	64
UNC	48

The crowd at the William D. Mullins Center didn't either. But after Friday night's 64-48 win over the 49ers, it's now thinking "hmm, that was pretty exciting, this is going to be an interesting year."

No one knew what to think – you couldn't really make any assumptions after the Minutewomen's 84-49 exhibition win over Latvia. And everybody was wondering how wounding the loss of junior NeKole Smith would actually be to the squad.

UMass' first answer to everyone's questions was with defense. The Minutewomen banged up Charlotte for 31 turnovers and let up only 39 shots the entire game. The UMass press also played a big role in the 49er unraveling.

"You can't take 39 shots and win a Division I basketball game," UNC-Charlotte Head Coach Ed Baldwin said. "We lost because UMass played harder than we did. They out-rebounded us and they out-scrapped us.

And [Jen] Butler just played a hell of a game."

Butler stepped up for the Maroon and White, scoring 19 points, grabbing 11 rebounds and recording 10 steals for the first triple-double of her career – not a bad way to start things off.

"Tonight was one of those nights when she was feeling comfortable and she was getting herself in good position – she did a great job defending the back of the zone," O'Brien said. "I think everyday she seems to get more and more comfortable."

Freshman Paige Harris made a huge contribution, going 3-for-5 from behind the arc and a perfect 4-for-4 from the free throw line. Eight of her 13 points came consecutively in a key stretch for the Minutewomen at the end of the game, which helped seal the deal for UMass. The early emergence of Harris' shot is surely a positive sign for the Maroon and White.

"It was just an unbelievable feeling – it's what I've been working for," Harris said about her shooting performance. "As a shooter you just have to keep shooting. Even the best shooters miss."

"We got some good shots from some good shooters," O'Brien said. "We struggled a little, but Paige came in and did her job. She has the green light."

The player that UMass can always count on – it's leader, Kathy Coyner, played her customary 40 solid minutes, totaling 16 points, 6 assists and 5 rebounds in the victory. Coyner's presence on the basketball court for the Minutewomen just cannot be overlooked. The co-captain made intelligent decisions the entire night and was able to create space on the floor for her teammates to maneuver. She also hit many timely shots that kept the UMass confidence at a high, early on in the game.

Other key contributors for the Minutewomen were junior Caroline Nehls and sophomore Siiri Livandi, who combined for 6 points and 10 boards. Sophomore Amber Sneed netted 6 points and pulled down five rebounds, while freshman Cleo Foster dished out a couple assists and dropped in her first career basket.

The Maroon and White simply came out firing. After five minutes of play, six Butler points and an Ebony Pegues jumper, UMass had a 10-3 advantage, and an early boost of confidence. At 12:09, Charlotte closed the gap to two, 11-9, on a free throw by Tara Harris, but that's as close as the 49ers would get in the first half of play.

With just over 11 minutes remaining in the first half, Butler grabbed a rebound and dribbled the ball to about three steps before half court. She then lost it but was able to knock the ball up in the air to Pegues, who came out of no where to make a tip pass to a wide-open Amber Sneed for the easy layup and the 15-9 lead.

UMass kept a lead of about five for pretty much the rest of the half. Coyner, however, tallied the Maroon and White's last seven points of the half to lead her squad into the locker room with a ten-point advantage, 33-23.

"It just seemed like every time we made a run we'd turn the ball over," Baldwin said. "Offensively we just didn't play well."

UMass had a difficult time getting started in the second half, going scoreless for the first 7:15 of the stanza, and saw it's lead disintegrate to two points. Butler's layup at that point, however, ended the drought and brought the score to 35-31 in favor of the Minutewomen.

"They took us out of our game then," Coyner said. "But we took a deep breath and knew we just needed to keep our composure and stick with our game."

Like the middle part of the first half, the UMass lead fluttered around five points for a good amount of time. That was until Harris came to life, scoring eight consecutive points in a span of 1:57. With 5:14 left in the contest, she drilled her second three-pointer of the game from the right corner to give UMass the 9-point lead at 51-42. Just over a minute later, Harris rolled to the top of the key, took the feed from Coyner and planted her third trey of the game, extending the advantage to 12. Twenty seconds later she added two free throws, upping the score to 56-42. From there, the Minutewomen just cruised to victory.

"We didn't attack their press in the second half. We just threw the ball back and forth," Baldwin said. "And when they hit 3's they were big time 3's."

"I knew as long as we played hard and ran the floor we would do good," Butler said. "We had to play hard. They had a lot of big girls."

JANET BARR/COLLEGIAN STAFF

No. 15 Kathy Coyner gets ready to burn an opposing defender with a killer crossover dribble.

UMass barely loses to top 'dogs'

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

ATHENS, GA — For a team to be the best it can be, it must prove that it can play with the best. And beat them.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team found itself on the campus of the University of Georgia on Sunday afternoon, with an upset on the itinerary. The team returned to Amherst fulfilling that itinerary, but now holds the knowledge that it can play with the top programs in the nation. The eight point, 71-63 loss holds a number of positive avenues on which UMass can build to become a more solid ball team.

Georgia	71
UMass	63

"We looked at this as an opportunity," said senior point guard Kathy Coyner. "This is why we play the game. As little kids, this is what we dream of, to be able to beat teams like this."

Georgia is well known in women's basketball circles as of one of the most successful programs in the nation – ever. NCAA appearances, for the Lady Bulldogs, are part of their tradition.

This season, Georgia returns four All-American candidates and it adds one of the best freshman centers in the country. The Miller twins, Coco and Kelly, are two of the most dangerous guards that the Southeast Conference can brag about, and newcomer Christi Thomas posted a double-double coming off the bench in her first collegiate game against No. 1 UConn.

UMass, in its first road contest of the season, got off to a quick lead thanks to an Ebony Pegues jumper, and was able to hold that lead for the first 15 minutes of the afternoon. The Minutewomen limited the Lady Bulldogs to only nine points for the first 13 minutes, exhibiting a tenacious defense that was spearheaded by sophomore center Jen Butler.

Massachusetts Coach Joanie O'Brien made it obvious at the onset of the game that she was going to show as many different defensive schemes as possible while utilizing the depth on her bench. From showing man to man coverages to variable zone packages, the Maroon and White 'D' would restrain the potent Georgia 'O' to only 24 points in the first half, a three point 'dog lead.

"I thought defensively we did a pretty good job," O'Brien said. "We changed up defenses on them and I think we made them earn everything they got."

The Lady Bulldog offense that shot 25.8 percent in the first half, remained in the locker room as a more focused Georgia team came out in the second half to play.

Superwoman, in the guise of Kelly Miller, dressed up in the Georgia red and white and took the game into her own hands. She and her twin made up for the shots they missed in the first set of play by nailing everything and then some for a substantial 43 combined points overall.

But the second half was no blow out, by any means.

After Kelly Miller nailed a three and a quick lay up to start the half, UMass' Coyner threw up three of her fifteen points to silence the crowd and make the score 29-24. Thanks to a Georgia miscue, UMass seized back the ball and Paige Harris executed a page out of O'Brien's playbook by nailing a short jumper off of a Butler screen to bring the deficit to three. Kelly Miller then promptly nailed another trey to welcome the loud crowd back to the action. Her sister swished the next basket to bring the Dog lead to 10 until Coyner once again drilled a three to silence the southern fans.

Turn to BBALL page 7

Minutewomen compete against nation's elite

ATHENS,GA – They definitely weren't in Kansas anymore. And for that matter, they weren't in Amherst either. Last Sunday afternoon, the members of the Massachusetts women's basketball team found themselves matched up against the No. 5 ranked team in the nation, the University of Georgia, on the hardwood of the Lady Bulldog's own Stegeman Coliseum.

"I've never been in a game this big this in my life," freshman Paige Harris said. "It's like a dream. I walked in and the crowd was just going crazy. It was unreal."

That's how it was supposed to play out. It was just going to be a little dream, right? The Minutewomen were supposed to come to Georgia, play 40 minutes of basketball in the sporting limelight and then return home the same as they were before - with the exception of their newly taken loss.

That wasn't really the case. They proved they could compete with the best of them. They did lose, but they did so respectably, falling to Georgia by a lowly eight points, 71-63.

UMass limited the Lady Dogs' offense in the first half to a mere 24 points (9 in the first 13 minutes), but in the end, it was the twin sister duo of Kelly and Coco Miller that helped Georgia escape the upset – combining for 43 points, 29 in the second half. The Millers have had an outstanding reputation in the sport ever since their high school days , and although they weren't at their best on Sunday, they showed the Maroon and White the Miller-time that every team in the country has come to hate, nailing big shot after big shot down the stretch.

"You got the Millers out there who probably wish they could play us everyday because they always get 27 and 20 [points], or something like that," UMass Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "They did the same thing last time. They really controlled things."

With 2:43 left in the game, the Minutewomen were within four points of the Lady Dogs. But with 1:51 remaining, K. Miller was fouled by Cleo Foster on a 12-foot jumper that she drilled from the right side. Miller's free throw completed the 3-point play and put her Lady Dogs up seven, virtually ending any realistic chance for a UMass comeback.

ERIC SODERSTROM

"When we get tired and when somebody beat us off the dribble, we can refer back to Kelly Miller or Coco Miller and be like look, we were able to, at times, contain them. The rest of these people should not be that big of a deal," O'Brien said. "So hopefully this will be a lesson that will last us all year long."

Up until that point in the game, the Maroon and White had played solid, competitive basketball with one of the best teams around. And the 2,952 Georgia fans in attendance weren't the most courteous hosts either. But that's typical in big basketball country, especially Bulldog country. It's just that most of the Minutewomen weren't too acquainted with the entire situation.

"We watched them play UConn on ESPN [last Sunday] and I've actually played some of these girls in AAU [Amateur Athletic Union]," Harris said. "That's what I tried to keep telling myself: it's still basketball."

It was the four pre-season All-American-deep staff of Georgia versus UMass' lone senior squad. That's what it came down to: players who've "been there" before against ones who haven't. Also, many thought that the Maroon and White were in for a thrashing because of Georgia's ugly 99-70 loss to UConn. They thought that Georgia needed to make some type of statement. Instead, UMass' existence in the basketball world was put in plain sight.

"They're good," Georgia Head Coach Andy Landers said. "They're solid. They're very well coached. The thing that pe-

Turn to HOOPS page 7

TODAY'S JOB OPENING #1026

JOB TITLE: Senior Web Designer.
SALARY: Take what you need.
DESCRIPTION: Kick back and brainstorm. Come and go as you please.
REQUIREMENTS: Internet surfing experience. Ability to hang out with friends a plus. Some napping required.
OTHER: Unlimited benefits. 3-hour lunch mandatory.

Hey, your dream job might not exist. But there are over 40,000 other high tech job openings throughout New York State.

hightechNY.com

Is Men of Honor a must-see military thriller, or does it deserve a dishonorable discharge? Find out in Arts.

ARTS p. 6

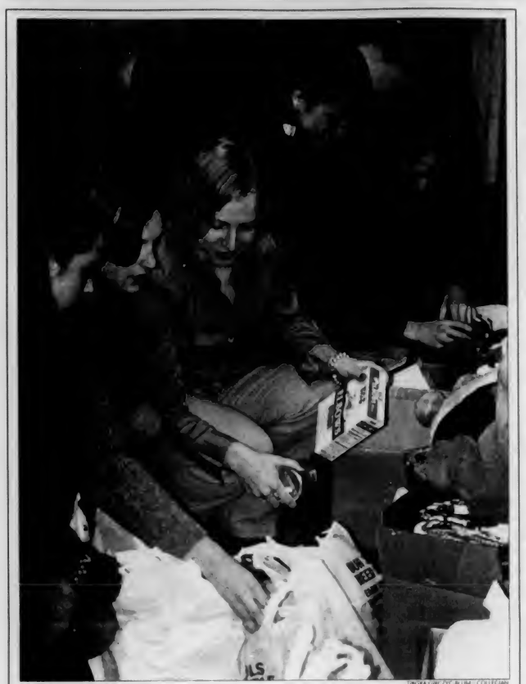
The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team faced off with northern foe Vermont last night in an important non-conference matchup.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 55 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 22, 2000



TAKUKA GOHARA/COLLEGIAN

Helping the needy
Students collect food during a food-drive to help the less-fortunate during the Thanksgiving holiday.

America waits as courtroom proceedings spell presidency

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

With no timetable set for the Florida Supreme Court to decide whether or not recounted vote tallies will be included in the state's official count, the campaign of George W. Bush opened a second legal front asserting that the court couldn't set criteria for counting disputed ballots.

With Bush enjoying a lead of 930 votes over Al Gore in Florida, the standard by which disputed ballots are counted may decide who will take office in January as the 43rd President.

"We have no schedule, no timetable at the present time as to when something may be coming out of the court," said Craig Waters, spokesman for the court.

Meanwhile the Bush team pursued new legal action maintaining that the Florida Supreme Court had no authority to determine the criteria by which the questionable ballots will be counted.

"The Court is without power to decide this question of ballot standards because there is no case before them raising the question," the Bush filing said. "Moreover, this is an intensely fact-bound question, and there is no existing Florida law on this question."

The unofficial gap between Bush and Gore in Florida narrowed slightly yesterday as manual recounts in Miami-Dade, Palm Beach and Broward counties continued. With 78 of 614 precincts completing recounts in Miami-Dade County, Gore gained 72 votes, and gained three more votes in Palm Beach County with 104 of 531 precincts counting. Gore also picked up votes in Broward County, adding a net gain of 127 votes with ballots in only four precincts to be counted.

The Gore campaign also pursued legal action in Palm Beach County yesterday, asking Circuit court Judge Jorge LaBarga to require election officials in the county to count "dimpled" ballots as votes. Election officials in Palm Beach County had been using a more cautious standard in counting ballots with questionable voter intent. The Associated Press reports that 724 "dimpled" ballots, which have protruding notches in the paper ballot but without a clearly punched hole, have been set aside for review in the county. Of these ballots 499 indicate a Gore vote while 225 appear to be Bush votes. Judge LaBarga scheduled a hearing for 9:30 a.m. this morning to hear arguments from both sides.

The Gore campaign answered Republican charges that they had tried to disallow the counting of absentee ballots of military personnel by enlisting war hero and US Senator Bob Kerrey yesterday to refute the Republican claims.

"They're reckless, they're irresponsible and they're wrong," Kerrey said of the accusations.

The attacks by the Bush campaign began this weekend when it was learned that 1,400 overseas absentee ballots were disqualified in Florida due to technicalities, including lack of a postmark. Military personnel applied for the majority of absentee ballots issued, and their ballots were presumed to favor Bush.

"If they have a legal ballot, it should be counted. If it is not a legal ballot, it should not be counted," Kerrey said. "Men and women in the military should not expect, and do not expect, to be treated in some fashion that has them being a pawn in a political argument."

Kerrey also said that if Bush wanted to count absentee votes which were disqualified due to electoral regulations, then he should be willing to accept a manual recount to determine the intent of other Florida voters.

"If Governor Bush is willing to say that we ought to take intent into account in dealing with overseas voters, then I challenge him to say the same thing for the rest of Florida voters," he added.

COURTESY OF THE HOUSTON WEB

Vice President Al Gore, above, and Texas Governor George W. Bush, below.

Library flasher heads up lineup of weekend activity by UMass Police

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Several physical assaults and an indecent exposure incident were just some of the types of crime encountered by the University of Massachusetts Police Department, which receiving a total of 157 assistance calls this weekend alone.

At roughly 12:30 a.m. on Sunday, a female UMass student reported to the police that she had been assaulted in the area between Clark Hill Road and Gorman Dormitory.

The victim explained to police that she had been attacked from behind and fell to the ground. Her attacker then reportedly turned her over and grabbed at her chest, at which point she retaliated by pushing her assailant away with her legs and fleeing the area. The assailant was described as a white male, with brown hair and a muscular build. He was wearing a black long sleeved shirt.

An incident of physical assault occurred on Wednesday outside of Boyden Gymnasium and resulted in the arrest of Phillip Robinson, 24, of Dorchester and Toussaint Motley, 22, of Amherst. Robinson was arrested for assault and battery with a shod foot and for an outstanding warrant, while Motley was arrested for assault and battery with a shod foot, using a stairwell and for disorderly conduct. Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMPD, explained that the actual date of arrest was on Friday the 17th.

"They turned themselves in for arraignment," Lyons said.

Another incident that occurred this week was a case of indecent exposure in the W.E.B. Dubois Library on Thursday. Robert Patrick Rooney, 55, of Washington D.C. was arrested for lewdness, open and gross behavior and for an outstanding warrant. Lyons explained that a woman was studying in the library when Rooney came in and exposed himself to her. The woman allegedly screamed and ran away, while the perpetrator went out through an emergency exit. Police arrived on the scene to get a description of Rooney and prevented him from leaving campus.

"This is a great example of a well coordinated response from many shift officers resulting in a speedy and successful conclusion to the incident," Chief John Luippold said in a statement.

An additional incident of assault, this time a domestic disturbance, occurred on Saturday. John Kelley, 21 of Ipswitch was arrested for domestic assault and battery and breaking and entering. Lyons explained that the two people involved in the incident were in a dating relationship and that Kelley came in the room through an unlocked door and punched the sleeping person in the face several times. The victim required medical attention for a cut on the head that resulted from the incident.

Two police officers received minor injuries on Saturday while they were attempting to arrest Clayton Leonard, 18 of Sunderland. The police were called in because two men were reported urinating on the street. When police arrived they attempted to arrest Leonard for possession of alcohol by a minor. Following the struggle he was also arrested on the charges of possession of a class D substance, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest.

Five incidents of larceny occurred within dormitories this week as well resulting from dormitory rooms remaining unlocked. On Tuesday, a laptop computer valued at roughly $600 was stolen from Macnamara Dormitory. An incident also occurred in Washington Dormitory in which a wallet was stolen containing credit cards and cash on Saturday. Later on Saturday the third incident of larceny occurred when 30 cd's were stolen from a dormitory room in Chadbourne that were valued at over $250. A phone card was reported stolen on Wednesday, while two more laptops were stolen on Saturday; one from John Quincy Adam's Dormitory valued at $250 and another stolen from Coolidge Dormitory that was also valued at over $250.

Students in Cashin dormitory received calls yesterday instructing them to leave their electronics in their lounge due to work being done in the dormitory. This was a false statement and resident assistants contacted the individuals to instruct them to disregard the telephone calls.

On Saturday, a pizza delivery person reported that food had been stolen from him. The officer that responded located the room and the individuals involved and the food was paid for. No charges were filed.

Sorority sleepover nets charity dollarzzz

By Melissa Shattuck
Collegian Staff

Alpha Lambda Delta (ALD) sorority held a sleepover on Saturday, Nov. 18 at the W.E.B. DuBois Library, to earn money for the fundraising effort Dozing for Dollars.

The money earned from Dozing for Dollars contributed to the renovation of the W.E.B DuBois Library's third floor reading program. The library has been working to improve the reserve reading area, where people pick up assigned readings.

"This area is highly used by students. The library is trying to make the floor more hospitable to students, by replacing old uncomfortable furniture with new furniture," said Charlie Rogers, Evening Operations Manager at the library.

"Overall, an effort has been made to make this area much nicer."

Erica Mattison, ALD Public Relations Director explained that the group was an honors society that recognizes the achievements of first-semester freshmen who receive a minimum GPA of 3.7. She went on to say that the group wanted to do something that benefited the University and at the same time had an academic element to it, so they decided to participate in this fundraiser.

The ALD's pledges got together and began fundraising for the renovation of the library's third floor reading program. In return for donations, members spent Saturday night in the library.

"Pledges and members planned to watch videos, order pizza and maybe even get some sleep," said Eileen Stewart, Assistant Dean of Students, and ALD Advisor.

"Students also played on the computers, and there was a large screen television which is normally used in classrooms to watch a variety of movies," Rogers said.

"This is to honor everyone who has ever taken a nap in the library. I bet that's everyone who's ever been to college," commented Stewart.

ALD set their fundraising goal high at $2000 dollars. Mattison was unsure of the exact amount of money raised thus far.

Currently officers are planning events this semester and are focusing on arranging Dinner with your Dean.

All those who attended considered dozing for Dollars a success. ALD is hoping to continue the event in its efforts to raise money for the library.

"If we hold this event again," said Mattison, "future participation will be higher."

TAKUKA GOHARA/COLLEGIAN

Mama, I'm coming home!
Students boarded buses and headed to places as far away as Boston and Longmeadow for the Thanksgiving holiday. Classes resume on Monday.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town

At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA

The Largest Movie Theatre in Hampshire County!

OPENS TODAY!

FEATURING
• 2 Concession Stands
• 2 Box Offices
• All Stadium Seating
• 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens

Coca-Cola
Celebrates The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!

Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.

NFL Week 13 Note: Picks are for entertainment purposes only	Las Vegas Spread	Adam White	Sam Wilkinson	Bryan Smith	Adam Martignetti	David Rose
Last Week	(Overall)	7-8-0 (76-76-6)	7-8-0 (85-68-6)	8-7-0 (80-71-6)	8-7-0(79-72-6)	7-8-0 (76-76-6)
New England @ Detroit	Detroit by 6	Detroit	New England	New England	Detroit	Detroit
Minnesota @ Dallas	Minnesota by 7	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota	Minnesota
Buffalo @ Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay by 4	Tampa Bay	Buffalo	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay	Tampa Bay
Philadelphia @ Washington	Washington by 6 1/2	Philadelphia	Philadelphia	Washington	Washington	Washington
Cleveland @ Baltimore	Baltimore by 15	Cleveland	Cleveland	Baltimore	Baltimore	Baltimore
Chicago @ NY Jets	NY Jets by 7	NY Jets	Chicago	Chicago	NY Jets	NY Jets
New Orleans @ St. Louis	St. Louis by 13 1/2	St. Louis	St. Louis	St. Louis	New Orleans	St. Louis
Pittsburgh @ Cincinnati	Pittsburgh by 4	Cincinnati	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh	Pittsburgh
Atlanta @ Oakland	Oakland by 11 1/2	Atlanta	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland	Oakland
Miami @ Indianapolis	Indianapolis by 5 1/2	Indianapolis	Miami	Indianapolis	Indianapolis	Indianapolis
Tennessee @ Jacksonville	Tennessee by 3	Jacksonville	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee	Tennessee
Denver @ Seattle	Denver by 3	Denver	Denver	Denver	Denver	Seattle
Kansas City @ San Diego	Kansas City by 3	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City	San Diego

TRASH TALK

Technically, I shouldn't be writing this at all. I mean I won, or tied, but I really lost.

Let me explain.

You seeing heading into Monday night's Washington/ St. Louis matchup, everyone was tied with a 7-7 record. Smitty and I took Washington while everyone else took St. Louis. So, Smitty and I ended up tied at 8-7, but we had all taken points on the game to see who would write TT this week. I had 64 and Smitty had 52 (I think). Well, as anyone who is reading this can tell, and I assume that's not too many people, the final was 33-20 or 53 total points. So, as I was saying, technically I shouldn't be writing this.

But since I am, let me just say that basically everyone sucked last week. None of us deserve to be writing this column. Also considering tomorrow's holiday, I've decided to put a new spin on the Trash this week. I know all these clowns pretty well, and for the most part, I'm really thankful that I do.

I've said this is in about three or four of these columns, but David Rose is one the most knowledgeable sports people that I know. I'm thankful that he writes sports columns for us (even if he has been slacking off lately). I'm thankful that he can recite thousands of ridiculous sports stats. All the top of his head almost at will. I'm thankful that the final minutes of his MUA call of the football team's game against Delaware were absolutely classic. "Ucero has thrown the UMass season away!"

Sam Wilkinson works as hard at his job as anybody I know. Granted, he's going to die of a heart attack soon, but that's another story. I'm thankful that he decided to come here from West Virginia. I'm thankful that he's my boss (no, he didn't bribe me to say that). And, I'm thankful that he'll stand up for anything he believes in (even if he's blatantly wrong).

Bryan Smith is probably the person that cares about this paper the most. I'm thankful that he went to UVM this morning, allowing me the opportunity to write this. I'm thankful that he can out-drink just about anybody. I'm thankful that I turned 21 before he left UMass. I'm thankful that he understands the Katie Holmes thing. I'm thankful that he understands the Beanie thing.

If he ever graduates, Adam White will be writing a lot just about any sports publication that he wants to. I'm thankful that he's opened my eyes to the wonderful world of pronoun agreement. I'm thankful that he's one of the best writers that we have down here. I'm thankful for the rational way that he approaches almost everything. I'm thankful that he'll be here even after I leave.

Okay. Back to football. This week's games look fairly straightforward, which means I'll likely be tanking my picks. New England on the road is giving only 6? This is a team that couldn't cover at home versus Cincinnati or Cleveland. Detroit is a gimme in the Dome. Kansas City takes to the road also to face the beleaguered Bolts. San Diego is so bad that they blew a 17-point lead in the 4th quarter alone last week. I'll take the Chiefs giving a mere three. Finally, Brett Favre apparently hasn't made a believer out of people yet, even after another Herculean effort last week. Green Bay is money in a pick 'em against Carolina.

-Adam Martignetti

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor
Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Jessica May Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Garganta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beish Assistant Advertising Manager

HAPPY THANKSGIVING!

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS Student Travel Services
On-campus contact: Josh @ 413-549-4514
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com

Jazz Up Your Holidays!

The best jazz for the best price.

YOUR CHOICE 13.99 CD

NARADA — WARREN HILL, Love Life
HIGHER OCTAVE — LARA & REYES, World Jazz
VERVE — STEVE COLE, Between Us
ATLANTIC — THE MANHATTAN TRANSFER, The Spirit Of St. Louis
EMI CLASSICS — CHRISTOPHER PARKENING, Bernstein Concerto For Guitar
WARNER BROS. — GEORGE DUKE, Cool
WARNER BROS. — EUGE GROOVE, Euge Groove
WARNER BROS. — BRAD MEHLDAU, Places
NARADA — URBAN KNIGHTS, Urban Knights III
HIGHER OCTAVE — CRAIG CHAQUICO, Panorama: The Best Of Craig Chaquico
WARNER BROS. — FOURPLAY, Yes, Please!
DECCA — RONAN HARDIMAN, Anthem
DECCA — JOHN TESH, Forever More
NARADA — TIM BOWMAN, Smile
CONCORD — JAM MIAMI: A CELEBRATION OF LATIN JAZZ, Various Artists
NARADA — JESSE COOK, Free Fall
POINT — THE IRISH TENORS, Live In Belfast
QWEST — THE QUINCY JONES-SAMMY NESTICO ORCHESTRA, Basie & Beyond 15.99
HARMONIA MUNDI — ANONYMOUS 4, 1000: A Mass For The End Of Time 15.99
CONCORD — DIANE SCHUUR, Friends For Schuur

GIVE 'EM WHAT THEY WANT!
Both a Media Play gift card and choose the amount they choose the gift. Gift cards can also be used at www.mediaplay.com.

MEDIA PLAY®
Your Entertainment Superstore

Sale ends December 16, 2000. Cassettes available on select titles. 828402 6128

For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA or visit us online at www.MediaPlay.com.
Pricing may vary online.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Having a home for the holidays

Those of your reading this editorial can count yourselves among a rather unfortunate minority. While practically all of your associates here at the University have already pulled up stumps for a better place to spend Thanksgiving, you are still here. Most of you are probably just attending a few final Wednesday classes or rushing through a last second assignment, and will be long gone by the time the sun sets tonight.

But some of you won't. And this column is for you, the few poor souls who won't be making it home for this holiday traditionally spent in the company of loved ones.

Some of you originate from places far away from UMass. You are counting on being home for Christmas (or whatever variation you choose to celebrate at the end of the year); it simply does not make sense for you to make the long journey home just for the long weekend of Thanksgiving. One of our photo technicians calls California home, and so she will not be tasting her family's home cooking come dinner time tomorrow.

But before we shed a collective tear for her, she's going skiing all weekend instead. So she'll be OK.

Others cannot leave Amherst because of commitments to other things. While it at first seems unfathomable to let other plans get in the way of spending holiday quality time at home, sometimes these commitments transcend things like Thanksgiving dinner.

One associate of this newspaper takes care of an elderly woman in town, fixing her meals and helping her out around the house. Without him, this woman's holiday would be non-existent. So instead of heading home today, he will be shopping for all the trimmings of a much more meaningful meal for two.

Isn't Thanksgiving about values after all?

Hey, not everyone even celebrates Thanksgiving in the first place. It must be an awfully strange feeling having school let out early and all your friends taking off for a holiday that means absolutely nothing to you.

What if you're of Native American descent? What does Thanksgiving mean to you then?

Then there is another group of students altogether, perhaps the loneliest of them all with the saddest reason not to return home for the holiday.

These are the kids without a home to head for.

Maybe they don't get along with their parents and have since flown the coop; perhaps they are a little older and simply moved out years ago, distancing themselves from their families and subsequent gatherings. These are the people you'll see at restaurants on Thursday night, trying to enjoy a traditional holiday meal in the least traditional of Thanksgiving settings.

Which, ironically, brings up another group of unfortunate souls who get trapped here on this weekend: those who have to work. Were it not for other lonely people needing a place to eat their Thanksgiving dinner, those places wouldn't need to be open in the first place.

So if you are just finishing up your scholarly duties in preparation for a trip home for the holiday weekend, be thankful. Be thankful you aren't in any of the above-mentioned groups that either have nowhere to go or no means of getting there.

And if you are one of those people, try to go out and find someone like yourself to spend at least part of the weekend with. Because even though your reasoning might differ, you would have to agree that no one should be alone on Thanksgiving.

The fab 5

ANDREW BONCODDO

There are some things in life that are universally accepted. The sun rises and sets. The DC will never have an edible meal. There is NO SUCH THING as a good parking space in yellow lot. Women are a mystery to men, and men like to let them think that. And getting to the point of my rant: UMass Amherst is regarded as the bastard child of the 5-college system. Now, this is not to be taken as an insult by you readers, because I love this school and everything about it. We have an active, diverse population with hundreds of different groups that get their voices heard, no matter what it is that they are actually saying. We have some of the most intensive, most academically acclaimed courses and majors. We even have some of the better sports and music groups anywhere else in the country. But in the eyes the other four colleges, this adds up to zilch.

For years, UMass has been cleaning up its "ZooMass" atmosphere: one of constant partying, drinking and drug use. Don't get me wrong; on any given night, anyone can find a party or at least a "social get-together" somewhere on campus. But compared to the students of the 1960's and 1970's, we are a much tamer, much more discreet student population. All of this progress, however, falls on deaf ears when talking to people who go to those four OTHER colleges that I don't feel I have to name. If you don't know what colleges I'm talking about, then please stop reading this article, go down to Whitmore, and transfer out of here for the sake of humanity.

People from those OTHER places seem to think that UMass is a playground, only around in case they're bored on a Friday or Saturday night and in need of getting trashed and/or laid. To them, we are just a bunch of alcoholic, oversexed morons who sit in our rooms devoid of human contact until the weekend when we awaken, booze in hand, condom in wallet (or purse), and get ready to party like it was last year. In one such talk with a girl I grew up with in my hometown on the North Shore (shout out to my fellow UMass Wakefieldians) who goes to one of those OTHER schools, I was informed that she doesn't like to come to UMass because Amherst College is "so much better." The guys are smarter, richer, better looking and the parties are much classier. Well, except for the richer part, that statement is complete bullshit. What she regards as smarter is being at a more expensive, Ivy League school; what she regards as better looking are a bunch of Abercrombie and Fitch clones that walk around in the same clothes with the same haircut spouting the same yuppie garbage about spending the holidays in exotic places with their families.

No, I guess by THOSE standards I'm not a knockout or a genius. I dress the way I want to, I don't own a car, and I eat Thanksgiving dinner in my own house, with my loved ones. In fact, I think I'm smarter than those spoiled brats at the OTHER four schools are. For one, I can think for myself, dress in my own style and I've worked to get where I am today. I didn't have the world handed to me on a silver platter at birth. I'm the first of my family to attend college full-time, and I'm damn proud of that. My parents worked their asses off to make sure I had it better then they did growing up in a poor village in Sicily. They gave me what they never had growing up.

My experiences make me smarter than them. Also, how smart can someone really be to pay $20,000 more dollars to attend a school because of its prestigious name? I'm getting the same, if not better, education paying a little over $10,000. I am on a campus that never sleeps, a place where I can learn AND have a great time, an institution of higher learning I'm damn proud to say I am enrolled at.

So for all of you at those OTHER four colleges that are reading this and thinking to yourselves, "What does he know about my college? We have it much better than those alcoholic losers at UMass," do one little favor for me. Take the sleeves of the sweaters that you wear around your shoulders, tie them tightly around your neck, jump into your Mazda Miatas, and get the hell off our campus. UMass isn't the ugly, redheaded stepchild of the 5-college system; we are what the OTHER colleges should aspire to be: freethinking, hard working and grateful for what they have.

This Thanksgiving, I'll be thankful to be a UMass student.

Andrew Boncoddo is a UMass student.

Working girl

EMILY VACANTI

The question which I am about to ask will seem insulting at first, but please realize that it is directed at a very small portion of the UMass community.

How many of you have the ability to count? The majority of the people at UMass seem to not only have the ability to count, but to also do this quite well. At least they can until they become a security supervisor. The reason that I bring this up is because student security has recently begun neglecting one of the most important aspects of its' existence. This aspect is giving work to those that they hired.

Yes, you read that correctly. Recently security has been over-hiring students to the point that there is not enough work for each of them to have even one shift per month. This makes having a job in security almost meaningless. You cannot hire students when you have no intention of giving them almost no, or no shifts per month. That is just wrong.

I asked my ex-supervisor why a number of us were not given any work for the month, and his reply was that he first gave people work that only wanted to work one or two shifts per week. Great. People who need money for sex and beer get by, but those of us who have real bills to pay, which do not get completely taken care of by our parents, get screwed! Now I am not saying that money for sex and beer is a bad thing. Hell, most UMass students take part in those activities every weekend. But that makes it much harder for those of us who actually need the money, not for those of you who just want it.

So what do I think of what this supervisor said? That makes a hell of a lot of sense. He also said that security just hired too many people to work. Even though this seems very difficult to do in the majority of businesses, security is an exception. No, no, no. Security is the exception.

Now, a few columns ago I promised to be more positive, and I'm going to hold true to that promise. So I will not continuously trash security, its lack of counting ability and its completely incompetent student-supervisors who do not offer reasonable explanations. Nor will I mention receptionists who do not realize that they are actually there for a reason, not just an easy paycheck. Instead, I am going to offer some suggestions that could help alleviate these problems.

The first problem that needs to be alleviated is the lack of provision when hiring security receptionists that enables security to over hire. As many of you probably know, security hires in mass. They simply put up signs asking "Are you looking for a job where you can study while you work? Become a student security receptionist. Starting pay is $6.00/hour." Then there is always a date and time listed for the general hiring meeting. They split everyone up into different rooms according to their different living areas. Then there is a one-hour information session followed by a generic exam distributed time and time again. If you get a certain number correct, you are hired. There is no real control over how many students are hired. The test tests basic common sense without asking real security questions. That same day you are offered your first shift with no real security preparation, just a few of the most basic guidelines that a fourth grader could understand.

More care should be taken when hiring receptionists. Yes, you can use the extra time to do your homework, but that is how it is at more than one campus job. That should not be part of the advertisement. The application process should also be much more individualized. Hiring 100 students in a group for security work without asking them any one-on-one questions just seems stupid and dangerous.

Most students view security as a joke, both as a job and as they see in their dorms. I know many students who never even show their ID when entering their dorm, just to prove how easy it is to get past security. No one does anything. No wonder they are not taken seriously. Would you? With most receptionists all it takes is a confident wave and it does not matter whether you live there or not. You can still just walk by. How do I know this? Because both my friends and I have done this solely to prove a point. The receptionists never care, so why should I? I do not live in these buildings. Therefore trouble does not affect me.

Back to hiring receptionists. I do not, by any means, think that 100 students should be personally interviewed for a job that they will probably quit after a month. That would be a waste. If the job was taken more seriously, and there were actual rules, as well as supervisors who gave a damn then there would probably be much less interest. This way you could do a group interview of much few students followed by one-on-one interviews to ensure that the job would be taken more seriously and security would actually get accomplished.

Through this whole process the biggest problem would be eliminated: over hiring. There would be absolutely no excuse for students to not get regular work throughout the month and being hired would mean something again. Having a job with security would no longer be a concept that meant nothing. It would actually mean something.

Emily Vacanti is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the editor
Politics and Books

To the Editor,

The past few weeks have brought serious political issues to the table in the SGA. Allegations have been made against officers of the SGA that have significant implications and many potential outcomes. As these issues have been brought up, people have taken sides and the result has been some very ugly and public displays of personal attacks on members of the SGA. This week the attacks went beyond the realm of typical SGA politics and were misguided in directing them at someone not deserving of this type of treatment.

On Tuesday November 14 a group of individuals went across campus and hung posters calling for the firing of the Assistant Vice Chancellor for Campus Activities Ric Townes. These posters used false allegations and disparaging remarks in an attempt to marginalize one of the student body's most outspoken and public supporters.

Ric runs the Campus Activities Office, which coordinates all activities and accounts for the Registered Student Organizations on campus. This office is located in our STUDENT UNION and not Whitmore because it's sole function is to work directly with students. His office helps students to organize and gives us an outlet that encourages activities, thus empowering students.

Ric is a member of the campus community that has always fought for a diverse environment. He has been a catalyst in discussions surrounding enriching UMass by promoting the positive aspects to many communities.

Ric's office runs an annual leadership conference that is attended by students representing all aspects of our campus. Throughout the year he brings the idea of leadership to many UMass students through his classes "Principles of Leadership" and "Leadership in the 21st Century."

Very few people at UMass can be looked at as true supporters of the students on this campus. Ric Townes has shown time and again that he is an ally on the side of students. Don't allow senseless, cowardly and anonymous attacks let us forget about the contributions of a man who has done so much to make our voices heard.

Respectfully,

The SGA Leadership
Jeffrey F. Howe, SGA President
Seth Avakian, Trustee
Gabriel Tavarez Chief Justice
Shella Tunney, Secretary of Administrative Affairs
Colleen Gilchrist, Secretary of the Registry
Jefferson Smith, Secretary of Finance
Jen Casavant, Secretary of University Policy
Juliet Okafor, Secretary of Diversity Issues
Mike McCarthy, Associate Speaker

To the editor,

Textbook buyback scams?! If there's a texthook buyback scam on this campus, it's run by the Textbook Annex, itself! The textbooks are sold at a high profit initially, and then bought back by the Annex at a fraction of the original cost. I say that if someone is coming by your dorm rooms to offer you a decent (read: more than 10 percent of original cost) price for your textbooks, then by all means take advantage of their offer! The Textbook Annex here is trying to continue maintaining a ridiculous profit by reselling books that they have bought for almost nothing back from students who often have to pay more than $300 per semester for just those same texts!

Just because the Annex is not authorizing these people does not make their actions illegal or otherwise wrong. Maybe they are entrepreneurs who are making eFollett and the Annex squirm! Good for them, exercising their initiative in a free market economy! I thought we still had one of those around here somewhere. Once you buy a textbook from the Annex, it's YOUR property. It's not the University's, and it certainly isn't the Annex's. You can sell it where you want to. Feel free to advertise around campus and get a better price than the pennies that the Annex offers! Don't let this email intimidate you with it's implied illegalities.

You will not "receive the best possible price for your texts" from the Annex, and I don't think the UMass police will come running to your rescue when you find that you can make three or four times the buyback price that the Annex offers. The Annex is nervous about their prices being publicized, and have tried to stop the leak of an exorbitant deal of revenue that they want for themselves. Don't let them stop you from a reasonable offer.

Rachel Smith
UMass

COURTESY DEATH ROW RECORDS

The Poetry of 2Pac

The Rose That Grew From Concrete, Volume I (Amaru/Interscope Records) released Tuesday, features Mos def, Q-Tip, Outlawz, dead prez, Sonia Sanchez, and many others.

Historic diver's biopic gets the Hollywood whitewash

By Dominic Mucciacito
The Vista (U. San Diego)

(U-WIRE) SAN DIEGO – Carl Brashear, the first African-American to ever become a Master Diver, was not one to stop short of his goals. If "Men of Honor," could follow suit, Brashear's story might have been a real winner.

As it is, "Men of Honor" is still an enjoyable movie, but one can't help felling tricked upon learning that the film's major character, Billy Sunday, played to perfection by auteur Robert De Niro, doesn't even exist.

Hollywood has every right to twist truths into fiction in the name of drama. We go to the movies to escape reality, which is why films "based on a true story" so often sacrifice substance over style. Remember the Academy Award debate earlier this year swirling around "The Hurricane?"

Some people said that the liberties scriptwriters took with the Reuben "Hurricane" Carter story hurt Denzel Washington's chances of winning the Best Actor nod. (Kevin Spacey eventually won for "American Beauty.") "Hurricane" also invented characters to dramatize the plot and, more specifically, put a face on the evils that beset Carter throughout his life.

The saddest part is that neither story needed this. The truth was dramatic enough.

In "Men of Honor," young Carl Brashear, played by Cuba Gooding, Jr., is the perfect embodiment of determination Gooding, Jr. gives a powerfully subdued performance, many times letting his eyes speak volumes where dialogue is lacking.

Brashear, the son of a Kentucky sharecropper, leaves home to fulfill a promise he makes to his father that he will "get in there and fight." His father challenges Brashear to be the best and to never quit. He never does. Brashear joins the newly integrated Navy and spends two years writing letters requesting the acceptance of his application for its Dive School program. From there Brashear clashes with Master Chief Billy Sunday, who wants nothing to do with Brashear's ambitions.

Dr. Sinn's Sunday, a distinguished diver himself whose exploits as a troubleshooter are as legendary as his underwater accomplishments, relentlessly taunts Brashear in attempts to make fold. Brashear never waivers, calculating each setback towards improving his own abilities; both as a seaman and as a person.

Brashear's story is similar to so many other tales of the outsider fighting desperately to get in. This fall alone has given us "The Contender," "Remember the Titans," and "Billy Elliot." We've seen Joan Allen defending herself in a character assassination of a female vice presidential candidate in "The Contender." Denzel Washington stands poised amongst a racially charged Southern community as the football coach of "Team Integration" in "Remember the Titans." Young Billy Elliot just wanted to dance in the ballet (cockney pronunciation, ha-ha).

The classic character trait of "You don't fit in because you are a woman, a child, a brown skinned man," will never get old. Plug in a disenfranchised dictator trait here or there and you have a plot.

In "Men of Honor" the African-American underdog is given a Caucasian mentor to aid him in his quest of upsetting the oppressive system. Screenwriter Scott Marshall Smith admitted to inventing the character Billy Sunday in an effort to make Brashear's life translate to the big screen.

"This isn't a connect-the-dots biography," Smith notes in the press guide. "I follow Carl's life and career, but my goal was to be true to his spirit, not his shirt size. Everyone wanted the script to resonate as much as possible, so as a dramatist I sometimes took it up a level."

From Smith to Brown
The first African-American Ivy league president

By Emily Kimball
Brown Daily Herald (Brown U.)

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I. – In her many roles at a succession of institutions of higher learning, the picture that emerges of Ruth J. Simmons, Brown University's new president-elect, from those who have worked with her is one of fairness, discipline, compassion, and a broad perspective.

From her early beginnings as an undergraduate student at Dillard University in New Orleans through her tenure at Princeton University, where she eventually served as vice provost, Simmons has maintained personal connections and inspired fond memories.

At Dillard, where she received a bachelor's of arts in French in 1967, Simmons is a member of the board of trustees and has established a scholarship in the name of her high school drama teacher, Vernell A. Lillie, who urged Dillard to provide a scholarship for Simmons.

Simmons earned her masters and doctoral degrees from the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures at Harvard University in 1971 and 1973. Although all of the senior faculty from that time have since retired or passed away, Robyn Ochs, department administrator, said members of the department are still proud of the success of one of their graduates.

"We are all thrilled and proud," Ochs said. "We have been following her career for quite some time."

Simmons wrote her dissertation, "The Poetic Language of Aimé Césaire," under the guidance of Jean Bruneau, who has since moved to France.

She began her career as an educator at the University of New Orleans in 1973, where she was an assistant professor of French and later the assistant dean of the College of Liberal Arts.

Professor of French James O'Leary, who shared an office with Simmons during those early years, recalled her abilities both as an instructor of the French language and 20th century French poetry, as well as her strong relationships with students and faculty members.

"I saw her dealing with students," he said. "She was always very fair, very, very patient, and listened very closely."

It was her strength cooperating with faculty members that led to her appointment as assistant dean, according to O'Leary.

Simmons was also highly regarded during her time as a visiting associate professor in the Department of Pan-African Studies at California State University at Northridge from 1978 until 1979, where she taught courses in Francophone literature.

Professor James Dennis, who was on the faculty during those years, remembered the frustration within his department when the university would not give her a full time position, causing her to leave for a position at the University of Southern California.

"We pushed for them to make a full-time position for her," he said. "There was no doubt about her qualifications and I'm not sure what the problem was. She had so much to offer."

During her four years at Cal State, Simmons also served as administrative coordinator for a National Endowment for the Humanities studies project and acting director of international programs.

"She was bright, she was diligent, yet she had compassion," Dennis recalled. "Anyone around here knew that she was a top personality and she enjoyed great respect with our students and faculty."

These early experiences in academic administration shaped Simmons' future roles, as she moved into more prominent administrative positions, but remained primarily focused on the value of academics.

After four years in the administration of USC's graduate school, Simmons arrived at Princeton in 1983 as acting director of the Program in African-American Studies, to which she drew notables in the field, including Toni Morrison and Cornel West.

Paul Benacerraf, former provost of Princeton and professor of philosophy, said it was Simmons' role in the African-American studies program that he perceives as one of her greatest achievements at Princeton.

"She did some wonderful things at Princeton," he said. "But key was the development of Afro-American studies. ... She was a critical factor in identifying and then persuading sometimes reluctant faculty to consider Princeton as a place to go, and once here to help them develop their best talents in the Princeton context.

"It was a complicated and delicate task which required many different kinds of skills," he added.

Under her direction, Benacerraf said the program thrived, and since her departure "a number of people who were here as a result of her work eventually dispersed to other places. She was indispensable."

Although Benacerraf noted that Princeton "is not the most obvious place for an African-American person to choose to work," Simmons managed to "bring them and Princeton together for the benefit of both."

In her later roles as assistant and associate dean of the faculty and vice-provost, Benacerraf commented that Simmons was "a person of discretion and great sensibility," who "knows how to get the best out of everyone without being intrusive."

Toni Morrison, visiting professor in the Program in African-American Studies at Princeton and longtime friend of Simmons, commented on her unique ways of administrating.

"She had a very strong base of admirers among students and faculty because she was a person who used her power in a different way — she liked enabling other people," she said, citing Simmons' dedication to making resources available so student and faculty work and research could be more efficient.

"In conflicts, she always strove to find the high road, to make it possible for both sides to gain something," Morrison said. "She is clearheaded as well as forceful.

"Everybody — all students have generally regarded her as a contract maker, not someone who sustains divisions," she said. "She gives everybody a chance to do the best, but she is also quite a disciplinarian if they avoid those responsibilities."

Morrison described Simmons as a woman with strong morals, who, above all, fought for the value of education with every administrative decision.

"She has a total commitment to improving the environment students learn in," Morrison said, citing her later accomplishments at Smith such as establishing an engineering program, providing opportunities for student interns interested in social problems, and restructuring and streamlining the administration.

"She really raises the bar," she said. "Whoever comes after is frequently lacking."

"The problem that she will have is that she's always outstripped all expectations of her ... and there has to come a point, I suppose, when she is as good as she is," Morrison said.

Nell Painter, current director of the Program in African-American Studies, mirrored many of Morrison's sentiments, and commented in an e-mail about the disappointment among many at Princeton that she will not be their next president.

Painter described Simmons as an academic leader who "keeps all the facts of her institution in mind, who knows each person in it and each person's needs and talents, and who somehow simultaneously projects enormous warmth and concern for each person."

Robert Gunning, professor of mathematics who was dean of the faculty when Simmons was the associate dean also commented on the breadth of her administrative skills.

"She played a major role in strengthening various departments," he said. "Her experience was very critical in helping to maintain the faculty in the recruitment and retention of both senior and junior members."

At Spelman College, in Atlanta, Ga., Simmons was provost from 1990 until 1992, before returning to Princeton as vice provost in 1993.

"She was only here for two years, but she did have a big impact here," said Pauline Dash, interim provost at Spelman. Projects she remembers Simmons working on included the development of faculty governance, the initiation of a system of rotating department chairs, curricular revisions of core requirements, and a review of the faculty promotion and tenure system.

Academic Dean Cynthia Spence said Simmons also introduced a "tri-part deaning structure" of academic, assistant, and associate deans, and raised faculty research dollars for the provision of research assistants.

"Sometimes faculty will feel that administrators favor one department over another, but she seemed to have equally strong interest and give equal support to all departments," Drake said.

"She is the type of person who is very interested in mentoring in developing her faculty and staff and students," Spence said, citing the fact that Simmons insisted that Spence have a research assistant and take one day off a week from administrative duties so she could complete her dissertation.

Spence also commented on Simmons' firm belief that "academics is the heart of the institution — academics drives the institution," as well as her ability to be engaged with the entire community despite her high rank in the administration.

What Was The Best of Y2G?

Vote at Black Affairs @ yahoo .com Results in 2 weeks

Write for Black Affairs
Or No One Will
For more info email Lenny at BlackAffairs @yahoo.com
-use it or lose it-

Men of Honor just shy of poignancy

Men of Honor
Directed by George Tillman, Jr.
With Cuba Gooding Jr. and Robert DeNiro
Playing at Cinemark Theaters in Hadley

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

Often movies that captivate audiences and rouse emotions to incredible heights are those based on real life events or people. Seeing a fictional character overcome odds and adversity that face him are all well and good, but the true wonders of the human condition are exhibited when the account is of an authentic person having done great deeds seen on the silver screen.

Take last year's example of the phenomenal Denzel Washington drama The Hurricane or Julia Roberts' crowd-pleaser Erin Brockovich, exemplify how stories of actual people in extraordinary circumstances can enthrall audiences in ways some fictional films cannot. These examples are only to show that every so often the best stories are those of the people we interact with in everyday life. If that's the case, there are many more wonderful and fascinating stories yet to be told, only if they can be discovered.

The latest addition to this genre is Men of Honor, the Hollywood treatment of the first African American Navy Diver, Carl Brashear (Academy Award winner, Cuba Gooding, Jr.), who, after losing half of his left leg in a search and rescue mission in 1966, went on to be given the Navy's highest enlisted rank of Master Chief. Starring alongside Gooding is Robert DeNiro, who turns in one of his best performances to date, here playing Brashear's good ol' boy drill sergeant, Billy Sunday. With such an intriguing plot supported by fine actors, it comes as a disappointment that the film fails to endear itself with its old-fashioned storytelling of the underdog rocking the racial boat. Put simply, Men of Honor is too long and drawn out, and regardless of the valiant efforts on all fronts, is too uninspiring to be taken as anything more than a big-budget history lesson.

The intent of director George Tillman, Jr. (Soul Food), was, in all likelihood, to make a film worthy of Oscar consideration, as well as something that catered to all audiences.

Sunday's devotion to his habitually inebriated wife is one of the film's only touching moments, and, in this reporter's humble opinion, should have been further expanded upon. Yet the movie isn't called Husbands of Honor, and to Tillman's credit, he succeeds at keeping the film's focal point centered on Brashear and his travails. With all the emphasis on Brashear, a heavy burden of responsibility falls upon Gooding's performance to carry the film and while he is certainly a capable actor (as seen with Jerry Maguire and Boyz N The Hood), he lacks the depth and charge of the character that is required here.

A hearty portion of the film takes place during Brashear's mid-40's, but Gooding's baby-face appearance and normally typecast nice-guy appeal aren't convincing enough. Denzel Washington or Wesley Snipes would have been better suited for the role; someone who has a harder edge.

Tillman's use of poetic license to delve into character development is great, but he never manages to follow through on and this is a glaring problem in the film. Men of Honor begins with Brashear, as a child, running along a country dirt road and catapulting himself off a rickety dock into a sparkling lake. The music swells as the boy dives below the surface and investigates a sunken truck and other underwater treasures. It's just enough standard information to convey a cinematic stereotype, but not enough to have it rise above its simplistic, stick figure portrayals. It's as though the filmmakers were saying "It's a boy. It's a boy in water. Cute. Got it. Next scene." Later on, in what could have been a deeply moving segment typical of the obligatory Oscar clip, Brashear's father (newcomer Carl Lumbly, who plays the minor role with eerily emotional and strong choices) presents his son with a makeshift radio as his boy is boarding the bus for boot camp. It's a connection from the brave new world he's entering to the music and culture familiar to his life as a sharecropper to this point. But instead of a sentimental goodbye, Brashear must run along to the next scene – must get this movie under three hours, character development be damned! The filmmaker's minimalist attitude is for no other reason than laziness and ease. If Tillman were aiming for an edgy, stark movie, this approach might be favorable. But here, the water's always shallow.

But speaking of depth, there's DeNiro, the lifeguard that keeps the movie from drowning entirely. Without his flawless performance, the film's final scene would not have the compelling excitement that it does. The courtroom, in which the scene takes place, reverberates with the same lines that DeNiro barked earlier in the movie with malevolence and taunting in his voice towards his young and inexperienced cadets. Yet now, somehow, they sound encouraging and embracing. How in the name of Jacques Cousteau does DeNiro make us end up liking this mean bastard? I leave it to Bobby, though, to take a racist, old Southerner and turn him into a winning character.

The irony of the situation, however, is that Billy Sunday never really existed. He is a combination of several naval instructors and acquaintances Brashear met with in his career as a Navy Diver, rather than one specific person. In a movie where supposedly reel comes across as false, it's fitting that a fictitious character appears the most human.

Before Men of Honor was the film's title, other names had been played around with: Navy Diver which was later shortened to The Diver, followed by the current title which comes from Gooding's speech in the final few minutes of the movie. It is an apt title because it pays tribute to the courageous men and women who serve our country every day, putting their lives on the line for each other and us. It's a shame, then, that Men of Honor could not be a truly poignant story displaying the amazing lives of such tremendous individuals.

Cuba Gooding Jr. and Robert DeNiro look official and all, but Men of Honor still isn't such a great movie.
COURTESY OF THE ARTIST

Schwarzenegger flops again in 6th Day

The 6th Day
Directed by Roger Spottiswood
With Arnold Schwarzenegger, Robert Duvall, and Michael Rapaport
Playing at Cinemark Theaters in Hadley

By Tim Letteney
Collegian Correspondent

On The 6th Day God wasted his time. This movie was not only a waste of eight bucks, it also robbed two hours of my already fleeting youth. I will never get those two hours back, and I am pissed. I expected better from Roger Spottiswood, the infamous director of Jamie Lee Curtis' 1980 smash hit Terror Train. Perhaps smash hit is the wrong word, maybe unoriginal, uninspired piece of garbage fits better.

In The 6th Day Arnold Schwarzenegger stars as Adam Gibson, a helicopter pilot who returns home from a trip to his wife and family to find his double, a human clone, already there living his life in his place. Knowing that cloning is illegal, a team of assassins attempts to eliminate the real Gibson. Challenged by moral and scientific arguments, Gibson unites with his clone to battle together against the assassins for their lives, their humanity and their freedom. It's OK, I cringed too. This movie tries so hard to obtain social relevance it backfires and ends up contradicting itself and its so-called moral commentary of human cloning.

I usually try to find at least one redeeming quality in all bad movies, but I am truly coming up blank on this one. The direction was sub-par even for an action flick, the story line was lofty at best and the special effects weren't that "special" for lack of a better quip. We all know Arnold can't act, so I guess I shouldn't be disappointed, but I am. He doesn't even have the ability to portray a "bad ass" anymore! He is just an old, wrinkly Bush supporter, and that, my friends, sickens me.

Let's face it, Arnold has never been in a good movie. The only reason that he is still in Hollywood is because he has attained cult status. Yeah I though T1 and T2 were cool too, sure Total Recall was fun to watch, hell even Predator had its moments, but that is about as far as it goes. I was young when those movies came out and they appealed to me because of the taboo nature of the subject matter. In essence they really are mediocre films at best. Now that I know Arnold's income per movie, and the fact that he would sell his soul for just one more good script, I can't help but loathe his public persona and his movies. I equate Chris Rock's Arnold "needs a bit like a crack head needs a hit."

Alas I have digressed far too long and I apologize. In short The 6th Day is a dreadfully made film with no redeeming qualities whatsoever, which is too bad because on a conceptual level cloning is an enticing idea for a movie. This film actually makes me wish I gave Red Planet a better review. Compared to The 6th Day, Red Planet comes out looking like Metropolis. So if you want sci-fi this Thanksgiving tell your dad The 6th Day was horrid and take him to go see Red Planet instead.

Arnold delivers heart-wrenching passion, fluid movement and poetic diction in The 6th Day.
COURTESY OF COLUMBIA PICTURES

COURTESY OF TOUCHSTONE PICTURES

I see...Bruce Willis!
M. Night Shyamalan, director of The Sixth Sense, returns to a theater near you this weekend with Unbreakable.

We test our system: you get free therapy.
"Participate in a completely free pilot test of online therapy."
Free, secure, confidential web-based therapy from Massachusetts Licensed Psychotherapists.
If you are a Massacusetts resident over 18 years old, whether or not you have tried traditional therapy before, you are welcome.
visit www.webtherapy.com to sign up.
webtherapy.com

Come see Ryan Benharris for more information

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M
Wed 10-6, Th-Sat 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M
Sat 10-6, Thurs 'til 7, Sun 12-5
800-729-8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

Aparo's Spaceship landing at Skybox

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

The cover of Angie Aparo's The American depicts a faceless, shadowy figure planting the Stars and Stripes atop a massive pile of waste and debris. The background is a drab gray sky drained of color, with oppressive clouds almost forcing the figure to hunch over. An expressive picture about the beauty and ugliness of American society further detailed throughout the album's twelve tracks, this scene could just as well be a statement of Aparo's role in the current popular music landscape. The forecast has been cloudy for quite some time in pop music, causing the true musicians to swallow their pride, hunch over, and support the latest package to fall off the assembly line. Aparo is certainly among these figures, planted firmly above the heap, but not without exhaustion from laying one's soul on the line for the music. Faceless to many even after his major label debut earlier this year, the tireless live schedule that earned him a record deal and now continues in support of it will no doubt be essential in teaching the uninitiated what Atlanta audiences have known for some time: Angie Aparo is for real.

Of course, success often brings strange bedfellows, and somewhere along the line Aparo crossed paths with Matt Serletic, the super-producer that many would credit with creating much of the crap in the pile Aparo stands upon. Matchbox Twenty, Edwin McCain, Serletic is known for aligning himself among such acts whose questionable talent is overshadowed by his glossy, radio-friendly production. Many of Aparo's fans were justifiably worried that his folksy, personal sound would be beaten down into soulless Top 40 submission.

Equally strange and unexpected was how Serletic didn't hinder Aparo's sound, but aided it. "Spaceship," the album's first single and masterpiece, is the perfect example of this mutually beneficial union. A throbbing bass loop provides the backbone of the song, and chugs along with Aparo's distorted vocals until crashing into the unforgettable chorus. The organic qualities of Aparo's wounded cry mesh very convincingly with Serletic's work behind the boards, somewhat appropriate since the song has been described as a commentary of the relationship between spirituality and technology.

The music, which has its feet firmly planted in folk roots but never lacking a surprisingly mature pop sense, is never without compelling lyrics, that are sometimes serious, sometimes humorous, but always engaging. "Green Into Gold" is an eerily subdued yet forceful warning about the environment, and "Beautiful" is a gritty look at a girl living a tough street life. But Aparo is never afraid to lighten up, as the listener finds some pretty silly lines throughout, as well as some love ballads like "Hush" and "Cry" that are that rare breed: love songs with genuine emotion.

"This is just a song to pay the rent," Aparo sings on "Spaceship." Stop by the Skybox Sunday night and see firsthand that it's definitely much more.

Angie Aparo is performing Sunday night September 24 at the Skybox. Doors are at 8pm and tickets are $8.00.

Kara Stokes would like to personally wish each and every one of you- yes, you! - a Happy Thanksgiving!

Holiday movies hit theaters

By Samuel McKewon
Daily Nebraskan (U. Nebraska)

(U-WIRE) LINCOLN, Neb. – The golden Oscars, Globes, and critics' awards are there for the taking.

That's the general attitude of the holiday movie season, which begins in earnest one day before Thanksgiving – Wednesday. It's time to roll out the art, the award winners.

Last year, 1999, was an anomaly as the critic grand slams (American Beauty, The Insider and The Sixth Sense) rolled down the movie carpet in late summer and early fall.

Fall 2000 was a dead zone – bad times plus a couple of flops, a basic mirror of the entire year so far after 1999, which might have been the movie year of the last two decades.

To date in the new century, few, if any, films have set a beeline for definite award pickups save Gladiator, whose massive scope and sword-and-sandal epic revival play favorably into the hands of many voters. Erin Brockovich, and certainly Julia Roberts' tavoom title role, will attract serious attention.

So these holidays are a real pressure cooker from here on, especially as an impending writers' strike and poor box returns to date have put studios on watch. So here's a look at the contenders and the purely fun stuff (must-see rankings out of 4 stars):

Oscar heavies:

Unbreakable (Nov. 22) - Toward the end of his "The Sixth Sense," director/writer M. Night Shyamalan began to write his fourth movie. He scrapped the whole idea for a different tale, which will make it to screen here – an Everyman (Bruce Willis) survives a horrible train crash unharmed while a mysteriously brittle comic-book fiend (Samuel L. Jackson) attempts to discover why.

The premise seems outstanding, and Shyamalan's artsy style (What's with the long overhead shots and slow focus work?) creates a distinctive look. But the cocky 30-year-old director the shoots sequence, he's basically guaranteed this as a masterpiece/ is hit-and-miss. Could be a haunting wonder. Could be a brooding mess.

Quills (Nov. 22) - Phillip Kaufman's epic on the final days of Marquis De Sade, played by Geoffery Rush, as he writes into a scandal from the loop house. Kate Winslet is his faithful nurse.

Finding Forrester (Dec. 6) - And this year's entry in being full of blarney – Gus Van Sant's follow-up to Good Will Hunting (a lot of hot air that was) finds a budding writer searching out a reclusive genius (Sean Connery), who wrote the great American novel, then walked into a sliver flat in the Bronx. The kid can play basketball like a whiz, too. Another genius-in-making tale.

Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon (Dec. 8) - Who isn't rooting for a martial-arts drama starring Chow Yun-Fat and Michelle Yeoh that has rewritten the genre in terms of acrobatics and sheer epic drama. Director Ang Lee (of the beautiful The Ice Storm) returned to his roots and has crafted film that basically drew raves everywhere it has played.

Thirteen Days (Dec. 22) - A retelling of the Cuban Missile Crisis finds Kevin Costner in his second of audience-approved roles – a government insider of sorts that is a little-known adviser to John F. Kennedy (Bruce Greenwood) named Kenny O'Donnell, who may have been a key player in defusing the crisis. After slight accuracy problems doomed "The Hurricane" last year, one assumes getting the story right is the premium.

O Brother, Where Art Thou? (Dec. 22) - Joel and Ethan Coen put a good year into a Depression-era epic that mirrors Homer's Odyssey and stars George Clooney in the title role that will likely stretch his acting dollar. John Turturro and Tim Blake Nelson co-star. This opened to lukewarm reviews at Cannes earlier this year.

Traffic (Dec. 22) - Steven Soderbergh might get two for best director nods in one year for Brockovich, and this effort, which stars Michael Douglas, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Dennis Quaid in a rise-and-fall epic of a drug lord.

Cast Away (Dec. 22) - Tom Hanks is the lone survivor of a crash in the middle of the ocean, marooned on an open island. There are no pirates and no damsel in distress – just a mostly silent Hanks, a volleyball that floats ashore, becoming his lone friend, and nature. It could work, or it could flop miserably as a some sort of weirdo nature film.

All the Pretty Horses (Dec. 25) - Billy Bob Thornton's third movie has been pushed back and back, all the way since June. Is that a good sign? Matt Damon stars as a cowboy drifter who runs across his Mexican dream (Penelope Cruz), whose love will cost him everything, his freedom included.

Requiem for a Dream (before Jan. 1) – It has already opened in most major American cities, but not in Omaha or Lincoln. It will likely get a play in the River City before the year is up. Darren Pi Aronofsky's follow-up has been described as such an unflinching look at heroin and pill addiction that it could play as a full-length public service announcement.

Other movies that are opening before Jan. 1 in major cities, but, uh, not around here - The Gift, David Mamet's State and Main, The House of Mirth and Shadow of the Vampire.

The leisurely or action-packed fare:

"102 Dalmations" (Nov. 22) - Cruella De Ville (Glenn Close) is back. So are the dogs.

Proof of Life (Dec. 8) - Russell Crowe attempts life after Gladiator as a hostage negotiator in a foreign country. It is Meg Ryan's husband being held. This would be the movie that basically broke up Ryan and Dennis Quaid's marriage, as she fell into Crowe's arms.

Vertical Limit (Dec. 8) - Chris O'Donnell went from possible matinee idol to taking on a mountain avalanche of Himalayan snow in attempt to save his stranded climbing sister (Robin Tunney). Did I see a Scott Glenn sighting in the trailer?

What Women Want (Dec. 15) - Mel Gibson drops by in the comedy genre by suddenly becoming aware of all thoughts of all women. It should have been called "Look Who's Ruminating."

Miss Congeniality (Dec. 22) - Sandra Bullock goes undercover from the FBI to the beauty queen circuit to catch a crook. She's gruff to start and demure to end. And she's got a crush on Benjamin Bratt.

The Family Man (Dec. 22) - Nicolas Cage is in one of those It's a Wonderful Life deals where he gets lead a different life with wife (Tea Leoni) and kids. Can you say Capra? Can you say probably not?

Exemplary Euro-MTV awards

By Nikolas Markantonatos
Collegian Correspondent

Many awards shows have become extraordinarily long in the past several years, clocking in at over three hours. In addition, many ceremonies showcase bland performances and become intolerable halfway through the production. The 2000 MTV Europe Awards, held at the Globe Arena in Stockholm, Sweden, was one exception. The show lined up countless A-list stars and produced an entertaining night of television. Over 6 million people from around the world voted for their favorite artists and the show was beamed to one billion people worldwide.

The host for the evening was hip-hop artist Wyclef Jean of the Fugees, who proved to be funnier than the Wayans Brothers, who hosted the 2000 MTV Video Music Awards here in America. Even though the awards are designed to honor the best singers on the European pop scene, Americans ended up taking home 10 of the 12 main categories—leaving Robbie Williams and All Saints to save the honor of Britpop at the awards. Williams led the pop pack with five nominations at the awards ceremony but only walked away with the Best Song award for "Rock DJ." Williams also performed "Kids" with Aussie Kylie Minogue. All Saints garnered the Best Pop statuette.

Eminem and Madonna won two awards apiece, more than any other artist or group. "Slim Shady" won the Best Hip-Hop award and the most coveted award of the night, Best Album for The Marshall Mathers LP. Madonna, showing no signs of aging at 42, won the Best Female and best Dance awards for her smash hit "Music," which she performed live before a backdrop of videos and clips of her career.

Robbie Williams swept the pop categories at the European MTV awards

Hugely popular British comedian Ali G. proved to be the highlight of the evening. Ali G., who made a comedic-tainted appearance in Madonna's video "Music," introduced the pop queen by saying "Even though she just squeezed the nipper out of her punani. I still dets nitels would."

Ricky Martin won the Best Male Award, beating the likes of Williams and Eminem. Martin later performed "She Bangs," which proved to be an energetic performance with dancers in giant fish tanks to coincide with the aquatic theme of the video. The overpowering, driving horns and electric guitar in the song, however, seemed to drown out his thin voice.

Jennifer Lopez, in another one of her barely-there dresses, picked the show for the worldwide premier of her new single "Love Don't Cost a Thing" off her soon to be released album J Lo. On a first listen the song, with its R&B flavor, was anything but original and sounds like every other Rodney Jerkins song of the moment. She opened up her performance by flying in via a pulley which proved to be cheesy at best. And it became all too apparent that she was lip-synching. Her well-choreographed moves and hit Best R&B win, however, offset the flaws.

The Backstreet Boys, who won the best Group honor performed the first single "Shape of My Heart," off their new album Black and Blue. The performance kicked off a lightning 100-hour tour of six continents to promote the new album, which hit stores yesterday.

All-in-all, entertaining performances and a slickly produced ceremony, the 7th annual Europe MTV Awards was an entertaining night. Perhaps Grammys and Oscar producers should take note of this award show and emulate some of the great qualities of the 2000 EMAs.

Bell Atlantic Mobile is now Verizon Wireless
All the advantages. None of the hassles.
New digital Prepaid Wireless.
Introducing Digital Prepaid Wireless Service
· No additional charge for long distance
· No long-term contract
· No monthly bill
· No credit check
· No security deposits
$50
Prepaid Wireless Card: $30* $50 $100
Home Airtime Minutes (includes long distance): 60 125 285
*$30 card available for replenishment only
Choose America's #1 Wireless Provider!
Special Start-Up Package
$75 starter kit includes set up fee, a $50 prepaid wireless card, and double value pack coupons.
Includes 25% off a headset for easier driving!
The Digital Phone
CDM 4000 for $79.99
Or
Bring your own phone. Verizon Prepaid Wireless works with many phones.
Hands-free headset kit available
Drive responsibly. Talk with care. Verizon Wireless Simple. Affordable. National. Join in.
for free delivery, call 1.888.800.1840
shop online @ www.verizonwireless.com
verizonwireless
COMMUNICATIONS STORES
BOSTON, MA Summer Street (Across from Macy's) 617.946.0500
765 Boylston Street (Across from Lord & Taylor) 617.266.6000
BURLINGTON, MA Burlington Mall (Next to Lord & Taylor) 781.229.0400
CAMBRIDGE, MA 87 Borders St. (2 blks from Galleria Mall) 617.868.6300
CHESTNUT HILL, MA Route 9 (Star Market Plaza) 617.738.2900
MARLBOROUGH, MA Solomon Pond Mall 508.624.8070
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MA Emerald Square Mall (Lower level, next to Sears) 508.695.8077
SAUGUS, MA Kinan Plaza (Next to Square One Mall) 781.941.9100
SOMERSWORTH, NH 77 Route 9 (Route 9) 508.761.0600
Subject to terms & conditions of Prepaid Wireless Agreement & Price Plan. Account set-up fee may apply. All card sales are final. Usage rounded to next full minute; unused minutes lost. Other charges & restrictions apply. Verizon Wireless reserves the right to cancel service if account contains $0 balance after 60 days. Compatible digital phone required. Limited time offer. Phone offer while supplies last. ©2000 Verizon Wireless.

YOUR FORTUNE COOKIE
Slightly different music (because you're slightly different).
DUM DUMS It Goes Without Saying 10.99
DIESELBOY The Sixth Session 13.99
P.J. HARVEY Stories From The City, Stories From The Sea 13.99
RONI SIZE REPRAZENT In The Mode 13.99
FRANKIE BONES You Know My Name 13.99
DELTRON 3030 Deltron 3030 13.99
ATB Two Worlds 13.99
BRUCE HORNSBY Here Come The Noise Makers 17.99 2-CD Set
MEDIA PLAY®
Your Entertainment Superstore
For the store nearest you, call toll-free 1-888-60-MEDIA. MediaPlay.com
Join Replay. The club that rewards your love of great music!
Sale ends December 2, 2000.
Cassettes available on select titles. 82901 5999

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

OFFcampus Antics Find a special message for UMASS students on OFFcampuscam and win a great prize! www.masslive.com/offcampus

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2Girls looking for 3rd female to share Puffton apartment. Contact Dawn or Rebecca 549-2676

Take over lease. Townhouses. 2 bedroom. Available 1/10. $775/month. 549-4762

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework. 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

EMPLOYMENT

Coordinate gym class for homeschooled kids. 1day/week. Time is flexible. Call 323-5227

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

HUMAN SERVICES COMPANION/SUPPORT for a young man living in Northampton. Sense of humor, team player, respect and patience required. Flexible evening/weekend hours. Great benefit package. If interested, come in and fill out an application at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 or call Helen at (413) 536-2401 Ext. 5543. AA/EOE.

TEAM LEADER-lead a progressive team in the provision of support to a young man living in Northampton who wants to be more connected to his community. Good communication, flexibility, driver's license and reliable trasportation required. Supervisory experience and BA preferred. Excellent benefit package. Send resume and cover letter to The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 Attn: Helen. AA/EOE.

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

FOR RENT

Rental Problems? Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

FOR SALE

Snowboard. Sims snowboard with bindings excellent condition. Ready for the season. B.O. 546-7070

Snowbrds for Sale! Burton Supermodel 159, Salmon 300152, Burton Freestyle Bindings, Ski boots Dolomite Brand New! Call Caroline 323-7064

HOME WANTED

Home wanted for adorable English Cocker Spaniel Good tempermont, house-broken. Needs active family and room to run. Call 413-546-5744

MUSIC INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Cliffside Apts. 665-8712

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for 1 female for Brandywine Apt. Call 549-0854 for more info.

Roommate Wanted to share two bedroom apartment one mile from Umass. Starts in mid-January. Call Pedro at 253-1723

To share large bedroom in three bedroom apt. On bus route. Starting Jan 1. Call Amanda 397-8999

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

ACT FAST! SAVE $$$, BOOK EARLY...GO TO LEISURETOURS.COM OR CALL 800-838-8203

Ski, Ride, and Party in Quebec City! 12/1-12/3 2 nites, 2 days lift tix! Roundtrip couch! From $159 $109 non-ski. Call UMASS Ski 'N' Board Club 5-3437 or stop by Campus Center Table Tu-Thurs

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash-tours.com

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TUTOR WANTED

Tutor in Oriya Language needed. Call Jessie evenings weekend 259-9103

Can't sell that car?

What are you waiting for?

Advertise to Thousands

Call 545-3500

Sick and Tired of your living situation?

Don't hesitate to change it!

Place an Ad Today and get what you want. Call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

1- HSCN Bulletin Board
2- CBS 3 Hartford
3- CBS 3 Boston
4- ABC 40 Springfield
5- FOX 57 Springfield
6- HSCN Movie Channel
7- UPN 20 Hartford
8- HSCN Movie Channel
9- NBC 30 New Britain
10- Fox 61 Hartford
11- FOX 24 Hartford
12- NBC 40 Springfield
13- International Channel
14- UNIVERSITY channels (Duplex)
15- WB 30 New Haven
16- HBO
17- Cinemax
18- UVC TV (Student Channel)
19- Weather Channel
20- Good to Cover
21- C-Span
22- CNN
23- CNN Headline News
24- Lifetime
25- USA
26- TBS
27- TNT
28- Sci-Fi
29- Discovery
30- Nickelodeon
31- Cartoon Network
32- Nick at Nite
33- TV Land
34- Comedy Central
35- BET
36- Univision
37- Bloomberg Financial Network
38- College TV Network
39- MTV
40- MTV2
41- VH1
42- The Learning Channel

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 22, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12 Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Great Performances: Chuck Jones		Rikki-Tikki		Frontline "Hesi Justice" ℠		Positivly Conn.	Positivly Conn.
WFSB	3	3 News ℠	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Betts (N) ℠	Welcome-N.Y.	"Love Lessons" (2000, Drama)		Patty Duke, Ronny Cox ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WBZ	4	4 News ℠	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Betts (N) ℠	Welcome-N.Y.	"Love Lessons" (2000, Drama)		Patty Duke, Ronny Cox ℠		News ℠	Late Show ℠
WCVB	5	5 News ℠	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle ℠	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey ℠	Spin City ℠	Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WLVI	6	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless ℠	Friends ℠	Nanny ℠	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo) ℠		Felicity "A Good Egg" (N) ℠		News ℠		Friends ℠	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Titanic (N) (In Stereo) ℠		West Wing "Shibboleth" (N) ℠		Law & Order "Burn Baby Burn"		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	7th Heaven "Cutters" ℠		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	7 Days "The Fire Last Time" ℠		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Extra (N) ℠	Hollywood	Titanic (N) (In Stereo) ℠		West Wing "Shibboleth" (N) ℠		Law & Order "Burn Baby Burn"		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	11	Simpsons ℠	Frasier ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Friends ℠	Malcolm-Mid.	Normal, Ohio	Street "Closed Cases" (N) ℠		News		Friends ℠	Frasier ℠
WWLP	22	News ℠	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! ℠	Titanic (N) (In Stereo) ℠		West Wing "Shibboleth" (N) ℠		Law & Order "Burn Baby Burn"		News ℠	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6 World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer ℠		Great Performances: Chuck Jones		George Cukor: On Cukor				Charlie Rose (In Stereo) ℠
WGGB	40	28 News ℠	ABC News	Seinfeld ℠	Frasier ℠	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey ℠	Spin City ℠	Gideon's Crossing (In Stereo)		News ℠	Nightline ℠
WSBK	38	Judge Judy ℠	Judge Judy ℠	Seinfeld ℠	Frasier ℠	7 Days "The Fire Last Time" ℠		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		Frasier ℠	Mad Abt. You	Spin City ℠	Spin City ℠
WTBS	22	Roseanne ℠	Roseanne ℠	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder				Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	17	Night Court	Newsradio ℠	Law & Order "Nullification" ℠		Biography: Don Knotts		Behind Closed Doors ℠		Investigative Reports ℠		Law & Order "Progeny" ℠
CNN	20	21 Worldview ℠	Moneyline	Newshour (N) ℠	Crossfire ℠	World Today ℠			Larry King Live ℠	Newsstand ℠		Sports	Moneyline ℠
COM	15	26 Saturday Night Live ℠		Daily Show ℠	Stein's Money	★★★ "Romancing the Stone" (1984, Adventure) Michael Douglas.				South Park (N)	Battlebots ℠	Daily Show ℠	Stein's Money
DISC	27	Why Dogs Smile and Chimpanzees Cry				On the Inside: M.A.S.H.		Mummies: The Real Story		Egypt Uncovered "Age of Gold"		Justice Files
ESPN	21	Sportscenter ℠		College Basketball: Preseason NIT Semi. – Teams TBA				College Basketball: Main Inv. Final – Teams TBA				Sportscenter ℠
LIFE	32	Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"The Care and Handling of Roses" (1996, Drama) Ann Jillian. ℠				Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	31	Direct Effect	Jackass	Jim Carrey Uncensored		100 Greatest Pop Songs		100 Greatest Pop Songs		100 Greatest Pop Songs (N)		Diary	Road Rules
NICK	33	Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold! ℠	Rugrats ℠	Told by Ginger	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Bev. Hillbillies	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	It's Company	It's Company
SCIFI	35	Sliders "California Reich" ℠		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Space: Above and Beyond ℠		★★½ "The Tommyknockers" (1993, Horror) Jimmy Smits. ℠				Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	29	28 Bizarre Phenomena		Critical Cond		Monster Machines: Miners (N)		Stress Test: Collapse (N)		Stress Test: Explode (N)		Monster Machines: Miners
TNT	25	ER "Masquerade" (In Stereo) ℠		Pretender (In Stereo) ℠		PGA Golf: Grand Slam of Golf – Final Day. (In Stereo) ℠							"Addicted-Live"
USA	30	Walker, Texas Ranger ℠		JAG "The Colonel's Wife" ℠		Nash Bridges "Vendetta" ℠		★★★ "Patriot Games" (1992, Suspense) Harrison Ford, Anne Archer. (In Stereo) ℠				Martin ℠
HBO	45	★★ "The Pagemaster" (1994) Macaulay Culkin.			Worst Witch	★★★ "Antz" (1998) Voices of Woody Allen, "PG"		NSYNC Live From Madison Square Garden ℠				Chris Rock ℠	"American B"
MAX	44	(4:35) "Bend"		★★ "Eight Days a Week" (1997, Comedy) "R" ℠		★★½ "The Siege" (1998, Suspense) Denzel Washington, "R" ℠				"Beautiful Joe" (2000) Billy Connolly. "NR" ℠		Bedtime
SHOW	46	(4:30)		★½ "A Night at the Roxbury" (1998) Will Ferrell.		"Seventeen Again" (2000, Fantasy) Ita Mowry. ℠		Extras-6th Day		Soul Food ℠		Resurrection Blvd. "Harmonix"	"Blazing"

Dilbert By Scott Adams

I'M FROM THE DOGBERT TEMP AGENCY. DO YOU NEED A HAND?
I GET IT. HEE HEE!
GET WHAT?
THEN I SAID, "DON'T GET MAD. TRY COUNTING TO FIFTEEN."
OUCH.

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

IN THE BLACK! IN THE BLACK! WHAT A MOLDER PIE IMAGE!
IT'S LIKE MUSIC. LIKE I'M HEARING IT FOR THE FIRST TIME. WHICH OF COURSE, I AM!
AND ALL BECAUSE MY TEENAGE DREAM TORY HAS A KNACK FOR FOOLING OVER-STOCK.
A MILLION DUKS 3000 BUTTONS? WE'LL TAKE 'EM!

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SERIOUSLY, BUCKY, YOUR BREATH IS REALLY BAD. YOU SMELL LIKE A HOT BUCKET OF CHUM. I THINK IT'S TIME WE GET YOUR TEETH CLEANED.
MAYBE WE OUGHT TO CLEAN YOUR HEAD, TOO. IT'S DIRTY.
BOB, I LIKE IT. IT REMINDS ME OF LOW TIDE.
YOU'RE COMPLETELY INCAPABLE OF HAVING A DISCUSSION WITHOUT GETTING RUDE. DO YOU KISS YOUR MOTHER WITH THAT MOUTH?
NO, BUT I'LL BITE YOU WITH IT.
CAN'T WE ALL JUST GET ALONG?

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

CLARA, DON'T REBEL AGAINST YOUR PARENTS BECAUSE THEY'RE HAVING SOME MARITAL PROBLEMS.
THEY STILL LOVE YOU. THEY'RE JUST A LITTLE...
C'MON, CLARA! I'LL PUT OUT THE DOG, THEN DRIVE YOU TO PRE-SCHOOL!
THEY'RE JUST A LITTLE...
...DISTRACTED.

Horoscopes

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21) Smarten up! Be more realistic about what you can get done, and you'll find yourself being disappointed less. A third piece of pie tomorrow will only cause your relatives to talk about you behind your back.

Capricorn (Dec. 22 – Jan. 19) A change of personnel works to your advantage. Welcome new work assignments; they will give you an opportunity to show off your special talents. A pretty stupid horoscope considering you won't go back to work until Monday, huh?

Aquarius (Jan 20 - Feb. 18) This is the dawning of the age of Aquarius... the age of Aquarius.....Aquarius! What a God-awful song. You are truly cursed to have such a silly astrological sign. Water bearer?

Pisces (Feb. 19 – March 20) Fish are cool. Do you have any idea why people put that fish on their car with the word JESUS in it? It probably has some deep religious meaning, hence the whole Jesus part.

Aries (March 21 – April 19) People will try to dissuade you from what you truly believe, but you should charge ahead and lack horns instead of sheepishly giving in. Get it? Lack horns? Sheepishly? You're an Aries, dummy!

Taurus (April 20 – May 20) Do not, under any circumstances, bet on football games tomorrow. Detroit and Dallas will both be getting ridiculous points, but both teams play TURRIBLY on Turkey day and you may as well just eat your hard earned Bensamins.

Gemini (May 21 – June 20) Your personal finances are a mess. There is no immediate relief in sight for the NASDAQ, making this a terrible time to be mired in a substantial crack habit. Do as Biggie did, and trade in your red and black lumberjack outfit a hat to match for a money-green leather sofa.

Cancer (June 21 – July 22) Decisions must be made, Cancer. Either you first up to your roommate about eating all his Double Stuffs, or you go out and buy him another package.

Leo (July 23 – Aug. 22) Asking questions is the only way to find the answers you are seeking at this point. Start with why he hasn't been home on time lately, progress to where all his money has suddenly disappeared to and end with the origins of the strange underwear you found in his glove compartment.

Virgo (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22) Almost Famous was a great movie, but a few small details within the film still bother you. Did Cameron Crowe really lose his virginity to three women at once? What band was Stillwater really supposed to be? Can listening to "Tommy" by candlelight really show you the future. One thing you're sure of, though: that Penny Lane chick was really cute.

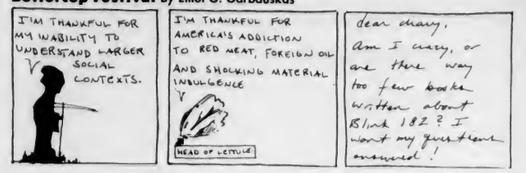
Libra (Sept 23 – Oct 22) The first three letters of Libra, L-I-B, are derived from the Latin word for "free." The last three letters, B-R-A, mean an article of clothing that women wear for support. Put them together and you have Libra, which loosely translated means "pleasant but unfamiliar odor."

Scorpio (Oct 23 – Nov. 21) A stimulating, uncensored acquaintance adds a dash of spice to your life. But what's with the long, flowery words? Let's face it: you are going to hook up with a total crackpot. I mean, this guy's out there. One minute you'll think he's totally normal; the next, he'll be ransacking your garage looking for a Sit-n-Spin.

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 34 LOW: 19	HIGH: 28 LOW: 14	HIGH: 33 LOW: 21

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

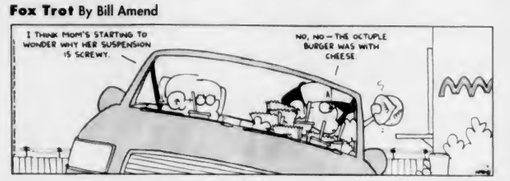


I'M THANKFUL FOR MY INABILITY TO UNDERSTAND LARGER SOCIAL CONTEXTS.
I'M THANKFUL FOR AMERICA'S ADDICTION TO RED MEAT, FOREIGN OIL AND SHOCKING MATERIAL INDULGENCE
HEAD OF LETTUCE
dear diary, Am I crazy, or are there way too few books written about Blink 182? I want my questions answered!

Dilbert By Scott Adams

THESE COPIES YOU MADE FOR ME ARE BLANK.
THAT'S BECAUSE ALL THE ORIGINALS WERE BLANK.
MAYBE YOU COULD HAVE CHECKED THE OTHER SIDES
TALK TO THE HAND

Fox Trot By Bill Amend



Dilbert By Scott Adams

WHY DON'T YOU HAVE A LITTLE COFFEE WITH YOUR SUGAR, ALICE?
HEH, HEH. IT'S FUNNY BECAUSE IT'S USUALLY THE OTHER WAY AROUND.
I DON'T SEE HOW SOMETHING CAN BE FUNNY 300 TIMES BUT NOT 301 TIMES.

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBJ
"HEY, HONEY! HAVE YOU SEEN MY OTTOMAN? NO? HOW ABOUT THE EVENING PAPER? NO? OK, I'LL JUST MAKE DO..." © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"I guess you can say we're bicoastal... if you consider the Mississippi river one of the coasts."

–Waiting for Guffman

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Chicken Nuggets

Sloppy Joes (B, F, H)

Jamaican 3-Bean Stew (vegan)

Garden Burger (B, F, W)

Dinner

Fishburger (Like a hamburger...but with fish)

Chef's Choice

Thai Seitan

Franklin and Hampshire will not be open for dinner.

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership

Call 545-3500 for details.

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS

1 Hotel
5 Lily's logs
10 Can. police
14 Jam ingredient?
15 Ireland
16 Bridled animal
17 Clump of dirt
18 Definitely
19 Young woman
20 On the scrapheap
22 Trick or Treat treat
24 Fan's home
27 Pounce
28 Property burden
29 Warty critters
30 Soldier's aide
31 "I don't know" gesture
36 Nudge
40 Society page one
42 Ore deposits
44 Hindu discipline
45 Lair
47 Lionized and Nero
48 Shady
50 Authority
51 Shallow
53 Hepburn's "Roman Holiday" co-star
56 "The Andy Griffith Show" kid
57 Unmoved
60 Suggestion of sanity
61 Runner's place
66 — fault tennis no-no
68 Pantyhose shade
69 Jai —
70 Iceberg
71 Actress Barkin
72 "— Romantic?"
73 Gabs
74 Light luncheon
75 Bewildered

DOWN

1 Tackle the quarterback
2 Luau dance
3 Upon
4 Spacecraft unit
5 Make dollies
6 Harem room
7 Morotha
8 Spring month
9 Sharpen
10 Shoot and plump
11 Lobster's appendage
12 Arizona sight
13 Flower
21 Prize marbles
23 Model Moss
25 Eyelid problem
26 Actor Flynn
28 Field workers
29 "Carmen," e.g.
30 Coral reef denizen
34 Prussa
35 Home
36 Stinky call
38 "Whatever — wants
39 Sea
40 Air and void
42 As well
43 Paint containers
44 Singer Eartha
47 Type of soup
48 Windup

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

H	E	R	B		A	Z	T	E	C		D	O	R	M
U	R	A	L		T	E	R	R	A		S	S	E	E
M	A	I	D		S	T	A	I	N		E	A	S	E
A	P	I	A	R	Y		P	O	O	L	M	A	I	L
N	O	T	E	D			R	E	S	I	N	A	I	D
			R	A	I	N		U	P	S		N	A	N
A	G	A		P	E	A	G	E		E	L	O	N
G	U	N	W	A	L	E		R	U	N	W	A	Y	S
E	R	A	S	E			T	R	A	M
			A	D	D		R	O	U	T	I	N	G
V	O	L	C	A	N	O	E	S		H	O	O	T	I
A	M	U	S	E		D	A	V	E		S	P	A	M
S	O	M	E		D	R	E	A	M		P	L	U	E
E	D	A	M		E	S	S	A	Y		S	E	E	D

11-27-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate

Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Tibora Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammel
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	Hoomara Stokes, John Zawislak

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, November 22, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Plenty going on for women's hoops program

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

The UMass women's basketball team will look to get back on the winning track against Holy Cross on Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m.

The Massachusetts women's basketball program has been busy lately, busting out all sorts of exciting news.

First off, Head Coach Joanie O'Brien announced last Thursday that the hoops program has signed two high school senior guards to national letters of intent. Senior captain Kathy Coyner is in her last year of eligibility and O'Brien is looking for depth at the guard position, when freshman Cleo Foster takes over Coyner's role.

Monique Govan, a 5-foot-5 guard from Chicago, Ill. plans to wear the Maroon and White next fall. The windy city native dished out 162 assists last year as a junior and was named as the team's MVP.

"I'm thrilled to have signed Monique," O'Brien said. "She is the consummate point guard. She plays defense first and is going to fit in nicely with the way we stress defense as a team."

Katie Nelson will be coming to the Pioneer Valley from Ellicot City, Md. She is an excellent all-around athlete, earning four varsity letters in basketball and soccer and three varsity letters in softball. Nelson also led her hoop team to two state championships.

"Katie is a bigger Kathy Coyner; she handles the basketball and her team extremely well," said O'Brien. "She can score and will play the off guard position for us."

Secondly, sophomore center Jen Butler has once again been recognized for her outstanding play this weekend. Butler was named the Atlantic 10 Conferences Player-of-the-Week for her performance against Charlotte this past Friday night in the Mullins Center. Butler scored a triple-double, with 19 points, 11 boards, and 10 steals. The Brooklyn native's 10 steals puts her name in the UMass record book for most steals in a single game.

Last year, Butler was named to the Atlantic 10's all-Rookie Team and this year, the A-10 named UMass' starting center to the All-Atlantic 10 third team. Butler is already providing an awful lot of reasons for why she should have been named to the A-10's first team.

Finally, Holy Cross is coming to town on Sunday in an attempt to upset the Minutewomen. The Crusaders (2-2) are coming to Amherst off of two consecutive losses, the former being to Fairfield (63-58) and the latter coming at the hands of Sierra (82-68). Head Coach Bill Gibbons returns eight letter winners from last season's squad and his team will be hungry to end its losing streak.

The Minutewomen (1-1) will be looking to bounce back from a heartbreaking eight-point loss against No. 5 Georgia. UMass fought hard all game long, but 24 turnovers and a lack of rebounds in the waning minutes spelled doom for the Maroon and White.

Minutemen attempt baking of Crusaders

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is most likely practicing free throws right now.

After a woeful 10-22 performance from the line in the Minutemen's first contest of the year against Iona last Saturday, it failed to show much improvement in its second game of the year at Marquette, going 15-26. However, the main difference between the two games was that UMass was able to hold on for the win versus Iona, despite its inability to connect from the charity stripe, while against the Golden Eagles, free throw shooting was one of the main factors that cost the team the game.

In contrast to the Maroon and White, Marquette was able to shoot a respectable 77 percent from the line, and also garnered 15 more free throw attempts.

Now, the Minutemen hope to get back on track when they head to Worcester to take on the Holy Cross Crusaders at the Centrum. Tip off is slated for Saturday at 1:00 pm.

If UMass Head Coach Bruiser Flint picks only two things to work on before Saturday's game, it will most definitely be rebounding and foul shooting. In the first half of the game against the Golden Eagles, the Maroon and White were out-rebounded 25-13, on the way to losing the boards battle 43-30.

Even the usually dependable tandem of Eric Williams and Kitwana Rhymer were being neutralized in the paint, and finished with only four and three rebounds, respectively.

Another thing that Flint might want to work on in practice, if it is even possible, is staying out of foul trouble. Against Marquette, none of his big men even had a chance to get into a rhythm, because they were unable to spend even a few minutes on the floor without picking up a foul. By the end of the game, Rhymer and Williams had fouled out, and Brand was only one foul away from a permanent seat on the pine, with all three centers picking up more fouls than rebounds.

In fact, forward Jackie Rogers was the only member of the frontcourt that seemed capable of doing anything on Monday, totaling 15 points and five boards.

At the present time, Holy Cross is 0-1, but is scheduled for a Nov. 21 battle against Harvard before it heads over to the Centrum for the UMass game. In the lone contest of the season for the Crusaders, they fought valiantly against Providence College, but came out on the short end of a 63-57 score.

The Crusaders are led by Josh Sankes, who averaged 14.1 points and 11 rebounds a season ago, and totaled 15 points and 11 rebounds against Providence. Juan Pegues and his 10.5 ppg and Tim Szatko, the main three-point threat for Holy Cross, will also be factors when the Minutemen invade Worcester.

This year, the Crusaders hope to improve on last season's 10-18 record, and with five returning starters as well as 11 returning lettermen, it would be very disappointing for coach Ralph Willard and his squad if they fail to accomplish this.

*****

In other news for UMass, Flint recently signed a trio of new players to compete for next year's team. Mauricio Branwell, a 6'8" power forward out of Silver Springs, MD, and Jeremiah King, a 6'2" shooting guard from Passaic, NJ, were the most recent signings, joining last week's addition of Eddie Basden.

Branwell's junior year totals at Dunbar High School in Washington D.C. were 18 points and 13 rebounds a game, while King torched the competition at Paterson Catholic High School for 22.6 points a contest.

"With what we've signed this fall, combined with what we have sitting out (Raheim Lamb and Anthony Anderson) this year, we've really positioned the program for continued success in the coming years," Flint said. "I would expect that down the road, this group could well be our starting line-up. These five guys are difference makers."

College sports gambling crackdown proves worthy of legislative concern

By Julie Norwell
U-WIRE Washington Bureau

March Madness betting pools could soon be a thing of the past.

The House Judiciary Committee passed, by a 24 margin, a bill to prohibit Olympic, high school and college sports gambling in all states.

Although the September 13 vote was 19-9 in favor of the ban, Nevada Senator Harry Reid is determined to settle further activity on the measure.

"(Supporters of this legislation ... called for an end to betting on college sports, and yet again demonstrated their fundamental misunderstanding of this issue," Senator Reid said in a press conference on September 12.

Although the measure has bipartisan support, backers are predominantly Republicans. In addition, they enjoy the support of many head football and basketball coaches around the country, as well as presidents of the American Council on Education, the National Council of Independent Colleges and Universities, and the NCAA.

"I am very much in favor of a bill that would ban betting on college sports," said Brad Bower, sports information director at George Washington University.

A someone who works in the field of collegiate athletics I'd like to see any laws passed that are designed to protect the integrity of collegiate sports and eliminate the negative influences of gambling such as point shaving, etc.," he said.

The bill was proposed in response to the recommendation of the National Gambling Impact Study Commission (NGISC). The Commission was established in 1996 to conduct a comprehensive legal and factual study of the social and economic impacts of gambling and issued its final report in June 1999.

Critics of the bill assert that the ban would not resolve the problem that the legislation is intended to address, namely illegal gambling.

"Banning legal wagering on college sporting events is ill-conceived and will only lead to more illegal betting. My colleagues spend a great deal of time posturing their concern for the athletes, for the colleges and for the American public. If they were serious about acting on these concerns, they would go after the 98 percent of illegal betting done on college games," Reid said.

According to Patrick Ngongba, a senior who plays for GW's men's basketball team, athletes are routinely counseled by the Athletic Department about the repercussions of gambling.

"It could cost you a scholarship," he said.

"We never have any problems like that on the GW team," Ngongba said. "I don't know about those kinds of things. But it's not good for players to cheat. They should play because they like the game."

Representative Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, who is a sponsor and a chief supporter of the bill on the Judiciary Committee, hopes to protect student athletes and the integrity of amateur athletics by pushing the legislation through Congress this session.

"In the 1990s, there have been more attempts to coerce students into shaving points and actually fixing games than in the previous five decades combined," said Graham in a press release on June 15.

"This legislation ... is supported by every organization representing coaches, athletes, athletic administrators and presidents at the university, college, junior college and high school levels."

Senator Reid is particularly concerned that the bill unfairly targets Nevada, the only state where gambling on amateur or Olympic athletic events is sanctioned. The gambling industry in Nevada is tightly regulated and strictly controlled.

In 1999, Nevada casinos retained more than $32 million in sports gambling revenues attributed to amateur sports gambling.

Susie Coggins, a junior on GW's women's tennis team, thinks it is silly to spend taxpayer's money on this issue because all athletes must sign a contract with the NCAA to refrain from betting on sports.

"Why does Congress have to be involved? There are greater problems in NCAA sports, like the treatment of athletes by their coaches. Look at the Bobby Knight situation," Coggins said. "Maybe they should look at something deeper that affects the emotional well-being for players."

"This bill will only serve to drive more gamblers to illegal bookies. It will not protect athletes or prevent corruption in college sports," Reid said. Reid points out that only about 2 percent of betting on college games is done legally at sports books in Nevada.

"Congressman Graham is pushing for a vote in the House this session," said Kevin Bishop, Rep. Graham's Press Secretary. "He feels he will get 300 votes, but the gambling lobby is very powerful."

"The Senate is also trying very hard. They need 60 votes to break a certain filibuster," Bishop said. Senator Reid insists that he still has tricks up his sleeve, however.

Last week he recruited the support of Vice President Al Gore, whose position is that regulation on college sports betting should be left to the states.

Reid also hopes to force a postponement of the vote until next session to have time to change the minds of some backers.

"So that when we go into it next year, it won't be the slam dunk people think that it is," he said.

Virginia walk-on fights off cancer to play for Cavs

By Jim Reedy
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – Greg Lyons was never going to be a star. He didn't even have a scholarship. But he was going to play Division I college basketball. Then cancer intervened. A melon-sized tumor, to be precise. Less than two months before he was to begin his first year at the University of Virginia, Lyons discovered that a tumor in his abdomen had enveloped nearly every major organ in his body.

After six months of aggressive treatment turned his body to mush, Lyons finally arrived in Charlottesville and joined the Virginia basketball team as an invited walk-on, a year later than originally planned. He played sparingly for two years but was dropped from the team last season. Now Lyons is back with the Cavs as a senior guard, but he still carries with him the memory of July 16, 1996 – the day he learned cancer had invaded his body.

"It's going to be four years that I'm in remission in January, but every time that July 16 comes up, my mom always calls or it's usually a special dinner, whatever I want that night," Lyons said. "It's fading a little bit, but the memory's going to be there forever."

A cancer diagnosis is always a shock, but it was a particularly crushing blow for Lyons, who was all set to leave his Long Island home for Virginia along with his close friend and high school teammate Willie Dersch.

"It was real tough because all my friends were getting ready to ship off to college and I was left behind with a million tubes coming out of here, there and everywhere," Lyons said. "It was a lonely time, but a lot of my family and friends helped me through it."

Lyons, now listed at 6-foot-4, 187 pounds, noticed after high school graduation that he was losing weight and he began to experience back pain caused by the huge tumor pressing against his spine. But it wasn't until his mother, Jeanne, realized she could see the cheekbones in her son's face that the family finally recognized something could be very wrong with the second of their three boys.

The next few days were a whirlwind. Greg was whisked to North Shore University Hospital, where doctors discovered the Lyons family's nightmare was coming true.

"I was admitted to the hospital July 16, had the first tube in my arm an hour later and I had surgery the next day at 1:45," Lyons said.

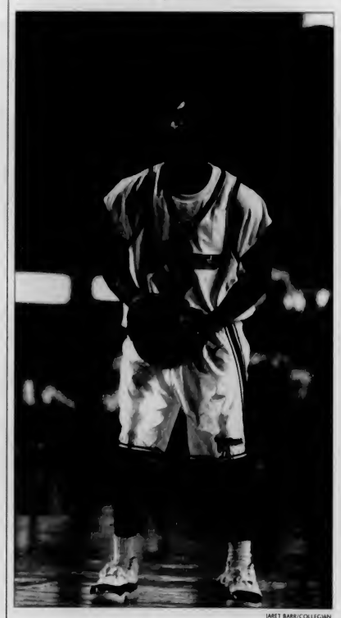
That initial surgery – the first of three Lyons would undergo over the next four months – was an exploratory biopsy, designed to determine how far the cancer had spread. Doctors were able to take out only part of the tumor, though, as the blood loss would have been too great. Chemotherapy would have to do the rest.

Two weeks after the first surgery, Lyons began the torturous regimen of chemotherapy he came to know too well. Five days a week, he sat for five hours as the toxic medicine dripped into his body, killing the cancerous cells but also taking a lot of healthy cells with them.

"You kind of fall asleep during [the dosage] because you just want the day to go by," Lyons said. "Usually around nighttime, you throw up repeatedly. In the early morning hours, you go to sleep for a little bit, then you wake up in the morning all-nauseous. You're puking all night."

In between bouts of nausea, Lyons tried to keep occupied, but his ravished body was too weak.

"There wasn't much to do," Lyons explained. "You had no hair, no eyebrows. You didn't have to shave for six months – that's the good part. But I wasn't going too many places. I really didn't do anything. I was so skinny and frail ... I just wanted to sleep the whole day. I'd basically just look out the window and do nothing, just stare into space."



JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Rogers and the UMass men's hoop team wage a crusade against Holy Cross on Saturday afternoon at the Worcester Centrum.

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 56 | www.dailycollegian.com | Monday November 27, 2000

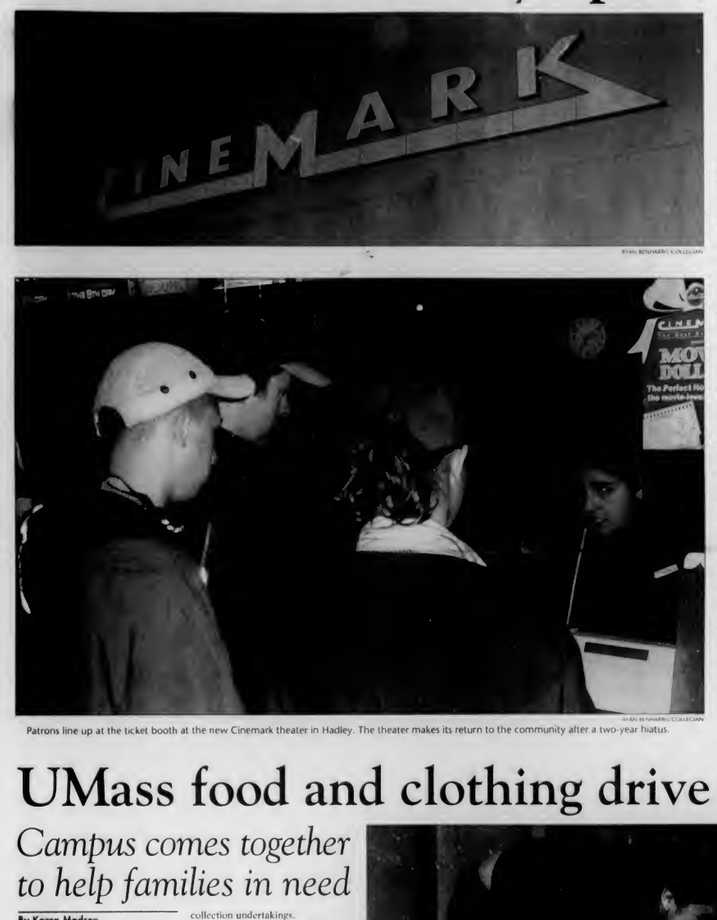
Style File takes an in-depth examination at fashion throughout pop-culture.

ARTS p. 6

Tim Turner scored a power play goal in Tuesday night's loss to Vermont. UMass also dropped a game to St. Cloud.

SPORTS p. 10

New theater finally opens doors



RYAN BENHARRIS/COLLEGIAN

Patrons line up at the ticket booth at the new Cinemark theater in Hadley. The theater makes its return to the community after a two-year hiatus.

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

After an almost two-year hiatus, the Hampshire Mall in Hadley finally has a movie theater. Cinemark Theatres opened its doors on Wednesday Nov. 22 to an anxious crowd and an even more eager Five College Area. Cinemark takes the place of the AMC-6 theatre that resided in the mall for over 15 years.

Cinemark representative Valerie Herzog credited the delay in the theatre's construction and opening to weather and other minor setbacks. She said that it usually takes a year to open a theatre, and with combined building time, that was approximately how long this was.

The new Cinemark Theatres boasts 12 screens with digital sound, and high-back rocking lounge chairs with cup-holder armrests. All of the theatres look identical and only differ from the amount of seats they hold. Cinemark adds the 12 new screens to the 2,883 that are already in place around the world. It owns 188 locations, and its headquarters are located in Plano, TX.

Until now, the only theatre in the immediate area surrounding the Hampshire Mall has been the AMC Mountain Farms Four Cinemas. Mountain Farms has been an indispensable entity for students to see films because of its exceedingly low prices. The theatre offers bargain matinee prices as well as early-bird specials.

Cinemark has certainly followed suit with the low prices and offers similar to the bargains that the AMC-6 theatre used to offer.

"Upon building here, we realized that they [the college community] were of major importance," said Herzog. "The prices are definitely the selling point, but the quality is also a big deal."

Cinemark will charge $6.00 for adults after 6:00 p.m. ($6.50 on Friday and Saturday), $4.25 for children and $4.75 for students. Daily matinees are $4.25, and there is an early bird special, which is the first matinee of the day during which all tickets are $3.50. One of the new elements of the Cinemark Theatre is the ability to purchase tickets online. In the future, there will also be a machine at which patrons can pick up the tickets that they bought through the Internet without having

Turn to CINEMARK, page 2

Recount over; Bush wins FL by 537 votes

By Jason Trenkle
Collegian Staff

Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris announced yesterday after three weeks of manual recounts in some counties that Governor George W. Bush has won the state of Florida by 537 votes.

Florida's official returns, as of the 5 p.m. deadline yesterday for all manual recounts, placed Bush on top with 2,912,790 votes compared to Gore's 2,912,253.

Bush's victory in Florida would conceivably give him 271 electoral votes, one more than is required by the Constitution to win the Presidency.

Vice-President Gore has announced that he will contest the results of the election in Miami-Dade, Palm Beach and Nassau counties starting this morning. In the instance Gore contests the results, state law is expected to take jurisdiction and could go to the Supreme Court, indicating a week or more of courtroom battles remaining to be fought.

However, in a nationwide televised statement, Bush appealed to the American people with the need to move forward and work with both Democrats' and Republicans' differing of opinions "in uniting this great land."

"Now that the counts are counted, it is time for the counts to count," Gore said in his televised statement. "I ask Vice-President Gore to reconsider [contesting the election results]."

According to Joseph Lieberman, Democratic ticket for Vice-President, the Florida declaration is "incomplete" and "inaccurate." With the 5 p.m. deadline, many Floridian's votes had been left unaccounted for or counted improperly, Lieberman attested.

Palm Beach County had submitted incomplete results as of yesterday afternoon's deadline and Harris rejected the appeal for a partial report on its manual recount, stating that they had been given ample amount of time to complete the recount since the deadline had been extended after Gore's request to accept recounted returns. The Board of Palm Beach continued working two hours and eight minutes after the 5 p.m. deadline to complete the manual recount.

According to Judge Charles Burton, chairman of the county's election canvassing board, he had hoped Harris would accept the remaining ballots after the deadline last night. Instead, however, she threw out the county's entire manual recount and certified the county's machine recount results as reported by the state last week.

The Bush campaign sued in five counties – Hillsborough, Okaloosa, Orange, Pasco and Polk – where it has filed accusations against election boards for "excluding absentee ballots" filed by members of the armed forces serving abroad.

Gore's legal team complained Saturday that the Board of Florida used a tougher standard on "dimpled" ballots in which they were not counting perforated ballots for a presidential candidate if the votes for other races were clearly punched through. In Broward County, which ignored "dimpled" ballots, Gore had an overall gain of 567 votes after its recount was completed.

But an assured Bush feels that the results are accurate and, "The election was close, but after a count, a recount and a manual recount, Vice-President Cheney and I are honored and humbled to have won the State of Florida."

The Supreme Court is expected to intervene on Friday.

UMass food and clothing drive begins

Campus comes together to help families in need

By Karen Madsen
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Housing Services, spearheaded by Clerk III, Ramona Balicki and student staff members, is conducting a campus-wide food and clothing drive for the second straight year.

The food, clothing and supermarket-certificates will be used to help three families in need this winter. Just before Thanksgiving, one of the families, composed of a single mother and four daughters, was given 50 lbs. of food to help out with the holidays. The other two families will be given aid prior to the winter break.

"The father in one of the families is a graduate student here at UMass," Balicki said. "We like to have some connection between the recipients and the University."

Last year, the drive amassed over 300 lbs. of food. Housing Services found needy families by speaking with counselors from local elementary schools. This year, Balicki credits Robert Campbell, Associate Director of Housing, and his wife, Roxanne Campbell, for the help of the local ministry in finding families that could use the assistance.

Balicki hopes for more student initiative in future drives.

"I'd like to see effort made campus-wide: students collecting money on their own, or going through their closets, or purchasing items for the families," she said.

She points to the efforts of residence halls Gorman, Wheeler and Brooks as examples of successful collection undertakings.

"Jessica Orsit, Gorman-Wheeler's RD [Resistant Director], helped coordinate with the RA's [Resident Assistants] who collected $50," explained Balicki. "They took it to Stop & Shop to buy a gift certificate and Stop & Shop matched the money because they were so impressed."

Gorman-Wheeler inspired the residents of Brooks who also began collecting. Eventually, Balicki hopes to see competitive collecting develop among the residence halls.

"The benefit will be for the families," she said.

Lauren O'Brien, a senior communications major and one of the students managing the project discussed how students can help.

"We don't have much extra food lying around like someone who owns their own home, but all students can still participate, just by donating old clothes that you don't wear any more, or putting in one dollar – your coffee money for the day," she said. "I don't have a lot to give, so I thought giving my time was the best thing."

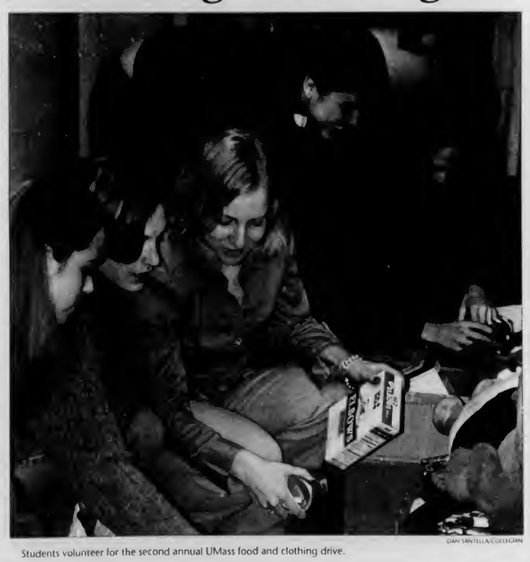
She believes that students directly benefit from the experience.

"They enjoy knowing we buy presents for children. Students enjoy something they can actually see," O'Brien explained.

Other students involved reflect O'Brien's enthusiastic attitude.

Carrie Scunderson, a senior operations management major, said, "I just think it's an awesome program.

Turn to FOOD, page 2



DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Students volunteer for the second annual UMass food and clothing drive.

■ Cinemark

continued from page 1

to wait in a line at the box office.

Louis Petrich, who was the manager for the AMC 6 theatres before they closed, returns to the Hampshire Mall for the same job at Cinemark. He said that he has spent thirteen years in the theatre business, and is very excited about the new theatres.

"This is our newest design," he boasts about Cinemark's newest theater. He said that the architecture reverts back to the "classic era."

"Everything has gone very smoothly," Petrich noted about the opening process. "[This weekend] the crowds will be very large." He recalled the days when the mall's AMC theatre attracted a majority of college customers, and noted, "College is going to be very important to our well being. We're really looking forward to students coming."

During an inspection of the projection booths, Cinemark engineer Frank Dzwielski said that the entire system is 100 percent automated.

"One person can run everything," he explained.

He then displayed a demonstration of how digital sound is produced. The entire soundtrack is contained on a compact disc that plays in sync with the visual film.

Jason Padua, an assistant manager at Cinemark, and a student at Springfield Technical Community College (STCC) MA said, "Prices are totally different in the Springfield area." He also noted that the atmosphere of the Five College area is also different than that in Springfield.

The Cinemark theatres are now open for business. For more information about films and showtimes check the Collegian Arts & Living section daily for reviews and upcoming events.

■ food

continued from page 1

It gives people the opportunity to help that they otherwise wouldn't."

She encouraged students to become involved, saying, "It's always good to help other people regardless of what age you are."

Ann Regan, a senior accounting major has tried to get students with whom she's interacted in her classes and out on campus involved.

"I think around the holidays people become more generous," she said. "I think it's important to give back. Everyone who can pitch in should. They'll feel better and help out."

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Reflecting on Christmas

Senior Dan Barrett's tuba reflected the back of Fanuel Hall nicely during the annual Tuba Christmas celebration in Boston.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a Broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holston Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schultz Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jennie Gorlowsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

CINEMARK®

The Best Seat In Town

At Hampshire Mall
367 Russell Street - Hadley, MA

The Largest Movie Theatre In Hampshire County!

NOW OPEN!

FEATURING
- 2 Box Offices
- 2 Concession Stands
- All Stadium Seating
- 12 Wall-To-Wall Screens

Coca-Cola Celebrates The Hadley Grand Opening! The first 10,000 ticket purchasers will receive a Coke scratch and win card. One winner will WIN FREE MOVIES FOR A YEAR!

Register to receive showtimes and special offers via email. Purchase movie tickets via the Internet! Go to cinemark.com.

Chilly night.

A night scene from Boston as it readies itself for another Holiday Season.

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook

ATTENTION!!!

CLASS OF 2001

SENIOR PORTRAITS BEGINNING NOV 27TH

Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147

(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)

DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY

Walsworth Publishing Company

Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

EARN FREE BOOKS

THE READER'S CHOICE BOOK CLUB

Purchase 10 reading books from the University Store and you could earn your 11th one FREE*

Stop by today for your Reader's Choice club card!

UMASS University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

Where Best Sellers are 30% off every day!

*Based on the average of previous purchases.

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Letters to the Editor

NO Propaganda

The Collegian office gets letters every day.

Some are from record labels and concert promoters, requesting coverage. Some are from students, faculty, and area residents, giving their opinion about anything and anything, from who should win the selectmen election to why our editorial page writers all suck. We get letters to our hard-working business staff from their clients, requesting work on their accounts. These letters are all welcomed, read, and, if needed, responded to in due time. This correspondence is all part of being a fully-functioning independent newspaper, and we take it for granted.

Not all the letters we receive are so welcomed, however.

Periodically we are flooded with letters from various organizations seeking to get their message spread by having it published in our newspaper. Speaking specifically, we mean the odious propaganda sent our way in bulk from Holocaust revisionists, wanting to have their garbage published in your very own Daily Collegian.

No.

This does not happen. They send a carbon copy of their lies (anti-Semitic diatribes, talk about the "gas chamber legend," and defending their movement as a breath of intellectual life and anti-PC crusading) to every editor, department, and staffer employed at the Collegian. And we, after being shocked (every time, we are shocked), throw every single copy into the recycling container so that someday perhaps they can become something useful to the civilized race.

Perhaps the organization sending us this refuse (we will not even give them the benefit of publishing their name for the purpose of denouncing them in this column) doesn't realize that we are not stupid. That some of our department editors are Jewish. That some of us are History majors. That all of us, with no exceptions, see through their lies and their hate and realize how hollow and disgusting all of this is.

We do not run these letters. We will not run these letters. If you are thinking of sending us letters such as these, just save us the trouble and throw them into the recycling bin yourself.

"But," you propagandists will protest, "what about freedom of speech? What about freedom of the press?"

We have freedom of the press, because we have a press. We have the freedom to print what we feel is right. We do not have to print anything that we feel uncomfortable with or that we know is wrong.

The Daily Collegian does the best job that it can to balance the matter of taste with the matter of censorship. We never censor opinions that differ from our own (for instance, censoring liberal views in favor of the conservative, or not running an album review because it differs from our own opinion) but we will not have outright lies printed in this page. It isn't a matter or freedom – it is a matter of principle.

Send us your letters, but don't send us your hate. We don't want it.

LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT ME.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE WHETHER I'M HAPPY OR SAD.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE WHETHER I SMILE OR SHUT UP.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT MY TRIUMPHS OR TRAGEDIES.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT OUR PAST OR OUR FUTURE.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT MY UPS AND DOWNS.
I THINK YOU DON'T CARE WHETHER I LIVE OR DIE.
THAT'S SO PRESUMPTUOUS.
ASK ME IF I CARE WHAT YOU THINK.

Write for Ed/Op.
We like people who write for Ed/Op.

Private property?!

CHRIS MASTERJOHN

In my last column, I presented an outline of why I believe we should oppose capitalism and, more broadly, markets. To briefly recap, among other flaws, markets allocate resources wastefully, mis-price goods and services so as to promote environmentally and socially destructive behavior, crush diversity and individuality, inherently reproduce hierarchical structures and inequitable divisions of labor, and distribute wealth inequitably, vastly out of proportion to the effort people expend. Markets also erode solidarity and breed anti-social behavior by creating conditions in which we have diametrically opposed interests with anyone with whom we interact economically.

I had said that I believe a case can be made that there are vastly superior alternatives to capitalism that can be built on non-hierarchical, cooperative, democratic, egalitarian principles, while still being productive, efficient, and preserving individual freedom. But even if that is so, we must first make a case of why change is justified. Some will say that it simply isn't enough to point out that capitalism is thoroughly flawed and that positive alternatives are possible. You cannot possibly change capitalism without interfering with the individual's natural right to own property, they would say.

So before presenting an alternative model, we must examine the concept of private property. We must clearly define exactly what it means to have private property, examine the justifications for it and whether they hold up to analysis, and discuss alternatives to private property and whether or not those alternatives would be more or less in accord with our values.

Let's use the following premise as a starting point: the burden of proof for any authority to exist lies with the authority, or the person advocating such authority. This should be a widely accepted premise. If the burden of proof lied on the subordinate to show the authority unnecessary, we could never have abolished slavery, never established democracy, never have established a Bill of Rights. Freedom should be a right of all humans, and that freedom should not be restricted except in cases where it is necessary for safety (a parent-child relationship, for example), or to ensure the rights of others (laws against assault, for example) or other socially accepted justifications.

Now let's look at private property. Let's compare your home with a public park. Your home belongs to you—it's private property; the park is public property, belonging to everyone. What's the difference? In your home, you have the right to tell others to leave, to prevent others from coming in, to use your yard for your own purposes without outside interference, and so on. Essentially you are the absolute monarch of your own property. On the other hand, the park is open to everyone. No one can tell others where and when they can go in the park, and no one can use the park in ways that excludes the use of others (like growing a garden, for example). So the difference between private and public property is that private property creates a one-person dictatorship over a given area, while public property is free of authority.

So now let's go back to our premise: all authority must be justified. What's the justification for being able to own a home and a yard? Well, owning that land allows you 1)privacy, and 2)the freedom to use it. If I want to grow tomatoes, I should be free to grow them without someone else coming and saying "No, I think I'd like to grow carrots here," roto-tilling my tomato plants right out of the soil, and planting carrots. I should be able to live in a home without any random person coming in and out of the house at three o'clock in the morning, or showing up to eat lunch with me as if they're my friend.

So far, so good, right? But not so fast. This is a justification for owning a home and a yard, but we enter a dilemma when we find that this justification can't apply for all instances of property. Say someone owns a factory. In this case, they do not own the means to use for personal creation or consumption. They are owning the means of production that all of the workers must use to make a living, and exist for the benefit of all who consume the product, an excess of authority by our standards.

Some people would respond to this by saying they "bought" the property. But remember—we haven't found an actual justification for property beyond the means to privacy or personal creation and consumption, so if we accept that authority be justified, the buying of this property was unjust. Furthermore, we must look at the historical explanations for why someone owned the property in the first place, and why someone had the means to buy it and not others. At one point or another in history, land wasn't owned. At some point between then and now, property became owned by whoever happened to have the biggest and best guns, declared himself owner, and had the means to enforce his ownership. Sound fair? Not really. Ownership of land eventually translated into ownership of raw materials to produce metals, and then machinery, and eventually all the wealth we have today. And ownership of that land, machinery, and wealth is what led some people to be able to afford to buy property and not others. So property is owned because of a historical unjust acquisition, and the unequal means to attain property is roasted in that same injustice.

That leaves us with a dilemma. We've found owning property for adequate means to privacy and adequate means to personally produce things for personal consumption and enjoyment to be just, while property ownership that exceeds such needs is an unjustified excess of authority. In order to resolve the dilemma, we must find a way to differentiate. Making land a commodity and surrendering it to the market clearly is incapable of making that differentiation.

Here's my solution: create local community councils that are based on direct democracy which will distribute land in a given area. People would draw up requests for a given area of land they believe they need for the appropriate uses, privacy, personal creation, and personal consumption. The requests would be compared to what is available, and then negotiations would take place in order to equitably distribute land in an egalitarian manner that serves individual needs as best as possible, all through a process of participatory democracy.

So we've come to an ideal way to distribute personal property that best fits in accord with our values of freedom and democracy. At the same time, we've successfully argued against the justification to uphold capitalism, despite its major flaws, oppressiveness, and inferiority to potential alternatives. But that just leads us to the next question: how, if not through means of private ownership, can we construct a productive, efficient economy that runs in accord with the values we like? And that, yet again, is a topic for another time.

Chris Masterjohn is a Collegian Columnist.

It's the way it is

ANDREW JOSEPH BONCODDO

There are some things in life that are universally accepted. The sun rises and sets. The DC will never have an edible meal. There is NO SUCH THING as a good parking space in yellow lot. Women are a mystery to men, and men like to let them think that. And getting to the point of my rant, UMass Amherst is the regarded as the bastard child of the five-college system.

Now, this is not to be taken as an insult by you readers, because I love this school and everything about it. We have an active, diverse population with hundreds of different groups that get their voices heard, no matter what it is that they are actually saying. We have some of the most intensive, most academically acclaimed courses and majors. We even have some of the better sports and music groups anywhere else in the country. But in the eyes the other four colleges, this adds up to zilch.

For years, UMass has been cleaning up its "ZooMass" atmosphere, one of constant partying, drinking, and drug use. Don't get me wrong; on any given night, anyone can find a party or at least a "social get-together" somewhere on campus. But compared to the students of the 1960's and 1970's, we are a much tamer, much more discreet student population.

All of this progress, however, falls on deaf ears when talking to people who go to those four OTHER colleges that I don't feel I have to name. If you don't know what colleges I'm talking about, then please stop reading this article, go down to Whitmore, and transfer out of here for the sake of humanity. People from those OTHER places seem to think that UMass is a playground, only around in case they're bored on a Friday or Saturday night and in need of getting trashed and/or laid. To them, we are just a bunch of alcoholic, oversexed morons who sit in our rooms devoid of human contact until the weekend when we awaken, booze in hand, condom in wallet (or purse), and get ready to party like it was last year.

In one such talk with a girl I grew up with in my hometown on the North Shore (shout out to my fellow UMass Wakefieldians) who goes to one of those OTHER schools, I was informed that she doesn't like to come to UMass because Amherst College is "so much better". The guys are smarter, richer, and better looking, and the parties are much classier. Well, except for the richer part, that statement is complete nonsense. What she regards as smarter is being at a more expensive, Ivy League school; what she regards as better looking are a bunch of Abercrombie and Fitch clones that walk around in the same clothes with the same haircut spouting the same yuppie garbage about spending the holidays in exotic places with their families.

No, I guess by THOSE standards I'm not a knockout or a genius. I dress the way I want to, I don't own a car, and I eat Thanksgiving dinner in my own house with my loved ones. In fact, I think I'm smarter than those spoiled brats at the OTHER four schools are. For one, I can think for myself, dress in my own style, and I've worked to get where I am today. I didn't have the world handed to me on a silver platter at birth. I'm the first of my family to attend college full-time, and I'm damn proud of that. My parents worked their asses off to make sure I had it better then they did growing up in a poor village in Sicily. They gave me what they never had growing up. My experiences make me smarter than them.

Also, how smart can someone really be to pay $20,000 more dollars to attend a school because of its prestigious name? I'm getting the same, if not better, education paying a little over $10,000. I am on a campus that never sleeps, a place where I can learn AND have a great time, an institution of higher learning I'm damn proud to say I am enrolled at.

So for all of you at those OTHER four colleges that are reading this and thinking to yourselves, "What does he know about my college? We have it much better than those alcoholic losers at UMass", do one little favor for me. Take the sleeves of the sweaters that you wear around your shoulders, tie them tightly around your neck, jump into your Mazda Miatas, and get the hell off our campus. UMass isn't the ugly, redheaded stepchild of the five-college system; we are what the OTHER colleges should aspire to be: freethinking, hard working, and grateful for what they have. This Thanksgiving, I'll be thankful to be a UMass student.

Andrew Joseph Boncoddo is a UMass student

The season is weighing me down

BOO DOWNS

If there is anything at a traditional Thanksgiving meal will bring, it is an aching stomach. After a fifth helping of stuffing, I was stuffed. After three bowls of Jell-O, my waist jiggled just as much. Even with Thanksgiving over, my family now has enough turkey to last a month. For me, the beginning of the Christmas season brings parties, holiday dinners, and all those dreadful extra pounds. In years past, I could always get away with fattening up for the long winter months. At 21 years, I'm now just fat.

Perhaps fat is too strong of a word. I am definitely overweight. Don't believe me? Just ask my doctor. At 290 pounds, I have long since left my appetite innocence behind. While some people splurged on alcohol, I splurged on DC food, gaining almost 100 pounds my freshman year. To gain so much is a problem, but gaining it on DC food is certainly a heavy issue.

Perhaps the greatest asset and curse to my physical build is that I can hide most of my extra pounds. With wide shoulders and a tall chest, I look like I'm 250 pounds. So while I do not get grief from people, I'm also able to keep myself from doing anything about it. If I were a walking blob, then I would suffer accordingly.

I took some tome to look at some old pictures, visually chronicling my appearance as I grew up. Too tall, scrawny, with acne and oversized glasses, I looked like the quintessential nerd. However, as the years passed, the pictures shed off the geek costume and replaced it with girth. By the time pictures captured me coming home from freshman year I looked like someone else. In college, I did my best to hide my change to friends and to write the whole thing off. Wearing looser clothes never fooled my parents, however, and they kept bringing the issue up. I assured them that I had everything under control, that I could easily eat less and do more exercise. A wonderful and simple solution, yes, but futile. I hated to do any "unnecessary" exercise, and I was too busy to regulate what I ate. The demons in the closet came out and I ballooned to 310 pounds. Even with an "exercise" regimen, I managed to shrink to my present size. While I'm not gaining any more weight, my excesses have taken its toll. Completely out of shape, small tasks that were easy to do are getting harder to do. The most painful part of my condition is that I know I can change myself, but just can't bring myself to do it. I fear getting bigger, and I know things will get worse if I don't do anything. At the same time, I fear change, and it is easier just to stay the way I am. If I were to have a fatal character flaw, this would be my downfall.

There is a fine line between being dissatisfied with weight and hating oneself. There's also a fine line between basing self worth on overall personality and judging self worth by the current state of being. While I got away with my current weight because of my body type, I was aware of my actual weight, and hated myself because of it. Although I have countless traits that I'm immensely proud of, this vice dragged my self-confidence down, keeping me from being who I really wanted to be. I let my state of being overshadow everything else that was good about me. If I face confidence issues being overweight, then what about the people who are mildly overweight, or extremely overweight? With over half of the population teetering on weight issues, it's little surprise that many people as a whole have low self-esteem.

It could be argued that self worth should not be generated by appearance. There's no reason to hate yourself if you are overweight. It's you as a whole that matters to other people. However, it can also be argued that people who are overweight get the third degree because of their size. I have heard enough fat jokes to sink a ship. And when these jokes are uttered, I am secretly both relieved I'm not the target, and ashamed for being overweight myself. It takes an astronomical amount of confidence to keep your head high in a fat-hate world. For the rest of us, we get down on ourselves under the pressure of others.

What is the solution to our dilemma? If I had the answer, I'd be one of the richest people in the world. Until I shed my own weight issues, I can only speculate. However, I do know that self-hate is not going to do anything for your condition. In fact, self-hate is more likely to worsen the problem, as you console yourself in the excess that put you there in the first place. It is known that dieting is not the answer, either. Dieting is the most popular way to lose weight fast. In fact, the weight loss industry is a multi-billion industry hoping that you will try the quick and easy path. It's ironic that diet has "die" in it. Starvation or chemical elixirs might appear to help, but it's only stalling the inevitable, and usually kick starts it when the diet is over. This leaves one option open, and that is a change of lifestyle. Sure, it's the slowest, most tedious way of doing it, but it is the only sure-fire way to completely eliminate the problem. Liposuction might be fun now, but unless you eliminate the excesses and inactivity, you'll become what you hate.

I sometimes wonder why the hardest method is the most effective. However, I am about to embark on a new chapter of my life, and I'd prefer to leave my weight behind. I've stopped snacking and eating during late hours. I've committed myself to a program that will guarantee plenty of exercise. I don't have to do this alone. You don't have to do it alone. If you want to really change how you look, lose weight with someone. It keeps the exercise interesting, and the support plentiful. That's what I'm doing, and it is the best motivation I've ever had. Maybe in six months I'll visit, a new person, and I'll see some of you. You will come up to me and say, "Hi Boo! We lost ten pounds, and feel great!" I will smile, and say, "I feel great too! I lost twenty pounds and I'm still going." We will take a quick picture, and in ten years, I'll look at the photo album, and see the person I always wanted to be.

Boo Downs is a Collegian Colossus

WIN: A NIGHT ON THE TOWN!
the DAVE MATTHEWS CONCERT
YOU
AT: THE FleetCenter BOSTON, MA
FOR: DAVE MATTHEWS CONCERT WITH: LAURA, DEANNA & RUTH
YOUR HOST: mass LIVE www.masslive.com
Log on to MassLive.com/offcampus and enter to win a night on the town with Laura, Deanna and Ruth!
Join them in a chauffeur-driven limo stocked with food and beverages, bound for the Dave Mathews concert at The FleetCenter Boston MA on December 11, 2000!
OFFcampus ONline
www.masslive.com/offcampus
YOUR TICKET
YOUR DRIVER
GET ON IT!
www.masslive.com/offcampus

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Monday, November 27, 2000 | 6
Arts Editor • Ryan Benharris
collegianarts@yahoo.com

COURTESY THE SECRET LAB

Not Cute Enough!

Despite barking up $26.8 million over the five-day holiday weekend, 102 Dalmations looked like a puppy next to big dog, The Grinch. Jim Carrey's hit made $73.8 million, which brought its total to over $135 million.

Mullets, Michael Jackson and Backstreet Boys; Style File analyzes fashion trends in popular culture

Being home for Thanksgiving this past week totally threw me for a loop. Between getting all dressed up for family functions, bupping around with my friends and working hard during a hectic weekend at Pottery Barn, I completely forgot about my Style File responsibility. Luckily for all of you, my sassy self remembered at 1 a.m. on Sunday morning, and decided to give you thoughts on fashion.

Millennium dressing puzzles me. Last year the stores, magazines and designers came up with all sorts of crazy ideas about what it meant to be hip in the year 2000. But then they all decided they needed to one up each other's glitery New Year gear, and so the past 12 months have been out of control. Walking through the mall yesterday, there were feathers, glitter, tweed, vinyl, fleece, knit, leather, geometric patterns and net – and that was just one outfit! Okay, I exaggerate... but come on! I like the options available - it's great that hot pink paisley velvet tube tops with malibu trim and rhinestones are displayed prominently aside 40's style two-piece suits – but isn't there going to be some kind of theme or something? I mean, decide all ready!

Wanna' know my absolute favorite fashion tip? Tattoo Band-Aids. They are the coolest things ever. I tend to sustain many injuries, especially those pesky SRIs (pronounced shrees, a fun little acronym for Shaving Related Incidents) that speckle my ankles. Well, for all you fellow scrapees, instead of putting on a boring old clear or nude colored bandaid, slap on a funky tattoo kind. My personal favorite are the "Favorites" mix, which includes roses, celtic designs and iguanas, but the "Animals" are cool too – the frogs and panthers rock. I don't think they look very real, but I've tricked many people. And due to the backtracking on the legalization of tattoos, it looks like these might be one of your only options right now.

Backstreet Boys? Definitely not sassy. I have always been a huge (and secret) fan of boys bands, but the Backstreet Boys are NASTY to look at. Did anyone else get as grossed out by the cover of Rolling Stone as I did??? Guys, PLEASE do not think that this is how girls want you to look. Two of the B.Boys, the one formerly of the Bert Eyebrows, and the one that no one can ever remember, are all weird and freaky with their long hair. Nick, the young one (and the only one who's name I know), is wayyyyy to GQ'd out. And the other two? Nah-nah kid. Actually... their whole random look kind of reverts back to the first random thought about millennium dressing. They have the party, high fashion, deranged ax murderer, dramatic and laid back looks all covered.

Good lord, the gold hoops! I had lit candles every night, in the hopes that my prayers would be answered. But alas, gold hoops came back with a vengeance. As part of the huge trend back to the 80's this season (doesn't it sound weird to go back to a decade that you were actually alive during?) gold hoops, power suits and wild eye shadow all made guest appearances. Perhaps the designers forgot to notice that the 80's were filled with some of the most disgusting articles of clothing known to mankind. The huge lace Madonna skirts? Leg warmers? Michael Jackson zippered leather jackets? MULLETS?!?!?! Who in their right mind would want to go back – back to those hellish days of teased bangs and tight jeans on guys? Forgot protesting cruelty to animals, let's get moving on the cruelty to my eyes issue, and stop this 80's trend before it gets any worse!

Bust out those hats and scarves! Because it is actually cold out. And it's going to stay cold – no more fake outs like earlier! The days are shorter, and things are looking a lot more bleak without fun and colorful leaves, but just because the foliage is lacking, it doesn't mean you have to be stark as well! Bright and cheerful scarves and hats are the thing to have this season. Colorful wool coats and snow boarding jackets are the thing to have for winter, but for us poor college students, there's a way to brighten up you old gray coat, with some inexpensive alternatives. Candy cane striped scarves in a multitude of colors really liven up a dull winter ensemble. And knit hats with earflaps and tassels add some pep to a more tailored look.

And on a final note, those scary clawlike nails on girls (and guys!) have just got to go. How can you write? And how do you get your contact lenses into your eyes in the mornings without scratching the hell out of your retinas??? Here's a hint, curled eyelashes are good, curled nails are gross. So clip them, file them, bite them or scratch them down on your kitty's scratching post. Just get rid of them so that you too can live a normal life.

Shauna Billings is a Collegian columnist.

Style File
WITH SHAUNA BILLNGS

Write for Arts!

Welcome to The Site Of The New Millenium where MONEY and EXCITEMENT keep GROWING!
Brighten Your Holiday Play
Solveandwin.com
Come Unravel Our Web!

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS Student Travel Services
1-800-648-4849
Job @ sts.com
On-campus contact!
413-549-4514
www.ststravel.com

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!
To find out more, attend the
Smith College School for Social Work
INFORMATION DAY
Thursday, November 9, 2000
4:00 p.m. – 5:30 p.m.
Sceyle Hall – Room 106
Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960
E-mail: sswadmis@smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw
Smith College School for Social Work

House of Wives
Program Series
Join us for a series of talks related to our English-language premiere of House of Wives , a play by Algerian playright Fatima Gallaire that creatively explores women's roles in Arab culture.
On Orientalism: The Shaping of Attitudes about Arabs and the Middle East in America
Professor of Communications Sut Jhally
Nov 28 Fine Arts Center Room 204 4:15-5:45 pm
Translating Fatima Gallaire's Les co-e'pouses as House of Wives: Cultural Stakes in an Art of Approximation
Professor Edwin Gentzler of the UMass Translation Center
Nov. 30 Herter Hall 301 4:00-5:30 pm
House of Wives: Theater and the Expression of Sexual and Cultural Identity among Women Francophone Writers
Dr.Susan Haedicke of George Washington University & Dr. Jan Gross of Grinnell College
Dec. 7 Fine Arts Center Room 204 4:15-5:45 pm
House of Wives December 7-9, 12-15
Curtain Theater, University of Massachusetts
Tickets: 413-545-2511 Program Series information:413-545-6808
House of Wives Program Series was supported by grants from the Student Activities Cultural Enrichment Fund, the UMass Alumni Association, the UMass Arts Council, and the Five College Multicultural Theater Fund

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Vegetarian Potato Skins 3.25 4.19
Sweet Potato Fries 6.50 3.25
Shrimp Tempura 6.99 3.50
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's
51 N. Pleasant Street
253-3491

The UMass Oxford Summer Seminar offers talented students an exeptional opportunity to study British literature, history, politics and law in a six-week residential program at Trinity College, Oxford. Interested students are invited to attend an information meeting and discussion about the 2001 Seminar.
Date: Wednsday, November 29
Time: 4:30 pm
Place: Campus Center 803
Alums from last summer's Seminar will describe their experiences and program administrators will describe next summer's Seminar. For brochure or answers to questions, contact the Seminar via e-mail at:
oxford@english.umass.edu

Work Over Break
Earn $400 - $600 Per Week
$9.00 per hour and overtime potential
Join our team taking inventory in your hometown area
RGIS Inventory Specialists
Visit our website www.rgisinv.com
OR CALL TODAY & SET UP AN INTERVIEW
24 HOUR JOB LINE: 1-888-532-RGIS
Days Nights Weekends
Boston: 617-484-1788
North of Boston: 978-777-2253
South of Boston: 508-821-5591
New Hampshire Sea Coast: 603-926-9813
Plymouth: 508-833-1145
Route 3 South: 781-340-6355
Springfield: 413-731-6910
Worcester: 508-366-8847
Visit us on the concourse
November 29 & 30
December 4th & 5th
December 12th & 13th
Equal Opportunity Employer

JAMAICA Spring Break
From $449
As seen in Rolling Stone
ONE LOVE. ONE HEART. ONE GREAT PARTY.
It's that time of year when thousands of students come to Jamaica and feel all right for an unbelievable price.
YOUR SPRING BREAK PACKAGE INCLUDES
• Round-trip airfare
• 7 nights hotel accommodations
• Round-trip airport & hotel transfers
• Free welcome, beach & evening parties
• Free admission to night clubs
• Discounts on restaurants, water sports & side excursions
• Packages available to Negril and Montego Bay
• Professional on-site tour reps
• Complete weekly activities program offering optional sunset cruise, booze cruise, toga party & more
• Free bonus party pack
• Optional meal plan including 7 breakfasts and 7 dinners
Sun Splash Tours 1-800-426-7710 Student Travel Services 1-800-648-4849
Price is per person based on quad occupancy from select departure cities. Other cities may qualify for reduction or require surcharge. U.S. and Jamaica departure taxes (currently $68) and $12 handling charge additional. Rates increase $30 on 12/15/00. Peak week surcharges/off-week discounts may apply. Restrictions and cancellation penalties apply. Limited availability. Subject to change without notice. Call for full details on hotel selection and availability.

■ men's hoop

continued from page 10

You don't have to win these games by yourself. Let us win the game together.' He's just pressing a little bit."

Besides Sankes – Pegues, Patrick Wheatly and Tim Szatko (13 points) also helped control the paint for the Purple and White, combining for 23 boards including nine offensive. As a team, the Crusaders grabbed more rebounds on their offensive end (20) than UMass did on the defensive (19). Holy Cross pulled down 52 total rebounds.

"In the second half, we knew we had to step it up," Sankes said. "And I knew I had to step it up myself so once we got the lead and we got it going there was a point in the game where I just knew we were going to win. The pressure started building on UMass and I could tell they were done."

At the start of the game – just over five minutes into the first half, Mack popped out from the right side and drilled a three from the corner to give UMass the early 10-7 advantage. Forty-two seconds later freshman Willie Jenkins sank a wide-open jumper from behind the arc to put the Minutemen up six. However, with just under 10 minutes remaining in the first stanza, Sankes powered in for two and Curry drained a trey to tie the game up at 17.

UMass' Jonathan Depina provided a key spark with his entrance in the first half twice driving the full length of the court for power lay-ins and with 2:52 remaining, stripping Sankes of an inbound pass and drilling a pull-up jumper on the other end to give his Minutemen the 30-24 lead. A Jenkins trey, a Shannon Crooks lay-up and a Jackie Rogers free throw later, UMass jogged into its locker room with a 36-28 halftime lead – a lead they would lose at 13:11 of the second half on a Pegues put-back.

"I told our guys before the game that UMass is where we want to be," Willard said. "Holy Cross used to be there. We want to get there again and we want to get to a level where can go compete against anyone in the country. We're certainly not there yet but we're making strides and I told them before the game that I expected us to win this basketball game.

"I was a little angry at halftime with them – but they responded. We shut down the transition game in the second half and I think that was the key."

UMass couldn't even buy a basket. Just 19 of its 58 attempts fell through while converting on only six of 20 three-point tries. The Maroon and White's 16 turnovers weren't the killer. It was the slow pace that Holy Cross forced the Minutemen to play in. UMass just could not put together a successful run.

"Carry over – I've been harping about that all week," Flint said. "We have to carry over the things we do in practice to the games. That's the bottom line. We just have to keep working at it, working at it, working at it. Repetition is the greatest teacher."

"We just have to keep getting after it in practice," Crooks agreed. "I think if we get down on ourselves we'll be doing ourselves an injustice because we come to play hard – we just have to carry over."

Kitwana Rhymer scored 10 points and pulled down four rebounds for the Minutemen. Rogers, Crooks and Depina added nine each for the struggling squad.

"I don't want guys thinking that 'oh, we're 1-2 now, the season is over,' " Flint said. "We just need to get better – we have to understand what each guy needs to do to get better everyday at practice. This team will win games. This team will be fine. We can't panic and let people start saying, 'oh that's it. It's over.' "

■ women's hoop

continued from page 10

rebounds on the afternoon. Butler also came up with a huge steal with 20 seconds left after Coyner drained her three to regain possession.

"We didn't get the ball to Jennifer Butler as much as I would have liked to," O'Brien said. "That kid needs to get more than nine shots, and half the shots she got she created herself. [She] got in foul trouble, but when she was going, they couldn't stop her. Because of the turnovers, we took chances away of getting the ball into her hands."

It was obvious from the onset of the game that both teams came to play. Jen Butler won the tip and hit the first basket of the afternoon. Holy Cross responded with a trey by Paukert, which sent a message early in the day: the Crusaders were for real.

Nehls led UMass in the first stanza with 10 points, with most of those points coming off of offensive rebounds. Butler had seven of her own in the first, which made it obvious for O'Brien that Holy Cross was unable to contain the Maroon and White's post players.

"She [Nehls] got good shots tonight," O'Brien said. "[She] picked up all the weak side rebounds. That's just from taking the time, composing herself, and going to the basket. We need to get more of that out of her. Her key is playing good defense and chasing offensive rebounds."

Nehls finished with her first double-double of the season, with a 11 boards to accompany sixteen points on eight for twelve shooting.

UMass out-rebounded the Crusaders, 53-34, and scored 20 more points in the paint (39-19). You can't win a game when you're out-rebounded by 20 boards, and thanks to big efforts by Nehls and Butler, the Minutewomen were able to attain a sense of revenge over Holy Cross. The Crusaders beat the Minutewomen by 13 last season in a 78-65 loss.

For the Maroon and White to continue its success, the younger players will have to start playing like veterans – as soon as possible.

"We got the freshman who are a little bit overwhelmed," O'Brien said. "We play Holy Cross who works a ton of different offenses. It gets a little overwhelming. They were thinking more of Holy Cross than they were of themselves. They know how to handle themselves in defensive situations; it's just a matter of having the confidence to do it. And we can get better at that."

Freshman Cleo Foster saw a considerable amount of time at the off-guard spot for the Minutewomen. Foster's ability to handle the ball made her essential for UMass to break the Crusader's press.

"So many people did some good things," O'Brien said. "Amber shot horrendously, but she did a good job on defense, had some good passes inside, and got six assists tonight. Kathy was as solid as she could be. The fact that Jen fouled out and we didn't fold was something that will help us down the line."

All in all, UMass has to be thankful for a good rebounding effort from its post players and timely shots from Coyner and company for this win.

"We hit big baskets when we needed to," O'Brien said. "I thought the three that Kathy Coyner hit at the end of regulation was huge. The kids responded, they stepped up and made some plays when they needed to, and that's what I liked."

The Minutewomen resume play when Dartmouth hits the Mullins Center at 7p.m. on Tuesday night.

Special teams woes spell disaster for Minutemen

BURLINGTON, VT – The Massachusetts hockey team was victimized once again by penalties in Tuesday night's game against Vermont. UMass, a team that has struggled when they have been a man (or two down) in recent games, allowed three power play goals to the Catamounts at Gutterson Fieldhouse and it proved to be the difference in a 5-3 loss to the hosts.

In the opening 12 games of the season, the usually strong UMass penalty kill has yielded 21 goals in 84 shorthanded opportunities. In its two latest games, both losses, the Minutemen have allowed eight power play goals while holding the Catamounts and the Engineers off a mere seven times.

Last year the Maroon and White were not just keeping teams from scoring while on the power play, it was also netting shorthanded goals. At this point UMass has failed to score a shorthanded goal this season.

Last season the Minutemen had two of the best penalty killers in Hockey East in captain Nathan Sell and assistant captain Jeff Blanchard, but both were lost due to graduation. But the Maroon and White did return one of its top three in current captain Jeff Turner.

Turner, who spilt time with Sell and Blanchard on the penalty kill last season, has had trouble finding a comfort zone with any player this season as Head Coach Don Cahoon has had him on the ice with brother Tim Turner as well as with freshmen Mike Warner and Thomas Pock.

The penalty kill has shown signs of last year's dominance at times, but at others has been woeful.

BRYAN SMITH

The game at RPI, a 9-2 loss, the Engineers tallied five times with the man advantage. It was its special teams that were not so special as it also allowed a shorthanded goal in the game.

The Catamounts scored power play goals in all three periods against the Minutemen, something that they were not able to overcome.

The Maroon and White's power play, after starting the season relatively well, has fallen of late as it has only converted 10 of 64 chances on the season.

Leading the charge with the man advantage for UMass are Martin Miljko and Tim Turner. The duo has half of the Minutemen's output on the power play with Miljko having scored three times and Turner having posted two tallies.

On the season the Maroon and White have been outscored by a 51-36 margin. UMass is a minus 15 on special teams on the campaign. The Minutemen have been outscored by 11 on the power play and have allowed two shorthanded goals.

Success for the Maroon and White comes when it is able to play with the same amount of men on the ice as the opposing team. If statistics tell the truth, then UMass has one of the best five-on-five hockey teams in the country.

If the Minutemen can reverse their fortunes on special teams, then they should be able to turn their season around.

Bryan Smith is Collegian columnist

■ St. Cloud

continued from page 10

the third period to put the game out of reach. The goal came when Johnson was pulled in favor of an extra attacker. Tyler Arnason scored the goal after a shot from Kris Wallis was blocked in front of SCSU 18-5-1, 3-3 WCHA] net, which led to a two-[illegible]

In the first period neither team could muster any offensive with the visitors getting only six shots on Johnson. The Maroon and White's attack was no better as Scott Meyer, the SCSU goalie, had to stop just two shots.

Despite the lackluster first period, UMass came out of the gate storming in the second frame and netted the contest's first goal at the 1:33 mark.

The goal was the made possible by a great forechecking effort by Jimmy Callahan. The sophomore then made a pass to Pock in the right faceoff circle. Pock blistered a turnaround slap shot that beat Meyer to the stick side for the 1-0 lead.

But the Minutemen's lead would not last long as the Huskies responded 1:43 later when Ryan Johnson scored on a slap shot from the point that was redirected in front of the net and by Johnson over his right shoulder to tie the game.

"[Ryan Johnson] walked in and took a shot," Johnson said. "It hit off [Mike] Warner's stick [and went in the] top corner."

"I think [Mike Johnson] was screened on it," Dahl said. "Our guys really react to a challenge. It seems if things are going our way we relax a little bit, and when there's a challenge in front of them we seem able to react to it fairly positively."

The Maroon and Whit carried the play for the remainder of the period having its best opportunity when SCSU defenseman Jeff Finger turner the puck over to Martin Miljko in the slot, but his shot was hit Meyer in the chest and the chance to regain the lead was squandered.

UMass had another golden opportunity moments later when Tim Turner had an excellent individual effort to get around a Husky defender. Turner then slipped a pass to R.J. Gates in the high slot, but Meyer was again up to the task keeping the game knotted at one. Jeff Turner had a chance to hang the rebound home off a scramble in front of SCSU net, but Meyer turned that aside as well.

"We're not very opportunistic," Cahoon said.

"We have to capitalize on more opportunities and play a little tougher in the defensive zone," Johnson said.

The game was the second time in as many outings that UMass has outshot its opponent and came out on the losing end. Saturday night the Minutemen outshot the Huskies by a count of 25-23. Against Vermont the Maroon and White fired a season-high 44 shots on net to the Catamounts 19, but dropped a 5-3 decision.

The Minutemen will look to get back on the winning track when they play host to Hockey East opponent Boston University in a home-and-home series on Friday and Saturday nights.

■ Vermont

continued from page 10

minutes later, as he sprung freshman Scott Horvath on a two-on-one break. The rookie skated along the right side before flipping a pass to Jay Shaw, who snapped a one-timer from the left circle past Catamounts goalie Tim Peters.

From there, UMass had numerous chances to net the tying goal, but Peters held his ground. Despite allowing a host of rebounds, the junior netminder came up big on several occasions – including a host of stops during a two-man advantage for the Minutemen late in the second period.

"I thought that UMass played very well in the second period," UVM hockey coach Mike Gilligan said. "They outplayed us by quite a margin. They could have won the game, but a couple of breaks later on panned out for us."

Vermont clung to its one-goal lead until early in the final frame. With the Minutemen on the power play, senior captain Jeff Turner slid a pass to his brother Tim, who was sitting right on the doorstep. The younger Turner took a few hacks at the puck before it finally went under Peters to knot the game at 3-3.

From there, both teams had chances to take the lead, but it was UVM who went ahead for good on Gamelin's goal midway through the period.

"I thought that we improved as the game went on," UMass hockey coach Don Cahoon said. "We had some great chances that got ourselves back in the game. I was real happy with the effort that the kids made, but there's no magic formula as to how we lost the game – we continue to take too many penalties."

In fact, two of the first three goals for the Catamounts came on the power play. The penalty kill had been a strong point for the Minutemen in recent weeks – they killed off 23 of 24 infractions at one point – but have since given up eight goals while shorthanded in the past two games.

As a result, an even strength goal from freshman Oriel McHugh and power play markers from Ryan Cox and Bryson Busniuk staked Vermont to a 3-0 lead.

"At the end of the first period, I didn't think that we were playing badly," Cahoon said. "The issue in the first period was about taking penalties."

The loss dropped the Minutemen to 3-7-2 on the season, while Vermont improved to 5-2. Yet, despite the final outcome, Cahoon was able to take some positives away from the contest.

"That type of effort, energy and focus, with a little more consistency, is going to win us some games," he said. "But it [the schedule] is not going to get any easier. The performance wasn't what I want it to be in terms of the outcome, but we didn't play anything but inspired hockey throughout the game."

The Minutemen faced St. Cloud State on Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center. For more information on that game, check out the related story.

Mandatory Sports Staff meeting Thursday at 5:30 in the newsroom.
New writers welcome. Any questions, please call Bryan or Mike at 545-1749.

MARSHALL STEINBECK
COLLISION REPAIR & AUTO BODY
53 S. Prospect St.
Amherst Center
256-8157

Do You Need Credits?
Come to Greenfield Community College during the month of January.
• College Writing Strategies, 3 credits, 1/3-23
• English Composition I & II, 3 credits, 1/3-23
• Principles of Psychology, 3 credits, 1/3-23
• Interpersonal Communications, 3 credits, Sat. & Sun., 1/6-28
• History of the American People to 1865, 3 credits, Sat. & Sun., 1/6-28
• Introduction to Dance, 3 credits, 1/3-23
• Ballroom Dancing, 1 credit, 1/3-22
• French Skills Practice I, 2 credits. 1/8-19
• Spanish Skills Practice I, 2 credits, 1/8-19
• Spanish Skills Practice II, 2 credits, 1/8-19
• Internet Literacy, 1 credit, 1/8-12
New 1-Day Credit-free Workshops!
• Websites for Small Farmers, 1/3
• Pasture Management on the Web, 1/10
Registration begins November 27
You can register by phone
VISA • Mastercard • Discover
413-774-7600
Classes begin January 3
For more information call (413) 775-1801
GREENFIELD Community College
One College Drive, Greenfield, Massachusetts 01301
www.gcc.mass.edu

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center — University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

EMT Training This Spring Tuesday and Thursday 6-10, plus some weekend classes. Total cost: $600 credit available call 545-1885 for information or to register Learn to save a life!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take over lease. Townhouses. 2 bedroom. Available 1/10. $775/month. 549-4762

2 bedroom, take over lease starting in January. All inclusive. Close to campus. Call 253-5101. $725/month

Puffton Village. Take over our lease. 3bedroom. $1155/month. Call 549-2751 for more info.

Are u sick of the dorms? Take over our lease! 2bdr $830/mo w/heat on bus line. Call Jon or Will 253-6928

AUTO FOR SALE

1995 Dodge Neon 30,000 miles, green, air, excellent condition. $4950 559-4602

AUTO FOR SALE

Honest Buy!! 87 Ford Bronco II All power, cc, 4wd, 140k. Orig desert car, winter car, New batt, selinoid, passed inspec. $1200 Neg!! Call Dan 323-6227

CHILDCARE

Handicapped. Experience, references, car, housework. 6 to 25 hrs. $10/hr. 247-5800

EMPLOYMENT

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Coordinate gym class for homeschooled kids. 1day/week. Time is flexible. Call 323-5227

BARTENDERS MAKE $100-$250 PER NIGHT! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED! CALL NOW!! 1-800-981-8168 ext. 9067

EMPLOYMENT

Winter Break Employment - Barnes & Noble at Boston University. Help us prepare for the upcoming semester. Needed: Cashiers, Shelvers, customer service, phones. Flexible shifts starting December 11th - January 27th, you pick. Store discount, conveniently located in Kenmore Sq. under the Citgo Sign on MBTA Green line. Meet our representatives Dec. 4th or 5th at the Campus Center Concourse or call Jen Jackson at 617-236-7488 for more info. Also, ask about our recruitment bonus!

Marketing Agency seeks people for promotions in Massachusetts hottest nightclubs. Excellent pay! 1-888-477-6668

EMPLOYMENT

HUMAN SERVICES COMPANION/SUPPORT for a young man living in Northampton. Sense of humor, team player, respect and patience required. Flexible evening/weekend hours. Great benefit package. If interested, come in and fill out an application at The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 or call Helen at (413) 536-2401 Ext. 5543. AA/EOE.

TEAM LEADER-lead a progressive team in the provision of support to a young man living in Northampton who wants to be more connected to his community. Good communication, flexibility, driver's license and reliable trasportation required. Supervisory experience and BA preferred. Excellent benefit package. Send resume and cover letter to The Consortium, 187 High Street, Suite 204, Holyoke, MA 01040 Attn: Helen. AA/EOE.

FOR SALE

Dion Tack & Gallery A complete tack shop for Hunt, Dressage, and Eventing. 245 Russell St, Route 9, Hadley (413)584-0953

Snowboard. Sims snowboard with bindings excellent condition. Ready for the season. B.O. 546-7070

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom in 4 bedroom Amherst house. Available immediately. Female preferred. 549-5975

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Cliffside Apts. 665-8712

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for quiet non smkr/drnker to share 2bdrm in Sunderland. On bus rt. 665-7753

Looking for 1 female for Brandywine Apt. Call 549-0854 for more info.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Share Apt. with 2 female roommates. Spring 2001 Summer option available Cheap rent. On bus route. Needed ASAP Please call 256-0912

Roommate Wanted to share two bedroom apartment one mile from Umass. Starts in mid-January. Call Pedro at 253-1723

To share large bedroom in three bedroom apt. On bus route. Starting Jan 1. Call Amanda 397-8999

SERVICES

Have you been ripped-off by a retailer ? Contact the Student Legal Service Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

NASSAU @ $549 CALL 1-800-227-1166

CANCUN @ $499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK 2001! CANCUN & BAHAMAS. EAT, DRINK, TRAVEL FOR FREE, WANTED CAMPUS REPS! Call USA SPRING BREAK, toll free (877) 460-6077, for trip information and rates. 25 Continuous Years of Student Travel! www.usaspring-break.com

SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Spring Break Destinations, including Cruises! Rep Positions and Free Trips available. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.EpicuRRean.com

Spring Break - Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun and Jamaica from $449. Air, Hotel, Transfers, Parties and More! Organize small group - earn FREE trips plus commissions! Call 1-800-GET-SUN-1

AVOID SPRING-BREAK SCREW CALL 1-800-227-1166

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED SPRING-BREAK 2001 CALL 1-800-227-1166

TRAVEL

NEGRIL @ 499 CALL 1-800-227-1166

2001 SPRING BREAK GATHER GROUPS FOR 2 FREE TRIPS & HOURS AND HOURS OF FREE DRINKS! Book by November 3 for free meals and Dec. 18 for lowest prices!! $100 deposit is all you need !! Call for free info 1-800-426-7710 or visit www.sunsplash-tours.com

TUTOR WANTED

Tutor in Oriya Language needed. Call Jessie evenings weekend 259-9103

what are you waiting for??

advertise today!!

call 545-3500

WE NO LONGER RUN FYI'S. PLEASE SEND ALL BRIEFS TO JESSICA MAY, 113 CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT.

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

2 • HSCN Bulletin Board
3 • CBS-3 Hartford
4 • CTN 8 Boston
5 • ABC-40 Springfield
6 • PBS-57 Springfield
7 • WGGB Ind. Channel
8 • UTN-30 Hartford
9 • WSBK-38 Ind. Channel
10 • NBC-30 New Britain
11 • Public Hartford
12 • PBS-24 Hartford
13 • WNEC-6 Springfield
14 • International Channel
15 • UHF-61 Springfield
16 • WB-59 New Haven
17 • ESPN
18 • FNYNS
19 • WTIC-61 Ind. Channel
20 • Weather Channel
21 • Cable Soup!
22 • C-Span
23 • Lifetime
24 • CNN Headline News
25 • Learning
26 • USA
27 • USA
28 • TNT
29 • A-E
30 • Sci-Fi
31 • Bravo
32 • Nogin
33 • Nick-Rebroadcast
34 • Nick at Nite
35 • TV Land
36 • Comedy Central
37 • BET
38 • Univision
39 • Bloomberg Financial Network
40 • College TV Network
41 • MTV
42 • MTV2
43 • VH1
44 • The Learning Channel

Dilbert By Scott Adams

PERFORMANCE REVIEW
LASTLY, WHAT HAVE YOU DONE TO IMPROVE THE MORALE OF YOUR CO-WORKERS?
I DIDN'T GIVE THEM THE BEATINGS THEY SO RICHLY DESERVED.
I'LL SHORTEN THAT TO "TEAM PLAYER"?
www.dilbert.com

Dilbert By Scott Adams

HERE'S THE NEW GUY. I DON'T KNOW HIS NAME.
HE'S EITHER RUDE OR SHY. NO ONE KNOWS FOR SURE.
IF YOU FIGURE IT OUT, NAME HIM EITHER SHILO OR RUDY
www.dilbert.com

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

IN THE BLACK! IN THE BLACK! WHAT A HOLIDAY-PUL PARADE!
IT'S LIKE MUSIC... LIKE I'M HEARING IT FOR THE FIRST TIME. WHICH, OF COURSE, I AM!
AND ALL BECAUSE MY TEENAGE BRAIN HAS A KNACK FOR PICKING OVER-STOCK!
A MILLION DRUG LORD BUTTONS? WE'LL TAKE 'EM!

Over the Hedge By Fry Lewis

CLARA, DON'T REBEL AGAINST YOUR PARENTS BECAUSE THEY'RE HAVING SOME MARITAL PROBLEMS.
THEY STILL LOVE YOU THEY'RE JUST A LITTLE...
C'MON, CLARA! I'LL PUT OUT THE DOG, THEN DRIVE YOU TO PRE-SCHOOL!
THEY'RE JUST A LITTLE...
...DISTRACTED

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

NOW, I WANT YOU TO THINK ABOUT WHAT YOU DID TO SATCHEL AND REMEMBER - YOU NEVER FOOL ME YOU ALWAYS JUST GET IN TROUBLE LIKE THIS
I FOOL SATCHEL, THOUGH
OH WHOOP-DEE-DOO. DO YOU WANT A MEDAL FOR... OH SORRY, SATCHEL
THAT'S OK
WOULD THIS "MEDAL" HAVE ANY MONETARY VALUE?

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

CYBERKAT2849 WISHES TO CHAT.
WHO'S THAT?
SHE CLAIMS TO BE A PROFESSIONAL SUPERMODEL WITH INTERESTS IDENTICAL TO YOURS.
UH-HUH. I'M SURE IT'S JASON AND MARCUS PULLING ONE OF THEIR LITTLE PRANKS. I'LL TAKE IT FROM HERE, THANK YOU.
AND AFTER I BEAT YOU TO A PULP
HELLO, POLICE?

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HI, ROB. YOU LEFT YOUR CASE IN MY CAR THIS AFTERNOON
OH. HEY, JOE. THANKS
WHAT?
DUDE. YOUR CAT'S BREATH IS REALLY, REALLY FOUL.
ODOR IS JUST ONE OF THE WEAPONS IN MY OVERALL PROGRAM OF DOMINANCE AND INTIMIDATION
YEAH. IT'S A PROBLEM

Foxtrot By Bill Amend

GUESS WHAT?! MOM'S MAKING HER WORLD-FAMOUS TOFU AND EGGPLANT PIROGIES FOR DINNER!
WOOHOO!
I WISH HE WOULDN'T DON'T THINK GLOAT EVERY TIME THERE WON'T BE LEFTOVERS, AT A FRIEND'S HOUSE. PAL!

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

CLARA, YOU'RE ONLY TWO... YOU SHOULDN'T RUN AWAY FROM YOUR PARENTS
EVEN IF THEY ARE SPLITTING UP
YOU GUYS CAN KEEP AN EYE ON ME UNTIL I LEARN THE ROPES.
US?... PARENTS?...
YAAHHHHH!!
IT'S NOT THAT THEY CAN'T HANDLE THE RESPONSIBILITY. THEY JUST CHOOSE NOT TO.

Horoscopes

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)- Do you feel like having an adventure? Well today, you're more likely to have an adventure when you go on a short journey. Also, buy yourself some new sneakers.

Capricorn (Dec. 22- Jan. 19)- Today, more people around you will differ in their beliefs from yours. Rather than clash with all of them, listen respectfully to their opinions. However if they still sound stupid, let them know.

Aquarius (Jan. 20- Feb. 18)- Today your individuality will really shine. So for the best day possible, try showing off the qualities that make you different and unique. Just be reasonable, you know what I'm talking about.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - Mar. 20)- Today you'll have dual needs. On one hand, you'll want to take part in social activities. And at the same time, you'll be in one of those moods where you want to kill everyone within five feet of you. But hey, you do what you gotta do. I ain't sayin nothin

Aries (Mar. 21- April. 19)- To feel your best today, spend more time insulting others. Attending a party would be perfect. You can also go to any crowded public place where you can insult lots of people.

Taurus (April 20- May 20.)- Today your logic and reasoning skills are weaker than usual. So much so, that you should put yourself into a small room and watch re-runs of All. Don't talk to anyone about anything.

Gemini (May 21- June 20)- Today spending too long making decisions won't benefit you. In fact, it could cause you some severe pain. That's because today you'll tend to think too much. The simple solution to this problem is to not think at all.

Cancer (June 21- July 22)- Stay away from money. That's because today your judgment regarding the use of money is at below normal levels. Try putting off any major purchases or investments, ya jackass.

Leo (July 23- Aug. 22)- Today you'll want to avoid hanging out with anyone you care about. For some reason you've lost your inner monologue. If possible, try planning something unique with that person you dislike. That way you can really tell them where to go.

Virgo (Aug. 23- Sep. 22)- Great day to focus on bettering your health. That's because there's a mean case of the clap going around. You might want to set up an appointment with your doctor, get that checked out.

Libra (Sept. 23- Oct. 22)- Today is going to be one of those days where you wish you hadn't gotten out of bed, the solution to this problem is simple don't get out of bed. But if you're reading this then you're already screwed. Ha Ha!

Scorpio (Oct. 23- Nov. 22)- Man does it suck to be you. If you are born on or between these two dates, you've got serious issues. There is a simple explanation for this however. You see when you were born

Amherst Weather

Today	Tuesday	Wednesday
HIGH: 53 LOW: 32	HIGH: 48 LOW: 29	HIGH: 43 LOW: 27

Quote of the Day

"Take a doo-doo pie... I love you."

–Woodrow the Bum to Brittney Spears

MONKEY-BOX BY PBJ

EDDIE, A RECOVERING EXTREME-CASE TECHNOPHOBE, HAS A SUDDEN RELAPSE WHEN CONFRONTED WITH THE ENVELOPE

© 2000 www.monkey-box.net

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

DESCRAMBLE:

ON EMNU
ADTOY

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership
Call 545-3500 for details.

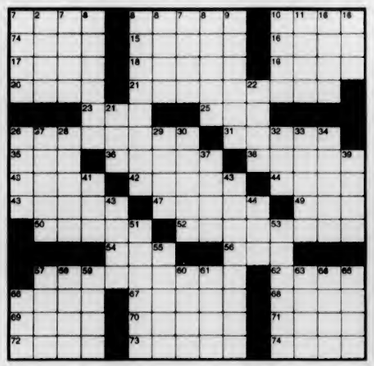
ACROSS
1 Melodies
5 Asimov genre
10 Seafood choice
14 Sweater material
15 — over: studied
16 Unctuous
17 Sarge's pooch
18 Boxer Griffith
19 Field mouse
20 Trading
21 Dancers snap them
23 Crude shelter
25 Conniving
26 1921 Nobel Prize recipient
31 Zoo favorites
35 Genetic abbr.
36 Sea eagles
38 Burglar
40 Mine entrance
42 Plugged
43 Valentine's day
44 Grades holders
47 Command
48 Hood's weapon
50 Up and about
52 Pieces of grapefruit
54 Just out
56 Primary color
57 Unexpected winner
62 Designer St Laurent
66 Arrived
67 Novelist Jong
68 Graceful rhythm
69 Away from the wind
70 Bodybuilder Charles
71 Shed pounds
72 Help borrowers
73 Leitmotif
74 Grand — bridge term

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

B	H	A	M		T	O	G	A	S		R	C	M	P
A	U	T	O		A	D	E	P	T		O	L	E	O
C	L	O	T		H	A	R	R	Y		L	A	S	S
K	A	P	U	T		E	M	I	L	K	Y	W	A	Y
			L	A	K	E		L	A	P
H	O	M	E	W	O	R	K		T	O	A	D	S
A	P	O		L	H	R	U		S	L	O	W
N	E	R	D		L	O	D	E	S		Y	O	G	A
D	R	A	I	N		L	O	C	H	S		D	I	M
D	A	Y	S	O	F		S	K	I	N	D	E	E	P
			P	E	G	H		O	P	I	E
F	L	U	E		S	O	N			T	R	A	C	K
F	O	O	T		T	A	U	P	E		A	L	A	I
F	L	O	E		L	E	L	N		S	N	T
V	A	K	E		S	A	L	A	D		L	O	S	T

11-28-00 © 2000, United Feature Syndicate

DOWN
1 MP's quarry
2 A little bit
3 Dicker's
4 Slow-moving
5 Apparition
6 Robin Cook book
7 Eye part
8 Melted fabrics
9 Honorable goals
10 Inlet
11 Brawl
12 "— Well That Ends Well"
13 "So long"
22 No, for Ivan
24 Rocky Mountain native
26 Historic periods
27 Myanmar's neighbor
28 Tacks
29 Fascinated by
30 Gets closer
32 "Sol"
33 Argot
34 Roomy vehicle
37 Half a beef
39 Tattoo
40 Small child
41 Deposit
46 Kitchen feature
48 Roadmap abbr.
51 Warm over
53 Carefree episodes
55 Usefulness
57 Hill's opposite
58 Prayer end
59 Bullrush, e.g.
60 Upset
61 Fraudulent scheme
63 Stringed instrument
64 "Born Free" lioness
65 Pipe part
66 Lo- — not fattening



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Bryan Smith
Photo Technician	Dan Santello
Copy Editor	Bryan Smith
Production Supervisor	Jeanette Santoro
Production Staff	Margie Smelkinson, Soren Nash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
SPORTS

Monday, November 27, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Totally crossed out

Men's hoop drops heartbreaker to Holy Cross

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER – Gut check.

When you shoot 21.6 percent in the second half, get out rebounded by 22, your assisted leader goes 4-for-17 from the field (3-for-11 from behind the three point arc) and your opponent is in the double bonus with 8:09 left in the contest, you're just not going to win Division I basketball games.

And so was the case on Saturday afternoon in the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 78-65 loss to Holy Cross. All that Head Coach James "Bruiser" Flint could do was shake his head as he exited stage "what now?" from the hardwood of Centrum Centre, his team now 1-2.

For UMass, the Centrum is famed for being an upset palace. In 1982 the Minutemen upset Syracuse there to move on to the Elite Eight. In 1986, they knocked off third-ranked Memphis. On Saturday, UMass was joggled for the first time at its accustomed home-away-from-home, breaking the seven-game winning streak strung together by Flint and John Calipari.

"You can't shoot 21 percent to win a game," Flint said. "And I don't think we shot 21 percent when every [shot] was a three-pointer with a guy in our face. We had drives to the basket that we missed. We had lay-ups underneath the basket that we missed. I mean 'what do you do?'"

As a team, the Minutemen shot a mere 32.8 percent from the field for the game, a stat that wasn't too lacking to the Crusaders' 37.5 shooting percentage. In the second half, however, Holy Cross shot a solid 47.6 percent to that of UMass' 8-of-37 (21.6 percent) mistargeting and drained an outstanding 10 free throws (16 consecutive down the stretch) to the Maroon and White's 10.

With 10:48 left in the second half, Holy Cross' Josh Sankes slammed it home to give his team a 45-41 lead. Two minutes later, after Monty Mack front-rimmed a wide-open three-point attempt, Sankes grabbed Ryan Serravalle's 3-point miss and dropped the ball in to extend the Crusader lead to six (48-42). Sankes dictated the middle all day. The 7-foot transfer from Rutgers scored a game-high 25 points and grabbed 17 rebounds (nine offensive). He also added five blocks and went nine-for-14 from the charity stripe.

Holy Cross	78
UMass	65

"Josh Sankes was huge," Holy Cross head coach Ralph Willard said. "People look at him and keep wondering how he does it but he does night in and night out. It was certainly a big game by him tonight."

Sankes, the nation's leading returning rebounder, recorded his twenty-third double-double in 31 games for Holy Cross while helping his squad win its second game in a row to move to 2-1 on the season.

"Sankes doesn't move to get rebounds," Flint said. "He just sticks you underneath the basket – keeps balls alive. [He's] a big kid. But my concern is that we're not boxing out. We're underneath – we're not boxing out."

That put-back by the senior was followed up by two free throws from Jared Curry to put the Purple and White up eight. For the next six minutes, the teams traded baskets and free throws – UMass unable to create any form of potent attack.

It was a frustrating second half for the Minutemen. With 8:09 left, UMass committed its tenth foul, subsequently giving Holy Cross two chances at the line for each violation from there on in. This, combined with the fact that it seemed like the Maroon and White was shooting at a hoop similar to the one you'll find at a traveling carnival, would halt any UMass attempt to compete in transition.

"I thought we did a great job defensively in this basketball game," Willard said. "We knew that they had some really good offensive weapons – especially at the guard spots, and I thought we did a great job of shutting down their transition game in the second half."

Big contributers to the UMass meltdown were guards Juan Pegues (13 points) and Jave Meade (10 points). Both stood solid at the line, hitting a combined 13-for-15. Meade, who went a perfect 6-for-6 from the stripe was also the key defender in holding Mack to only 13 points on four of 17 shooting. Mack and the Minutemen were held to just six points in the first 10:25 of the second stanza.

"We went over so much in practice that when it came to the game, we saw that they didn't even change their plays," Meade said. "So [Mack] was running right into us and we were just staying on him."

"[Monty] didn't think he played well against Marquette," Flint said. "I told him after the game, 'you're not going to make that up, just take your time. We'll be O.K. You're not going to win 30 games in one day.

Turn to MEN'S HOOP, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Shannon Crooks and the Minutemen dropped to 1-2 on the season with the loss to Holy Cross at the Centrum Centre.

Women's hoop outlasts Crusaders in overtime

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

With 1:42 left in regulation, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was down two at 50-48. The ball is in-bounded to senior point guard Kathy Coyner. She hides behind a screen; the shot is up – bang! The Mullins Center crowd erupted.

On the next possession, Coyner was fouled and nailed a couple of free-bies from the line. Holy Cross got the ball back with 15 seconds left. Three points would be a somewhat safe lead against most teams, but the Crusaders may be one the best three point shooting team the Minutewomen will see all year. Holy Cross hit five of their ten shots from behind the arc in the first, and four of nine during the second half. UMass knew it had to prevent a good look at the hoop at all costs.

UMass	62
Holy Cross	57

A quick pass to junior guard Jeanette Paukert on the wing was exactly what UMass expected. Paukert had already hit four treys on the day, and it was obvious that she was the Crusaders' go-to player in the clutch.

Paukert dribbled right amid a flurry of Maroon and White defenders, and as she went up for the shot, UMass center Jennifer Butler got a piece of her arm to send her to the line – for three shots and attempt to send the game into overtime. With her fifth foul, Butler was sentenced to the bench for the rest of the afternoon.

This is what every player dreams of – hitting the free throws to tie the game with no time left. 1.4 seconds remained on the clock as Paukert stood at the line. The Chicago native stunned the crowd by nailing all three of her attempts to send the game into overtime, a first for both teams this season.

Without its starting center, doom lingered for the Minutewomen. The Crusader defense that posed problems all day long for the Maroon and White wasn't getting tired and UMass was forced to find a way to win without its best post player.

"Sometimes you just got to make things happen," Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We made a couple plays happen, we did some good things, and we turned the ball over a couple times too. They did a good job on defense."

Stiri Liivandi hit a lay up to put UMass up by two with three and a half minutes left when a couple of UMass fouls cost the home team the lead. Coyner threw two freebies to the bottom of the net and junior Carline Nehls banked two of her 16 off the backboard to put the Minutewomen back on top by two.

With 37 seconds left, UMass showed good reason why it was deserving of the "W". Less than a second remained on the shot clock when Ebony Pegues ran the baseline and lofted a floater while being hacked. The floater was money, the crowd went nuts, and UMass had a four-point advantage. Pegues missed the charity shot, but Liivandi snagged the rebound and kicked it back to Pegues, who dished it back out to Coyner to run the clock down.

Big shots and the execution of the little things, such as following shots and timely passes, proved to be UMass' formula for success of a defensively talented Holy Cross team.

"I knew they're always going to be a tough team to play," Coyner said. "They were scrappy. They get their shots. And they make you do things that you don't want to do."

Holy Cross exhibited the kind of defense that makes opposing offenses worry. The Crusaders launched a press early in the afternoon that they would use to take advantage of UMass' youth. And it worked. The Minutewomen surrendered the ball 19 times, which will prove to be fatal in a lot of games.

"The first half we didn't execute. The second half, I thought we did a better job executing," O'Brien said. "We got the shot clock down a couple times, and people made poor decisions. That's something to do with inexperience."

Coyner led all UMass scorers with 19 points and five boards over 44 minutes on the day. The senior co-captain's solid decision making ability and ball handling skills were vital to the team's success yesterday.

Butler posted her second double-double of the young season. The only game that Butler didn't score a double-double was the Charlotte match-up where she posted a triple-double. The Brooklyn native put up 12 points while snagging 12.

Turn to WOMEN'S HOOP, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Siiri Liivandi and the Minutewomen withstood a late Crusader rally and held off Holy Cross in overtime.

Two third period goals do Minutemen in SCSU loss

By Bryan Smith
Collegian Staff

The non-conference hardships continued Saturday night at the William D. Mullins Center for the Massachusetts hockey team.

UMass (3-8-2, 3-1 Hockey East) dropped its seventh game of the season against non-Hockey East opponents with a 3-1 loss to Western Collegiate Hockey Association (WCHA) foe No. 10 St. Cloud State.

The meeting was the first time that the two teams have faced each other.

A defensive miscue early in the third period spelled disaster for the Minutemen as Jon Cullen capitalized on the chance for what proved to be the game-winning goal.

"It's good to win on the road," SCSU Head Coach Craig Dahl said.

Cullen was the beneficiary of a great centering pass from behind the net from Keith Anderson and made no mistake with the puck as he chipped it over a defenseless Mike Johnson for the goal.

"We have a tendency, once we gave up that goal, [to make it] 2-1, [there was] plenty of time to get it back, we start changing a little bit about our approach to the game and try to force things," UMass Head Coach Don Cahoon said.

Johnson was strong between the pipes fro the Minutemen, especially in third period, as he kept his team in the game making crucial saves down the stretch to keep it a one-goal game.

St. Cloud	3
UMass	1

The most notable of his saves came when captain Brandon Sampair broke in alone on the Excelsior, MN native after Thomas Pock turned the puck over in the neutral zone. The captain skated in on Johnson, but the junior read his move and made the save.

"I remember watching Sampair when I was in high school," Johnson said. "He was in the state tournament, [Hill-Murray] had a four-overtime game against Duluth-East and they were the two best teams. He had probably six or seven breakaways. I thought of it when he came down on me."

Despite Johnson's heroic effort in the final frame UMass was unable to overcome the deficit as the Huskies would add an empty net goal late in

Turn to ST. CLOUD, page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Tim Turner (17) and R.J. Gates (16) were not enough to help the Minutemen as they dropped a pair of non-conference games.

Comeback not enough as UMass loses to Vermont

By Michael Kobylanski
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, VT – The contentious uprisings that led to the cancellation of the 1999-2000 season are now nothing more than a distant memory for the Vermont hockey team.

Things have returned to normal now in the Green Mountain State's biggest city. There are no more major television crews from across the nation stationed on the campus, no more talks of hazing and most importantly – no more eerie silences inside Gutterson Fieldhouse.

As evidenced by Tuesday's thrilling 5-3 win over UMass in front of 3,321 at "The Gut", it's business as usual once again for the Catamounts. Although the home team nearly squandered a 3-0 second period lead, sophomore J.F. Gamelin recorded the game-winning tally 9:38 into the final frame to propel UVM to the win. Ryan Miller's empty-net tally with 10 seconds remaining capped off the two-goal victory.

Vermont	5
UMass	3

"We came out strong in the third period, and that shows a lot of character right there," Gamelin said. "That [the team's conditioning] definitely shows in the third period. Every game that we've played, we've outplayed the other team in the third period."

Gamelin's goal was the product of a sharp cut to the net from the right-wing boards. He gathered a pass from Andreas Moborg, bolted to the net just as he entered the right faceoff circle, and then lifted a shot over Markus Helanen to give his team a lead it would not relinquish.

"I was just trying to get to the net because our guys crash the net," Gamelin said. "If my shot didn't go in, I expected someone else to get a rebound. I'm really happy because those goals don't come too often."

The third period flurry by the Catamounts overshadowed a furious comeback by the Minutemen. Trailing 3-0 early in the middle stanza, senior Kris Wallis put UMass on the board with a slap shot from just inside the UVM blue line at the six-minute mark.

Wallis also figured in the second goal for the visitors just under four

Turn to VERMONT, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily
COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 57 | www.dailycollegian.com | Tuesday November 28, 2000

Bruce Willis doesn't exactly shatter expectations in Unbreakable. Check out the review in our indestructible Arts.

ARTS p. 6

Sophomore Jen Butler has broken three school records in a season-plus for the Maroon and White. She hits the hardwood again in Sports.

SPORTS p. 10

Senate faces validity firing squad

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With a decision yet to be made by the Student Government Association's Judiciary, pending questions have formed on what is constitutional and what is not.

The Senate, it claimed unconstitutional by the Judiciary, would be thrown out along with all enactments, resolutions and by-laws.

If the Senate is thrown out by the Judiciary and claimed unconstitutional, one question remains: are the Justices themselves unconstitutional having been elected by an unconstitutional Senate themselves?

When appointed as Justices upon the recommendation of SGA President Jeff Howe and under the Constitution of the SGA, the Coordinating Council and the Senate must approve them. The Senate approved the Justices early in the semester, but it was just two days prior to the first Judiciary hearing and before the Coordinating Council had approved them.

"No one knew that they had to go through the Coordinating Council," Jeff Bazydlo, Chair of the Finance Committee, said. "We could have let them go through the trial without going through Coordinating Council and then declared them unconstitutional and had them thrown out, but we made them aware prior to the hearing."

He continued to explain that by the Senate voting on the Judiciary and approving them, their validity was put into question.

"I do think it's a conflict of interest. I don't think that they should be allowed to vote in this case," Bazydlo said.

However, Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez explained that the allegations of the Judiciary being unconstitutional if the Senate were thrown out were in fact incorrect.

"No it's not unconstitutional because it's Jeff's [Howe] job to appoint the Justices," Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez said. "If the Judiciary declares the Senate unconstitutional, all of this time that has passed would be considered a Special Period in which we were approved by the Coordinating Council."

House Speaker Jim Eltringham agreed with Tavarez.

"When the nominations came through the Senate we didn't find a place in the by-laws that said that they had to go through the Coordinating Council," Eltringham said.

"We later found out that they did have to be reviewed by the Council, so we approved them without any problems. They went through both steps," Eltringham explained. "They are not necessarily unconstitutional. They could remove the Senate without removing the acts that had taken place by the Senate prior this year."

Tavarez addressed the issue of whether or not quorum was made when the Coordinating council approved the Justices, thus leaving further questions.

"We made quorum when making the decision. I don't believe any Senators were present, but besides that, we still made quorum," Tavarez said. "I know the Constitution better then anyone, so if you have any questions come to me."

In relation to whether or not Tavarez had any affect on the vote of who was appointed to the Judiciary, he stated that he did not vote.

House Speaker Jim Eltringham also commented on the allegations and agreed with Tavarez. He explained that he did not feel the Judiciary to be in any conflict of interest.

"I don't think it's as big of an issue as people are making it," Eltringham said. "I know that Gabe [Tavarez] had a hand in picking the appointed Justices. I refuse to see the Justices be accused of being weak minded and the Senate members who approved them as being naive and fooled."

Eltringham furthered commented on the final outcome of the case itself.

"Whatever happens I am confident that it will be in the best interest of the students and justice will be served," Eltringham said.

Ultimate RSO fate hangs in balance of election validity

By Adam Martignetti
Collegian Staff

Registered Student Organizations are beginning to fear what will happen to their funding and their programming if the Student Judiciary rules the September Student Government Association elections unconstitutional.

With the fate of the Senate body looming in the balance, Jeff Howe, SGA President, concluded his argument for the petitioners' case on Nov. 17 by saying that not only should the Senate be ruled unconstitutional, but also that all motions passed by said body should be discarded.

Opponents of the Senate, including Student Trustee Seth Avakian, believe that this is not of great importance since it has not passed many motions thus far this semester. However, if the Senate was to be dissolved and their motions ruled unconstitutional, then the SGA would have to request the return of over $6000 allocated to various organizations during the course of the semester.

According to the Senate's Finance Committee Report, $6060 have been given out to seven different organizations: the Center for Student Businesses (CSB), Casa Dominica, Concepto Latino, UMass Japan Animation, Science-fiction Conventioneers, the Office of Asian, Latino, African, Native American (ALANA) Affairs and Music in a Bottle.

This money, in some cases already spent on RSO programming, would have to be returned to the SGA.

For example, Casa Dominica, which received $1,500 from the

Turn to RSO, page 3

ANDREW FISCHER/COLLEGIAN

"This event is the first time ever there has been a Latin concert on campus or in the area and without the SGA's money, that event isn't possible. This is our baby right now," said Manny Montilla, General Manager of Concepto Latino.

Trustees raise room and board

SAM WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

Seth Avakian.

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Students' billing woes just got worse.

The Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts has voted to increase room and board fees for next year.

The fee raise was approved at the Nov. 8 on campus meeting of the Trustees. Robert Connolly, a spokesman for the University, explained the hikes.

"The increases are basically predicated on the costs: projected inflation, basic things. This is just responding for to inflation predictions," Connolly said.

The Amherst, Dartmouth and Lowell campuses will be affected by the move, which passed unanimously. Costs at Amherst will rise 4.5 percent to $5,115 a year, Lowell's fees will increase to $5,093, a 2 percent hike. UMass Dartmouth will be hit the hardest, with a 6.8 percent raise bringing the total room and board costs to $5,646. Dartmouth, which already pays more for its room and board than other campuses, suffers from a serious housing crunch.

"We're tripling up in double rooms, and trying to build two new dorms," said Robert Richards, the Student Trustee for the Dartmouth campus. "We're crunched in here bad. Real bad."

"This represents a continuing effort to improve the dormitories. Most of this will make structural improvements in

Turn to FEES, page 2

Sifting through the wreckage

Election nullification will spell SGA collapse

By Adam Martignetti and Sam Wilkinson
Collegian Staff

News Analysis

What should have been great has been reduced to rubble, a rubble that has the potential to be quashed to mere dust should a group of seven students decide it to be so.

The Student Government Association's year started with such promise: two returning politicians in Jeff Howe, the SGA's President, and Seth Avakian, the SGA's Trustee, an experienced Senate Speaker in Jim Eltringham and a decent previous year to build on.

That building, that development, would have had to take place during the Senate's elections – no dice. Elections were marred by supposed voter guides and candidate collusion, an incorrect number of seats being elected from the Commuter Area and were then only approved by a 4-3 margin. With that election, the Senate's dominant force became 33 Greek senators, all elected to Commuter Seats with similar vote totals. Organized by former Howe and Avakian buddy Jeff Bazydlo, the Greeks approached Senate without the reverence for previous SGA precedent, as some would have liked.

They voted for a group and in their own interests and while there was nothing to prevent them from doing so, they raised the ire of Howe, Avakian and their supporters. And result? The current fiasco, mirroring Florida's electoral disaster, continues to drag on and on, threatening the well being of students who simply aren't aware that it is they that in danger.

But the problems start in the trial itself. Howe's appointment of the Chief Justice Gabriel Tavarez's Student Judiciary, the very group that is now being asked to make fair and objective decisions about the fairness of the election, clearly constitute a major conflict of interest. Nobody seems willing to say it, but for a body, the Student Judiciary, that can chunk one particular individual, Howe, for their jobs, the conflict is obvious. Will their appointment influence their decision?

At least one source from the case against Howe says they started out back in the race and only evened up because they presented a good case. Others suggested that they still weren't even, suggesting that the chances were 60-40 that they were going to lose the case.

While there's no denying that the current case is causing serious problems, perhaps a more serious problem is that one possible decision will prevent the slightest of cogent's conclusions

Turn to ANALYSIS page 2

Gore to US: keep counting

Al Gore.

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

Al Gore called for a single manual count of all Florida votes to determine who takes office as the country's 43rd President in an address to the nation last night.

Gore's speech followed George W. Bush's declaration of victory in the presidential election after Florida's Secretary of State Katherine Harris certified the state's vote totals in Bush's favor on Sunday.

"I have decided to contest this unfair and inaccurate result," Gore said. "This is America: when votes are cast, we count them."

Gore reasserted the need for a complete recount of all Florida counties to settle the fate of Florida's electors, and emphasized the value of individual votes in American democracy.

"Whatever the outcome, the people must have their say," Gore said. "Many thousands of votes cast on election day have not been counted – not once."

The Gore campaign also launched a series of legal initiatives yesterday, contesting election results in Miami-Dade, Palm Beach and Nassau counties.

"This is something that's too important to be decided in a partisan environment," Gore attorney David Boies said Monday on NBC. "This is something that ought to be decided by impartial judges."

The Gore campaign's legal actions were aimed at overtaking Bush's lead of 537 votes in the official Florida electoral total.

"There are easily more than enough [votes] to change the outcome and decide the election in our favor," Gore said in a conference call with the Democratic leadership in Congress.

Gore's election contest, filed in the Leon County Circuit Court, claimed that the "certified voting totals are wrong" and they include "illegal votes and do not include legal votes that were improperly rejected."

The Gore campaign challenged the results in Miami-Dade County after the county decided not to go ahead with a manual recount last week. The brief, filed by the Gore camp contesting the election, argued that the counties' so-called undervotes, which have not been registered for either candidate, should be counted.

"If these 9,000 uncounted ballots [in Miami-Dade] result in the same proportional increase in net votes as the ballots counted before the board stopped counting, these ballots would result in approximately 600 net votes for Gore/Lieberman," the Gore contest argued.

The Gore team also disputed the certified totals in Nassau and Palm Beach counties. The Gore brief claims that Nassau County included illegal votes in their total, which resulted in 50 additional votes for Bush. Additionally the Gore brief argued that Secretary Harris' decision not to include manually recounted vote totals from Palm Beach County cost Gore more than 800 votes.

Gore's address followed the certification of Florida's election on Sunday night by Secretary of State Katherine Harris, a Bush partisan. If the Gore campaign is not successful in its challenges to the official Florida election returns Bush will be awarded the state's 25 electoral votes and the presidency.

After being appointed to head the Republican "transition team" to ensure a smooth transition to the presidency, Dick Cheney was rebuffed yesterday by the General Services Administration, who announced

Turn to ELECTION, page 2

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

George W. Bush.

■ analysis

(continued from page 1)

Should the Justices side with Howe and kow the elections, the Senate can write all the entire year. First, there will be an excruciating appeals process, with which both sides have vowed to go through should the Judiciary not rule in their favor. If the Judiciary should rule in favor of Howe, then the SGA would be dissolved, and a new SGA would not be able to be formed until said appeals process was finished. Rumors have leaked out that the Senate might continue to meet, regardless of the ruling, but it seems unlikely they could be effective without any legal authority. And even if the Judiciary rules in favor of Donoghue, and the SGA is not dissolved, then it will still have the appeals process looming over its head.

Now, presuming the elections are tossed the questions are: when will a new Senate be formed and how soon can they become effective?

Even if the Judiciary reaches a decision by week's end, new Senate elections have to be announced at least two weeks prior to the election to be constitutional (after all, that's what this entire mess is about anyway). Since there would be only three weeks remaining in the semester, that pretty much rules out the Fall 2000 semester. The new elections would be put on hold over winter session break and all parties would have to reconvene in early February when school started.

Now, the aforementioned announcement would have to be made; that's two weeks. Two weeks of campaigning and we're already in March. Figure a week for the elections and the ratification process and, then maybe, five weeks into the semester, we might have a Senate. Of course, it would be a Senate without committees, without committee chairs, and honestly, without any sort of direction. If that weren't enough, guess who's up for re-election? None other than Mr. Seth Avakian. Both the Trustee and Presidential elections takes place in March. While Jeff Howe cannot run again for his office, the Student Trustee hinted last year at running for a third term, possibly with current Attorney General Jen Laubinger, who has been noticeably absent from the recent fracas.

How ironic would it be if the two people most responsible for the current political mish-mash, Howe and Avakian, were absent when it finally got resolved (and at this point, March does not seem like an unreasonable estimate)?

The reality that they wouldn't there is perhaps not as disconcerting as the realistic possibility that all RSOs on campus wouldn't have their budgets by the end of next semester? While the Student Government Association seems to, at times, over understand their own importance, the fact is that RSOs will have literally no money should the SGA budget not be completed.

While that might seem like a far off threat for some student clubs, at least some have already been threatened. Should the election be thrown out, any club having thus far received financial assistance from the SGA would be asked to return the money, this despite the fact that the money had already been spent on one event, HASA/CASA and one this Friday, Invierno Encendido. Clubs might be asked to return money that they clearly don't have, thus meaning that any future events they hoped to have would be ineligible for financial support should they have not paid back their debt to the Senate.

Tavarez claims that a decision can be rendered that would allow the Senate's financial decision to be counted, but such a decision, one that both declares the Senate unconstitutional yet claims some of its business has been legit is hypocritical by its very nature suggest some.

Avakian claims that the budget, because it is due next semester, would not be greatly impacted by any politicking going on this semester. Avakian seems to ignore that the budget before he became Chair of the Ways and Means Committee, that in 1995 the budget was tabled, and only passed after it was gone through line by line, an painstakingly long process (eight hours to be exact). Paul Ferro, a long time Ways and Means mainstay and a '99 grad, said that not only would it be difficult for the Senate to pass a budget entirely in the Spring semester, it would be near impossible. He added that it would be unfair for the RSOs which need the money for their programming. Oh, and need it he recalled that Mr. Avakian recommended a six percent budget cut for all RSOs as Chair of the W&M as a means to finance the Spring Concert? There was no Spring Concert that year.

Even a Chair of the Finance Committee, Jeff Bazydlo, is unsure of what's to become of the budgetary process. Indeed, he may not be chair for long. One interesting fact though is that if the Senate were dissolved, the Coordinating Council would be put in charge of allocating funds. The composition of that Council would be greatly changed. Without the would-be-tossed chairs of the committees on the Council, it would be a largely executively composed body. Coincidentally, an executive cabinet that still largely supports Howe. Other seats on the Coordinating Council would be filled by old Howe supporters including: if no one else, Rebecca Austern, Howe's current co-council in the trial. It isn't just collusion however, it's the genuine possibility that the Senate might not allocate money to any of the clubs on campus in any sort of expedient manner.

A campus without a budget is a dangerous thing. Such a reality, one in which the SGA could rescind on loans given to students or would simply not find the time to budget for them, would weigh heavily on the minds of those approaching the SGA for future support, nevermind the possible impact of a campus of RSOs without budgets. The result would be immediate chaos, long-term? Disenfranchisement.

Why? There would be no programming on campus. None. The reality for all RSOs is that without money from the SGA, they simply cannot accommodate the students that comprise their organizations, nor the events that they annually and routinely put on.

Do Howe and Avakian and the Student Judiciary realize the potential importance of what they have either asked for or will decide on? Surely the Student Judiciary must, as they have attempted to think out a way in which the Senate could be declared unconstitutional while still allowing for financial support of clubs.

But Howe and Avakian? They might care about such a situation, but they have grossly over estimated their own importance. They may claim that an SGA of Greeks isn't an SGA of the people, but the reality is that most students simply don't care about that. Most club presidents don't either, as they simply want, in the easiest way possible, their funding.

Both the President and the Trustee are creating, not the easiest way possible, but possibly the exact opposite, a difficult and unwieldy situation that individual students will be forced to persevere to prevent the suffering of the majority. The SGA used to be an important body because it was capable of being the backbone of student extra-curriculars should it lose the ability to be even that, there is no real reason for having an SGA. It won't be long before the UMass Administration comes to that realization, asking, with intent, why it's necessary to have a student senate that behaves more as if they were actors in a mini-drama rather than one capable of doing its job.

If it comes the UMass administrators asking that question without the SGA and its supposed leadership realizing what serious trouble they're in, they weren't ever going to realize. The rubble that now makes the SGA what it is will be reduced to a fine powder, sure to blow away in a strong W.E.B. Du Bois Library wind.

Kristen Shrewsbury, Jaret Barr and Lindsey Knox contributed to this article.

■ fees

(continued from page 1)

the dorms (housed at Connelly said Connelly went on to explain that an increase is overdue. Most fees have been frozen or decreased since fiscal year 1996.

"We haven't adjusted for inflation in a long time," Roberts said. The decrease or freeze of mandatory fees will continue however.

Seth Avakian, the Amherst Student Trustee, explained that the mandatory fees would remain stagnate while the increase would occur only in room and board.

"Free with the Governor, and he said he would remain continue his commitment to no increases for mandatory fees," Avakian said. "The Board sets the schedule ahead for those fees."

Room and Board are Non Mandatory Fees which are scheduled to occur before Mandatory Fee increases Volkmit explained.

The vote passed unanimously.

"I don't like raising any fees, but in this case we really need it," Roberts commented.

Renee Gately, Residence Director for Donahue House at UMass Towell, gave her thoughts about Towell's relatively small increase.

"Maintenance wise we're pretty much caught up. Anything we do now is more beautification," Gately said.

None of the campuses Housing Directors could be reached for comment.

■ election

continued from page 1

they will not aid the Bush campaign's transition to the White House.

"Until the results are clear, and as long as both sides are going to court, the results are not clear yet," said GSA spokeswoman Beth Newberger.

Secretary Cheney announced that the Bush campaign would create a nonprofit organization to organize the campaign's changeover to presidential administration.

"We will proceed drawing on other sources," Cheney told reporters in Washington. "We believe it is absolutely essential for us to get on with the business of a transition. Indeed, it would be irresponsible for us not to move as rapidly as possible to carry out these responsibilities."

President Clinton announced that he would sign an executive order creating a "transition coordinating council" to assist both Bush and Gore in personnel matters relating the next presidential administration.

In other legal action, the Florida Supreme Court gave lawyers for Bush and Gore until 5 p.m. Tuesday to file briefs regarding the legality of the butterfly ballot in Palm Beach County. Many voters in Palm Beach claim the ballot confused them causing them to vote for Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan when they intended to vote for Gore. Voters previously filed a brief requesting a revote, which was rejected in Florida Circuit Court.

Water watchdogs fight for high quality H20

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Community Water Watch will present a lecture today on the quality of water in the New England area at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 163C.

The forum, which is entitled "What's Happening to the Water? How development affects water quality in Western Massachusetts," is being held by a sub-group of the campus organization MassPIRG. The event will feature speakers Chris Duerring, a Teamleader for the Deerfield River Watershed, Aaron Ellison from the organization Save the Mountain, Paul Lyons from the Chicopee River Watershed and John O'Leary from the Connecticut River Watershed.

According to Cheryl Henlin, a representative of MassPIRG, the group is holding the event in order to promote awareness about the problems surrounding the water condition in this area. She explained that the speakers at the event have had personal experience with the problems surrounding water and will offer information to interested parties.

"The speakers are trying to address the issue of how development is affecting their watersheds," Henlin said.

She explained that in addition to discussing the present state of the area rivers, the "filthy five" or the major polluters in the area would also be addressed.

The speakers will offer possible solutions on how to prevent additional pollution to the rivers and will also offer suggestions on how to motivate the community to become more involved in the cause.

The Water Watch is an organization that seeks to enforce the 1972 Clean Water Act, with the goal of making all waterways both "swimmable and fishable." The goal of the organization is to: "give communities the tools to identify at-risk waterways while also providing them with the resources and opportunities to measurably impact water quality and clean up local waterways."

The group strives through a series of methods to reduce water pollution in the area. The organization researches the major discharges in the area to determine the impact on waterways, and also identify solid waste dumps in the area and explore their impact upon the waterways.

Other proactive things that the group accomplishes are streamwalking, or surveying rivers and streams and documenting possible sources of pollution. The group is also responsible for community clean ups of rivers and waterways, that include removing debris from the bodies of water and for community education. Other initiatives include creating water watch groups and storm drain stenciling.

The event is free and open to the public.

The UMass Index Yearbook
UMASS
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
BEGINNING NOV 27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilimitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Hobson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulze Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Marrigoni Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylarski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargenta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
On-campus contact: Josh @ 413-549-4514
STS Student Travel Services
1-800-648-4849
www.ststravel.com

www.dailycollegian.com

Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
586-3000 Northampton
774-6010 Greenfield
• Information • Options • Counseling • Support
All services free & confidential
79 Federal St. Greenfield
3 Round House Plaza, Northampton
Free pregnancy tests

Write for News!

JAMAICA Spring Break
From $449
As seen in Rolling Stone
ONE LOVE. ONE HEART. ONE GREAT PARTY.
It's that time of year when thousands of students come to Jamaica and feel all right—for an unbelievable price.
YOUR SPRING BREAK PACKAGE INCLUDES
• Round-trip airfare
• 7 nights hotel accommodations
• Round-trip airport & hotel transfers
• Free welcome, beach & evening parties
• Free admission to night clubs
• Discounts on restaurants, water sports & side excursions
• Packages available to Negril and Montego Bay
• Professional on-site tour reps
• Complete weekly activities program offering optional sunset cruise, booze cruise, toga party & more
• Free bonus party pack
• Optional meal plan including 7 breakfasts and 7 dinners
Sun Splash Tours 1-800-426-7710 Student Travel Services 1-800-648-4849
Price is per person based on quad occupancy from select departure cities. Other cities may qualify for reduction or require surcharge. U.S. and Jamaica departure taxes (currently $68) and $12 handling charge additional. Rates increase $30 on 12/15/00. Peak week surcharges/off week discounts may apply. Restrictions and cancellation penalties apply. Limited availability. Subject to change without notice. Call for full details on hotel selection and availability.

WORLD NEWS

Europe held hostage by mad cows

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

While the world's attention is transfixed on the universal election woes, a deeper, darker epidemic is taking hold of the European continent. What could be worse than low voter turnout or election fraud? Mad cow disease. It's back, and it's worse than ever.

The illness, which is clinically termed Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy, was discovered by a veterinarian in 1985 and was then studied in greater detail. The veterinarian was confused by the illness and the odd symptom that it produced in the cows that he was studying. He sent his information over to the Central Veterinaritory Laboratory in Weybridge, Surrey, for further study. The disease originally resembled an illness that commonly effected sheep that was called scrapie.

In 1996, after a great deal of research and deaths, it was determined that the illness could infect humans. The human-related illness was called Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (CJD). It killed at least 80 people in Britain and infected five more on top of that. In France it is believed to have been responsible for one death.

In humans the disease progresses quickly and always ends in the death of those infected. It begins with a bout of depression and progressively cripples the human brain. Occasionally accompanying it is schizophrenia-like psychosis, unsteadiness and involuntary movements shortly before death. Those infected can also become both mute and immobile.

The World Health Organization (WHO) continually wrestles with the questions "How did the cows become infected with this disease?" and "How do they pass this illness on to humans?"

One theory about the illness is that it is caused by prions, or self-replicating proteins that contaminate neighboring protein cells that are similar to viruses in the way that they spread. WHO is also considering the possibility that cows are ingesting scrapies, the illness that causes the disease in sheep, through contaminated feed. Since the feed is manufactured from abattoir offcuts, the cows ingest the scrapies and then subsequently become infected.

"We do not know with certainty how the disease entered the cattle herd nor why it has been so predominantly a disease affecting this country," Britain's Agriculture Secretary Nick Brown said. "Given the special circumstances of these patients, we will now establish a new national fund for the care of victims of variant CJD."

Another theory that exists is that mad cow disease is transmitted through human blood. The government feels that they can prevent the spread of this illness by using preventative measures. To try to prevent the spread of the illness among humans the British government has required the removal of white blood cells in donated human blood.

There have been a large number of cases of infected cows in Britain with a total of about 168,000 to date. There have also been a few cases of infections in France, the Republic of Ireland, the Netherlands, Portugal and Switzerland.

Cases of mad cow disease have been reported in Denmark, the Falkland Islands, Germany, Italy and Oman. There have even been instances of the disease in Canada.

The disease is found to be concentrated in cow brains, the spinal cord and organs such as the spleen. The alarming aspect of the illness is that the incubation period for it may be up to 30-40 years so cows and humans may be infected with the illness and not yet show symptoms.

Information from CNN was used in this article.

Mad cow stampedes across Europe.

An anti-climactic election in Canada

The Canadian flag.

By Catherine Turner
Collegian Staff

There seems to be a trend all over the world lately: election woes. Even the United States' neighbor to the north has caught the election bug, as Prime Minister Jean Chretien called a surprise vote in Canada on Monday.

As if taking a cue from the US, the Canadian general election has become one of the most bitterly fought over election decades. Throughout the campaign, both sides have been accused of mudslinging and personal attacks.

Chretien called the election five weeks ago in response to pressure brewing throughout the country from his rival, Stockwell Day, the leader of the Canadian Alliance Party. His hopes were to use his popularity and the booming economy to further enforce his party's strength in the government.

Day, who heads up the newly formed party, has been making waves with their right-wing platform and fundamentalist beliefs. He has been criticized for his views on creationism, the death penalty, and abortion. He spent most of his campaign combating assumptions that his party was just a bunch of right-wing zealots.

Chretien, the leader of the Liberal Party that has been in power since 1993, called the election only three and one half years into his term.

Though his party is most likely to retain the majority in Parliament, it would be a horrible embarrassment for the Prime Minister if for some reason the Alliance Party and Day were to take the vote.

Day has had many obstacles in his campaign. He has taken heat for his alleged proposal to dismantle the universal health system. He has also been criticized for making racist remarks.

Chretien has had his own hurdles to jump. He faced controversy over some sort of personal favor he tried to grant for a friend interested in building a hotel with government bank loan. Some Canadians have compared this to Bill Clinton's Whitewater scandal.

While the campaigns have both been beleaguered by contempt and doubt throughout the nation, there have been predictions of low voter turnouts. The polls were open for 12 hours and election officials have been worried that there will be less than 50 percent of the 20 million registered voters venturing out to check a ballot.

On the eve of the elections, some Canadian Broadcast Corporation (CBC) commentators were worried that the Alliance Party may in fact be encroaching on a majority within parliament. If this were to be the outcome, it is likely that Chretien would step down as Prime Minister as a result to the embarrassment and the backlash of the coup.

Tensions continue to rise for both men, however, as opinion polls have continuously been friendly to the Liberal Party and Chretien, rather than Day, who must appeal to urban mainstream voters in order to win a majority.

Along with the two highlighted parties battling over the Prime Minister seat, there are also three other parties banking on seats in parliament. The Liberal Party and The Alliance Party have both tried to make concessions to the New Democratic Party, The Progressive Conservative Party and the Bloc Quebecois for support in the House of Commons.

The House of Commons has 301 seats, and a party needs 151 seats for a majority. In the 1997 election, the Liberal Party won 155 crucial seats to remain in power.

At 9:30 pm Eastern Time on Monday night, the race depended on the votes in Ontario and Quebec. The results would not be totaled until 10:00 PM. There is a law in Canada that prohibits the publication of election results until the polls have closed across the country. They also have uniform ballots, which reduce controversy around 'chads.'

Possible resolution in Peru

By Jesse Greenspan
Collegian Staff

A 15-member cabinet was recently appointed in Peru by interim President Valentin Paniagua, in an attempt to bring order to the country's democratic system after the resignation of former Peruvian President, Alberto Fujimori.

Fujimori's resignation came earlier in the month after a series of scandals, most of which involved his former spy chief, Vladimiro Montesinos. Now that Fujimori has left office, he is free to live in his native Japan, as long as he supplies proof that his parents were both of Japanese decent.

Montesinos, on the other hand, is now the victim of a nation-wide manhunt, especially after it was recently discovered that the former spy chief has up to $50 million in Swiss banks. Among other things, Montesinos has been accused of laundering money from the narcotics trade and directing state-sponsored death squads. A recent search of his beach house on the Pacific coast of Peru also turned up jail cells in his basement that were probably used for torture.

At press time, the Peruvian police force had still failed to locate Montesinos, and did not appear to have any clues as to his whereabouts.

The former President and spy chief were not the only members of the old cabinet to leave office, as Vice-President Ricardo Marquez also resigned shortly after Fujimori's departure.

When Panigua took over as interim president on Nov. 22 after winning a political battle with his rival, Francisco Tudela, he forced 12 army generals to leave the service even though all 12 were scheduled for retirement on Dec. 31 of this year. However, all the ousted generals, including the former head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Walter Chacon, and the former Air Force commander, Gen. Carlos Balarezo, were associated in some way with Montesinos.

After taking over as President, Paniagua promised to stop the current level of corruption in the army, police and judiciary. He also rearranged the entire cabinet by appointing 15 new members, despite the fact that special elections will be held April 8 in order to elect a new president for July's inauguration.

Paniagua administered the oaths to the cabinet in the Government Palace's Gold Hall.

New appointees include Defense Minister, Gen. Walter Ledesma, Interior Minister, Antonio Ketin Vidal, Cabinet Chief and Foreign Minister Javier Perez de Cuellar and Economy Minister, Javier Silva Ruete.

The appointment of Ledesma was especially important in bringing Peru out of the Fujimori era. Ledesma was once forced from the military by the former president, and one of his first actions was to reinstate Gen. Carlos Tafur to the head of the army, after Fujimori had also forced Tafur into early retirement from the military during his 10-year reign.

Cuellar was also a meaningful appointment, as he challenged Fujimori for the presidency in 1995 and lost heavily.

■ RSO

continued from page 1

Senate for its Nov. 18 festival co-sponsored by the Haitian American Student Association, would theoretically have to return that money even though it has already been spent.

Shahira Payano, Chairperson of Casa Dominicana, said that nobody has been made aware of the consequences for RSO funding if the Senate body is dissolved.

"It's really falling back on a promise," Payano explained. "Campus Activities says we need to get so much funding and we got it. Now we're not sure it's going to be there."

Payano said that this decision, if the Judiciary passes it, would negatively impact Casa Dominicana and all RSOs because it would cause financial chaos on campus.

"Even something like our concert that is coming up is in jeopardy," Payano said. "I don't think they understand that. The fact that it was ever brought up during the Judiciary hearings shows they weren't thinking of this."

That concert is a Dec. 8 event, which Casa Dominica is co-sponsoring with AHORA, Buricuas Unidas and Concepto Latino. Twenty-five hundred dollars were awarded to Concepto Latino for the event.

"It doesn't feel like it should be taken away because there was a body in place," Manny Montilla, General Manager of Concepto Latino, said. "This event is the first time ever there has been a Latin concert on campus or in the area and without the SGA's money, that event isn't possible. This is our baby right now."

Payano echoed this sentiment. She explained, "That's money that we need for programming for the rest of the semester."

"Hopefully, it won't happen or there will be some serious resentment going on," said Montilla. "We're going to lose faith in the SGA and it's going to be harder to count on them for support."

The $2500 awarded to Conepto Latino is being put toward an honorarium to pay the artists who will perform.

Max Imo, Business Manager of Concepto Latino expressed concern that the failure of this concert could only cause future financial problems.

"All our programming [for the rest of the semester] depends on making money from this concert," said Imo. "If the money is taken away from us, there will be no concert."

Jeff Bazydlo, Chair of the Finance Committee, expressed concern that if the Senate were dismissed all petitions made to his committee would have to go on hold.

"If the decision is passed, no RSO here has enough money to give back," said Bazydlo. "I don't think I can go to groups and demand money back. "The Coordinating Council could take money from different places," Badydlo said, "but it gets really sticky." He added that even money supposed to be allocated at last night's committee meeting was still in the balance.

Bazydlo was unsure of whether the Judiciary could be selective in choosing which SGA motions were legal and which were not. Bazydlo explained that the Judiciary might be able to rule the Senate's financial adjustments legal, while still dismissing the rest of their semester's actions.

Citing Title 4,Chapter 2 of the SGA Constitution, Chief Justice Gabriel Tavares said that this is exactly what the Judiciary would do if it ruled in favor of dismissing the Senate.

"We've already allotted money to them and it wouldn't be practical to take it back," said Tavares.

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?
Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!
To find out more, attend the Smith College School for Social Work
INFORMATION DAY
Including small group discussions with faculty and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.
Saturday, December 2, 2000
2:00 p.m. 5:00 p.m.
Sceyle Hall, Room 106, Smith College
For more information call (413) 585-7960
E-mail: swadmit@smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw
SMITH COLLEGE School for Social Work

WORLD Nooooooooooz!

Welcome to The Site Of The New Millennium where MONEY and EXCITEMENT keep GROWING!
Solveandwin.com
Brighten Your Holiday Play Come Unravel Our Web!

The UMass Oxford Summer Seminar offers talented students an exceptional opportunity to study British literature, history, politics and law in a six-week residential program at Trinity College, Oxford. Interested students are invited to attend an information meeting and discussion about the 2001 Seminar.
Date: Wednsday, November 29
Time: 4:30 pm
Place Campus Center 803
Alums from last summer's Seminar will describe their experiences and program administrators will describe next summer's Seminar. For brochure or answers to questions, contact the Seminar via e-mail at:
oxford@english.umass.edu

WHAT YOU TALKIN' 'BOUT WORLD NEWS?

UNPLANNED PREGNANCY?
Call Someone Who Can Help.
LOCAL CALL: 584-0441
A FULL CIRCLE ADOPTION
• If you have an unplanned pregnancy, we're here to listen and help.
• Free neutral options counseling 24 hours a day
• You can choose to parent or to select from loving adoptive families.
• Allowable living expenses
• Ten Years Adoption Experience
39 Main Street Northampton, MA 01060 adoption@fullcircleadoptions.com

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Student Judiciary
a decision for the ages

The Student Government Association's Judiciary is in a dangerous position, one that threatens to undermine our entire campus based on the decision of this group of students.

Should they make all of the decisions that Jeff Howe, the President of the Student Body, wants them to make, they both offer themselves up for campus wide sacrifice. Why? Because they were appointed by Howe, the judiciary will seriously undermine itself should it decide to side with the SGA President, one of the two lawyers in the ongoing trial about the legality and Constitutionality of the previous elections. While the Senate accepts them, sources have told the Collegian that no Judicial Presidential Appointment is ever opposed by the Senate.

That said, a body appointed by Howe making a decision that clearly benefits Howe, who has taken a very public stance in being one of the case's trial lawyers, comes immediately into question.

But while the decision is questionable, the impact is seriously worse.

Not would there be an immediate appeal from Howe's opposition that would surely drag on, the newly held election would take at least six weeks, an amount of time that drags the formation of the Senate well into next year! The idea that the Student Government Association would be partially unformed for almost two-thirds of a year is atrocious and damaging, acceptable only to Howe.

That, however, isn't the only possible problem; with the Senate declared to be an unconstitutional body, all of its business would be thrown out, including the approval of money for at least two major events on campus. The Senate would have to ask two clubs on campus, CASA and Concepto Latino, for $4,000 back for one event that has already been held and for another event that will be held this Friday.

An election that would lead into next year, student groups being financially hurt and the ability of the Senate to act on behalf of all students on campus is in jeopardy because some people within the Senate cannot understand how they wouldn't control all of the power.

Unbelievable.

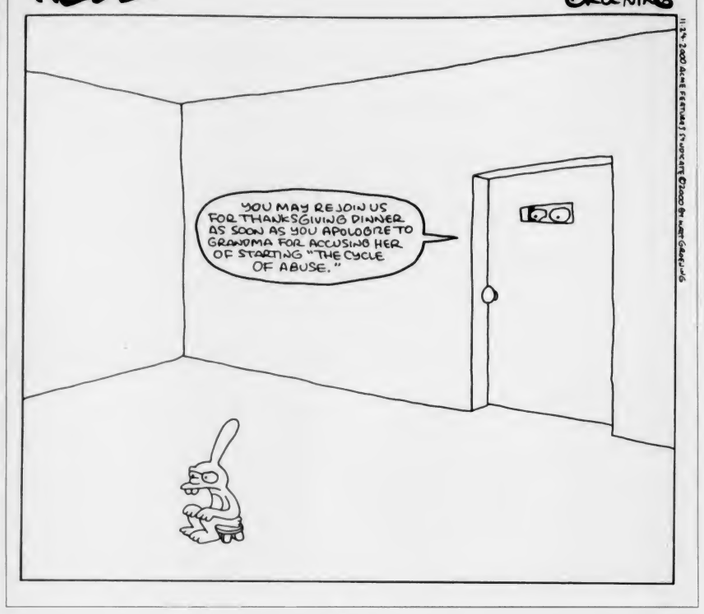
It's as if our current SGA Administrators, already acting as little children who can't handle the fact that they lost their entire Senatorial power base, now feel the need to copy Florida's disastrous national election.

We at the Collegian truly hope that the judiciary consider the fact that, not only that the decision they make will appear to be a massive conflict of interest, but that they will be hurting all students by placating the needs of a few.

Jeff Howe and Student Trustee Seth Avakian lost control of their Senate, but that doesn't make it acceptable for them to harm all students on this campus to make themselves feel better.

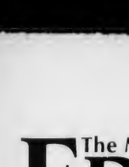
The both of them have been elected to act in the best interest of students. They have forgotten this and now act solely in the best interest of themselves. Both are selfish and willing to harm students to get their own way.

The Daily Collegian truly hopes that the judiciary doesn't let them have their way. It only justifies their unnecessarily petty and sniping behavior.



LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
YOU MAY REJOIN US FOR THANKSGIVING DINNER AS SOON AS YOU APOLOGIZE TO GRANDMA FOR ACCUSING HER OF STARTING "THE CYCLE OF ABUSE."

Brian's guide to "manly manness"



BRIAN LOHNES

This one's for the boys. There are certain things in this world intended for guys. I am not saying this is right or wrong, but it is definitely true. I know this might make me sound like a big, dumb, sexist jerk, but my intent is pure on this one. In fact, this could serve as a good shopping list for any one who knows a guy's guy like myself.

Boxing -Women seem to have the nasty habit of talking out problems logically and calmly. Men on the other hand beat the crap out of one another. Boxing is shamelessly marketed towards men, with no apologies from anyone. The formula is quite simple: two huge guys with two huge fists pound each other for intervals of two minutes at a time. My personal favorite thing about boxing is the fact that it actually has rules. It is the definition of controlled chaos. A perfect boxing-related guy gift would be a copy of any of the twenty or so Rocky movies produced.

The World's Strongest Man competition - Total guy mayhem here. This is quite possibly the most pointless, idiotic, bad-ass, cool thing on the planet. Picture a crew of huge men lifting cars, dragging fire engines, and doing other pointless, painful, and body-damaging things. One of the legendary competitors in this competition was a man named Gerrit Badenhorst. I've never seen him, but he sounds like the kind of guy who never got picked last for a game of tackle football. My favorite event in this competition of madness would be the "chuck the huge rock over your head competition." These massive hunks of humanity take stones weighing several hundred pounds and toss them, over their heads, between 10 and 20 feet over a wall. A guy related gift for this would be a set of mislabeled weights so the man in your life thinks he is twice as strong as he actually is.

The Charcoal or Gas Grill - This is "manness" at it's most basic. A grill is used to cook meat of some kind, shape or form. Be it deer, pigeon, cow, bison, seal, whatever. The grill is a place where a man has control of his greatest enemy, fire. We can tame it and use it to our advantage, and in some cases use it to set the very food we were cooking a-blaze. We can smother sauces, spices and other such concoctions on our beef while it is cooking away. A perfect guy related gift for this would be either a grill or a really big steak, the rarer the better.

WD-40 - The most manly chemical ever. Why, you ask? Guys love to fix things, except most times anything we try to fix becomes more broken. The exception to this rule is WD-40. A little spray here, a little spray there, and voila! All the nasty squeaks are gone from the doors of the house, a stuck lock magically works and best of all the guy had to do next to nothing to experience the total euphoria of fixing something and having it actually work. A great guy related gift would be a six-gallon vat of WD-40.

John Wayne - Easily walks away with the manliest actor ever award. The man is a pile of testosterone with legs. Every movie he did, he played the hero and played it, well, let's just say he's not Anthony Hopkins. I didn't say he had to be a good actor, just manly. Here is an actual quote from, "The Duke" about manliness, " I want to play a real man in all my films and I define manhood simply: men should be tough, fair and courageous, never petty, never looking for a fight, but never backing down from one either." Well said. A perfect guy related gift would be a cowboy hat and six-shooter for the "John Wayne" in your life.

Beer- I don't think I even have to justify this one, but I will anyway. Guys love beer; it has to be embedded in the DNA somehow. Sure, beer has its downside, the hangover, the stupid things you do when consuming way too much of it and then there's always the chance of making an ass out of yourself in front of a woman while under its influence, but the stuff is still great. Even Abe Lincoln sung its praises, "If people are injured from the use of liquor, the injury arises not from the use of a bad thing, but from the abuse of a good thing." Honest Abe really said that! Beer also acts as a separation mechanism for guys also, if you are a Bud guy, you are not gonna like the Silver Bullet. A great guy gift for this would be a keg.

Gruesome Stories (comparing injuries) - Guys simply love to show other guys their scars and describe the gross and harrowing tales of how they got them. Guys seem to win bonus points if they got the scar while using power equipment of any kind. "Well Earl, I lost this finger when I stuck it in the snow blower while it was runnin'." "Well, jeez, Ennis I lost this here foot when I jammed it into the wheel of my tractor while it was movin' to see how bad it would hurt." Scars, which originated while doing something completely illegal, such as sign stealing, are definite bonus point winners. A perfect guy gift for this one would be a set of sharp knives and a six-pack.

Lumberjacking - The manliest job in existence. Ok, you live in the middle of the woods. You cut stuff down. You wear flannel, and all, you are surrounded by oh, I already said that. If there is a more manly way to make a living someone please tell me because I can't think of one. You use gasoline-powered chainsaws to take down trees that have been growing for hundreds of years! Destructive...hell yeah, but guess what, that is the typical nature of guys. You don't think a woman invented war, do you? A perfect guy gift here would be a set of work boots, a flannel shirt, a chainsaw and a sequoia tree.

Well, a manlier list may exist in another part of the world but for now this one will have to do for the residents of the happy valley. I have omitted a few of the categories I was thinking of, but god willing you may see them in a future installment of this on going investigation of mine. Guys, today is your day. Eat some beef, cut down a tree and beat the hell out of your roommate.

Brian Lohnes is a Collegian Columnist.

CHRIS ANNA DANA

Chris, Anna, Dana... if you write for Ed/Op, someday you could be as cool as them. Maybe.

Learning from mistakes

LAURA SICILIANO

As the never-ending story of the election drags on, I am going to add my feelings to the mess. We are witnessing history. Books will be written about this. Great changes in the way that we vote may occur as a result of the 2000 election. Chances are, a cliffhanger election such as this will never occur again. As frustrating as the whole situation is, many interesting things can be learned from it.

The networks calling the election may have greatly affected the outcome. When people heard that Al Gore took Florida, voters in western Florida on the Panhandle may have stayed home rather than going out to vote. They may have thought that their vote would not matter or that their vote would not make a difference. In such a close election, every vote matters. If even 100 voters stayed home because they heard that Al Gore had taken Florida, then the networks should feel terrible. Something needs to change. Perhaps the networks need to rethink their reporting philosophy. It is much more important to get the news right than to get it first.

It is unbelievable that in the wealthiest, most technologically advanced country in the world, paper ballots are still being used. If elections were computerized, there would be no need for handcounts or incredibly long recounts. A computer printout could just tabulate the results. Instead of campaign reform, maybe the topic needs to be election reform. That enormous surplus could be put to great use in buying new voting machines.

In our short attention spans that result from our pop culture memories, we may quickly forget important news stories. Heck, barely anyone discusses the fact that our president was impeached a few years ago. History, however, does not forget as quickly or so easily. History is a harsh critic, and if Al Gore contests the election as strongly as his campaign says he is going to, he may be remembered for posterity as a sore loser. Rumor is that Al Gore has threatened to contest the election if the hand count votes don't support him, even if the hand count votes are counted.

The election has to be certified at some point; recounting cannot occur until Gore is happy with the results. Al Gore probably does not think he could deal with losing. This is the second time he has run for the big office, and he has spent the last 8 years of his life waiting on the sideline to get into the big game. If Bush loses, he has the governorship and his life in Texas to go back to. If Gore loses, he has to pack up and move out of town and start a new life. Hopefully, both men will realize that the outcome of the election is not just about them and their lives. It is about the strength and stability of our nation. The decision should be made by voters and not by courts.

I think that CNN and the other networks need to stop having "Breaking News" written across the bottom of their screens. The news is no longer even new. It is certainly not breaking. We all know that the election is tied. If the job of a news network is to report the news, there is not much that can be reported right now. There is a whole lot of editorializing and speculating happening on these networks. The CNN news desk is not the proper forum for people analyzing what the Florida Supreme Court justices might be thinking about. There is no need for ABC to cut into their afternoon soap operas with special reports to say that the election still is not decided. The only news that these networks should report on is when actual news occurs-the decision of the Supreme Court will be news, but breaking in on a TV show so that George Stephanopoulos can speculate on what the possible outcome of the Supreme Court decision might be is not news. There should be no more breaking news until we know who the new president is.

Neither man is going to have a mandate to govern with and so it is of the utmost importance that the newly elected President does not turn people against him before he gets in to office. If either man pushes it too much and tries to hard to maneuver his way in to office, the public will never forget it-and history certainly won't. Bush and Gore both need to seem very relaxed and not desperate for the office. The American people will never respect a President who they believe manipulated his way into office.

Perhaps we will have a President-elect before the end of the week. If not, let us hope for one before the end of the semester. The most important thing that should be learned from this experience will hopefully be the strength of our constitution. If our country can be strong enough to unite behind a new president on January 20th, than I think the power of democracy will be proved the world around. The integrity of our nation depends on the integrity of the election process and the smooth transition to a new government. Hopefully this transition will just have been a little delayed, but will still be without controversy as it always is.

Laura Siciliano is a Collegian Columnist.

Queer As Folk takes to the American screen

By Jenn Heinold
Daily Collegian (Pennsylvania State U.)

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. - You will never guess where one of newest and most controversial dramatic series on network television takes place. It's not set in NY. LA isn't seeing any action. When the creators of Showtime's Queer As Folk chose a location for the series which debuts on Dec. 3, they picked a city just three hours west of State College. A place that Executive Producer Tony Jonas said was a "microcosm of the way that America seems to work." Jonas said the series is set in Pittsburgh because of the history of the city and the predominantly working class citizenry but he said the series' production takes place in Toronto, Canada, to curb production costs.

Based on Britain's series of the same name, Queer As Folk focuses on the relationships, careers, loves and ambitions in the lives of a group of gay men and lesbians. "It's really a drama as well as a comedy," said Jonas, who attributes the successful mix of genres to the series' writers - Ron Cowen and Daniel Lipman, creators and writers for the series Sisters.

"[The show] will feel different in nature because you'll find yourself laughing while at the same time, it knocks the wind out of you," Jonas said.

Peter Paige, who plays Emmett, "the gayest and most outrageous" of the lead characters agreed. "You've never seen anything like it," he said.

"It's very edgy. Very outthere, but that's what's so exciting," Paige said. "It's a little dirty – but in a good way."

"Some people call it the sexiest show on television," Jonas conceded, adding that the show deals with gay and lesbian sexuality as it has never been dealt with before on network and cable. Jonas said that due to the adult themes, few actors were willing to take parts in the series. Paige said his manager advised him not to do the show, but because of a gut instinct he had after reading the script, he decided to join the cast.

"I feel that the only power we have as actors is to go with our guts," Paige said. "I couldn't pass up this opportunity for some myth in the future." Paige said he does fear being typecast after taking this role as a gay man but added, "I've played plenty of straight roles before and I plan to play them again."

Jonas said some of the controversy that surrounds the series, which he says is a testament to cable and what it can do, lies in the fact that gay sexuality has never been dealt with before in network television. With the exception of Sharon Gless formerly of Cagney and Lacey and Hal Sparks, formerly of E!'s Talk Soup, the ensemble cast includes mostly newcomers. Paige, Gale Harold, Randy Harrison, Scott Lowell, Thea Gill and Michelle Clunie. Last week, the cast completed shooting their tenth episode of Queer, which has a 22-episode contract. Paige said there have been amazing experiences on the set throughout shooting.

COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Aiden Gillen stars as Stuart in "Queer As Folk."

"Anytime the seven leads are in one room, there is this great electricity," Paige said. "I feel so fortunate, so blessed, so f-ing privileged."

New meaning of coming out

By Lauren R. Dorgan
Harvard Crimson (Harvard U.)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. – George A. Chauncey, social historian of gay life and author of Gay New York, argued Thursday night in a speech that the meaning of the term "closet" to the gay community evolved rapidly in the late 60s.

Chauncey, a professor of history at the University of Chicago, gave a talk titled "The History of the Closet" to about 60 people in the Kirkland House Junior Common Room at Harvard University. He said a generational conflict within the gay community in the late 1960s resulted in a shift from a private "coming out" to a group of gay friends to a more public "coming out" to gay and straight society.

"[Prior to the late 1960s] gays embraced the cultural distinction between public and private spheres, and deliberately cultivated ambiguity," Chauncey said. "The post-Stonewall generation, this seems akin to the militiary. Don't ask, don't tell policy," Chauncey said. "But the older generation didn't see it this way. Repression strengthened the bonds making gays like a secret fraternal order."

Chauncey's talk centered on the intergenerational conflict within the gay community that arose following the Stonewall Riots, which occurred in June 1969 after police raided the Stonewall Inn, a New York City gay nightclub. Young gay activists of 1969 made an assumption that older gay men who had not publicly come out were ashamed. Chauncey said. But the older generation had a different perspective, Chauncey said. "The older generation did not see coming out as necessary," he said.

Chauncey said the main reason that gays did not publicly announce their sexuality prior to the late 1960s was because of fear of harassment or brutality. Of the 140 gay men Chauncey interviewed for his new book, he said half had been arrested for "gay-related charges" during that era and all knew someone who had. "The degree of policing and hostility was unimaginable," he said. In response to that hostility, Chauncey said gay men formed their own social world, which he called a "gay alternative public sphere," where they were openly homosexual. Chauncey said men made their homosexuality known only within this "alternative public sphere."

"Coming out meant to yourself and to the gay world," he said.

However, this tendency to keep knowledge of one's sexuality within the gay community changed during the civil rights era, Chauncey said. "The gay liberation movement was part of a generational shift," Chauncey said. "Many [of younger activists] had little contact with the other gay world. These activists thought that the closet was isolated and saw coming out as a new cultural imperative."

After the speech, Chauncey expanded upon his thesis in light of audience members' questions and criticism.

Vigil for victims of hate crimes

By Anne DelMonte
The Diamondback (U. Maryland)

(U-WIRE) COLLEGE PARK, Md. - Pledging to never allow the victims of hate crimes to be silenced, University of Maryland students sat with flickering candles Tuesday night to remember those victims and discuss the problem of hate-biased crimes on the campus and in the community.

The vigil, held at Nyumburu Amphitheatre, kicked off "Building Bridges: Looking Back and Moving Forward," a week-long program organized by several campus groups to address the problem of hate crimes.

Martin Taylor, resident life association president, joined Dolores Bernal, a member of the campus Pride Alliance, as the two recounted a chronology of hate crimes that have occurred across the United States this year. They spoke for more than 20 minutes about crimes committed on the basis of sexual identity, sexual orientation, race and ethnicity. "Tonight, I am here to remember people who were harassed in high school and people who have been killed by acts of hate," Bernal said.

Britton Allen, president of the Pride Alliance shared his personal experience with hate crimes when his boyfriend was beaten by three men as he left a coffee house in Durham, NC. "Today it's very rare to meet a gay, lesbian, bisexual or transgender individual that hasn't experienced a hate crime or intimidation of some kind," Allen said. Rather than express anger at the assailants, Allen was upset by a society that would let others act out their hate in such a violent way. To that society, Allen pledged, "You will never silence me and you will never silence us. The more you try, the louder we will be."

Millie Yan, a senior American studies and women's studies major, spoke out against society's treatment of crimes against women as "the misfortune of one woman and not a crime against women as a group."

Yan, a representative from Women's Circle, questioned why many people consider rape, assault and domestic violence as private matters rather than hate crimes.

Laura Dyer of University Police urged victims of hate crimes to not be silenced, but to report hate crimes to police. Dyer stressed the importance of accurate hate crime statistics on the campus. With accurate records, the human relations office can target which groups are most often the victims of hate-biased crimes and organize programs that work to reduce the number of crimes committed against that group, Dyer said.

"Even incidents that do not violate the law are just as devastating to individuals and members of the community," Dyer said.

After a moment of silence remembering the lives affected by hate crimes, those in attendance were invited to share their experiences as victims of hate crimes. Sophomore Kimberly Queen, an Easton Hall resident assistant, noted the campus seems to be diverse but has noticed segregation in the dining and residence halls. She also said she felt "violated and scared in a learning environment" by the hate mail the Black Student Union received last semester.

Tuesday night's event was organized by the Pride Alliance, the BSU, the Latino Student Union, Women's Circle, the Asian-American Student Union and the Resident Hall Association. The schedule for the Building Bridges program can be accessed through www.umd.edu by clicking on "Building Bridges."

Black and Gay?
Multiple Identities

By Jeanie Gorlovsky
Collegian Staff

Lisa Bowleg, an assistant psychology professor at the University of Rhode Island, gave a lecture on Nov. 16 about the way people identify as members of various minority communities.

Her talk was called "Multiplicities: Exploring Multiple Minority Identities and Experiences in the Lives of Black/African American Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transgender People." It was part of the Stonewall Center's weekly LGBT Studies Lecture Series.

Bowleg said that the goal of her research was "to explore how multiple marginalization, as a result of race, sexual orientation, gender, and class shapes the experiences of Black/African gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered people." She explained that the systems of oppression that are tied to minority identities, such as being black or being a lesbian, are the problem in society; the identities themselves are not the problem, as some people claim. Bowleg explained that many minority people feel a great deal of stress from society because of their minority identities. She quoted psychologists Moritsugu and Sue, who found in their research that multiple minority stress is caused by "stressful stimuli such as prejudice, discrimination, and attendant hostility from the social environment."

Bowleg conducted two pilot studies in her research on multiple oppressions. The first study involved 95 black lesbians in a retreat in Southern California. Nineteen of the women conducted longer, in-depth interviews with her regarding their lives. Bowleg presented the questions that she asked the women to the lecture audience. She asked them what they liked most, and what they liked least, about being black lesbian women. She also asked them about challenges in their lives and whether they have support for all of their "selves."

For example, Bowleg explained, some of the women were supported as black women by the black community but did not have any source of support for the other part of their identity, their sexual orientation. Bowleg explained that she was happy with this study because she found a wide age range of women, from 26 to 68 years old, at the retreat in California, and this helped make her study more accurate.

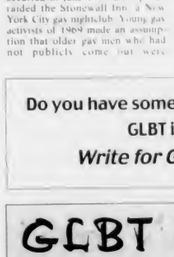
Bowleg's second pilot study focused on 29 black GLBT people in Washington, DC. There were 12 men, 12 women, and four transgendered people in the study who ranged in age from 20 to 52 years old. To recruit the study participants, Bowleg placed ads in community newspapers and also put flyers up in neighborhoods in the city. She asked the study participants about which communities they belonged to. One of her important questions for the participants, Bowleg said, regarded whether and how "factors such as racism, sexism, etc., influence the stress you experience in your life."

Bowleg explained that several important themes are emerging in her studies. One theme is the complexity and multiplicity of identity. She explained that some people said they were "black first" (before being GLBT), while others said their identities were inseparable. Other themes that came up in Bowleg's research are stressors (such as racism and sexism), social support (from family, community, friends), and stories of resilience and survival.

Bowleg spent a part of her lecture discussing the fact that much of her research is done qualitatively, not quantitatively. That means that she is not as focused in her research on hard, numerical data as many psychologists. Instead, she utilizes an approach called "grounded theory analysis," which means that she develops her theories from data, not from hypotheses. The fact that she asks her survey participants open-ended questions makes it more difficult for her to make conclusions from her data. She has to go through a long process of transcribing the data and then putting it into a sophisticated computer program that helps her analyze the data.

Do you have something to say about GLBT issues?
Write for GLBT Affairs!

GLBT Events



COURTESY WORLD WIDE WEB

Judy Shepard, mother of the late Matthew Shepard, will lecture on hate crime legislation at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center on Monday, December 4.

Tuesday, November 28
The Pride Alliance meets at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 911-15.

Thursday, November 30
The weekly Stonewall GLBT Lecture will be "Queer Latin @ Lexicons: Re-Imagining Language and Identity" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center 903.

Monday, December 4
Come see Judy Shepard speak at the Fine Arts Center at 8 p.m. as part of the Distinguished Visitors program.

Tuesday, December 5
The Pride Alliance meets at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Thursday, December 7
The weekly Stonewall GLBT Lecture will be "Give Me What You Are: The Politics of Race and Desire in Interracial Male Homosexual Relationships" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center 903.

Speed dating proves to be a major hit

By Kelly Davis
Daily Californian (U. California-Berkeley)

(U-WIRE) BERKELEY, Calif. – On the third Monday of every month, 30 men file into a small room at the Pacific Center for Human Growth in Berkeley. Half of them sit in chairs or couches with their backs to the wall, the other half sit facing them. In the next hour and a half, they will each get to go on 14 dates.

Speed Dating has made its way into the Bay Area's gay community. At last month's dating program, participants had five minutes with the person in front of them. They talk, look for a spark, and then they move on. At the end of the evening, they submit the names of the dates they'd like to see again to the organizers, who will notify them if they have a match.

Speed Dating started as a way to encourage Jewish heterosexual singles to marry other Jews. But this year, it's been gaining popularity among gay men in California.

"I've never seen anything take off like this," said Larry Wolfson, who has been a facilitator at the Pacific Center for 20 years. "We've only done it twice, and we had to turn people away tonight." Wolfson, who led the event as part of the Monday night men's group at the center, learned about Speed Dating from Shanti, an AIDS support and prevention group in Los Angeles. Shanti started a gay men's Speed Dating event in May that now draws about 150 men a month.

"Men like coming because there's no pressure, and they're tired of the bar scene," said George Wong, who started the program in Los Angeles. He said Speed Dating makes meeting people easy. There are no wallflowers, and there's no need to worry about rejection. Participants do not even have to figure out how to disengage from a boring conversation, and organizers supply sample topics to keep the conversation flowing. "It has all the aspects of a game," said Ken, 43, who attended the October group in Berkeley. "Even winning something."

The game may be fun for the participants, but it was designed for a specific purpose. It was invented by Rabbi Yaacov Deyo of the international Jewish group Aish HaTorah, according to a spokesperson. The group's mission is to preserve Jewish culture and ethnicity, and Speed Dating's function was to promote Jewish marriage. Wong adapted the idea to encourage men to have monogamous relationships, which he said are the most realistic way to reduce the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. When men attend the event, he said, "they know these guys are relationship-oriented."

Ken expressed doubts as to whether five minutes was long enough to reveal more than a shallow attraction. But he enjoyed the social contact, which he said is hard to find. "Doesn't it say something about our society, that we hunger for that conversation?" he asked.

Wolfson said every community needs a new way of meeting people. He said his main goal was not to land people in relationships, but to offer a fun, safe place for men to talk. "It isn't possible any other place I know of to meet 15 people at once," he said. "And here, it's not hindered by alcohol. You get to see what people are really like."

Although "Speed Dating" is a registered service mark of Aish HaTorah and there is a patent pending on the game itself, the group was satisfied when Shanti changed the name to Xpress Dating.

Meanwhile, the Pacific Center's waiting list is growing.

Unbreakable falls apart with comic book style taking place of substance

UNBREAKABLE
Directed by M. Night Shyamalan
Starring Bruce Willis, Samuel L. Jackson
Playing at AMC Mountain Farms, Hadley

By David Troupes
Collegian Staff

Sixth Sense was an outstanding movie because of the perfect marriage of style and content. the way in which the story's evolution matched pace with the tone of mounting creepiness. Producing a worthy follow-up could not have been an easy feat for writer/director/producer M. Night Shyamalan, and Unbreakable unfortunately is not up to the challenge; while the tone of the film gets the same detailed treatment as Sixth Sense, the story proves a meandering and disappointing indulgence of Shyamalan's love for comic books.

Unbreakable opens with a series of non-interesting facts about the comic book trade – average number of books owned by a collector, average illustrations per page – which does nothing to draw the audience into the film and instantly disconnected from the movie for much of the first. We meet David Dunn (Bruce Willis) on his train ride home from a job search. his marriage is in trouble and he's looking for a way to leave. As we know from the trailer, the train crashes and everyone on board dies except for him. who escapes without a scratch.

Soon after, David is contacted by Elijah Price (Samuel L. Jackson), a comic book enthusiast who suffers from a medical condition that leaves his bones dangerously brittle. Elijah opens David's eyes his apparent indestructibility – he can only recall one instance of illness in his life. and only one moment of true physical injury.

Bruce Willis takes his deer-in-headlights style to new levels of non-acting; it's difficult to call it a good performance when nothing he was never asked to emote anything beyond confusion and disbelief. Samuel L. Jackson is excellent, if you look beyond the contrived nature of his character. Robin Wright does a good job as David's wife, having the only credible, authentic-feeling role in the movie. (In many ways the subplot of their attempt to resurrect their marriage held much more promise and interest than the foolishness of the central story.)

COURTESY FRANK MASI, SMPSP
Bruce Willis, displaying about as much emotion as he does in the entirety of the movie.

Much as Sixth Sense spent its time moving towards a clever revelation, Unbreakable uncovers portions of the movie's reality over time, all the while caking everything with the same moodiness and tension that made Sixth Sense so memorable. Here, however, this style feels more forced and inappropriately thick, as the trappings of complexity without any real substance.

The movie returns to its love of comic books on several occasions, subjecting the audience to explications of the sizing of villains' heads in vintage comics and the cultural significance of comics as our society's form of the timeless practice of myth-making. Comic enthusiasts will no doubt find it all fascinating and vindicating, but the run of audiences cannot be expected to care.

Also returning from Sixth Sense is the twist ending, except that this time it is, in a word, lame. The movie's extreme understatement (to put it nicely) of plot and mood would require a massive payoff to make the former effective, and it simply isn't there.

One dog short of a full deck

102 Dalmations
Directed by Kevin Lima with Glenn Close, Gerard Depardieu and Eric Idle Playing at Cinemark Theatre in Hadley

By Jake D. Lewis
Collegian Staff

If you need any further evidence towards the depressing detail that Hollywood is running out of fresh film ideas, than look no further than the just-released 102 Dalmations.

The Glenn Close vehicle is the lame brain concoction of some executives at Disney who thought it would be cute to further the story of Cruella DeVille and her fetish for fur (spotted, that is). It comes out instead as black and white and dull all over.

A film aimed for the 8-10 year-old age bracket, the movie totally misses its target audience. due to a script that is as bogged down with as much unimaginativeness as it is with Dalmatian spots. In no way does this film hold even a semblance of the magical charm that the original cartoon version did for millions of children, or even a spark of Disney-for-a-new-generation that the 1996 live-action rendition produced on a small scale.

For the directorship of 102 Dalmations, Disney recruited veteran animated-feature director Kevin Lima, fresh off his success of 1998's Tarzan (which also featured Glenn Close). Lima attempts to keep the story light and bouncy, beginning with DeVille's release from a mental institution where she's been locked up since her incarceration for the crime of "dognapping." It's not long before she's back to her old tricks (surprise, surprise), this time hoping to kidnap not 101 Dalmatians — but 102 Dalmatians! But how does one arrive at this number?

COURTESY CLIVE COOTE
Glenn Close as Cruella De Ville.

Is the extra puppy really necessary?

Through an algebraic equation unknown to many scholars, DeVille desires the aforementioned amount so she can fashion from their fur a coat and hood made from Dalmatian pelts. She forms a partnership with Kevin (Ioan Gruffod), the affable owner of a doggy rescue business. When the puppies begin disappearing from the streets of London, DeVille has cleverly managed to frame Kevin for the crime. Kevin, meanwhile, has begun a romance with Britain's Elizabeth Shue lookalike, Cloe (Alice Evans), owner of Dalmatianis herself! Oh, the irony! The pieces finally start to fall into place, only taking an hour of cockney dribble drabble to get there.

Truth be told, I couldn't honestly tell you the rest of what happens because I dozed off for a quick nap right around this point. What I can say is that it's a shame the script is such a chunk of garbage, because the actors are certainly a talented bunch. Then there are the humans who perform in it, too.

Despite the fact that Glenn Close is one of Hollywood's most gifted actresses, does any pre-adolescent know who she is apart from her DeVille days? For that matter, do many college students know her separately from her semi-sensuous state of undress in Fatal Attraction?

And while her co-star Gerard Depardieu has breached the family-film genre before with the mind-numbing Bogus, his inclusion in 102 Dalmations is completely unnecessary. He plays DeVille's stumbling oaf of a sidekick, a French clothing designer, who gives the film the few laugh it contains, calling the small dogs "poopies." But that joke and the others littered about the screenplay begin to wear thin immediately.

The chief disgrace of 102 Dalmations is the black mark it casts on Eric Idle's fantastic film career. He struggles heroically to salvage the celluloid waste that this movie is, performing the voice of a parrot named Waddlesworth with a split personality crisis; having lived among dogs his entire life, he believes he is one. No one seems to find strange the fact that this bird carries on elaborate exchanges with his human counterparts, but the slightest hint of canine conversation comes as a big bolt from the blue.

Disney sequels, by now, are common. With the exception of Toy Story 2, it is safe to assume that they are never better than their original, but at least Disney had the erudition to send these second-helpings directly to video.

As the theatrical trend of uninspiring sequels continues – a preview of The Santa Clause 2 preceded this movie – and audiences cough up the cash to see these rotten creations, it seems as if Disney is going to the dogs. Long gone are the days that this film company brought magic, music and movies together. With no animated movie-musicals planned until at least 2005, and with kids getting smarter and wiser about the movies they watch, all that is important now to the company is taking the money and running, no matter how much of the barrel's bottom they must scrape.

102 Dalmations is purely an idea only someone like Cruella DeVille could devise; take something people love and turn into a hideous fashion statement that will make the money keep rolling in.

The Newman Center invites you to Participate in our annual Giving Tree

From December 3rd through December 15th, our 2000 Giving Tree will be adorned with ornaments, each baring a young person's first name, age and clothing size given to the Newman Center by local churches and social agencies.

Undergraduate and graduate students, fraternities, sororities, sports teams, offices, departments and families are welcome to take an ornament and give a gift of clothing to needy young person.

The Giving Tree is located in the Chapel of the Newman Center
472 North Pleasant St., Amherst

Please drop off gifts no later than Sunday, December 17, 2000

Call or stop by with any questions (413) 549-0300

Where can you study Physical Therapy and work with world-class clinicians?
MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
Graduate Programs, certificates, and classes in:
Physical Therapy • Nursing
Clinical Investigation
Communication Sciences & Disorders
Learn more at our next Information Sessions
6:00 pm, Fri., Dec. 15
Call 617-726-3140
or visit our website at www.mghihp.edu
101 Merrimac Street • Boston, MA 02114-4719
A member of the Partners HealthCare system

UMASS Muslim Students Association
Proudly Presents:
Events for the month of
RAMADHAN
27th or 28th Nov. - 26th, 27th or 28th Dec. (Depending on the moon sightings)
Informal daily (potluck) Iftars.
Meet at Blue Wall at 4:10pm!
Weekly Community Iftars
Sun. Dec. 3rd Room101 Campus Center 4pm (Iftar at 4:18)
Sun. Dec. 10th Room165 Campus Center 4pm (Iftar at 4:17)
Sun. Dec. 17th Room163 Campus Center 4pm (Iftar at 4:19)
Sun. Dec. 24th Room163 Campus Center 4pm (Iftar at 4:22)
Daily Tarawih Prayers
7pm - 9pm Location TBA
Plus see Campus Center's schedule of events
Syed Talha
Contact : Navid - 546-0730 navidc79@hotmail.com -or- muslim@stuf.umass.edu
www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~muslim (321-Student Union)

Tom Hanks and Jim Carrey battle for ultimate lead of holiday season films

By Mark T.R. Donohue
University of New York

(U-WIRE) - While the holiday season usually sees a release schedule crowded with heavyweight Oscar contenders and a few guaranteed hits, this year's crop has no apparent blockbusters. There's certainly a diverse field for theatergoers to choose from, but no movies just screaming "see me!"

Crowd-drawing actors like Tom Hanks and Jim Carrey are releasing new movies - but each appear in nearly unrecognizable form. In Cast Away, a modern day Robinson Crusoe story, Hanks grows scraggly long hair and a ZZ Top beard while playing a Federal Express executive lost on a proverbial desert island. Carrey wears a Muppet costume to play Dr. Seuss's beloved green, fuzzy Scrooge in Ron Howard's live action update of The Grinch Who Stole Christmas. It will be interesting to see whether movie fans will be willing to buy tickets to see Hanks filthy and reacting only to rocks or Carrey green and talking to a dog with antlers stapled to his head.

COURTESY DREAMWORKS PICTURES
Tom Hanks in Cast Away

On a completely different note, The Coen brothers (of Fargo and Big Lebowksi fame) return with a movie so bizarre in conception even hardcore fans might be confused. O Brother, Where Art Thou is not only a musical, not only a Great Depression period film, but also an adaptation of the Greek epic The Odyssey. Despite the presence of George Clooney, John Goodman, and Holly Hunter, many moviegoers may be too traumatized by memories of high school struggles with Homer that they'll skip this one.

M. Night Shyamalan, director of The Sixth Sense, is reunited with Bruce Willis for Unbreakable, featuring the welcome addition of Samuel L. Jackson. The movie's cryptic previews seem to reveal little other than that Willis's character is somehow impervious to injury. But if this film is anything like Shyamalan's first movie, the less you know, the better.

On the other end of the scale is Dracula 2000, with a story we all know well. This remake's success will depend on the pull of Wes Craven, who has attached his name to despite the fact the film is actually directed by Patrick Lussier, editor of the Scream movies.

Elsewhere, Sling Blade director Billy Bob Thornton tries his hand at a Western with Matt Damon in All The Pretty Horses, based on Cormac McCarthy's novel about two Texas cowboys in 1950's Mexico.

Aiming even more directly at the "chick flick" market is the plainly titled What Women Want, with Mel Gibson starring as a man granted the power to read females' minds by a freak accident. While Gibson's co-star here is recent Oscar winner Helen Hunt, another Australian hunk teams up with Meg Ryan in Proof Of Life. Gladiator Russell Crowe plays a professional negotiator sent into South America to bargain for the life of Ryan's husband, held hostage by guerrillas.

On the less intellectual side of things, there's the generically titled Vertical Limit, with mountain climbing Chris O'Donnell and Bill Paxton, who are no doubt in mortal danger.

Dungeons and Dragons, a long overdue adaptation of the popular nerd pastime, cleverly has Thora Birch as a young queen, Jeremy Irons as a creepy villain, and Marlon Wayans as comic relief. Perhaps more exciting than all of the new no-brain movies will be the re-release of the Beatles' classic A Hard Day's Night.

So with all of these and dozens more, what's an entertainment-seeker to do this holiday season?

If you're like me, you'll forget those nine-dollar movie tickets and stay home and play the new Evil Dead PlayStation game.

Of course, the choice is yours.

Bosstones hit Boston

The Mighty Mighty Bosstones will invade Boston for their annual Hometown Throwdown. They play live shows at The Axis from December 6-10. For ticket information go to www.ticketmaster.com.

The Umass Daily Collegian is

OUT OF THIS WORLD

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.com

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981 Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, eml Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas:
Administrative Support
Data Entry Operator
Entry Level Management
Front Office Support
Customer Service Representative
CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com
Corporate Staffing Solutions
126 Northampton Street, Suite G
Easthampton, MA 01027
(413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

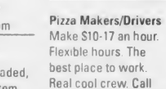
Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL



WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise?
You Found the Place!
It is Easy!
Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because

you can use jock font too!!!

HSCN
Housing Services Cable Network

TUESDAY EVENING C - Campus NOVEMBER 28, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	12	Clifford-Red	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Michael Junior (In Stereo)		Irish Tenors: Live From Belfast (In Stereo)			Newport Jazz (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	61	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	JAG "A Separate Peace" (N)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)	Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	JAG "A Separate Peace" (N)		60 Minutes II (In Stereo)	Judging Amy (N) (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	56	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WLVI	56		Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Buffy the Vampire Slayer		Angel "The Trial" (In Stereo)		News	Friends	Sudden Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTXX		20	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Jim Calhoun	College Basketball: Brown at Connecticut (Live)				Arrest & Trial	News	Arrest & Trial	College Basketball
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Extra	Hollywood	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	61	Simpsons	Fraser	Seinfeld	Friends	70s Show	Titus (N)	Dark Angel "Cold Comfort"		News	Friends	Fraser
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Michael	3rd Rock-Sun	Fraser (N)	DAG (N)	Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	57	World News	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		My Romance: An Evening With Jim Brickman		Three Tenors Christmas (In Stereo)				Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	55	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Fraser	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Dharma-Greg	Geena Davis	Once and Again (In Stereo)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Fraser	"The Players Club" (1998, Comedy-Drama) Lisa Vidal				Fraser	Mad Abt. You	Spin City
WTBS	48		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	NBA Basketball: Raptors at Dallas Mavericks. (Live)					NBA Basketball:	Pacers at Lakers
A&E	49		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order		Biography "George Carlin"		American Justice: Dangerous		Investigative Reports		Law & Order "Second Opinion"
CNN	50	24	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour		Crossfire	World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand		Sports
COM	51	58	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	"Major League" (1989, Comedy) Tom Berenger				Premium	Whose Line?	Daily Show
DISC	52		Wild Discovery: Moose		Wild Discovery		On the Inside: Car Chases		New Detectives		FBI Files "The Predator"		Justice Files
ESPN	53		Sportscenter		College Basketball: ACC/Big Ten Challenge				College Basketball: ACC/Big Ten Challenge - Duke vs. Illinois			Sportscenter
LIFE	54		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"All She Ever Wanted" (1996, Drama) Melody Cross			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	55		Direct Effect	Lyricist	Journey of Dr. Dre (In Stereo)		Scared Straight! (In Stereo)		Sports & Music: The Ultimate Survival (In Stereo)			Real World	Real World
NICK	56		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Pelswick (N)	Brady Bunch	Gilligan's Isle	Rev. Wilkinsons	Facts of Life	Facts of Life	3's Company
SCIFI	57		Sliders "Lipschitz Live"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Space: Above and Beyond		"Firelight Zone: Rod Serling's Lost Classics" (1994) Jack Palance			Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	58	26	How'd They Do That?		Overweight: Battle		Trauma: Life in the ER (N)		Under the Knife: Spare Parts		Under the Knife: Future Cuts		Trauma: Life in the ER
TNT	59		ER "Hazed and Confused"		Pretender "PTB" (In Stereo)		"Outrageous Fortune" (1987, Comedy) Bette Midler				Bull "It's Not Personal"		ER "Family Matters"
USA	60		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Into the Breach"		"Casper's Haunted Christmas" (2000, Fantasy) (In Stereo)				Nash Bridges "Goodbye Kiss"		Martin
HBO	61		"Three Fugitives" (1989, Comedy) Nick Nolte, PG-13				"Chill Factor" (1999, Action) Cuba Gooding Jr., W				Best of Autopsy (In Stereo)	Curb-Entitlem	"Three to Many"
MAX	62		(5:00)		"Off Limits" (1988, Drama) William Defoe (In Stereo)				"The Eyes of Tammy Faye" (2000) PG-13		"The Mothman" (1999, Science Fiction) Kerry Fenner,
SHOW	63		"My Blue Heaven" (1990, Comedy) Steve Martin, PG-13				"South Park: Bigger, Longer & Uncut" (1999)				Queer as Folk	Beggars and Choosers	Beggars and Choosers

Dilbert By Scott Adams

THE JURY VERDICT
WE FIND THE DEFENDANT GUILTY
...OF THIS CRIME AND MAYBE A FEW OTHERS THAT DIDN'T COME UP.
LASTLY, DO YOU HAVE ANY BROCHURES FOR THE WITNESS PROTECTION PROGRAM?

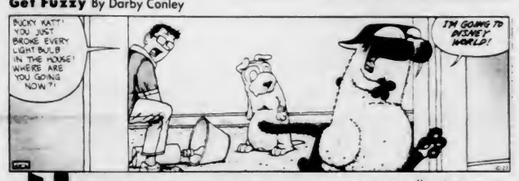
Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

FoxTrot By Bill Amend

LIKE MY OUTFIT?
I DO
IT'S NICE TO SEE YOU GETTING INTO THE THANKSGIVING SPIRIT, JASON.
AT LEAST I ASSUME THIS HAS TO DO WITH THANKSGIVING

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley



Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

SO, CLARA, YOUR PARENTS ARE GOING TO A MARRIAGE COUNSELOR?
THEY'RE SEEING THAT NEW AGE THERAPIST, DR. BOB, DOWN THE BLOCK...
NOW NATE, NORENE... SAY WHAT'S BOTHERING YOU, THEN REPEAT IT BACK TO EACH OTHER. REMEMBER, LISTEN WILL EVERYONE PLEASE STOP LISTENING AT THE SAME TIME?!

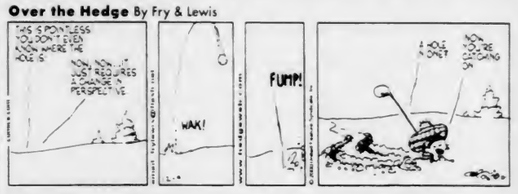
Spunk By Mike LaRiccia

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis



THIS IS POINTLESS. YOU DON'T EVEN KNOW WHERE THE HOLE IS.
THE HOLE DOESN'T REQUIRES A SPECIFIC PERSPECTIVE.
WAK!
FUMP!
A HOLE IN ONE? YOU'RE KIDDING!

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBH
MY FAMILY DIDN'T KNOW WHAT TO DO WE ALREADY HAD TONS OF THANKSGIVING LEFTOVERS AND NOW WE HAD DAVE
www.monkey-box.net

Horoscopes

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – You may be entering a phase characterized by swiftly alternating insecurity and overconfidence. As always, they are closely related.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – A long haul is nearing an end and you may be emotionally raw by this time. Take care you don't let yourself be offended too easily.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Events today will demand a little more sympathy and compassion – and a willingness to let bygones be bygones. Now is no time to hold a grudge.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – What looks like the end of the road in some respects may prove, before the day is out, to be a new beginning you never would have anticipated.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) – You have been busy lately with a variety of tasks and interests. Find time today to give some attention to a special friend who feels neglected.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – You may be overlooking the obvious these days—but right now you'd better plug in and get the lay of the land before it's too late.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – You've been holding a great deal inside lately. It's important that you find a few new outlets and begin releasing pressure slowly.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Your temper may be your own worst enemy today. Take care you don't let yourself be dictated by your own tendency toward overreaction.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Now is not the time to stay with something that doesn't suit you—be it a job, a game, a relationship, or a way of life. Begin making changes.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – One wrong move today and you may find yourself out in the cold. Making thing right may take some humility—but it'll surely be worth it.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care you don't react too quickly to unexpected situations that may arise at any time. You may come off as being unreasonably temperamental.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – There is almost nothing you won't be willing to tackle today. Remember this as you face an imposing hurdle that lies before you.

Amherst Weather

Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday
HIGH: 49 LOW: 34	HIGH: 46 LOW: 30	HIGH: 47 LOW: 22

Quote of the Day

"It may not always be that way. You can't take nothing for granted. You've got to live life today."

–Matt's band Digimon

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

LUNCH

Shephard's Pie

Fish Munchies (B, F, H)

Falafel Burger (vegan) (B, F, W)

Tofu Pot Pie (vegan) (B, W)

DINNER

Spicy BBQ Chicken

Prime Rib

West Coast Broccoli Bake (vegetarian)

Spicy BBQ Tofu (vegan)

Catherine says eat your vegetables!

YOUR AD could be here!
28,000 Readership
Call 545-3500 for details.

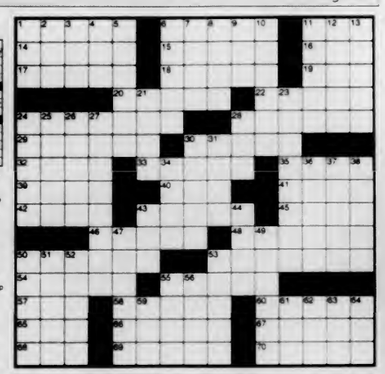
ACROSS
1 Revise or penne
6 Daydreams
11 Small amount
14 "Farewell!"
15 Seaweeds
16 Mimic
17 Ten-speed bike
18 Squeeze
19 IRS employee
20 Inedible orange
22 Corsi island
24 Pasta flavoring
28 Entertains
29 Encroachment
30 Like a judge?
32 It's often quoted
33 Tomato jelly
36 Extinct birds
39 Actress McClurg
40 Rooster's mate
41 Poker Pounds
42 Lays the table
43 Tresses
45 April shower
46 Fencing weapons
48 Coupled
50 Ballpark events
53 Tingling
54 Solitary
55 Rock band Pink —
57 Dash
58 Arouses enthusiasm
60 Silly
61 Adam's spouse
66 Zones
67 African river
68 Escorted
69 Use the tub
70 Forest clearing

DOWN
1 Slamdance
2 Lord Byron's daughter
3 "Bike, Rover!"
4 Casual top
5 Dawn
6 Of a Yucatan civilization
7 Cassini of fashion
8 Genes
9 Forty winks
10 "Open —"
11 Mexican foods
12 Cider source
13 Agreements
21 Ice-cream —
23 Curmy-powder ingredient
24 Locations
25 Battery part
26 Preach or peer
27 In the cards
28 TV network
30 Eyeglasses
31 Porky's sound
34 Sandal or pump
36 Missouri's — Dam
37 Disney's Little Mermaid
38 Gritty
43 Bandleader Brown
44 Agile
47 "Instant" house
49 Helping out
50 Eyes color
51 Martini extra
52 Motorbike
53 Sheriff's group
55 Worry
56 Jacob's first wife
59 Songwriter Gershwin
61 None
62 Yuletide title
63 Actor Beatty
64 Ballons, in poems

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

D	R	A	K	E	S	G	R	I	P	D	A	F	T
R	A	R	E	R	I	B	S	V	O	T	E
I	M	A	G	E	C	O	M	E	R	E
E	B	B	C	O	V	E	R	C	H	A	R	G	E
R	O	S	E	S	T	E	E	D
S	C	O	O	P	S	A	G	E
K	I	D	S	F	A	U	N	S	O	R	E	O
T	E	W	I	N	S	E	M	E	A	R
S	H	A	D	U	F	A	N	A
S	P	E	E	D	S	G	L	A	N	C	E	D
P	A	R	T	S	E	N	S	E
A	T	O	M	S	T	A	K	E	N
F	I	N	E	C	H	I	N	A
E	O	S		A	S	H		S	A	T	E

12-1-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam White
Photo Technician	Maureen Maske
Copy Editor	Melissa Hammer
Production Supervisor	Mike Kulak, Adi Husenovic
Production Staff	Jess Grant

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Tuesday, November 28, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

Big Green wall stands in way

UMass to play Ivy opponent

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

Just three regular season games have elapsed from its 2000-01 schedule and well, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has seen pretty much everything.

Already.

Sure it does seem almost outrageous to believe that a team as young as this year's Minutewoman squad has been through virtually every situation that can possibly take place within the boundaries of a basketball court.

But for the most part, it actually has. Just count 'em. There are four (pretty much the only situations that the Minutewomen have yet to experience are ones that are indeed unfavorable)

1. Blowout. In its exhibition game versus the University of Latvia, UMass cruised to victory, winning by a score of 84-49.

2. Solid home victory. In its first game of the regular season, the Maroon and White fought off a strong UNC-Charlotte attack to win 74-68, holding Tonya Phifer, one of the nation's most dangerous guards, to a mere 10 points.

3. Staying afloat with one of the best. The Minutewomen traveled to No. 5 ranked Georgia and found themselves within four points of the Lady Bulldogs with just under three minutes remaining in the ballgame. They were, perhaps, a couple rebounds away from disappointing the hostile Georgia faithful with an upset. (The Minutewomen haven't won on the road yet, but that's because they have only one attempt to their credit. And this Georgia loss almost doesn't count. But as of now, a road win is pretty much the only thing missing on the Maroon and White resume.)

4. Survival. On Sunday, UMass was taken to overtime by Holy Cross, but in the end, found a way to pull out the victory, 62-57 – minus the foul-out for Jen Butler, who watched from the pine during that extra period.

There's nothing harmful about the situations that these women have been put through so early in the season – quite obviously, it can only make them better. They can't go anywhere and shy away from the fact that they're a young basketball team. That said, Head Coach Joanie O'Brien isn't going to use it for an excuse.

"Once you get on the basketball court – you're a basketball player," O'Brien said. "There are too many freshmen that play right from the beginning and they just play basketball. The lack of experience might be one thing. But they're all basketball players and they should be able to handle themselves in those kind of situations."

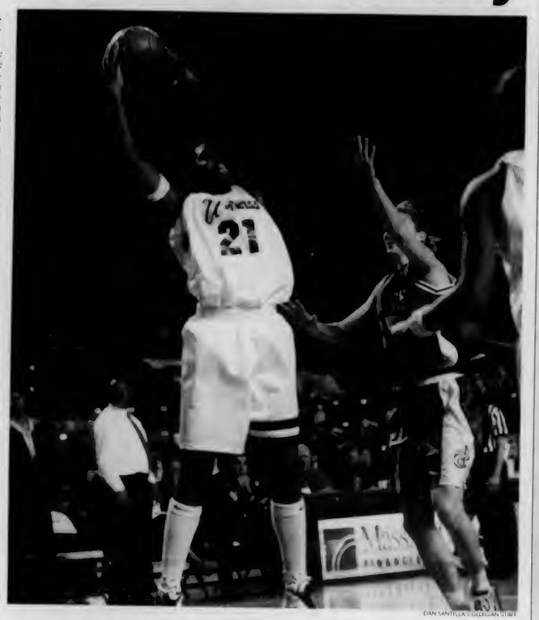
Tonight at the William D. Mullins Center, UMass (2-1) will welcome Dartmouth (0-3) for a 7 o'clock tipoff. The Big Green's last effort against New Hampshire came up way short, falling to the Wildcats by a score of 81-58. But the Minutemen will not take winless Dartmouth lightly.

"The little bit I know about Dartmouth, is that like any Ivy League school ... they're smarter than you are," O'Brien said. "And they play that way. They try to make you think. They play with an effort that is unbelievable; you let up for one minute and they're going to get something out of it."

O'Brien also said that the Big Green will probably sink into a two-three zone the majority of the time on defense and that it will force her Minutewomen to shoot from the outside. The only discrepancy in the UMass attack is its press-breaking set. If it can keep its composure and not let Dartmouth control the tempo of the game (like it let Holy Cross), there should be no problem in securing this win.

"It'll be chaotic for a while," O'Brien said. "But if we can have some composure and execute I think we'll be O.K."

Senior point guard Kathy Coyner agreed. "We just have to execute."



Sophomore forward Jen Bulter goes up strong for two. The Minutewomen will be in action today when they take on Dartmouth at the Mullins Center.

BCS Just BS

Where in cyberspace is the Bowl Championship Series? It kind of reminds me of when I was 12 years old and a voice came off the television and said "Carmen went to Madagascar."

I did not know where the country was then and if I had not taken class on African economics I would still not know where it is. But for the BCS, I am waiting for a similar voice to come over the TV and give me a concrete answer as to why Washington is not even in consideration for a national title.

The Huskies find themselves fourth on the latest BCS rankings. This is an absolute travesty. Florida State is second and it lost to Miami; Miami is third and it lost to Washington. Granted strength of schedule is taken into consideration, but both the Seminoles and the Hurricanes play in conferences that have a fair amount of cupcake teams.

FSU [11-1, 8-0 Atlantic Coast Conference] played Wake Forest [2-9, 1-7 ACC], Duke [0-11, 0-8 ACC] and Maryland [5-6, 3-5 ACC], but to their credit the 'Noles did defeat No. 4 Florida, No. 22 North Carolina State, No. 10 Clemson and No. 14 Georgia Tech.

Miami [10-1, 7-0 Big East] played Rutgers [3-8, 0-7 Big East] and Temple [4-7, 1-6 Big East], but to their credit the 'Canes beat No. 2 Virginia Tech and No. 2 Florida State.

But with both the Seminoles and the Hurricanes playing in inferior conferences, the Huskies play in the second best division in college football this season.

Washington has played two teams that still reside in the top ten from the Pac-10 in Oregon [9-2, 7-1 Pac-10] and Oregon State [10-1, 7-1 Pac-10]. Granted the Huskies lose to the Ducks at Autzen Stadium, one of the toughest places in college football to play. They beat Miami in week two and also defeated the Beavers the week after falling to the Ducks.

But cyberspace has a controversy brewing in Florida worse than the one between our two presidential candidates. The United States refuses to let the computers to decide on whom the next president will be, so why will we allow the same machines to determine who will play for a national championship.

The BCS had a similar dilemma going into the final week of the 1998 season when both UCLA and Kansas State where fighting to see who would take on Tennessee in the Fiesta Bowl. Fortunately both the Bruins and the Wildcats let the computers off the hook by losing their respective games, but this year it will not be that easy.

KSU has a chance to really make a mess out of things when it takes on BCS No. 1 Oklahoma in the Big XII Championship on Saturday. If the Wildcats play the role of the spoiler then the Sooners would be out of the race for a title (college football would rather have a team lose early than late in the season). This would allow the Seminole the automatic bud to the Orange Bowl and vault the Hurricanes into a title shot on their home field.

All these situations and still Washington gets no consideration. Give the team some respect. They were robbed of a national championship in 1990 when they had to split the title with Georgia Tech. Both finished the season with 11 wins and were named Associated Press and Coaches Poll national champions respectively. Do not let a supposed better system black-ball the Washington again.

Where is the love? Where is the love for Marques Tuiasosopo? Where is the love for Rick Neuheisel? Where is the love for a team that has to share a field with the hapless Seattle Seahawks?

I have an answer to all this, a playoff... then I and everyone else that is a fan of college football will not have to wonder: "Where in cyberspace is the BCS?" I will not have to be reminded of Madagascar and when I was 12 years old.

Bryan Smith is a Collegian columnist.

After brief slumber, Devils return to putting their opponents through Hell

Sometimes, it seems, being a sports fan is much like sitting on an emotional roller coaster.

The New Jersey Devils, last year's Stanley Cup champs, were mired in one of their worst slumps in recent memory. Just five months earlier, they had hoisted Lord Stanley's chalice, and it seemed that the losers of six straight would never win a game.

The formerly potent Devil offense had gone silent, the defense was a mess and Martin Brodeur was posting the worst numbers of his career. But more importantly, he was playing the part of a sieve. In short, nothing was going right for a team that had been leading the Eastern Conference two weeks prior.

On Nov. 16, they skated into the Fleet Center, desperately needing a victory over the Bruins. They jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first thanks to a goal by new acquisition Turner Stevenson, but squandered it as Jason Allison tied the game in the second.

Then, late in the third period, and with Colin White already in the penalty box, Brian Rafalski pulled down a man in front to give the B's a five-on-three power play. Just 17 seconds into the two-man advantage, Joe Thornton scored, and it looked as if New Jersey was on its way to a seventh consecutive defeat. After all, there was only three minutes left in regulation and the Bruins still had 1:43 of power play time.

But then, the champs decided to show what they were truly made of.

With two minutes to play, Petr Sykora intercepted a pass and rushed up the left side. He wound up and unleashed a laser that got by Byron Dafoe's right pad to tie the game at two.

Most teams would be content to settle for a tie, but New Jersey kept pressuring the Bruins. The game went into overtime, but despite a relentless offensive attack, no shots were finding the net. With less than ten seconds remaining in regulation, the Devils moved the puck into the offensive zone.

Then, in hopes of getting a redirection, Rafalski threw a centering pass into the melee in front of the Boston cage. With two seconds to go, Scott Gomez corralled the loose puck in front and fired it toward the top shelf. The rubber found the twine, and the proverbial monkey was collectively pulled off the backs of the defending champs.

Suddenly, all the negative momentum that was plaguing the Devs was turned around 180 degrees.

Just two days later, New Jersey found itself in a close match with the Carolina Hurricanes. This game too went into overtime, and just when it seemed the game would end in a stalemate, Patrik Elias scored with 40 seconds to go to lift the Devils to another win.

That's when things really got going.

On Monday the 20th, they signed long-time holdouts Jason Arnott and Scott Niedermayer to long-term contracts, just in time for a West Coast road trip. Unlike other holdouts, the two had kept skating and had stayed in tremendous shape, and were ready to join their teammates immediately.

The return of the veterans seemed to make the struggling Devil offense come alive, as it ran off three impressive wins in four days over Anaheim, Los Angeles and San Jose, outscoring its opponents 14-5.

L.A. and San Jose were both posting impressive streaks of their own until they ran into the Devs. The Kings had gone unbeaten in eight games until they were walloped by New Jersey, while the Sharks were in a seven game home unbeaten streak when the Devils invaded San Jose Arena.

Both Arnott and Niedermayer were instrumental in those victories, the former scoring two goals and three assists, including the game winner against a strong San Jose squad.

Inside the NHL with Matt Brady

But the biggest impact of their return seems to be in the team's attitude. The team that couldn't buy a win just over a week before now was playing like the team that dismissed the Dallas Stars in six games last June. They had momentarily forgotten how to win, but with most of their components from last year in place, the Devs began to play like champions again.

In the five-game winning streak, Brodeur looked much stronger, lowering his GAA from a hefty 3.13 to 2.68 and raising his save percentage from .876 to .892.

The offense had been leading the league before the losing streak, notching 43 goals in its first ten games, including four games in which it scored six or more goals.

But then, it suddenly went cold, scoring just 11 goals in its six game skid. Especially slumping was the offensive tandem of Sykora and Elias, who tallied only one goal in the streak, a far cry from the ability they showed in the playoffs last year when the two, along with Arnott, established themselves as the most dangerous line in the league.

However, since the Boston game, the attack has recaptured its former greatness, tallying 20 goals in the five consecutive wins. Contributions have come from across the board, with nine different players finding the back of the net in the streak, with Gomez leading the charge with four goals.

So now, after a brief period when they couldn't buy a win, the Devils are back on top of the hockey world, and will look to extend their win streak to six tomorrow night when they host the New York Rangers.

Hopefully for all Devils fans, though the ride may be bumpy, it will cruise smoothly into the playoffs on a high note.

Matt Brady is a Collegian columnist.

Duke and Illinois highlight ACC/Big Ten clash of titans

The clash of the titans, the battle royal, the grand melee, the big showdown and the Atlantic Coast Conference/Big Ten Challenge.

Last year the Big Ten established itself as one of the most powerful conference in college basketball by sending both Wisconsin and eventual champions Michigan State to the Final Four. This year the ACC will attempt to steal the crown from its Big Ten counterparts, as it boasts three teams (Duke, North Carolina and Maryland) in the top ten.

The Big Ten still has the champs as well as a stacked Illinois squad, but the ACC is deep and fully capable of sending six teams to the tournament.

Last year's challenge had it all, including a buzzer beater by North Carolina State to upset then No. 21 Purdue, as the ACC took five of the nine games.

Wake Forest at Michigan

This match up is completely Wake's to lose. Brian Ellerbe's talent pool is somewhat depleted in Ann Arbor, especially with the departure of Jamal Crawford and the dismissal of Kevin Gaines. Although last season's Big Ten freshman of the year, LaVell Blanchard, is back to carry the scoring load, the Demon Deacon's are a physical team that is stacked with talent.

Leading scorer Darius Songaila is a monster in the paint and that combined with a sweet touch from the perimeter will give Ellerbe fits as he tries to match up on defense. Robert O'Kelley provides Wake with a lethal outside scoring threat as he continues to improve his play since moving over to shooting guard last year. Prediction: Wake Forest, 75-63.

Northwestern at Clemson

The battle of the conference doormats takes place in South Carolina when the Tigers face the Wildcats.

The one bright spot for viewers will be the play of shooting guard Will Solomon, who dropped 43 points on Virginia in a Clemson win last year. If the Cats and their defense can't keep Solomon off his game then the Tigers will end up on top. Prediction: Clemson, 74-68.

Illinois at Duke

This game is in so many ways the marquee matchup of the ACC/Big Ten challenge. The Blue Devils are the top team in the nation right now, while the Illini are not far behind with a No. 8 ranking. Two of the best players in the country will go head to head, as player of the year candidate Shane Battier will go up against long-range gunner Cory Bradford.

Duke will rely on the play of its young floor generals in freshman Chris Duhon and sophomore Jason Williams. With Duhon and Williams basically interchangeable at the point and Carlos Boozer powering inside, the Devils will have a slight talent edge.

The key to the game will lie in the play of Illinois' bench. Illini coach Bill Self will not hesitate to go nine deep in his player rotation and that could pose a serious problem for Duke. Billy Donovan used the same strategy in Florida's win over the Blue Devils in the tournament last year. The Gators went so deep into its bench that Duke became tired by the end of the game.

Illinois will likely employ the same strategy to wear out Duke's top six and cause them to make uncharacteristic mistakes.

If Bradford makes smart shooting decisions and Battier and Boozer are not allowed to completely dominate than the Illini should be able to use its plethora of able bodies to take it to the Dukies in Cameron. Prediction: Illinois, 88-84.

Georgia Tech at Iowa

Put the Hawkeye's 14-16 record aside and look at what coach Steve Alford has brought to this program. Last year Iowa was inconsistent at best, but this year a good group of newcomers, including star transfer Luke Recker, joins two returning starters to form a solid squad that could raise some eyebrows in the Big Ten.

Dean Oliver is a very talented point guard who knows how to slash to the basket and distribute the ball to Recker and company. Iowa is one of the deepest teams in the Big Ten, and that depth will be too much for a rebuilding Tech squad to handle. Prediction: Iowa, 68-58.

The final games of the ACC/Big Ten challenge will take place on Wednesday. Look for the preview of those games in tomorrow's paper.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

Take a peek at the rap sheets of some of your favorite celebrity lawbreakers. Take a peek at Arts

ARTS p. 6

The Massachusetts Daily COLLEGIAN

Amber Sneed and the UMass women's basketball team took on Dartmouth last night in a regional matchup.

SPORTS p. 10

Volume CVII Issue 58 | www.dailycollegian.com | Wednesday, November 29, 2000

Scott resigns as Chancellor

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

After seven years, Chancellor David K. Scott is calling it quits.

Scott announced late yesterday that he will be stepping down as Chancellor for the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus effective June 30 and taking a year's paid leave.

As of December of last year, the Chancellor's position carried a salary of nearly $160,000.

"David Scott has made an enormous contribution to the University. Thanks to his skill, vision, and determination, UMass Amherst has risen to new heights," University President William Bulger said in a press release.

Scott has been credited with the financial comeback of the campus.

"He was able to accomplish so much despite assuming the chancellorship during very dark fiscal days," Bulger added. "The massive economic downturn of the early 1990s wreaked havoc with the University's budget, but David Scott was able to persevere and lead the campus to greatness. His stewardship will be remembered and valued."

Scott has dealt with a turbulent campus since his arrival in September of 1993. His predecessor, Chancellor Richard O'Brien left the campus after a string of racial protests, rallies and takeovers. The budget was not adequate for the campus, resulting in the layoff of 28 professors.

"I am keenly aware that all of you have coped with crisis after crisis during the last few years," Scott wrote in a letter to the campus community. "The State budget passed by the Legislature and approved by the Governor includes $316 million for the University system."

"This figure is $16.1 million less than the University had last year [1992]," he added.

In 1993, Scott began working on a five-year strategic action plan, outlining several courses of action designed to increase revenues and restructure different aspects of the campus administration and faculty to further the University's intellectual goals.

"Under his leadership, the Amherst campus has made impressive strides in a number of key areas: the campus's academic reputation and performance have continued to grow; $78 million in capital spending has helped to transform the campus; and an ambitious $125 million fund-raising campaign is about to conclude a year ahead of schedule," Bulger said.

"I feel honored to have served the University for the past eight years. The University has put us in touch with a wonderful group of students and alumni, faculty and staff, friends, colleagues, and supporters," Chancellor Scott said. "It has also been a privilege to serve a University committed to public service and to have worked with President Bulger and members of the Board of Trustees who embody the highest ideals of public service."

Scott does not leave an unblemished campus. In his tenure, both the Admissions building and the Goodell building were taken over by mobs of students. In February of 1994, approximately 75 students, led by then SGA President David Nunez, occupied the Admissions building in protest over rising tuition. Scott negotiated a settlement with the dissidents, agreeing to oppose tuition hikes.

BRIAN MCDERMOTT – COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTOGRAPH

The oft-maligned David K. Scott, seen here in a photograph from April of 1999, will resign as Chancellor of the University on June 30th of 2001. Scott has been the Chancellor since 1993.

In March of 1997, over 150 students concerned with diversity issues seized control of the Controller's office in the Goodell building. After six days, Scott and the student negotiators agreed to a 21-point settlement.

Racial tensions rose again after affirmative action was discontinued in the wake of the State Supreme Court's Boston Latin decision. Scott's interpretation of the decision led him to deconstruct any semblance of a quota system in University admissions.

Asian, Latino, African, and Native American (ALANA) enrollments fell slightly from 19 percent of the class of 2002 to 16.17 percent of the class of 2003.

Scott's leadership came under scrutiny again after a series of alleged sexual assaults on campus during the Fall of 1999. Scott's administration provided screech alarms to the campus population and Scott held meetings with students, faculty and administrators to discuss various campus safety issues.

"In the next minute I speak to you, ten women will have been beaten and four will have been raped all over the world," Scott announced at a Nov. 16 candlelight vigil. "We have to take the campus back and make it safer once again."

In the spring of 2000, Scott proposed a one to three percent budget cut for every department, resulting in another series of protests, rallies and meetings with students. That same year the Commonwealth increased the University budget.

Scott explained the cuts were necessary to ensure that a financial cushion would be created for future fiscal emergencies.

"Our goal is to maintain seats in classes for courses needed for our students to graduate in four years," Scott said at a March 9 budget forum. Walkouts, teach-ins and protest still followed Scott's action.

Scott will address the Faculty Senate on Thursday at 3:30 p.m. in room 227 of Herter Hall.

Campus spokesperson Barbara Pitoniak declined to comment further on Scott's resignation. No interim replacement has been named as of yet.

Annual report highlights hazardous toys

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Christmas time is just around the corner, but there might be more under the tree than parents bargained for when it comes to children's toys.

According to a survey done by Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG), hazardous toys can still be found across the country despite the 1994 Child Safety Protection Act. A nationwide annual survey released by the group explained that although there were signs of improvement in the toy industry there were still roughly 152,000 visits to the hospital due to toy related injuries. The survey, which is in its 15th year, has seen the recall of 68 toys in the past.

The report cautions against purchasing toys without first looking at the potential safety hazards that goes along with them.

"Keep in mind that the government doesn't test all toys," the report stated. "Most toys are packaged in ways that make it difficult for the purchaser to identify potential safety hazards in the store."

The survey, which was released last week, was broken down into four categories, which include choking hazards, balloons, toxic toys and scooters. Also included in the report was a warning on Internet purchases.

In the area of choking hazards, the survey cautions that small toy parts, balloons and small balls continued to be the leading cause of deaths in the area of toys. According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) at least 190 children have died from playing with toys from 1990-1999; in 1999, of the 16 children that died playing with toys, nine of those died from choking.

"Children are needlessly choking to death on toys and dangerous toys can still be found on store shelves," Maggie Hillis of MassPIRG said in a statement.

"Consumers should remember that just because a toy appears on a shelf, or doesn't appear on PIRG's list, doesn't mean that it is safe."

Another hazard that could potentially injure children is balloons. Since 1990, 56 children have choked to death on balloons. Some of the criticized manufacturers include Winnie the Pooh or Baby's First Birthday balloons. These are particularly attractive to toddlers and they have a tendency to try to consume them.

Also, the group warns parents that some toys contain toxic chemicals known as phthalates that are added to plastic toys as a softener. The chemicals are often liked to liver damage as well as damage to kidneys. Several European countries have already banned the chemical.

"It is outrageous that a scientist who buys a bottle of phthalate chemicals receives a full hazard warning, but a consumer buying a mouthing toy with phthalates often finds it labeled non-toxic," Hillis said. "Young children should not be chewing on toxic toys."

Warnings are also included on scooters, which the group found to be responsible for over 26,000 injuries and two deaths. Also included in the report are warnings against Internet purchases, which may or may not be safe for young children to play with.

For more information on toy safety and well as tips for purchasing toys look at the full report at www.toysafety.net.

COURTESY MASSPIRG

MASSPIRG released their 15th annual report on dangerous children's toys to avoid during the holiday season.

No giving thanks:

UMPD deals with holiday mooning

See Cop Log Page 2

By Melissa Hammel
Collegian Staff

Despite the Thanksgiving break, the University of Massachusetts Police Department still encountered crime in the form of breaking and entering and weapons violations.

On Monday, a car was broken into in lot 44 and the stereo was ripped out of the dashboard. At 6:30 p.m. that day another car was also broken into in lot 11 and both the stereo and the speakers were stolen. There was another attempt at robbery within the lot at approximately the same time, but it was unsuccessful.

There was a weapons violation in Coolidge Dormitory on Wednesday, when on-duty resident assistants discovered both nun-chucks and a knife in the room of a resident and turned them into the police. According to Jim Lyons, spokesman for the UMPD, the possession of weapons was a housing violation and that issue would be dealt with thorough them.

"There is no legal way to own nun-chucks," Lyons said. "They were ceased and destroyed."

A severely intoxicated person was reported outside of North Village Apartments on Thursday at around 3:10 a.m. The person was reported as out of control and was taken into protective custody by the police. Lyons explained that typically the police placed people into protective custody when they were under the influence of alcohol and presented a danger to themselves.

"What happens typically is that they are taken to the Amherst Police Department and are locked up," Lyons said. "They are released when they sober up."

Lyons stressed that protective custody was not a criminal offense and that the person put in custody was not arrested.

A resident faculty member got into a verbal altercation with a student over a parking spot on Sunday outside of Field Dormitory. The resident assistant was attempting to pull into the spot, when another student claimed that it was rightfully theirs.

"When we responded to the situation it had ended and the person was gone," Lyons said. "We did not get a license plate number."

Two fires were also reported on Tuesday. The first fire was spotted outside of Dickinson Dormitory and was burning in a trashcan. The fire department did not have to be called and police speculate that it was caused by careless behavior with a cigarette. The second fire also took place in a trashcan outside of Mary Lyon Dormitory and was extinguished by the Amherst Fire Department.

Offensive behavior by a skateboarder to a tour group outside of the Fine Arts Center was reported on Saturday. The skateboarder allegedly pulled his pants down and mooned the group. Police did not find him.

Police Log

Breaking and Entering

November 26
In lot 44 four vehicles were broken into; stereo equipment was stolen.
A vehicle was broken into in lot 44.

November 27
A vehicle was broken into in lot 11. Another vehicle was broken into in lot 11.

November 28
A vehicle was broken into in lot 44.

Larceny

November 25
A bicycle was stolen from Cashin Dormitory.

November 26
Individuals reported items stolen from Crampton Dormitory.
A bicycle valued at over $400 was stolen from Washington Dormitory.
Items were reported stolen in Wheeler Dormitory.
Items were reported stolen in Washington Dormitory.
Items were reported stolen in Dickinson Dormitory.
A textbook was stolen from Hasbrook Laberatory.
A cell phone was stolen from Wheeler Dormitory it was valued at over $100.

Vandalism

November 21
The rear window of a vehicle was smashed in Lot 50 next to Prince Dormitory.
A rock was thrown through a window of Crampton Dormitory.

November 22
Glass in a door of the Fine Arts Center was kicked in.
Damage to a vehicle was reported in Lot 12 on Forestry Way.

November 27
Vandalism was reported in the Sylvan Snack Bar in McNamara Dormitory.
Vandalism was reported in Lot 44, north of Sylvan Dormitories.
Vandalism was reported in Southwest Circle.

November 28
Vandalism was reported in Lot 32W south of Massachusetts Ave.

Weapons Violation

November 22
Nun-chucks and a knife were seized by housing from a room in Coolidge Dormitory.

Gore calls for FL fairness

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

As their lawyers filed briefs with the U.S. Supreme Court in anticipation of Friday's hearing on the election in Florida, Al Gore appealed to George W. Bush asking him to specifically address his challenge to the Florida election results yesterday.

For the second time in as many days Gore called for a "fair and accurate" counting of votes in Florida to determine the winner of Florida's 25 electoral votes and the White House.

"This is not a time for delay, obstruction and procedural roadblocks," Gore said outside the Vice President's mansion. "This is not a time to run out the clock."

Gore explained his desire to have recounts in specific Florida counties, saying the voting machines used in the counties were "old and cheap, outdated machinery."

Gore restated his willingness to have a hand recount of every county in Florida, claiming that it would take one week to complete.

"We were perfectly willing, and would still be willing, to have a hand count in the entire state. I know that it's less of a realistic possibility now, but I've always been open to that," said Gore.

Bush Campaign spokesman Karen Hughes claimed that Gore was trying to change the rules after the election.

"He proposes yet another count and yet another deadline," Hughes said in a news conference. "Common sense does not allow it and the right of the citizens of Florida to have their votes count does not allow it."

As Gore brought his case to the public, lawyers representing Bush brought their case to the U.S. Supreme Court, filing a brief arguing that the Florida Supreme Court overstepped their authority by allowing hand recounting of ballots to continue past the Florida legal deadline.

The brief contended that the Florida legislature provided for a legal certification date of seven days after the election, and that the Supreme Court had usurped the authority of the legislature by extending the certification deadline.

"As of November 7th, no provision of Florida law exempted the manual recount process from the seven-day certification deadline imposed by [Florida statute]," the brief stated.

The brief went on to argue that the actions of the Florida Supreme Court violate Article 2 section 1 of the

turn to ELECTION, page 3

FROM CAMPUS BEAM / COLLEGIAN

The universal solvent

Aaron Ellison, Professor of Environmental Studies at Mt. Holyoke College, lectured last night in the Campus Center on behalf of the Massachusetts community Water Watch.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1592 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Fri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500, weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Ilinitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Benharris Arts & Living Editor
Lenny Holsten Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schuba Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanie Gorlovsky Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jason Trenkle Co-News Editor
Michael Kobylanski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hummel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Iaret Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Krechmer Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS
BEGINNING NOV 27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook
ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

TODAY'S JOB OPENING #1026

JOB TITLE: Senior Web Designer.
SALARY: Take what you need.
DESCRIPTION: Kick back and brainstorm. Come and go as you please.
REQUIREMENTS: Internet surfing experience. Ability to hang out with friends a plus. Some napping required.
OTHER: Unlimited benefits. 3-hour lunch mandatory.

Hey, your dream job might not exist. But there are over 40,000 other high tech job openings throughout New York State.

hightechNY.com

UBriefs

On Thursday, Nov. 30, Stephen Vlastos, history department, University of Iowa, will give a lecture titled "Revisiting Right-Wing Revolution in Pre-War Japan: Conspiracies and Revolts in the Era of Government by Assassination." The lecture will be held in Wright Hall Common Room at 5pm. Admission is free.

"Cartesian Split", a collaborative and improvisational creation, will be performed by the Amherst College Department of Theater and Dance. It will be performed Nov. 30-Dec. 2, 8pm at Experimental Theatre. Tickets are free, but reservations are recommended. For reservations, call 542-2277 between 1-4:30pm weekdays and until 8pm performance nights.

Jessica Mav

election

continued from page 2

U.S. constitution gives state legislatures the power to provide the manner by which electors are chosen.

Lawyers representing Gore claimed that the Florida Court merely used statutory interpretation to clarify the meaning of apparently contradictory state laws in extending the certification deadline. Gore's legal team also argued that this is a case of state law interpreted by a state court that should not be heard in federal court.

Attorneys for Gore also pursued action in Florida yesterday asking the Leon County Circuit Court to direct Miami-Dade and Palm Beach counties to resume manual recounting of ballots.

With Bush's lead in the certified Florida voting total at 537 votes, the Gore team alleged that uncounted votes in the respective counties would give Gore the state.

Gore's lawyers proposed a plan to begin the recount process today which would conclude after seven days.

"Let me repeat the essence of our proposal today: seven days starting tomorrow for a full and accurate count of all the votes," Gore said.

Also in Florida the Legislature is considering an emergency session to settle the election controversy. Many Republican members stated the need for an emergency session to settle the contest. If the Legislature meets to appoint electors, as provided for by Florida law, Bush stands to win the state as the Republicans control the body, and his brother, Governor Jeb Bush, must approve the appointments.

NYU to abort RU-486 pill

By Lindsay Noonan
Washington Square News (New York U.)

(U-WIRE) NEW YORK - New York University Health Center officials have decided not to offer mifeprestone, commonly known as the "abortion pill" to students.

The decision not to distribute the drug, which was previously known as RU-486, to students came less than two weeks before Dec. 1, when the Food and Drug Administration's recent approval of mifeprestone takes effect.

Mariana Zane, director of women's health services for the NYU Health Center, said officials decided not to give the pill to students because of concerns about "continuity of care." Eight to 10 percent of women who take the drug, Zane said, still need a D&C, or a scraping of the uterine wall, to complete the abortion.

"For the sake of continuity of care, it's better to begin and end at the same place," Zane said. D&C procedures are not done at NYU Health Services, she said.

Ernesto Ferran, Jr. the Health Center's executive director, said abortions of any kind should be handled by specialists.

"Something like this should be in the hands of experts," he said. "People who are doing this regularly, not episodically."

Carlo Ciotoli, the Health Center's medical director, agreed. "For now, at least, we're not going to offer it," Ciotoli said. "We're going to expedite referrals to others who do it best."

Ferran said NYU will be far from alone in not distributing the pill.

"I have yet to come up with a university that will provide (mifeprestone)," Ferran said. And the officials added that many private gynecologists have also chosen not to provide the drug.

Both Zane and Ferran said students seeking the pill at the Health Center would be referred to qualified abortion providers, including Tisch Hospital at the NYU Medical Center, to which all of the Health Center's more complicated procedures are currently referred. Another option is the Bleecker Street office of Planned Parenthood. The Health Center currently refers some students to Planned Parenthood for traditional abortions.

Zaric felt reluctance to offer the drug might be due to the amount of patient-care required. A mifeprestone abortion requires three separate visits to the doctor.

The first visit assesses the length of pregnancy through an ultrasound, which is not available at the Health Center. Zane said the age of the fetus must be assessed very carefully.

"If you're off by two or three days, it can lead to bigger complications," she said.

If the fetus is determined to be younger than 49 days, the patient is given mifeprestone, which prevents the fetus from attaching itself to the uterine walls. Three days later, the patient returns to her doctor and is given misoprostol, which induces uterine contractions and ends the pregnancy.

Two weeks later, the patient must return for another ultrasound to make confirm the pregnancy was ended successfully. All three visits are required by the FDA, and all mifeprestone users must sign a contract stating they will show up for the required follow-ups.

Ciotoli said the symptoms associated with mifeprestone abortion, mostly cramping and bleeding, are much more severe than those of a typical surgical abortion.

"This is not a case of 'Let me take a pill and get back to class,'" Zane said.

NASA grants distinguished medal to president of Lockheed Martin

NASA Administrator Daniel S. Goldin (left) presents Jim Berry, president of Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control, with the NASA Distinguished Service Medal, NASA's highest honor.

DALLAS, Nov. 28 /PRNewswire/ -- James (Jim) L. Berry, president of Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control, was recently awarded the NASA Distinguished Public Service Medal, NASA's highest honor. NASA Administrator Daniel S. Goldin presented Berry with the medal at a ceremony at NASA headquarters in Washington, DC.

The NASA Distinguished Service Medal is granted "only to those individuals whose distinguished accomplishments contributed substantially to the NASA mission," according to Goldin. Past recipients include journalist Walter Cronkite, actor Tom Hanks, authors Arthur C. Clarke and James A. Michener, and several members of Congress.

"This is a great honor," Berry said. "I consider the NASA Distinguished Service Medal to be one of the most meaningful highlights of my career thus far."

Berry's contributions to man's exploration of space stretch back more than 25 years. He served as a key Rockwell manager of final assembly for Apollo space craft for missions 11 through 17 in the late 1960s. From 1971 until 1975, Berry served as Director of Manufacturing for the four Command and Service Modules used in the Skylab program and the Apollo-Soyuz test project.

From 1975 until 1986, he was associated with the Space Shuttle program, last serving as the Division Director, Production Operations for Rockwell's Space Division. In his current assignment as President of Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control, Berry has overseen the building of the heat rejection and photovoltaic radiator systems for the International Space Station.

"You are highly deserving of this medal for your distinguished service and extraordinary leadership in the human exploration of space," Goldin remarked.

July 2000 marked the 25th anniversary of the Apollo-Soyuz test project, and your leadership in the role of Project Manager of the Command and Service Module was paramount to its success."

Jim Berry's 36-year career has been predominately spent in the U.S. Aerospace industry. His experience represents a broad exposure to all facets of the business. His breadth of experience prepared him for assuming profound responsibility and authority in increasingly significant management assignments over the past three decades. Berry's career boasts numerous achievements for NASA and the U.S. Department of Defense.

Jim Berry joined Lockheed Martin Corporation in October 1994 as Vice President, Technology and Chief Operating Officer for the Electronics Sector. The Corporation promoted Mr. Berry to President of its Vought Systems division in Dallas on August 1, 1995. On July 8, 1999, he was promoted to President of Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control, a combination of the Vought Systems business with the former Electronics & Missiles business in Orlando, Florida. Missiles and Fire Control has now grown to represent 10 major plants employing close to 9,000 employees in six states.

Located in Dallas, Orlando, Florida and Sunnyvale, Calif., Lockheed Martin Missiles and Fire Control headquarters, manufactures and supports advanced surface missile, rocket and space systems. The Company is organized in seven program/mission areas: Strike, Weapons, Air Defense, Anti-Armor, Naval Munitions, Fire Control and Sensors, Fire Support and Product Development.

Headquartered in Bethesda, Maryland, Lockheed Martin is a global enterprise principally engaged in the research, design, development, manufacture and integration of advanced technology systems, products and services. The Corporation's core businesses are systems integration, space, aeronautics and technology services.

VA approves new standards for education

By Christine Buurma
Cavalier Daily (U. Virginia)

(U-WIRE) CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. - Responding to demands by lawmakers and the public for greater accountability in higher education, the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia (SCHEV) unanimously approved last week the adoption of 14 performance measures for the 15 four-year public colleges and universities in Virginia.

The performance standards include a measure of financial stability, the number of transfer students from two-year colleges and the percentage of classes, by course level, with enrollment less than 20 or more than 30 students.

Smaller classes often are perceived as indicative of higher academic quality, whereas larger classes are seen as indicators of increases in institutional efficiency -- a claim that Leonard Sandridge, University of Virginia executive vice president and chief operating officer, disputes.

"In fact, the ideal size of a class is determined in large part by the subject matter being taught and the method of teaching that is used," Sandridge said.

Regarding the ratio of debt service to revenue, Sandridge said this measure is not a problem for the University, citing its recent bond rating upgrade.

The ratio "is a measure of credit worthiness and indicates the ability of the institution to take on debt," Sandridge said.

The number of transfer students from two-year institutions is thought to be an indicator of how well four-year institutions serve the needs of transfer students from two-year colleges.

The 2000 Appropriation Act, passed by the General Assembly and Gov. James S. Gilmore III in February, requires that data pertaining to the measures be published by July 1, 2001 as part of the Reports to the Governor's Blue Ribbon Commission on Higher Education.

SCHEV developed the measures with input from colleges and universities, state agencies and experts in assessment and institutional effectiveness.

The group considered more than 200 potential measures of institutional performance.

G. Paul Nardo, Communications and Government Relations Director for SCHEV, said the council chose the 14 measures because they were deemed the most appropriate and because they "have data that are readily or easily available."

Sandridge said he feels the measures are appropriate.

"The University welcomes external evaluations that are based on meaningful performance measures. We expect excellence in all that we do, and we routinely monitor performance of our operations," he said.

Read the marquis...

****
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
****

AMPUS CENTER BASEMENT. SOME OF US HAVE LOST OUR SOULS.

Where can you study Physical Therapy and work with world-class clinicians?

Top 10 Nationwide
U.S.News

MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
Graduate Programs, certificates, and classes in:
Physical Therapy • Nursing
Clinical Investigation
Communication Sciences & Disorders
Learn more at our next Information Sessions
6:00 pm, Fri., Dec. 15
Call 617-726-3140
or visit our website at www.mghihp.edu
101 Merrimac Street • Boston, MA 02114-4719
A member of the Partners HealthCare System

JAMAICA Spring Break

ONE LOVE. ONE HEART. ONE GREAT PARTY.
It's that time of year when thousands of students come to Jamaica and feel all right—for an unbelievable price.

YOUR SPRING BREAK PACKAGE INCLUDES
• Round-trip airfare
• 7 nights hotel accommodations
• Round-trip airport & hotel transfers
• Free welcome beach & evening parties
• Free admission to night clubs
• Discounts on restaurants, water sports & side excursions
• Packages available to Negril, Ocho Rios, Montego Bay
• Professional on site tour reps
• Complete weekly activities program offering optional sunset cruise, booze cruise, toga party & more
• Free bonus party pak
• Optional meal plan including 7 breakfasts and 7 dinners

Sun Splash Tours 1•800•426•7710 Student Travel Services 1•800•648•4849

Price is per person based on quad occupancy from select departure cities. Other cities may qualify for reduction. Require surcharges (Fuel surcharge $45 and Jamaica departure taxes currently $48) and $12 handling charge additional. Rates increase $30 on 12.15.00. Peak week surcharges/off-peak discounts may apply. Restrictions and cancellation penalties apply. Limited availability. Subject to change without notice. Call for full details on hotel selection and availability.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

E-tailers
Coming up empty

As the Christmas shopping season fast approaches, the temptation to avoid the hassle of crowded malls, packed parking lots and endless lines at retail stores looms large for many people. And as such, many people will be turning to online retailers, e-tailers if you will, for their Christmas shopping needs.

However, this pleasure may not last for long. In fact, if the current conditions continue, it will not last until next Christmas. People, well mostly Wall St. analysts, are hailing this holiday season as crucial for the survival of e-tailers. It's over though. It's been over for a while now. They're dead or dying. Move on.

About a year ago, the idea of running an online retail store was all the rage. Toys, books, CDs, DVDs, clothes, jewelry, software, underwear, leg warmers: people were putting everything for sale online. And Wall St. ate it up. eToys.com, Fogdog.com, alloy.com, pets.com, cdnow.com, I_want_to_make_a_million_dollars_from_an_IPO.com. Every e-taller went public and every one shot up in anticipation of big revenues and big profits. And if you think about It, people had some reason to be excited. E-tailing is an ingenious idea.

First, there is no overhead. You don't need stores, managers, clerks, cash registers, lights, anything. No rent. Basically, none of the costs that come with having a traditional retail store. Second, no lines. People can browse thousands of products from the convenience of their home, without having to worry about the hassle of long commutes, longer lines or large crowds. Third, it's cheaper. Because of the aforementioned costs saved by e-tailers, you can buy almost anything cheaper online than if a traditional retail store.

With the combination of these factors, investors had visions of gold dancing in their heads, Amazon.com became synonymous with the future of business. However, people failed to recognize one basic fact about e-tailers, a painful reality that is now causing the entire sector to come crumbling down with unforgiving swiftness; the e-tailers never made any money. Not one penny. Nothing. Nada. Zip.

Amazon.com never made any money, even when it was clearly the dominant player in the e-tailer market. It had name recognition that entrepreneurs can only dream of and an entire market almost completely to themselves, but it still was never profitable. Not once. What did people expect to happen when a slew of e-tailing competitors jumped online also? If you can't make money when you have a monopoly, then you certainly can't make any in the face of stiff competition. And if you can't make money, you're not going to stay in business for very long.

Amazon.com's stock is 77 percent off its 52 week high. Seventy-seven percent! And they just announced that their earning will once again not be up to par. You can now buy the stocks of eToys and Priceline with the change in couch cushions. People are finally realizing the glaring reality that these companies aren't going to make it.

Amazon.com will be dead in one year and the idea of e-tailing will be a piece of technological nostalgia that goes down in history with Beta tapes or 8-tracks.

BRYAN MCALLISTER

Beautiful Loser

When I was a kid, life was about winning or losing. It was also about cooties and jogging pants. But mostly, it was about winning or losing. And I tasted both. I won, and I lost. And there's a very basic, good feeling about that – a Thanksgiving cranberry sauce feeling, or a "Hey, I love this episode of 'Charles in Charge'" feeling.

Of course, your parents always told you, "Everybody wins. There are no winners or losers. Clean your room. Take out the garbage. Don't feed the dog your chicken."

But, c'mon. The dog LOVES the chicken!

Even as a kid, all you cared about was whether you won or lost. Anybody who has ever been on a team, or played their siblings in game of outdoor whiffle ball, or even just played four-square in elementary school, knows what I'm talking about. Games are competition, and most of the fun is competing.

A harshly Darwinian theory, I'll admit, but I'm a harsh Darwinian. And you're not talking to someone who's athletically blessed. I could hardly tie my shoelaces on my cleats. But as a veteran Little Leaguer, like many of you out there, I know about fierce competition and win-or-lose situations. I've been in world series, I've been in championships, I've struck out in the bottom of the ninth and I've struck out many, many times in addition to that.

And we, as a sports-loving, competitive country, have always loved the idea of the winner and the loser. This doesn't pertain to just sports, either. Look at "Survivor" or "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire." These are beloved shows where it doesn't matter how you played the game. It matters whether you win or not (and whether or not you think Regis is the Anti-Christ).

I applaud such shows. They obviously have tapped into our psyche. At the same time, there is a disturbing trend developing in America right now: a tendency to have NO winners or losers.

The recent presidential election, for instance, is the best example. But we won't talk about it cause you're sick of it. Why? Cause there was no clear winner or loser. There were no huge contrasts between the candidates' stances. Gore was Bush, and Bush was Gore and the country was completely divided, almost arbitrarily (also, in this case, because of another characteristic of Americans and Floridians – extreme stupidity). But modern politics is no longer about what you stand for; it's about making sure you stand for everything.

In sports, this "EVERYBODY WINS!" tendency is even more detrimental. And the National Football League is the latest and greatest offender.

I was watching football over Thanksgiving break. In fact, that's ALL I did over Thanksgiving break, besides bathe in cranberry sauce. And let me preface this by saying I'm a huge football fan, obviously. And I still love the NFL. But could a season be more ridiculous than this one?

The Patriots go from contenders to bottom-dwellers. The Ravens are contenders with Trent Dilfer at quarterback and without the ability to score touchdowns. The Saints beat the Rams. The Saints beat anybody. For a couple of years now, there have been no dynasties (not like the Ming dynasty) in football, there have been no 49ers, Giants, Cowboys or Packers. All of these teams are laughable now. And even the teams with winning records are getting easily beaten by bad teams. The NFL, in short, has totally ruined the idea of the upset.

Why? The salary cap, of course, a well-intentioned idea to make sports fairer, but an idea that ultimately has absolutely KILLED the idea of winners and losers.

Look at hockey, football, and basketball. There are no teams to count on, no Jordans or Montanas or Gretzkys to root for – all the "franchise" players switch teams too much.

In hockey, now, we seem to have gone a step further. Teams sport records like 12-4-2-2. What??!! Why all the numbers? It was bad enough to have ties. Now, teams get points if they lose in overtime. That's right – teams get points if they lose. Yes, that's very noble of the NHL to factor in losses in overtime. But it's also insane. That's why we have "sudden death" – the best idea in the history of good ideas – because teams either win or lose.

Now, every barbershop conversation will go like this in a couple years.

BARBER: How about those Patriots?

CUSTOMER: I can't believe they're 4-1-3-4-1-2-1 this year!!

BARBER: I know, but good thing they got that one point for Losing But They Tried Really Hard.

CUSTOMER: Yeah but the Jets have two of those already.

In essence, sports have undergone so many changes, so many tweaks and alterations to become better, that we've lost sense of why we've created them in the first place: to drink beer and have fun.

And, to know who won and who didn't.

The only sport that remains a losers and winners game is baseball. But even then, we still are experimenting with wild cards and inter-league play. Rules are changed and then changed back again. No one seems to be able to make up their minds what is good and what isn't.

Sometimes, the only thing to do is sit back and dream of the old days, when Boston sports were good. Okay, I confess, that's my real point: we suck. Was there anything more depressing than that Thanksgiving Patriots game?

I'm trying not to think about it. Luckily, there are still things that I can rely on. Mom still drinks a little too much wine at Thanksgiving dinner, I still always kick ass in Tecmo Bowl and that you always know that "Charles in Charge" will be entertaining and moving.

Bryan McAllister is a Collegian columnist.

Mail bag

I don't ask for much here at UMass. The one thing that I do ask for is mail. I'm not going to start bitching about how I never get packages or letters from friends or family. I really don't expect them to do so. They have more important things to do then write me a letter. But by some miracle if they do send me a letter or package, I love to hear that it will be arriving in the mail in the next three or four days. What I don't like is waiting six or seven days to receive said letter. No, I'm not blaming the U.S. Post office; they do their job well. I'm not even blaming the UMass postal service, despite the fact that they drive around campus with their back door wide open. No, I'm blaming the person or persons who are the mail distributors for each cluster.

NICHOLAS PIZZOLATO

You might be saying, "Nick. Grow up. A lot of people bitch and moan about not getting mail, it's nothing new." Some of you might even think that I am a naive freshman who thinks that Chancellor Scott actually lives in that house and that I'm just mad that I don't get mail. Well you couldn't be more wrong. I am a junior. I know that no one lives in that house and I have never had a problem in the past with mail service. If I don't receive a letter when I expect it, I confront the person who sent me the letter and they admit that they sent it later than they said. However, in a recent personal case I knew for a fact that the letter in the mail Monday morning which meant it would be here Friday or Saturday at the latest. Friday, my roommate saw the UMass mail transport deliver the mail to the building; however, the mail was never delivered that day. Nor was it delivered on Saturday. Needless to say I was pissed, because I was expecting something very important. And I'm not the only one complaining.

Many other people whom I've talked to are equally upset that their mail does not come to them when advertised in the lobby of the building. Many expecting packages or letters from home have not received them due to the mail person's inability to do their job. Some people didn't even get their absentee ballots for this last election because the mail was not delivered on time.

Now maybe it's the cluster office's fault because they only hire students on a work-study so they are desperate for people to work even if they don't do their job. I would like to send out a message right now, IF THEY CAN'T DO THEIR JOB FIRE THEM!! There is no reason why any of use should not get our mail on a regular basis or on the basis that is given to us by the cluster. If the sign says the mail will be there by five or seven on whenever, then the mail should be there by that time, no excuses. Not only is the right and responsible thing to do, but it is also the legal thing to do, considering that with holding mail is a federal offense. There might be a check from work, or a statement from the University, that is not getting in to us because YOU don't feel like getting up from your bed and do the mail. If I knew you wouldn't feel like it, then you shouldn't have applied for the job. There could be mail concerning and internship or a legal document concerning the future of a student here at UMass, but they wouldn't know it because you decided to watch "Friends" instead of doing your job.

What if there is food in the package like a brownies or candy sent by an aunt? Because someone didn't feel like going to work on that particular day or the next. God only knows when you might receive these confections or what shape they will be in. Such a conversation might take place: "Thanks Aunt Molly for the chocolate cake with green frosting." "Dear Nick, those were walnut brownies." I shudder at the thought if Aunt Molly had sent Hershey Kisses or Peanut Butter Cups. But because the mail person in question can't do their job the surprise would be ruined.

One would think that after one onslaught of complaints by students after the first time would influence the future at their job, I know that if I did anything that stupid at my job I would be fired, so my question is why does this person still have their job, and why are they still doing a sub-par performance.

Don't blow this off mail people; mail is an important thing and I'm not blaming all mail people of this offense, as I said this is the first year that I have seen a constant lack of responsibility and consideration in the mail service on campus. There is no reason for this to continue, and for all of you reading this who are equally pissed off at their quality of service, talk to the RD or the ARD of your cluster it is a problem that should not continue and you have to let them know how you feel or the people who are ignoring their responsibilities are dealt with. And for those of you who are the subject of this Ed/Op, you now know for certain that people are pissed at you and you should take that as a sign to do your job right or find somebody who can.

Nicholas Pizzolato is a Collegian Staff member

History repeating

You might, after reading some of my previous articles, be surprised to find that I voted for Nader. I am not, and never have been, a Republican. I sincerely loathe both Gore and Bush and their respective parties. I simply hate Gore and his donkeys more; I voted for Nader because I wanted to do my civic duty without joining the hypocrisy.

I think a healthy third party is necessary to break the partisan monotony that seeps out of Washington through the omnipresent media. Alas, I have unfortunate news for my fellow disenfranchised voters: the two parties will never give up their hold on power willingly. In fact I'll bet the Republicrats and Democans will shed their partisan skin to work together in any instant in which the status quo – their status quo – is threatened. Witness the exclusion of Nader from the debates.

This election cost both parties three billion dollars and counting, which is less than one percent of our yearly military budget. Someone has to foot that bill, and since we are taxed to the bone, the corporations and special interest groups gladly take away the burden from us. This means that the President is responsible to them before us....a chilling thought. Since the Green Party, and any other alternate, will probably never be able to afford an amount that obscenely steep, we are left with an endless sequence of the same faces, beaming at us from our televisions. John McCain gave us a brief shuck of spontaneity when he captured the New Hampshire primary. Unfortunately, his gospel of campaign finance reform did not sit well...and he was outspent by Bush. The more expensive elections get, the more we can be sure that the president will never represent those who did not pay handsomely. The only thing more certain is the system's perpetuity.

Don't be fooled; the same exact companies that gave money to Bush also gave money to Gore, and vice versa (although not in the same amounts). Because of this, we can be certain that no meaningful change will ever take place, and the seesaw will keep tipping back and forth, back and forth. While the seeds of the problem were sown long ago, they sprouted into a seemingly indestructible edifice that is now threatened with implosion.

In 1945, the end of World War II brought an end to war and the beginning of US dominance of the world. Faced in that year with another disarmament like that of 1919, America instead made the conscious choice to remain geared to a wartime economy, providing that the 'military industrial complex' would forever be the biggest lobbyist in politics. The existence of the Soviet Union gave us an excuse; for they would come and crush us if we did not devote two thirds of our GDP to 'defense.' The words Russian, Arab, now Chinese, have all become synonymous with 'enemy.' As Machiavelli told his prince, keeping the people on a constant wartime footing would ensure control. The special interests thus ensure that we are kept ignorant, poor and in fear, while the money keeps rolling into that 'bottomless pit' which is the Pentagon.

Our current predicament has much in common with that of the Romans of the first few centuries Anno Domini. After the brutal Punic Wars, the old Republic was doomed by the conversion of the agrarian economy to a military one. The general Sulla tried, with much bloodshed, to restore the Republic, but its institutions had rotted. Inevitably, politics followed, and far sighted Augustus put the Republic out of its misery by instituting military dictatorship. Not only did he and his fellow Caesars draw on the military for power, but on public opinion as well.

The Roman people, laughingly seen at the time to be represented by the plutocracy (as we are today, again with a chuckle), never had their interests served by the emperors. They only believed they did. The myth is encapsulated by the inscription on the base of Julius Caesar's statue, of all places: SPQR stands for 'Senatus Publiusque Romanus,' The Senate and the Roman People. Mere propaganda.

While we haven't quite reached that point, I would say that it doesn't look good. Apologists would point out that Coolidge had said, "The business of America is business." But never has the ability to control been so available to those in power.

- SIMON PONGRATZ

Howard Zinn says, "The American system is the most ingenious system of control in world history." No system has been so successful at "mollifying opposition with reforms, isolating people from one another, creating patriotic loyalty." Everybody knows that one percent of the population owns 95 percent of the wealth, but it is how they retain that wealth that is interesting. "The rest of the wealth is distributed in such a way as to turn those in the 99 percent against one another."

Now we have come to a point where our own institutions, like those of the Romans, are beginning to show signs of cracking. Something is horribly wrong here, but like Dylan's Mr. Jones, we don't quite know what it is. There is certainly no relationship between 'senatus publiusque Americanus.' We today are spoon fed more bread and circuses than the Roman people could have ever dreamt of, turning us into a mass of apathetic zombies. Any search for objectivity in the mainstream media will come up with nothing, for today, as in Rome, money will buy anything, including public opinion. The ease with which Jesse Jackson was able to whip up a furor in Florida shows how easily the public can be manipulated.

Earlier this week, I read that the Supreme Court of Florida had ruled for Gore. I don't know about anyone else, but this whole fiasco has been quite exciting for me. That ruling seems to me to be a blatant violation of two Constitutions (The US' and Florida's), as well as the separation of powers. When the courts start imposing new standards on the legislative branch, we are headed for real trouble. Augustus Gore?

The oft forgotten 5th Article of the Constitution provides that a two-thirds majority may domand a new Constitutional Convention. I suggest that we take this course, for the time may not present itself again, and at today's pace the current situation will not last much longer – it can't. Do we really want to spend three hundred billion ($300,000,000,000) on the military, while 20 percent of our children are born into poverty and our cities atrophy? Invoking article 5, we could demand a new Convention, new leaders, new standards, and more responsibility for government. Or we could let the glitches work themselves out naturally. I suggest option A.

Just today (Sunday) was the deadline for the certification of the vote in Florida, but for those of you who were expecting to feel like you have a President tomorrow, think again. The legal battles will continue. Gore has passed the point of no return, and he will fight even as his position becomes increasingly untenable. It really is the perfect ending to his political career, and it will be interesting to see how much of the edifice the former VP will bring down with him.

Information from Foxnews.com, The Twentieth Century by Howard Zinn, and Gore Vidal's United States Essays was used in this article.

Simon Pongratz is a Collegian columnist.

Whitey vs. Shady

RYAN BENHARRIS

It's the fight you've been hearing about for almost three weeks now. They've been in the news. They're constantly at one another's throats. They call each other names. They fight like a couple of elementary school children. Whatever happens in Florida is key! The winner of the never-ending debate will no doubt change all of our lives forever. It's one of the biggest news stories of all time, and it just has to stop. Of course I'm talking about Everlast vs. Eminem.

I certainly hope you didn't think I was talking about that little Presidential squabble. Compared to the war between the rappers, that's simply small potatoes. If you haven't heard, (which you probably haven't unless you have no life, and frequently visit MTV.com like I do) Eminem and Everlast don't like each other anymore. Dear Lord, what ever will we do? How will we function as a society if someone who calls himself Whitey Ford can't live in harmony with someone who calls himself Slim Shady? It's a question that will trouble us for ages.

For the sake of having nothing else to do, let's break down the fight. In the red corner, from San Francisco, CA, we have Everlast, also known as Erik Schrody, Whitey Ford, and the "Cream of the crop, who rises to the top, who never eats a pig 'cause a pig is a cop." He's the former leader of House of Pain. He's had one heart attack and several attempts on his life.

In the blue corner, from Detroit, MI we have Eminem. Also known as Marshall Mathers and Slim Shady, he's a man who can tell the future. "I'm gonna be another rapper dead for poppin off at the mouth with s—t I shouldn't have said," he predicts. "But when they kill me, I'm taking the world with me. Bitches too. You ain't nothing but a girl to me!" Ah, sweet, sweet aspirations.

Something tells me that there will be no handshakes before the start of this battle. Well, let me rephrase that, there were no handshakes before the start of this battle. Since it has been going on for so long. The fight, that MTV describes as a "lyrical battle," began when Everlast helped fellow rappers Dilated Peoples on a track called "Ear Drums Pop."

"I'll buck a 380 on ones that act shady," Everlast proclaimed. "You know you ain't the one that repped peckerwood status." What the hell does that mean? That's not an insult; it's gibberish. Remember when you were in third grade, and you used to dis everyone using made-up words that no one understood, but everyone thought you were the man because of it? Kids would be yelling, "You're a doo doo cacaface," and "I'm going to plant a tree on your mailbox." It's intelligent things like "You know you ain't the one that repped peckerwood status," that give an indication why Everlast's new album Eat at Whitey's sold about as few copies as it did. By the way, I'm willing to give my entire paycheck to anyone who can interpret any part of that entire lyric.

Apparently, there is one person who was not fooled by the irreverent ramblings of Erik Schrody – Eminem! (Who by the way wants everybody to kill. He wants everybody to kill!) Apparently Eminem hasn't learned his lesson from his fights with the Insane Clown Posse, or his mother, or his ex-wife, or...society. So he decided to fire back at Everlast. (Not in the literal sense, thank God.)

Eminem was kind enough to record a wonderful love song with his friends, and rap group D-12. The name of the masterfully crafted piece was, "Shit on You." On the B-side to the "Shit on You" single, Eminem takes the time to respond to Everlast's accusation that he was "shady" and "never obtained peckerwood status," with a tracked called, "I Remember."

"I remember when you had your first heart attack," Eminem recalls. "I was right there laughin when I heard the news. I just wish the cardiac would 'a killed you." Yeah, that's mature. Now we've moved up to fourth grade where an insult is a bit more coherent. "I hope you die you jerkhead!" Eminem had a lot more credit than Everlast did on his blasting. He went out and got quotes from incredibly credible sources. "Maybe Ice-T's right, you're a bitch." Well if Ice-T said it, then it must be true. He'd never be a hypocrite. Note: Ice-T released a song entitled, "Cop Killer." He now plays a cop on "Law and Order: Special Victims Unit."!

Eminem uses the song "I Remember" as a soap box to annihilate Everlast's integrity and pride. Of course, Whitey Ford would have none of this. It was announced last week that he has finished recording a tune called, "Whitey's Revenge." No, it's not diarrhea in Mexico, it's actually a well thought out response to Eminem's remembrance piece. He dedicates the song to Eminem's mother (Who we all know as a true saint, and dope head). Everlast targets Eminem's ex-wife Kim's promiscuity, saying, "You better check your kid for DNA." He questions Eminem's sexuality. He asks, "Will the real Slim Shady please act up," attempting to get Eminem to leave the lyrical fight behind and move it into the physical realm. That's great, because what the world really needs again is another rap war, especially one based on misogeny and homophobia. Woo Hoo!

Ryan Benharris is a Collegian Columnist

Hand Count

The word of Jaret

Here's a question: are there any colleges in New Jersey? To me, a hero is someone who brings more toilet paper just when you need it most. A hero's not a sandwich, that's just plain silly.

To all my New York friends who complain about Massachusetts, I have one word, two syllables, say it with me now: SUNY. I saw a sign on a highway that said, "Outdoor Track, 22 miles." Man, that's huge track.

I do not believe in life after death, but I do believe in death after life.

There is no blue wall in the Blue Wall, but in other developments, there is a great wall on top of the great wall.

If God is omnipotent, why did he schedule mass against football? Bad move there.

Holy Cross: tough team to play.

Newsflash: when you turn 21, you can go out to the bars. Update: you don't have to go everyday for the next month.

Oh, and speaking of stalking, I know other kids are doing it and it seems like the cool thing, but I must be honest with you, it's a lot of work.

I know Sut Jhally tells me that commercials are bad, but every time I see that snickers commercial with the Rush/Gore parody, I think that commercials are good. Consume. Consume. CONSUME.

APB: The visor thing, ya that's done.

Memo, the Budweiser "Wassup" commercials, they were fun, but like that pet hamster you never wanted, it's dead. Bury it.

A nuclear missile is not a phallic symbol; it is the ultimate phallic symbol.

Buttercup Festival entered the Collegian with a roar, and went out with a sniffle.

Collegian comic's page: tough place to play.

I saw a milk carton yesterday with Seth Avakian's face on it.

The word wicked is bad enough, but hecka? How can you get a nickname like Taco?

I have theories, but they don't hold water.

Newsflash: the hottest woman in the world works at the Hampden convenience store. AP has been notified.

If you are one of the people who have called the Collegian and talked to me because your horoscope is not in the paper, there are three things you should know before calling next time: first, contrary to published reports, most days we make them up. Second, it is true that most of the stuff we write comes true. Go figure. Third, from now on, whenever your horoscope isn't published, it will be inferred that this is the horoscope: "don't fret when people forget about you today. They are busy with more important matters. It's never personal, roll with the punches, reach for the stars and take a good step forward. Now, play nice in traffic."

Hey, umm, you-know-who... the waitress who you claim is perfection... ummm, ya, well... she might know how you feel now.

GRE question: Per square yard at UMass, which are more in number: men, women, recycle bins, squirrels?

Sing it with me now: I don't want to wait, for this obsession to be over, cause Katie Holmes isn't waiting around for you. Lyon Renharris has become somewhat of a local folk hero.

JARET BARR

Collegian sports department, tough place to play.

Third and 48 is the greatest weekly column (Every Thursday, Sports) of all time. Where else could you learn about Turkey Shooting? On that point, UMass should have a livestock judging team.

I can't go to support women's gymnastics.

A guy called from media relations and asked if we're going to support them. I told him, look, we've seen the beating that beam has taken, and that's just wood.

If the Marx's brother's comedy team consisted of Richard, Karl and Zeppo, I'd rent their movies.

Why did Charlie need Bosley? Couldn't he just call the Angels himself?

An Asteroid didn't kill the dinosaurs, Ed Cutting did... or at least he was a witness.

Tree huggers, its just such a funny visual, face it Mrs. Communist, you are one.

Hey SGA, can't we all just get along? No you say, hey why don't party down the Cape together and take pictures and, oh wait...been done.

The South Park, Bigger, Longer and Uncut is the best musical of my generation, Cool as ice not withstanding.

To answer the question, I let the dogs out.

Gambling your money is one thing. Gambling your hair, bad move.

Attacking fine arts writers about their reviews doesn't prove anything. Even if you are the Movie Editor. Speaking of that status should be measured by height.

Republicans aren't all bad some write about strippers.

The West Bank is open more than the Hatch.

If you are the guy in the Student Union yesterday who asked a girl where the laboratory is, and upon her asking which laboratory you said, "Actually I just wanted your phone number," you have brought lame to a new level.

Buy a book.

There are six Asif Sayani's their plan, world domination.

No one person could be in that many places at once.

"Richard Lucero has thrown away the season," is by far the WMUA quote of the year. Good job by you Isaac, even though you didn't even say it.

There are more ex-photo editors at this newspaper than photographers. Collegian photo: tough place to shoot.

If your mom called mad about your portrayal in a field hockey article, tell her we lost her message for Smitty, and ask if she can call again. Thanks.

Why are you still reading? Here is the fact of these semi-inside jokes, if you understood ten percent of these, you only pick up the Collegian for the crossword. If you understood 25 percent of them, you actually read the paper. Fifty percent, you know me. Eighty percent or more? you are Lyon Renharris.

Jaret Barr is a Collegian Staff Member.

Know your role

People often say that "ignorance is bliss" or that "what you don't know can't hurt you." Now, admittedly, this is sometimes true. For example, there are certain things you don't want to know about your friends, family or other loved ones. For example, no one really needs to know about your friend's roommate's sex life or hear the detailed story of your uncle's colonoscopy procedure.

However, when it comes to more serious issues, such as education or poverty or politics, it is very dangerous to be indifferent or ignorant about these things. Many people in today's society have just stopped caring or wondering about anyone but themselves. This is very apparent especially in the political arena. I have heard so many people I know say that they don't care about any of the issues in the election, and they don't want to know anything about it. Many times, these people don't even bother to go vote because they either do not know anything about the candidates or issues in the election, or they really don't care what happens as a result of the election.

JEANIE GOROLOVSKY

This makes me really sad, because so many things that our government does affect the very people who say that they "just don't care." This is especially apparent at a public university like UMass, because public education is so closely tied to government and government spending. To the people who say they don't care about who is the next president of the US or the next governor of MA, I say, you'll start caring if any of your financial aid gets cut or if we have less classes offered because the government decides to cut funding to public universities, but by then it'll be too late.

If you didn't care enough to vote for the people who will determine college funding in the first place, you really shouldn't complain when those people you did not elect do things that hurt you as a student.

So many people in today's society are so self-centered when it comes to social issues. For example, many adults I know said they would vote for Bush simply because he promised to cut more taxes than Gore. These people, however, were really ignorant of the deeper issues, such as that tax cuts mean that there will be less money for government programs like welfare and social security. Bush wants to semi-privatize social security, which is all well and good, but what happens if the plan fails and senior citizens in the future end up without any funds? And what about the fact that Bush and many people in his party want to cut funding for programs that aid poor children, like the free lunch in schools program? Sadly, many people seem so concerned about their own well-being that they really don't care about the fate of those less-privileged because they feel it doesn't affect them. Even sadder, these people are not likely to start caring until they end up in the same position of being underprivileged. In that case though, they won't be able to complain about the lack of social programs in our country because they were the voters who, in the past, were ignorant and/or indifferent enough to not vote or to vote for politicians who have very little concern for anyone who is underprivileged and cannot contribute to their campaigns, such as the poor children.

I guess the indifference and ignorance that is rampant in our society is especially making me mad now because of the elections. At first, I was really excited about the presidential election, even though Gore and Bush both do not excite me as candidates, because the election was so close. I visited CNN.com every day rooting for my candidate (one guess who that might be, and no, I did not vote for Nader, even though I considered it for a good long while). For a few days earlier this month, UMass was buzzing with people talking in an animated manor about the election, and I felt like people really cared and were getting into our country's political process. However, now, almost a month later, no one really cares anymore. Even I am having a hard time keeping my attention to the election results and the rulings coming down from the various courts. It just makes me sad that the atmosphere in our country is such that no one really cares anymore who becomes president. All that people want to do is go on with their lives pretending like it doesn't make a difference who wins the election. It's sad that our indifference has gotten us to this point of complete electoral apathy.

Now I am not writing this column to discuss Gore and Bush and the merits and failures of each candidate. I, personally, have very strong opinions about the candidates, but there have been numerous columns written already about this and I do not wish to bore the Collegian's readers further. Rather, I'd like to propose a solution to this whole mess. Why don't we just leave Clinton in office? Now to many this seems like a radical idea, and of course it's most likely not going to happen, but like to sometimes live in a happy dream world where I can imagine that neither Bush nor Gore will ever become president. To me, Clinton is a perfectly happy alternative.

Personally, I feel that Clinton has many advantages over both current presidential candidates. He's a very charismatic, personable man who can inspire and excite people (Honestly, I don't think Bush or Gore have the capacity to inspire anyone, much less an American people who are already very indifferent to politics and social issues. Clinton also obviously is an experienced politician, and he has good people skills so he is able to bargain with leaders of other countries, something that Gore and Bush would not be able to do well. And Clinton was also elected two times to office with clear majorities of both the popular and electoral vote. Neither Gore nor Bush, whichever one becomes president, will have that. Neither candidate currently has the mandate of the people, and either one will he seen as a joke and a political manipulator who got his position unfairly. Despite all the scandals he has been involved in and all the problems he's faced, Clinton can command much more respect as a leader, in my opinion, than either Bush or Gore.

Now I'm not saying that Clinton has not done things that I find reprehensible, because he has. I am not even saying that he is a good human being. However, you have to look at the alternatives of Bush, who is reportedly a past cocaine user and who has irresponsibly driven while under the influence of alcohol, and Gore, who also has questionable issues like campaign fundraising from the White House in his past. Neither candidate is a shining example of "family values." Neither candidate also seems particularly capable of handling the job of president. I'd love it if Clinton would just stay in office and continue leading the country, which I feel he has done quite well for the most part for the last eight years. Alas, Clinton staying in office is just a dream. However, hopefully, the American public will soon wake up and care and educate itself about the issues that are going on in our society, instead of people just being ignorant, indifferent, and self-centered. Maybe then we'd be able to avoid another debacle like the yet undecided Gore/Bush election in the future.

Jeanie Gorolovsky is a Collegian columnist

An innovative slip in jazzy Lupo's music

THE SLIP
Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel
Nov. 24

By Joe Cardozo
Collegian Correspondent

PROVIDENCE, RI – If you have ever seen The Slip live, then you don't need a newspaper article to tell you that they are good — you know they are. The trio, composed of brothers Brad and Andrew Barr on guitar and drums, respectively, and Marc Friedman on bass, displays a completely unique style that is balanced among the three, while allowing each to show off his skills; each is a singularly talented player.

Their improvisation-based blend of jazz, funk, reggae, and many other styles — constantly shifting moods, styles and dynamics — always leaves audiences spellbound. Last Friday night was no exception. Their long set in their hometown of Providence was very upbeat and, as always, showcased a great deal of variety, including a rare display of guitarist Brad Barr's keyboard skills.

The show was opened by Club d'Elf, an experimental jazz/hip-hop group native to the Boston area. The group, led by bassist Mike Rivard began with a groovy bass-drum combo. Layers of multiple sound including percussion, effect-laden guitar and saxophone and samples followed. The sound is oddly appealing, and bizarre, but unfortunately stagnates very quickly. Each song sounded like the previous, and I found myself longing for their set to end. The only bonus was the guest appearance on drums by Kenwood Dennard, the famed fusion drummer who has played with everyone from Miles Davis to Dizzy Gillespie to Jaco Pastorius to classical Indian guitar virtuoso Prasanna.

The Slip finally emerged to a roar from the packed audience. This was the largest audience I've seen at a Slip show. It seems that the jamband audience has finally come to recognize The Slip for what they are—one of the most talented groups of live performers in this country. Though their most recent CD, Does (Flying Frog Records), is a good collection of their songs, it does not offer the listener the freedom that their live show does.

They opened the show with a song that constantly changed its time signature at Brad Barr's cues. The show continued with a powerful rendition of "So Dope" — a high-speed funk tune written by Friedman that keeps all three players on their toes. The show also included a version of the folky and melodic "Honey Melon" that continued for over a half-hour, allowing Brad Barr to switch from playing a Fender Rhodes electric piano back to guitar, and allowed the band to move from the folk core into reggae styles, surf-rock styles, and a break into the infamous "Secret Agent Man." Barr's skills on the keyboard were so surprising and superb, that it seemed as if he could never play guitar again, and the band would go on, just as well as they always have.

Though all three members are talented enough to lead a band themselves, The Slip is a collective, seemingly of one mind, that moves together shifting styles and moods so smoothly, that the audience often forgets what just happened, and are surprised when The Slip break back into the chorus of a song that we thought had finished long before. They are an experience that should not be missed. If you haven't seen them yet, they will be playing in William College Dec. 1.

If you can't make that show, they will be coming to the Iron Horse in Northampton Dec. 30, and will be playing at the Somerville Theater in Boston on New Year's Eve. They will also be playing the Wetlands in New York City as part of their New Year's tour. The New Year's cluster of shows will open with ThaMuseMeant. You won't be disappointed.

Guest's Best in Show triumphs

Best in Show
Directed by Christopher Guest with Parker Posey and Michael Hitchcock
Playing at Pleasant Street Theatre

By Julie Burrell
Collegian Correspondent

Christopher Guest triumphs again with Best in Show, the latest in his string of hilarious mockumentary films. Waiting for Guffman, which Guest starred in, co-scripted and directed and This is Spinal Tap, in which he also performed and co-scripted. Both have achieved cult status. Best in Show certainly lives up to the pressure put on it by the success of its precursors. Just when you thought that this genre has been tapped dry, instead, it's been brought to life again by Guest's directing and the superb cast (most of whom were in Guffman), which makes It difficult to believe that the entire film wasn't completely improvised.

The Mayflower Kennel's dog show brings obsessive dog owners to compete for The Best in Show title, the highest honor in the dog show world. The film follows a group of these owners from their respective homes across the country to Philadelphia. Parker Posey and Michael Hitchcock play the yuppies Meg and Hamilton Swan, who fell in love over Starbucks cappuccinos. J. Crew and L.L. Bean catalogues. The overly neurotic couple's Weimaraner acts as a surrogate child, and even has her own psychiatrist and treadmill.

John Michael Higgins and Michael McKean play a catty gay couple that adores kimonos and their two Shi Tzus. They pamper the dogs almost as much as they pamper themselves. Catherine O'Hara is Cookie Fleck, a woman with a promiscuous past and Eugene Levy is Gerry Fleck, Cookie's jealous husband who has two left feet (literally). The Flecks drive from Florida, where they compose songs about their terrier, Winkie. Jennifer Coolidge plays an Anna Nicole Smith knock-off ditz who has married an ancient millionaire, allowing her to pamper her poodle and hire the intimidating dog trainer played by June Lynch.

COURTESY OF CAPITOL ROCK
Parker Posey and Michael Hitchcock star in Christopher Guest's latest, Best in Show.

Christopher Guest takes an ensemble role, a smaller part than Guffman's Corky, to play Harlan Pepper, a slow-talking Southerner who loves fishing and his bloodhound. The announcer for the Mayflower is Fred Willard, who's inappropriate comments ("It's hard to believe that in some countries, these dogs are owned") and astounding lack of knowledge about dogs and dog shows ease the tension of the competition and leave his co-announcer stunned.

The array of characters aren't all exaggeration and parody. We come to care about them. They are real people. We all know someone who has taken their love of dogs (or anything for that matter) to the next level: obsession. Perhaps, we are that person. The cast of Best in Show is as layered as the characters in Guffman and Spinal Tap. And it is because they are so real, because we can see our own faults in these people, that they are so funny, likable and easy to watch during the more serious plot-moving parts of the movie.

This film lends itself to multiple viewings, and will have you reciting quotes from it for weeks afterwards. When compared with recent Hollywood fare that passes itself off as comedy, Best in Show stands alone in its quality humor.

Do celebrities really make the best criminals?

By Ryan Benharris
Collegian Staff

Irony rears its ugly little head on what will perhaps be hailed as the best album of the year. "I'm a criminal," Eminem says on the last track of his critically acclaimed, The Marshall Mather's LP. "You're God damn right, I'm a criminal."

Yes, crime and celebrities: two words connected by much more than just their first letter. In the past week, we saw two very famous figures, Ol' Dirty Bastard and Robert Downey, Jr. have major run-ins with the law. Throughout history, public figures have thrust themselves into the dregs of the legal system with millions of eyes peering at them with disappointment.

Ol' Dirty Bastard

Robert Downey Jr.

Robert Downey, Jr., who was arrested this weekend for falling off the wagon, may be the biggest surprise of the two. Instead of stuffing and pumpkin pie, Downey had cocaine and methamphetamines for Thanksgiving. Apparently he doesn't like the sleepy effect that turkeys cause. After his attempt at rehabilitation in 1999, his life seemed to be headed in the right direction. He recently became a regular cast member on FOX's "Ally Mcbeal," and landed the lead role in this summer's Broadway production of Hamlet (now, we begin to wonder whether he just took the part for the free poison on tip of the sword). The possibility of Downey having legal problems again was certainly not far off, but he definitely looked as if he had matured beyond the man who was found past out on the floor of his neighbor's home that he illegally trespassed into, and then refused to give a urine sample. I guess it's back to the good old days, eh Rob?

In case you missed ODB's story, his is one of fleeting sadness. Last month, he left a rehab center in Philadelphia, making him a full-fledged fugitive. In an extremely intelligent move, ODB showed up last week on stage with his friends, Wu-Tang Clan only to elude authorities again. What followed was a, "Hard target search of every gas station, residence, warehouse, farmhouse, henhouse, outhouse and doghouse" around.

ODB was finally apprehended on Monday at McDonalds. He was hanging out in the parking lot signing autographs, and the manager of the restaurant became sick of the huge crowds, so he called the police. When the police arrived, ODB asked them if they wanted his autograph. It was a sad day for ODB fans.

So back to the original question: why are celebrities so consumed by criminal intent? It must have something to do with an incredible desire for notice. Many people become entertainers just so people will pay attention to them. When people like Ol' Dirty Bastard are tired of being seen as one character, they transform into another one. The person he transforms into is one of malice and destruction.

Of course another reason why celebrities may have a tendency to lean towards crime is because crime will immediately follow them wherever they go. Robert Downey, Jr. has a much better opportunity to get his hands on cocaine than he would if he did not have fame and especially money. The fact that he clearly has a drug addiction problem gets pushed aside because of the person that he is. Since celebrities are invited into public homes, they have no right to mess up. Downy and ODB will never simply be drug addicts. They will forever be, celebrity drug addicts.

These people are place in the possible position to act as role models and they severely fail in the example that they set. Unfortunately their failure has a much heavier impact on their own personal lives than it will ever have on any of ours. Robert Downey, Jr. and ODB must face the consequences of their unacceptable actions. We can sit back and laugh at them as much as we want, but the truth is that they have very sad problems that will only get worse without proper treatment.

Coldplay's debut impresses

COLDPLAY
Parachutes
Netwerk

Tom Frazer
Collegian Correspondent

Okay, I'm puzzled. I really don't understand it. If you do, please help me. I am really struggling.

This is it, you see. I am homesick. I've been here for almost three months. I like America. I really do. The big food portions, entertaining election shenanigans etc., but I miss my mates. I miss people telling me they love me. I miss my stupid record collection, my boring house and my comfortable life.

Nevertheless, life goes on. I sit down to write this review. I hope I will not like the record. I really want to vent some anger. I want to punch this little keypad into oblivion. I want it to realize that I am fed up. I want to write in CAPITALS. I want "Britpop's next best thing" to be derivative. I want it to be technically naive, rhythmically monotonous and harmonically tedious. More importantly I want it to remind me of what I have traveled four and a half thousand miles to avoid: the same old, same old. I want to avoid Britpop's next best thing like my life depends on it. To hell with The Stone Roses; sod Oasis, they let me down; damn Radiohead they went all weird on me.

So I put on Parachutes by Coldplay. The debut album by a young London based band that met at university, and took over the UK charts. The album contains the much-lauded single "Yellow" and nine other pop/rock ditties. Mid-tempo, simple base line tunes, with two guitars, one vocal part, and the odd piano bit here and there. The tunes are technically simple, rhythmically familiar, harmonically reassuring and utterly wonderful.

I don't understand.

The first song, "Don't Panic" picks me up. I move from wallowing in my own introspective self-pity, to feeling like a swallow high above the tedium, the mud and grime. Life is pristine. I want to explore again. My mind starts to soar. I want to feel like this forever. Every word or chord, symbol crash or base thud builds me up again.

How does music do this? For this music is great. I might not be revolutionary or progressive, but it is nevertheless incredible. If it had been terrible, my transatlantic exile would have been legitimized, but it's not. So shouldn't I feel worse? Shouldn't I miss home even more? But I don't. I don't get it.

There are at least five standout tracks. Singles. No wonder Coldplay have won a cabinet full of glittering prizes. The craft of the tunes is chilling. Even the title perfectly encapsulates the work. "Shiver" makes you do just that (I know a review is meant to be critical—all irony and mocking sarcasm. I know this all might sound cheesy, but this is how I feel. Honesty is the best policy my mum used to say).

The album finishes with "Everything's not lost" which also fits perfectly. This is a phenomenal debut. I don't care if Coldplay doesn't record another album, then they can't let me down. They can't taint this perfection. I think the record has had this effect because it makes me feel whole. It makes me feel solid again. It doesn't matter that they are from home. It is just good music. It has soul, depth, and sincerity. Don't panic—everything's not lost. That's right, just right. Thank you.

www.dailycollegian.comwww.dailycollegian.comUse It

Collegian Arts and Living. Bring It On.

Congratulations to our Shopping Spree Winners
$1000 Winner
Kathleen Gauser - Northampton
$250 Winner
April Andrews - Amherst
$250 Winner
Kathleen Casey - Williamstown
Amherst Northampton Williamstown

ATTENTION Upcoming Grads
The New England Center FOR CHILDREN
Careers in Special Education
The New England Center for Children is a winner of the U.S. Dept. of Education's National Award Program for Professional Development. We are a state-of-the-art residential school and treatment center for children and adults with autism, developmental disabilities and behavior disorders. The Center attracts students and scholars from around the world for our programs, research and training opportunities.
We have current and upcoming openings for entry-level Teachers. We are looking for talented Bachelor-level candidates who are willing to work hard for the experience of a lifetime while we pay for almost your entire Master's Degree!
The Center offers on-site GRADUATE PROGRAMS in SPECIAL EDUCATION and PSYCHOLOGY through Simmons College and Northeastern University. Support for other graduate work is also available for NURSING, SPEECH PATHOLOGY, COUNSELING, HUMAN SERVICE ADMINISTRATION and other areas of developmental disabilities.
Other benefits include:
• Competitive salaries and 4-5 weeks vacation
• Competitive medical and dental benefits
• Employee assistance program
• Relocation assistance
• Housing available
• On-site day care center
To find out more, forward your resume to: The New England Center for Children, 33 Turnpike Road, Southborough, MA 01772. No phone calls, please. EOE/AA
Visit our Web Site at http://www.NECC.org

LIVE MUSIC
MCMURPHY'S Welcomes
The Guitar Dudes
Every Wednesday
NO COVER!
Positive ID Required

Tuition Bills Not Arrived
Welcome to The Site Of The New Millenium-- where MONEY and EXCITEMENT keep GROWING!
Brighten Your Holiday Play
Solveandwin.com
Come Unravel Our Web!
Deadline Dec. 15, 2000

U.S. team seeks a World Cup bid

Exactly two weeks ago, the United States National Men's Soccer Team walked onto a wet, soft and bumpy field on the tiny Caribbean island of Barbados with a lot to lose. They knew that they needed a win in order to retain any hope of qualifying for the 2002 World Cup in Japan/South Korea. Despite the fact that the Americans had crushed the Bajans 7-0 at Foxboro Stadium back in August, they were clearly nervous – and for good reason.

Coach Bruce Arena's men had not won a game on foreign soil since January, and had taken only one of a possible six road points in the semifinal round of qualification. An American loss would ensure that the Americans would miss the World Cup for the first time since 1990. The effects of missing the World Cup on soccer in this country would be disastrous. This was a prospect Clint Mathis and the rest of the U.S. squad was unwilling to face.

After a nervous and poorly played opening 60 minutes, Mathis took a feed from striker Joe-Max Moore and calmly placed his shot into the open net from six yards out to give the Americans a 1-0 lead. Thirty minutes later referee Noel Bynoe blew his whistle for the end of the game with the score 4-0. The U.S. had escaped thanks to goals from Mathis, Ernie Stewart, Cobi Jones and Ante Razov and was now through to the next round of qualification.

Now all that stands between the U.S. and a spot in the first ever World Cup to be held in Asia is the Final Round of CONCACAF qualification. Six teams will play 10 matches each (five home and home series) with the top three going on to Japan/South Korea. Joining the Americans in the group will be Honduras, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, archrival Mexico and the winner of a playoff between Costa Rica and Guatemala.

Three months from now on February 27, the Red White and Blue will play host to Mexico in its opening qualification match, where losing will not be an option. Around the world, the mantra for qualifying matches is "Win at home and draw on the road." And if the Americans are to follow this and secure three important points, they will do so with a host of new faces.

JUSTIN PEARSON

After the Barbados match, midfielder Tab Ramos announced his retirement from international soccer, joining fellow veterans like Alexi Lalas, John Harkes and Eric Wynalda. Even 2000 MLSCup MVP Tony Meola, who played such a solid game against Barbados, is likely to be forced into a spectator's role come February. These were the men (then boys) who put U.S. soccer back on the map, and now they are handing it over to a new generation of talent.

The future looks bright for the Americans, who were able to take four points in their last two matches despite the suspension of coach Bruce Arena (who will also miss the Mexico game) and a slew of injuries. Also, the two biggest stars of this new generation did not even step onto the field during the crucial 4-0 triumph two weeks ago in Barbados. Midfielder Claudio Reyna, the American captain, was sitting out the final game of a two-game suspension for criticizing an official following a 2-1 loss in Costa Rica.

The 27-year old Reyna, who was named as one of the 100 most important Americans entering the 21st century by the New York Times, is the creative engine that runs the U.S. midfield. If he struggles, the team will as well. He will be asked to play a more attacking role than he does with his club team, Glasgow Rangers of Scotland, and will need to keep a cool head if he is to add to the 72 caps which he has already amassed.

Possibly joining Reyna will be 18-year old striker Landon Donovan. Back in October, in his first and only appearance for the full national team, Donovan scored one goal and set up another in the Americans 2-0 win over Mexico in Los Angeles. The match served to enhance Donovan's already growing reputation as the future of American soccer. Last year Donovan was named MVP of the under 17 World Cup in New Zealand and he played a pivotal role as the U.S. under 23 team qualified for the Olympic Games in Sydney.

Donovan will join fellow youngsters like Mathis, John O'Brien, Chris Klein and Eddie Lewis to help form the new core of the U.S. National team along side more experienced players like Reyna, Brian McBride, Eddie Pope and goalie Kasey Keller. If the Americans want to advance to the World Cup, each of these player swill play an important role.

But in order for these new guys to get a chance, a lot of the older guys may have to step aside. Midfielders Richie Williams and Cobi Jones each came off the bench in Barbados and a similar fate is probably in store for fellow veterans like Razov, Meola and possibly even Imie Stewart. Arena's toughest task will probably be dealing with the egos of some of these men who do not want to be replaced. If he can do this without creating a lot of friction in the U.S. camp, then they should reach their fourth consecutive World Cup. But if turmoil should arise within the team and Arena does not deal with it properly, then the road to Japan/South Korea will be all that much more bumpy.

Eleven years ago in Trinidad and Tobago and group of baby faced American college kids achieved the unthinkable and qualified for this country's first World Cup in 40 years. Now a new crop of kids, just as young, but this time much more experienced will attempt to repeat history and secure a spot at World Cup 2002. Coincidentally, the Americans last game in the qualifying stage will once again be held in Trinidad and Tobago. Arena believes that it will all come down to this last game and he hopes that history will repeat itself and the Americans will be able to book themselves a ticket to Japan/South Korea in 2002.

Justin Pearson is a Collegian columnist

■ hoops

continued from page 10

cruciate ligament in his left knee last March. Slowly but shortly "Googs" will be back to playing one hundred percent.

For Philadelphia, it has been amazing to see how Larry Brown and superstar Allen Iverson have coexisted on the same team. There obviously is a simple cure for bickering and the annoying rumors of dismissal from an organization – it's winning.

Iverson has stopped promoting his new rap album and started to focus on the challenge at hand – winning an NBA championship. His play has improved greatly in an ironic way – his scoring average has decreased from last season immensely. He is averaging 21.5 ppg this season, while last season he averaged 28.4 ppg. The reason for the decease in scoring is because Iverson is slowly evolving into more of a team-orientated player. He is attempting less field goals a game and averaging more assists than last season.

Throughout his NBA career, critics have labeled Iverson's game as selfish. Now that Iverson has his team atop the NBA standings, he is being viewed as a gritty, on-the-court leader for the Sixers.

NBA executives should take a close look into how Sixers president Pat Croce and Suns president Jerry Colangelo run their respective organizations and possibly mirror their actions.

Yes, improving your team is essential in today's game now that free-agency has become a more important part of the NBA than making free-throws. However, as the weary cliche says "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

Croce and Colangelo have listened to the euphemism and as a result, they had the audacity to keep their rosters in tact. Now they can not get those smiles off their faces.

Glen Straub is a Collegian columnist.

■ volleyball

continued from page 10

sidering UMass fought in eight full five-set matches. But it can be done.

"I think if you ask any of the student-athletes the highlight for them would be the Temple match," Kenny said. "That was a really nice win for us. I can't really pick a highlight. This is probably one the most enjoyable years I've had coaching."

There were many players, both starting and coming off the bench, who made major impacts, junior Janeen DeMarte, an outside hitter who smacked the junk out of the ball, consistently brought a competitive fire with her onto the court. Clare Baxter's solid network made opposing offenses work a little bit harder for their points. Jen Davis's consistent outside play was just another weapon that Kenny was able to utilize in the team's quest for a W.

Rebecca Hasson

Jenni Drennan

Freshmen Kuulei Kamanao, Nitia Small, Kelly Lewis and Lindsay Bailey all showed great potential on the court competing this year while Crystal Kirk was redshirted for the purpose to better learn the game.

Good players and good people are hard to come by, and Kenny was lucky to have both on her roster this season. The losses of Hasson and Drennan are huge; there is no doubt about it. It's hard to fill the shoes of leadership, but it must be done. Kenny has the potential on her roster that will hopefully enable her and assistant coach Cindy Gregson to bring this program to the next level. Although it won't be easy, it will be exciting.

"You don't want to say that you had a favorite team," Kenny said. "I just enjoyed coaching this team every day. We didn't have a lot of bad days, and that was probably the best attribute from start to finish that we had.

"There's no regrets," she added. "I don't regret anything. I think we can take the next step in this program. I hope they feel like that by the way they ended this year. I really feel that this team, night in and night out, gave a good effort. Maybe they did as well as they can. And that's really all you can ask for."

■ newcomers

continued from page 10

tonight," O'Brien said. "That's something we expect out of her. She plays hard every time she's out on the floor. She just needs to continue her improve her communication on defense."

Guard Cleo Foster is going to see more and more time as the season progresses. Her improvement throughout the team's out-of-conference schedule will critical to the team's play in Atlantic 10 competition.

One of weaknesses for the Minutewomen this season has been their difficulty to handle the press. That has been due to a lack of players who can bring the ball up the court while being pressured. Senior captain Kathy Coyner has been the savior as far as this problem has persisted, but O'Brien has said that she is looking for players to take the heat off of Coyner, most notably Foster.

When A-10 competitors scout the Minutewomen, they are going to see that UMass has trouble bringing the ball up the court. If they see that only Coyner can handle the point guard responsibilities, the senior co-captain will be the focus of every team's full-court press. It is up to Foster to step up and manage some of that load in order to keep Coyner fresh and to keep the ball moving up the court and past the press.

Lastly, Glamora Maeweather notched three rebounds during her career-high nine minutes last night. The forward from Illinois provides a sense of depth and versatility in the frontcourt for O'Brien while bringing an aggressive attitude with her.

For a young team, UMass is playing well, and its newcomers have a lot to do with that. Divandi comes off the bench to grab rebounds and put back offensive miscues. Harris comes off the bench to hit the outside shot – usually the three. Foster comes in to bring the ball up the court and dish out assists. And Maeweather is available to provide some relief for forward Caroline Nehls and center Jeniffer Butler.

Championship basketball teams don't run five players deep – it's the role players off the bench who can make or break a game. If UMass newcomers continue to improve, the Minutewomen will surprise a lot of people when A-10 play begins in January.

■ women's hoops

continued from page 10

ing time – but she was disappointed in what she saw.

"In the last ten minutes of the game everyone got their opportunity," she said. "If I haven't played all year and my coach puts me in – I am playing with reckless abandon. I am doing everything I am supposed to do. I'm not trying to shoot the ball every time I get it. And that's what we got tonight, which is a little disappointing for me."

There were hardly any bright spots in the second part of this basketball game. For the Minutewomen, Siri Livandi was the most consistent player on the floor, scoring four in the first half and seven in the second. She also grabbed three rebounds and made that same number of steals. At 12:02 of the first half, Livandi knocked the ball away from Dartmouth's Stephanie Kinnear and took it the length of the floor for the easy layup. The rest of her baskets came from post moves in the paint.

Freshman Paige Harris made some noise in the first frame connecting on all three of her attempts from behind the arc. Harris' nine points to the baseline turned around each trees from the corner off of a cross-court pass.

Jen Butler added 10 points, but the sophomore wound up two boards shy from completing her fourth double-double of the season.

Senior Kathy Coyner tied Livandi with a team-high 11 points, gathering four assists on the way. Coyner sat on the bench for the majority of the second half and said that, at times, it was difficult to watch her teammates making the mistakes they were making.

"In practice, sometimes I have to show them what to do," Coyner said. "But I think it was good that I had to sit there and watch them because they have to learn."

Added O'Brien, "We've played three games where it's been pretty much nip and tuck. It took us until the last ten minutes of the UNC Charlotte game to pull away. Even then, it wasn't a situation where you felt like you could take your starters out because you didn't know what your second group was going to do. This is really the first time we've had an opportunity to play in this kind of game. It's something that worries you a little bit in a certain degree but at the same time … you have to learn lessons with a young basketball team and today we learned some lessons."

DAN SANTILLI/COLLEGIAN
Kathy Coyner guided the UMass women's basketball team in its game against Dartmouth last night.

■ big ten

continued from page 10

seriously tested against Dick Bennett's hard-nosed defensive squad. The Badgers have a senior dominated team that is now totally comfortable in the motion offense. Mike Kelley and Mark Vershaw are back from last year's Final Four squad and so is the tenacious defense.

Maryland will have trouble defending the motion offense, especially when compared to the run and gun styles of the ACC but in the end the Terps just have too much firepower for the Badgers. Prediction: Maryland, 70-62.

Penn State at North Carolina State

There are few things viewers can take for certainty in this game. The first is Joe Crispin won't miss a shot, and the second is the rest of the Lions squad will throw up its share of bricks.

Crispin is a legitimate sharpshooter and Penn State certainly has the edge in experience, but the Wolfpack have a very talented, albeit inexperienced backcourt.

North Carolina player of the year Scooter Sherrill is one of the most lethal backcourt recruits in the country, joining him at guard is Charles Guidry, who is nicknamed "Trey" for one very obvious reason.

State will depend largely on its youngsters to step up and show some calm in adverse circumstances. Crispin will obviously light it up, but he will need help from his teammates to tame the pack. Prediction: N.C. State, 68-60.

Minnesota at Florida State

Wednesday's battle of the conference doormats is between the Seminoles and the Golden Gophers, and it features basically nobody.

Florida State returns point guard DeIvon Arrington, while the Gophers bring back four of last year's starters.

The Gophers will win this game on experience alone, because what this match up lacks is talent. Prediction: Minnesota, 56-50.

Matthew F. Sacco is a Collegian columnist.

If you are interested in joining the Collegian Sports Department, come down and speak with Bryan Smith or Kobo. We are always looking for talented writers

www.dailycollegian.com

Sports. This is where it all happe
WOW

SPORTY. Awwww yeah!

Unplanned Pregnancy?
CALL ALTERNATIVES
Free Pregnancy Tests
556-3000 Northampton
774-6010 Greenfield
• Information
• Options Counseling
• Support
All services free & confidential
28 Federal St., Greenfield
1 Round House Plaza, Northampton

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
On-campus contacts
Sunchase Travel Services
1-800-648-4849
www.sstravel.com
Josh @ 413-549-4514

RELAX & REJUVENATE before the finals!
with some YOGA and MEDITATION.
Come for The Art of Living - Healing Breath Workshop
sponsored by the UMASS YOGA & MEDITATION CLUB
• 6 sessions for deep relaxation, greater energy, increased awareness and fun ☺
• Brings the mind to the present moment and will let you give your 100% to the finals!
• Held in about 100 countries - recognized by the United Nations & W.H.O.
• No experience needed. Everyone welcome!
When: Dec 1(starts @7pm) Dec 6 3 hour sessions daily. Where: UMass, LGRT 1033
For more information: ☎ Durgesh 665-8635 ☎ Rashmi 253-4183
Email: durgesh@nova.astro.umass.edu Web: http://www.artoflivng.org/colleges/
Free introductory session (optional)! UMass Campus Center 7-8 pm Thu Nov 30 Rm. 811
CALL TO ARRANGE SPECIAL SESSIONS IN YOUR DORM OR CLUB!

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

EMT Training Tuesday and Thursday 6-10 Call 545-1885 for information. Learn to save a life!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Ilesa of Amherst invites you and returning Baha'i students to the Feast of Izzat-Might. Sat 9/9 starting with brunch @ 10:30am. Call 549-1666 for transportation or directions.

Participants Needed for a 3 Credit Class on Exploring Differences & Common Ground Sections offered: Race and Ethnicity Dialogue Men and Women Dialogue Enroll by 9/18/2000 at 159 Hills South For more information call Adena, 545-4192

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Northampton Center 4 bedroom $1,100. 6 bedroom $1,500 253-7436

AUTO FOR SALE

1991 Toyota P/U 4 cyl $900 587-0524

VOLKSWAGEN JETTA $3,000 1987, 135,000 miles 4 door, 5 speed, like new 253-7732 after 4:00 pm

96 Jeep Grand Cherokee V8, loaded, killer sound system, warranty. $17,900. 586-2166

AUTO FOR SALE

Excellent Student Car! 1988 Merc Tracer Hatchback, new gas-tank, recent tires, exhaust. Needs emergency break for sticker. $1500 obo 413-665-3630

1981Mazda 626 loaded sports coupe $750 and 1984 Nissan Sentra $350 Neg. Must Sell 256-1708

COMPUTERS

Dell Dimension XPS-R450: mint condition, tons of features - call rob for pricing and details - 549-4275

Pentium Computer $99, Pentium Laptops $399 & up. Warranty. Call 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

FREE PIZZA with every work shift. Apply at Bells Pizza. 65 University Dr. 549-1311 - Drivers, cooks, days - nights

Full/Part time help weekdays and weekends for Bioshelters Inc. Aquaculture Department. Great learning environment for Fisheries and Wildlife students. Call 413-549-3558 or Fax 413-549-9945

Pizza Makers/Drivers Make $10-17 an hour. Flexible hours. The best place to work. Real cool crew. Call Domnio's Pzza. 256-8911

EMPLOYMENT

FLEXIBLE PART - TIME Research Interviewers Evening and weekend shifts are eavailable 20hrs/wk minimum. PVTA accessible. Excellent reading and speaking skills required. Some computer experience helpful. $7.00 to start with regular merit raises. For more information contact: Abt Associates, Inc. Paul Bebo Recruiting Coordinator 1-800-792-4514 paul_bebo@abtassoc.com Equal Opportunity Employer, M/F

GET PAID Do you read Maxium, FHM or Playboy? If so shred, em! Because here comes FIZZLE, The hottest new mens magazine in the country. We are looking for college students to join "The Fizzle Commandos Promotional Team" earn cash prizes, free gear & more to become a Fizzle Commando, call our NY office at 718-380-2229 or email us at editor@fizzlemag.com

Immediate Openings Dishwashers wanted for busy brew pub. Good pay, set hours. Apply in person at Amherst Brewing Company 24 N.Pleasant St.

EMPLOYMENT

CSS Excellent Employment Opportunites CSS is a professional service that works with some of the most prestigious companies in the valley. We offer FT, PT, and T-H opportunities in the following areas: Administrative Support Data Entry Operator Entry Level Management Front Office Support Customer Service Representative CSS Proudly offers holiday/vacation pay, medical insurance and direct deposit. Call today for immediate consideration, or visit our web sit at: www.cssit.com Corporate Staffing Solutions 126 Northampton Street, Suite G Easthampton, MA 01027 (413) 529-7100

Housekeeping Flexible job in Hadley 4-6hrs. per week $10hr. 413-584-8312

Painter own vehicle $8-$12 Steve 290-7161 work around schedule bonuses

Lifeguard & Swim Instructors wanted. Town of Amherst looking for certified lifeguard & swim instructors. $7.66-$8.86 per hour. Contact Tim Derose at 256-4065

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Preschool experience helpful. Amherst Montessori School 253-3101

WORK STUDY OPPORTUNITIES ABOUND JOIN THE UMASS HOCKEY TEAM Coach Don Cahoon is looking for work-study students who are interested in working with the Hockey team in a number of different capacities. Earn money while helping The Minutemen Hockey Team! Opportunities range from administrative assistant to team manager assistants. Computer skills, audio/video experience, and past office experience are preferred, but not necessary. All undergrad and graduate students are welcome. If you are interested, please call Lisa Kennedy at (413) 545-5175, or stop by the Hockey office located in Room 307 of the Mullins Center.

BE A PART OF THE TEAM THAT HELPS BUILD THE TEAM!

Counter Help Wanted Minimum 20hrs per week. Apply in person at Rao's Coffee

Now Hiring at Kai Chi Resturant. Apply within After 5:00pm 586-2774

EMPLOYMENT

Kids Sports/Adult Kinetics. Now hiring personal trainers. Degree or certification required. Call 586-0633 ext. 112 Ask for Jim

Technical Assistant Computer software firm seeks detail-oriented, accurate, organized person w/strong analytical and computer skills. Intermediate MS Office skills required. See www.remi.com/jobs for job description. Contact: Fred Treyz, REMI, 306 Lincoln Ave., Amherst, MA 01002, or fax: 413-549-1038, or e-mail: info@remi.com

Movers: Moving company is hiring for moving positions. Prefer to begin training as soon as possible. Good attitudes are a must. Full and part time available. Raises commensurate with performance. Call 413-584-4746

Baker Part-time early morning hours. No experience necessary apply in person at Rao's Coffee - 17 Kellog Ave. Amherst

DP DOUGH is hiring drivers & kitchen help. Apply at DP Dough in downtown Amherst.

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals. Free delivery. 253-9742

FOR SALE

SKI CHEAP! All East season passes $359 before 10/15! Call Jen 546-7387

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING CLASSES START SOON STUDENT DISCOUNTS 1-800-U-CAN-MIX WWW.UNIVERSITY-BARTENDING.COM SPACE IS LIMITED CALL FOR INFORMATION!!!

MISCELLANEOUS

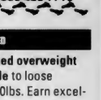
Klub Kai now booking for parties. Call Cheng 586-2774 after 4:00pm

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION

Jazz Piano Teacher Offering fall lessons, beginner to advanced, wide range of styles. Contact Stephen page at 549-6541

MUSIC LESSONS All instruments, styles. Free buses, parking. Red Barn Music Studio 256-8899

TRAVEL



WANTED

Wanted overweight people to loose 20-400lbs. Earn excellent income. 1-800-765-9582

TEACHER WANTED

For Independent Study. Student seeks Umass professor to help with independent study. Needs to know HTML and help design Website. PLEASE CALL Sarah 253-5176

Need to Advertise?

You Found the Place!

It is Easy!

Just Call 545-3500 or Come Down to The Daily Collegian Located in The Campus Center Basement!

WANT TO WORK AT THE COLLEGIAN? STOP BY OUR OFFICE.....because

you can use jock font too!!!

BOOKBUCKS From Bookworks

Every time you buy $15 worth of books from Bookworks,* you get a stamp on your card.* When you get ten stamps, cash in your card for a free $20 UStore gift certificate!

*Not Good for Textbooks and Cancellations

University Store UMass Campus Center 413 - 545 - 2618

UStore CAMPUS CENTER

Just another way that WE GIVE 100%

We give all of our profits to support University Programs

HSCN 4 Hosting Services Cable Network

2	HSCN Bulletin Board		21	Gavel to Gavel
3	CBS/3	Hartford	22	NBC/22 Springfield
4	CBS/4	Boston	23	CNN Headline News
5	ABC/5	Boston	24	CNN
6	PBS/57	Springfield	25	CNN Fn
7	HSCN	Movie Ch.	26	CNN Si
8	UPN/20	Hartford	27	TBS
9	Weather Channel		28	BET
10	NBC/30 New Britain		29	College TV Network
11	Fox/61	Hartford	30	Univision
12	PBS/24	Hartford	31	Comedy Central
13	WSCH & HSCN		32	Cartoon Network
14	International		33	TV Land
15	UMass Academic TV		34	C-Span
16	WB/New Haven		35	ZDTV (Tentative)
17	Sundance		36	Bloomberg Financial Network
18	The Learning Channel		37	History Channel
19	UVC-TV19		38	HSCN Programming
20	ABC/40 Springfield

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — NOVEMBER 29, 2000

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	32	Necessary Evil	Jim Carrey	G. Auremma	Women's College Basketball: GW at Conn.			Sting – Brand New Day Live at Universal Amphitheater				Poetry Conn.
WFSB	3	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Hollywood Sq.	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	★★ "A Perfect Murder" (1998, Suspense) Michael Douglas			News	Late Show
WBZ	4	4	News	CBS News	Hollywood Sq.	Ent. Tonight	Bette (N)	Welcome-N.Y.	★★ "A Perfect Murder" (1998, Suspense) Michael Douglas			News	Late Show
WCVB	5	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	David Blaine: Frozen in Time		Nightline
WLVI	6		Sabrine-Witch	Clueless	Friends	Nanny	Dawson's Creek (In Stereo)		Felicity (N) (In Stereo)	News		Friends	Sudden-Susan
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	Christmas-Rockefeller		West Wing "Galileo" (In Stereo)	Law & Order "Amends" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		8	7th Heaven (In Stereo)		Street Smarts	Arrest & Trial	Star Trek: Voyager (N)		Star Trek: Voyager (N)	News	Arrest & Trial	Blind Date	Street Smarts
WVIT		10	News	NBC News	Extra (N)	Hollywood	Christmas-Rockefeller		West Wing "Galileo" (In Stereo)	Law & Order "Amends" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	11	Simpsons	Frasier	Seinfeld	Friends	Malcolm-Mid.	Normal, Ohio	Street "Hostile Makeover" (N)	News		Friends	Frasier
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel Fortune	Jeopardy!	Christmas-Rockefeller		West Wing "Galileo" (In Stereo)	Law & Order "Amends" (N)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	6	World News		Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Amanpour		Roy Orbison & Friends – Black & White Night			Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	57	20	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Frasier	Who Wants to Be a Millionaire		Drew Carey	Spin City	David Blaine: Frozen in Time	News	Nightline
WSBK	38		Judge Judy	Judge Judy	Seinfeld	Frasier	Star Trek: Voyager (N)		Star Trek: Voyager (N)		Frasier Mad Abt. You	Spin City	Spin City
WTBS	42		Roseanne	Roseanne	Fresh Prince	Fresh Prince	Ripley's Believe It or Not!		WCW Thunder			Ripley's Believe It or Not!
A&E	11		Night Court	Newsradio	Law & Order "Self-Defense"		Biography: Henry Winkler		Behind Closed Doors		Investigative Reports	Law & Order "Bitter Fruit"
CNN	45	23	Worldview	Moneyline Newshour			World Today		Larry King Live		Newsstand	Sports	Moneyline
COM	53	30	Saturday Night Live		Daily Show	Stein's Money	★★★ "The Princess Bride" (1987, Fantasy) Cary Elwes			South Park (N)	Battleboots	Daily Show	Stein's Money
DISC	23		Wild Discovery	South African	Wild Discovery: Mountain		Master of Deception		We Have Lost an Aircraft		What Really Happened	Justice Files
ESPN	51		Sportscenter		College Basketball: ACC/Big Ten Challenge – Purdue at Virginia				College Basketball: ACC/Big Ten Challenge – Md vs. Wis.			Sportscenter
LIFE	29		Golden Girls	Golden Girls	Intimate Portrait		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Moment of Truth: Why My Daughter?" (1993) Linda Gray.			Golden Girls	Golden Girls
MTV	33		Direct Effect	Tugec Tribute	Ultra Sound "One Hit Wonders"		(In Stereo)		100 Greatest Pop Songs Top 40 (In Stereo)			Real World	Real World
NICK	55		Pinky & Brain	Thornberrys	Hey Arnold!	Rugrats	Told by Ginger Brady Bunch		Gilligan's Isle Bev. Hillbillies		Facts of Life Facts of Life	3's Company	3's Company
SCIFI	43		Sliders "Mother and Child"		Babylon 5 (In Stereo)		Specs: Above and Beyond		★★½ "Army of Darkness" (1992, Horror) Bruce Campbell			Crossing Over	Twilight Zone
TLC	52	28	How'd They Do That?		Never Too Thin		Super Structures		World's Tallest Buildings, Feet		World's Tallest Buildings	Super Structures
TNT	25		ER "The Good Fight" (In Stereo)		Pretender "Ties That Bind"		NBA Basketball: Miami Heat at New York Knicks. (In Stereo Live)				NBA	★★ "Rolling Point" (1993)
USA	35		Walker, Texas Ranger		JAG "Life or Death" (In Stereo)		"Family Tree" (1996, Drama) Robert Forster. (In Stereo)				Nash Bridges (In Stereo)	Martin	Martin
HBO	50		★★ "Jerks" (1996, Drama) Bette Midler. (In Stereo)		PG-13		★★★★ "American Beauty" (1999) Kevin Spacey.				Oz "The Bit of Wrong"	Chris Rock	Blaze Bettie
MAX	49		4:30		★★ "Bad Girls" (1994) Madeleine Stowe.		★½ "Son-in-Law" (1993, Comedy) Pauly Shore.		PG-13		★★½ "Deep Blue Sea" (1999)	Thomas Jane	Bedtime
SHOW	54		4:30 "Tea"		★★ "A Fine Romance" (1992) Julie Andrews.		★★½ "Terminal Velocity" (1994) Charlie Sheen.		PG-13		Soul Food	Resurrection Blvd. (In Stereo)	Resurrection

Buttercup Festival By Elliot G. Garbauskas

WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT AMERICA'S LACKING SENSE OF UNITY, BOB OF PUDDING?
I WAS MADE WITH WHOLE MILK mph
OH! THE ECSTASY!
I ENJOY MAKING TEA OUT OF SOIL.
THAT'S CALLED MUD.
RIGHT. I DRINK IT WHILE PLAYING STRIP SCRABBLE

Doonesbury By Gary Trudeau

OUR DEMANDS ARE SIMPLE, LIL' BRO' — WE WANT A SMALL RAISE AND A DECENT HEALTH PLAN.
UP UNTIL NOW, WE'VE BEEN TOTALLY IGNORED. BUT NOW THAT WE CAN ORGANIZE AND STRIKE, THEY'LL HAVE TO PAY ATTENTION TO US!
IT'S A GREAT CAUSE, BIG MIKE! AND I'LL MAKE SURE ALL MY POKEMON IN A SHOW OF SOLID HILARITY.
I THINK YOU MEAN SOLIDARITY.
DO IT! I'M A LITTLE SHAKY ON THE LINGO.

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

SO, YOU ACTUALLY THOUGHT YOU COULD SELL THESE SOCCER BALLS AND MAKE SOME MONEY?
WHY NOT? OTHER COMPANIES DO IT
BUCKY, YOU'RE NOT A "COMPANY." YOU'RE A CAT. YOUR ONE "EMPLOYEE" WAS A STRESSED OUT DOG WITH A SORE PAW AND LOW MORALE
YEAH, BUT HE WAS WORKING FOR FREE
I GUESS THE LARGER ISSUE IS WHETHER YOU'RE NUTS OR JUST PLAIN STUPID
WELL, I'M NOT TELLIN'

Get Fuzzy By Darby Conley

HI GATOR. I HAVEN'T SEEN YOU TODAY AND I, UHNG UH... I JUST WANTED TO UM, WHAT ON EARTH ARE YOU DOING?
ME? OH, I'M JUST, YOU KNOW, UH... CLEANING SOCCER BALLS
THOSE ARE "SOCCER BALLS"? MAY I ASK WHY YOU'RE MAKING SOCCER BALLS?
SEE, THE THING IS, I'M NOT SUPPOSED TO TELL YOU ABOUT...
BUCKY!

Over The Hedge By Fry Lewis

CLARA BO-BERRA... ARE YOUR PARENTS STILL ON THE OUTS?
YEP. NOT SPEAKING TO EACH OTHER.
SIGH. WHY CAN'T HUMANS BE MORE SUPPORTIVE... LIKE WE ARE?...
WHY... JUST LAST WEEK I RECOMMENDED VICKS VAPORUB TO VERNE HERE AS AN APHRODISIAC.
NEGLECTING TO MENTION IT MINGLES EXACTLY THE DESCRIPTION FOR WOOD TICKS...
BAD AND STILL GETTING HIT ON!
HEY, BABY... HOW'BOUT YOU AND, OH, IT'S YOU AGAIN. DON'T YOU EVER BATHE?
FEED ME WOOD TICK

Horoscopes

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21) The [illegible] are going to do something, do it. Don't say one thing and then behave in a completely different way, you will only serve to aggravate the people around you. By saying things with force, you are committing yourself to then carrying through with them. No one likes a hypocrite, and you will find that any sort of such behavior will drag you down considerably. Think about it!

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19) [illegible] thing about things that aren't [illegible] You may be surrounded by [illegible] are attributing that you do [illegible] plainly crazy.

Aquarius (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18) [illegible] people are not by some much [illegible] easily than you might think. [illegible] truths of many, and can do [illegible] from a much better standpoint. [illegible] that your opinions might [illegible] this is good.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - Mar. 20) [illegible] are feeling bombarded at [illegible] pressures and other people [illegible] are feeling as if others are [illegible] you into doing things that [illegible] not necessarily things that would [illegible] you. Spend some time alone [illegible] that you will receive a [illegible] believe at this time. Although [illegible] that the events of the day [illegible] stress and strain. Plans that [illegible] to get changed around quite a [illegible] then a really comedy business.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20) [illegible] to assume that everything has to be [illegible] and organized in order to make sense. Feel free to [illegible] the fresh approach to things today allowing you simply throw caution to the wind [illegible] whatever crazy circumstances [illegible] upon you.

Gemini (May 21 - June 21) -There are expansive vibes in your favor at this time, and you should do what you can to latch onto opportunities that speak to you in every sense of the word. Bring matters out into the open and [illegible] your wishes. Longer than life.

Cancer (June 22 - July 22) -Try not to be so [illegible] about everything. If you continue [illegible] good a secret hidden meaning into every [illegible] situation you are apt to miss out on all the [illegible] Your responsibility now is to simply relax and have a good time.

Leo (July 23 - Aug. 22) -Things should be going [illegible] well for you, and you should note that your [illegible] is taking extra strong. The danger of this, of course, is that you could possibly become so self-[illegible] that you end up neglecting your friends [illegible]

Virgo (Aug 23 - Sept. 22) - If you sit there and do [illegible] you'll end up missing out on everything. It's no fun! Get make a move.

Libra (Sept. 23 - Oct. 23) - You will find that the [illegible] you make and the smile you wear on your [illegible] are the things that will get you the furthest in [illegible] Focus on the positive and keep looking [illegible] where you want to go, instead of back-[illegible] on where you already have been.

Scorpio (Oct. 24 - Nov. 21) -If you say that you

Amherst Weather

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 42 LOW: 30	HIGH: 37 LOW: 22	HIGH: 36 LOW: 18

Dilbert By Scott Adams

JURY SELECTION
JUROR EIGHT, DO YOU HAVE ANY MEDICAL PROBLEMS THAT WOULD PREVENT YOU FROM SERVING?
NO. I NEED JURY DUTY.
WOULD IT BE FAIR TO SAY YOU DON'T KNOW WHAT YOU NEED?
WHY DOES EVERYONE ASK ME THAT?
www.dilbert.com

Dilbert By Scott Adams

JURY DUTY
WHAT EXCUSE ARE YOU PLANNING TO USE?
I'M HAPPY TO SERVE. IT'S MY CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY.
INSANITY. GOOD ONE.
www.dilbert.com

Fox Trot By Bill Amend

MOM, WHERE'S THE VACUUM CLEANER?
AM I HEARING WHAT I THINK I'M HEARING?
ONE OF MY CHILDREN IS CLEANING UP? ONE OF MY CHILDREN IS DOING SOME HOUSEWORK?
I'M SO PROUD OF YOU, PAIGE! THANK YOU! THANK YOU! THANK YOU!
MOM'S CHEERING THAT YOU BROKE HER VASE?
I DIDN'T TELL HER THAT PART YET.

Over the Hedge By Fry & Lewis

NATE AND NORENE ARE UNDERGOING COUPLES THERAPY.
NORENE, PERHAPS YOU COULD VERBALIZE HOW YOU...
HE DOESN'T HELP OUT WITH THE HOUSE!... WITH THE YARD!... WITH CLARA!...
THAT'S NOT TRUE!
OH? WHAT ABOUT LAST WEEK WHEN I ASKED YOU TO TAKE CLARA TO BED?
HEY, IT WAS LETHAL LEGGIES' NIGHT ON THE CROCODILE HUNTER!
GOOD... GOOD ANSWER.
I'D SAY THIS ROUND GOES TO NATE.
NATE, LET'S TALK ABOUT PRIORITIES.
www.hedgeweb.com

MONKEY-BOX
BY PBJ
DARREN WAS PARTIALLY CORRECT. HIS OUTFIT AND BICYCLE DID SCREAM "SEX MACHINE." JUST NOT THE WAY HE INTENDED © 2000
www.monkey-box.net

Quote of the Day

"Art is a lie that makes us realize the truth."

–Pablo Picasso

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Lunch

Steak & Cheese Sub (B, F, H)

Buffalo Wings (B, F, H)

Corned Beef & Cabbage (Worcester only)

Dinner

Hot Wrap Bar. Grilled Chicken (B, H, F)

Grilled Beef (B, H, F)

Beef Tacos Chicken Tacos Vegan Tacos (Worcester only)

YOUR AD could be here!

28,000 Readership

Call 545-3500 for details.

ACROSS

1 Swimmers' aids
5 Nimble
10 Crumples up
14 Tommie of the diamond
15 Classical language
16 Writer Dinesen
17 Iowa export
18 Depleted
19 Actress Glen
20 Girl Scout unit
22 Dealer
24 Ploy
27 Changed colors
28 Certain roamer
32 Hard candies
36 Sick
37 Red Sea peninsula
39 Ghostly
40 Succulent plant
42 Respiratory organs
44 Untamed
45 Insect stage
47 Acquired relative
49 Where cranberries grow
50 Less bold
51 Bridal Veil Falls site
53 Take the bus
56 Dublin's state
57 Grasshoppers
61 Drifts
65 Term paper abbr.
66 Put on a pedestal
69 Not green
70 Canned fish
71 Baseball teams
72 Writer Wiesel
73 Remain
74 Fable writer
75 Pack of cards

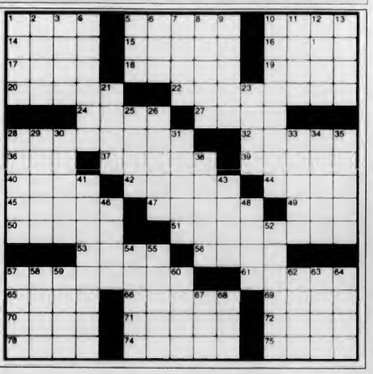
DOWN

1 — -finding mission
2 Composer Stravinsky
3 Dissective Wolfe
4 Lady of Spain
5 Yankovic and Molinaro
6 Hiatus
7 Thing
8 Wrinkled
9 Admission
10 Took out money
11 Cruising
12 Repair a sock
13 Mine prey
21 Ale sellers
23 Grant
25 Growing medium
26 Boredom
29 Glass bottles
29 Muslim deity
30 Fame
31 Comic Kaye
33 Small African antelope
34 Continental employee
35 Papyrus plant
38 Ice hut
41 All the time
43 Cummerbund
46 Dry
48 Fish trap
52 Anchored
54 Paul Anka hit
55 Actor Murphy
57 Young foxes
58 Neighbor of
59 Sinatra or Turner
60 Jeb and W., to Barbara
62 Nasty
63 DeMille production
64 Try to find
67 Antique auto
68 Sixth sense

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

P	A	S	T	A		M	O	O	N	S		A	D
A	D	I	E	U		A	L	G	A	E		A	P	E
R	A	C	E	R		T	E	L	E			P	A
		C	R	A	G	G		A	V	O	I	L
S	A	F	F	R	O	N		A	M	U	S	E	S
U	N	R	O	A	D			S	O	R	E	R
Y	O	U	R		A	S	P	I	C		M	O	A	S
E	G	O	I	S	T		P	E	N		Z	E	R	A
S	E	T	S		R	O	C	K	S		R	A	I	N
		E	M	E	R	G	E		P	A	I	R	E	D
H	O	M	E	R		P	R	I	C	K	L	Y
A	L	O	N	E		P	L	O	Y	D
Z	I	P		F	I	R	E		N	A	N	E
E	V	E		A	R	E	A	S		N	I	G	E	R
R	E	D		B	A	T	H	E		G	L	A	D	E

12-7-00 © 2000 United Feature Syndicate



Today's Staff

Night Editor	Adam Martignetti
Photo Technician	Tiboro Girczyc-Blum
Copy Editor	Sam Wilkinson
Production Supervisor	Brian McDermott
Production Staff	John Zawislak Kara Stokes

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Wednesday, November 29, 2000 | 10

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

It's not easy beating the Big Green

UMass struggles in second half; Earns tough win over Dartmouth

By Eric Soderstrom
Collegian Staff

There's somebody out there who is going to take a quick glimpse at the final score of this game and not be able to comprehend why the Massachusetts women's basketball team only won by eight points, 54-46, last night at the William D. Mullins Center. That same individual is then going to notice the baffling statistic showing that the Minutewomen found a way to hit just four shots in the second half – and become even more perplexed.

This is how it looked on paper. After a horrid first half, Dartmouth College made a stunning 18-2 second half run to bump itself into the realm of basketball respectability, holding the UMass shooting attack to horrid 19 percent from the hardwood during that stanza.

It was pretty ugly on both sides – there's no contesting that. Forced shots resulting in airballs, bad passes and balls bouncing off feet out of bounds. Unforced turnovers shaped the game's reoccurring theme – a lot of turnovers that weren't forced.

"I've some kids that were in that locker room that were a little bit embarrassed with the way we played the second half – and they should have been," Head Coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We didn't have a lot of pride and we took no discipline in what we were doing out there."

The Maroon and White carried a 37-16 lead into the locker room at the half. In the first half, UMass shot just under 52 percent from the field and knocked up the Big Green offense for 12 turnovers.

But when the Minutewomen came out in the second half, they thought that they already had the game won – which was pretty much the case. For O'Brien, however, it didn't mean that she was just going to sit on the bench and watch everything unravel only 20 hours before her team has to board a plane to California where it will play in two of the biggest games of the year.

"In the second half we came out like we were cool, like 'hey, we've got this under control.' We didn't play with that discipline and that pride that you have to play with," she said. "You can't worry about what the score is and you have to play the basketball game – we didn't do that in the second half. That's not UMass basketball. It worries me a little bit but I hope we learned a lesson from it."

The Big Green just isn't that big – nowhere close to being in the same league as UMass. They are as young as the Minutewomen are but its roster doesn't even come close to having the talent necessary to compete against a UMass-caliber squad. And O'Brien knew that she would have the second stanza to allow her bench to get some play-

Turn to WOMEN'S HOOPS page 7

DAN SANTELLA/COLLEGIAN

Amber Sneed and the Massachusetts women's basketball team played Dartmouth last night in preparation for Friday's matchup with San Francisco.

Newcomers making their mark for UMass women's hoop team

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

Four games deep into the season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team has seen all of its newcomers on the court. And although passing judgment on the UMass quartet this early into the season may be premature, it can be done since all of them have seen considerable time on the hardwood.

Junior college transfer Siiri Liivandi nailed 11 points last night to notch a new personal best in her young Division I career. The forward from Estonia has made herself known as a frontcourt factor who is capable of putting up quick shots and grabbing key rebounds coming off the bench.

"I think that Siiri's role is going to continue to expand," Head Coach Joannie O'Brien said. "She's going to get more and more opportunities. She needs to be a little bit more aggressive offensively. She still is trying to fit into her role. It just takes time."

In each of the contests for the Minutewomen, Liivandi has displayed glimpses of offensive brilliance that great post players possess. Last night, she stole the ball from a Dartmouth guard and rambled to the other coast for the quick score.

"Siiri can handle the basketball – I'm sure if there was a situation where we needed to put Siiri out at the three spot, she could do that."

O'Brien said. "She's a pretty good passer out there and she continues to make better and better decisions as the game goes on; she's still getting used to the system."

Paige Harris has seen more and more action as this season has progressed, and last night was no exception. The freshman sharpshooter was the first player off the bench for the Minutewomen last night, and she hit all three of her attempts from behind the three-point arc in the first half.

The argument that Harris is only an offensive player may be substantial by her play so far, but the birth of a defensive animal is eminent.

"I just got to thank God she can shoot it, because she drives me crazy on defense," O'Brien said.

"But she's getting better every day with it. Her reactions and instincts are very good. I don't want her to change that too much. She has to learn to communicate a little bit better on defense, and once she gets that, I think you're going to see her as a complete player."

Harris played remarkably well in the Maroon and White's home debut against Charlotte, bringing home a personal-high 13 points. The Michigan native came off the bench and went on a solo eight-point run that helped UMass pull away with the win.

"Obviously she can shoot the basketball; she hit some big shots

Turn to NEWCOMERS page 7

UMass seeks 2001 A-10 tourney bid

By Matthew Bencal
Collegian Staff

It's sad. It's a shame.

A couple weeks have passed, and time has come to review a season that was full of in-season excitement and post-season possibilities.

The Massachusetts women's volleyball team felt that it should have made the Atlantic 10 tournament. The conference selects the top four teams in its standing to play in the championship tourney, and UMass finished tied for fourth with Dayton. It lost to the Flyers in its first meeting and beat them in their second. Yet Dayton was awarded the bid to the tournament and the Minutewomen were not.

One could make a strong argument that this year's team could have been a major factor in the tourney. It was obvious that UMass had a much better second half of the season, but that didn't matter to the A-10. Dayton had a better overall record, and Head Coach Bonnie Kenny's traditional tough out-of-conference schedule proved to be too much for the Minutewomen.

"They [the players] really think it's unfair," she said. "They wanted to have a playoff with Dayton. I really feel it's frustrating because I've always said that I don't want to go back to the A-10 tournament until I knew we could play in it, and I really feel – this team, the way we're playing now – we were capable of going there and winning that tournament."

Nothing that the A-10 can do or say will give justice to the talent and heart on this year's Maroon and White squad except a tournament bid. Anyone who watched the Minutewomen this season saw the kind of competitive attitude that champions are made of. Although this team wasn't granted the opportunity to fight for the title, the UMass program is on the up and up.

"They feel as frustrated as I do now," Kenny said. "They still want to play. A lot of teams that I've coached this time of year haven't wanted to play, and that's the biggest difference with this team."

Seniors Jenni Drennan and Rebecca Hasson were major reasons why this year's team was so competitive. The senior duo encapsulated a year of dedication and work ethic that coaches dream of in student-athletes. Hasson, the offensive workhorse for Minutewomen, would never have thrown down as many kills as she did if Drennan wasn't setting her up in the right place at the right time. And Drennan never would have notched as many assists if Hasson hadn't been throwing down so many nasty kills. Last week, Hasson was named to Atlantic-10 All-Conference Team for her superb play this season. Hasson led UMass in total kills (415), kills per game (4.17), total blocks (114) and blocks per game (1.14).

Drennan will leave the program as the all-time assists leader, with 2,934 dishes over four years.

To the dismay of the community, these two cornerstones must move on to bigger and better things, as they have exhausted their eligibility.

"That's the thing about college," Kenny said. "Once you get them where you want them to be as a player, it's time for them to go. The biggest thing about Jenni and Rebecca is that they've been so loyal and dedicated to this program. They've been really good bookends that I really feel have given their heart and soul to this program."

But Hasson and Drennan didn't do it all. Junior co-captain Lymarie Llovet had been consistent and reliable on both sides of the ball all season, and will have the opportunity to learn from what has transpired over the course of this season and apply it next season.

"Lymarie is a natural leader," Kenny said. "Lymarie can handle the pressure of whatever her teammates want her role to be. I don't think her role is going to change a whole lot, because we depended on her quite a bit this year."

While it assumed that Llovet would resume her role as captain for next season, Kenny will be looking for others to fill in the leadership roles that are open with the losses of Hasson and Drennan. That role will be open until next spring when the vacant captain spot is filled.

Perhaps the most astounding aspect of this year's team is the fighting attitude that the Minutewomen brought onto the court, not only in games, but in practice also. It must have been nice for Kenny to be able to look at her bench and see players who can jump into a match at any given time and make an impact. And the younger players who received those opportunities made the best of them.

"People did what they needed to do this year," Kenny said. "Any given night someone could come in and give us a lift and it was nice to have a bench deepen enough to do that. This year we were balanced and people were steady. Every once in a while that younger player had a break through match that hopefully will carry through the spring and into the next season."

It may not be fair to look at only one of the matches this season to pick a particular high point, especially con-

Turn to VOLLEYBALL page 7

JARET BARR/COLLEGIAN

The UMass volleyball team enjoyed a solid 2000 season, just missing out on the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Sixers and Suns off to a hot start

INSIDE THE NBA with Glen Straub

The first month of the 2000-01 NBA campaign is coming to a close this week and ironically the Phoenix Suns (10-5) and the Philadelphia 76ers (11-2) are at the top of the standings in their respective conferences.

Why is that ironic, you ask? Well, after a summer full of player and coaching changes to confuse even the most die-hard NBA fan, the two clubs that have dominated the first month of the season did not make drastic changes to improve their squad during the off-season.

The members of the Sixers and Suns management should be sporting stylish smiles these days. While other team general managers and presidents stressed all summer over how they can desperately improve their teams, the team from the City of Brotherly Love and the club from the desert stayed put, and now it is paying dividends.

But how do these two teams have better overall records than such squads as the Portland Trailblazers – who have three all-star power forwards in their lineup in Dale Davis, Rasheed Wallace, and Shawn Kemp – or the Orlando Magic, who despite losing Grant Hill to an ankle injury should have won more than five games through the first 15 games of the season.

The answer comes in a famous sports-fan chant: defense. Sixers head coach Larry Brown and Suns skipper Scott Skiles have their teams playing the best defense of their lives. Philly is ranked number two in the league in points allowed with 84.8 points per game, while the Suns are number four with 86.7 allowed per contest. Both teams are tied with the Charlotte Hornets for first in opposing field goal percentage at 40 percent.

The Suns have started the season without the use of the consistently injured Anfernee "Penny" Hardaway due to knee-surgery rehabilitation. However, the major key to their success has been the consistently great Jason Kidd. Phoenix's floor-master is first in the league in assists with 11.1 assists per game, second in steals with 2.54 steals per game and first in minutes played at 41.8 minutes a contest. Day by day, he is proving to the basketball world that he is the best point guard in the game.

Forward Shawn Marion has complimented Kidd nicely in his sophomore season as well. He is averaging a double-double on the season with 19.4 ppg and 11.9 rebounds per game. Not only is he fulfilling the void left by "Penny," but he is exceeding his capabilities and possibly will play in his first NBA All-Star Game in Washington D.C. in February.

Phoenix is also happy to see that forward Tom Gugliotta has made a full recovery from a torn anterior

Turn to HOOPS, page 7

ACC, Big 10 to provide more drama

Last night, the Atlantic Coast Conference/Big Ten challenge was highlighted by the titanic battle between Duke and Illinois. Tonight's five games will feature three very intriguing games between six potential tourney teams and another matching up two huhble squads. Overall the appetite of any college basketball fan should be appeased.

Purdue at Virginia

Virginia has one of the best backcourts in the ACC with Donald Hand running the show at point and smooth shooting Chris Williams at the two-guard. The Wahoos boast a quick but relatively small lineup with 6-foot-7 Travis Watson at center.

Purdue, on the other hand, is seriously depleted in that only one starter returns from last year's elite eight team. The scoring load for the Boilermakers will fall upon the shoulders of returnee Maynard Lewis and Jason Allison, who will try to replace the inside presence of Brian Cardinal.

Hand should take the Virginia offense and run with it to offset the Purdue size advantage. If the Cavs can keep from being completely dominated underneath, a good shooting performance will win them this game. Prediction: Virginia, 77-70.

MATTHEW F. SACCO

North Carolina at Michigan Sate

The best matchup of Wednesday night's games could be No. 2 Michigan State and No. 6 North Carolina. The Heels have arguably the best shooting guard in the country in Joseph Forte and dominant size underneath in Brendan Haywood.

The Spartans will be led by top returning scorer Charlie Bell, and two superstar recruits in Zach Randolph and Marcus Taylor. Taylor will run the point and distribute to Bell and swingman Jason Richardson.

If Taylor plays a strong point guard, where he should have the advantage against his UNC counterpart, and Randolph is a force in the paint then the Spartans will come out on top. They must however, contain Forte, because if he is allowed to roam the perimeter and slash to the basket than he can take over a game. Haywood on the other hand can be mentally rattled –the real weapon is the Heels young two guard.

All in all, the Spartans should be able to capitalize on their physical advantage. If Forte is contained, State gets the "W." Prediction: Michigan State, 80-76.

Maryland at Wisconsin

The Terps lost two games in Hawaii, their top 25 ranking and lots of respect in the college basketball community. Maryland returned all five of its starters from last year's squad, leading to many high expectations. This game against Wisconsin is their chance to partially fulfill those lofty expectations.

Superstar scorer Terence Morris teams with long range gunner Juan Dixon and big man inside Lonny Baxter to form one of the most lethal scoring machines in the nation.

The Terps can certainly score, but that offensive prowess will be

Turn to BIG TEN, page 7

The Massachusetts Daily

COLLEGIAN

Volume CVII Issue 59 | www.dailycollegian.com | Thursday, November 30, 2000

I'm scary, I'm scaly, and I truly believe that Styx and I would have been a killer show! Don't believe me? See the Arts Page.

ARTS p. 5

It takes a true professional to race an ostrich. It takes a crack-Collegian staff to write about people who not only race them, but who then eat them.

Sports Tasty.

SPORTS p. 9

An ocean of seats but only a trickle of progress

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

With just three announcements and the role call recorded by Associate Speaker Michael J. McCarthy, the 136th Student Government Association's meeting was quickly called to a close due to a lack of quorum.

However, even with a noticeable lack of Senators, the issue of slanderous attacks being made toward individuals was once again called to the attention of Senate members by House Speaker Jim Eltringham.

"There has been a lot of discussion regarding the group email list. First off, yesterday's release of an email signed by President Jeff Howe. He notified me and told me that in fact this was not his email address and it was falsified, and I have every reason to believe him," Eltringham said. "Furthermore, quite frankly, there's a lot of things being said, and I would prefer that they not be discussed at our meetings."

This then lead into announcements in which Administrative Affairs Chair Jen Teixeira brought up issues recently addressed at a Public Safety meeting.

"Right now there are four cameras being put up in the stadium parking lot, and a call box is being placed in the back end of the parking lot," Teixeira said. "This should hopefully be done by the time we leave for winter break. It was supposed to be done in September, but due to a lack of funding it was pushed back."

Other aspects discussed at the Public Safety meeting were the University of Massachusetts Escort Service and the possibility of adding areas such as Olympia Drive to the Escort's normal route.

The lack of quorum at last night's meeting did not go unnoticed by Senate members.

"I wasn't surprised at the lack of Senators here. I think a lot of them are discouraged with everything that has been going on," Josh Sturtevant, Commuter Senator said. "But I feel that it's my job to be here. I ran because I wanted to step aside from all the crap that has been going on."

Eltringham also expressed his opinion on the outcome of last night's SGA meeting.

"I think a lot had to do with people being fed-up with all that they have had to deal with. We haven't done a good job and keeping people involved," Eltringham said. "I'm upset and embarrassed, but you always have to look to the bright side of things. We dealt with this in 1998, and it turned out to be a extremely productive semester, maybe the same will take place here."

Florida to convene legislature about Pres

By Chris Thompson
Collegian Staff

An emergency committee of the Florida Legislature met yesterday to debate the need for a special legislative session to appoint the state's 25 electors.

As Al Gore's legal team continued its challenge of the presidential election in Florida courts, lawyers hired by the legislature's Republican leadership testified that the body had a duty to appoint electors if the courts did not settle the issue by the December 12 state deadline.

"It's like the Boy Scouts – be prepared," Harvard Law Professor Einer Elhague said. Einer added that the legislature should meet "on whatever date is early enough to allow it to take decisive action in a timely fashion."

The lawyers went on to say that the legislature, not the courts, had the authority to chose electors if the election is in doubt. The lawyers also argued that such a move was imperative to ensure that Florida's citizens were represented in the Electoral College, which meets on December 18th to elect the President.

Florida Governor Jeb Bush, younger brother of George W. Bush, must approve any action taken by the legislature. The Governor said yesterday that he thought the legislature had the right to name electors, but that any decision by the U.S. Supreme Court on the Florida election would supercede that body's actions.

"If the U.S. Supreme Court disagrees with the Florida Legislature, I think the United States Supreme Court trumps the Legislature," Bush said to reporters yesterday morning.

Lawyers representing Gore continued their legal engagement yesterday, appealing Florida circuit court Judge N. Sanders Sauls's decision not to order an immediate recount of ballots in 2 counties to the state Supreme Court.

Late Tuesday night Judge Sauls decided not to hear Gore's request for a recount until Saturday. Gore's attorney's requested an immediate recount in Palm Beach and Miami-Dade counties where roughly 14,000 disputed ballots have not yet been counted for either candidate. Under the Gore plan the weeklong recount process would've started yesterday and concluded next Wednesday.

Judge Sauls did agree to the Gore team's request that the disputed ballots be impounded, ordering the counties to ship the votes to the state capital of Tallahassee.

Lawyers for Bush called for a more relaxed timetable, with legal proceedings concluding on Dec. 11, just one day prior to the selection of the state's electors.

The rash of court proceedings, including a Friday U.S. Supreme Court hearing on the hand recounts, could bump up against the state deadline for selection of electors, putting pressure on the legislature to act.

Neither candidate can reach the necessary 270 electoral votes needed to take the White House without the support of Florida's 25 electors.

Gore appeared on television for the third time in 48 hours yesterday, again calling for a "fair and accurate count" of every Florida vote on the Today show.

Gore said that he believed the majority of Florida voters chose him and his running mate Joseph Lieberman over Bush. Gore also said that he felt his chances of overtaking Bush if the dispute votes are counted

Turn to FLORIDA, page 2

Senate Ways and Means to keep on trying

By Kristin Shrewsbury
Collegian Staff

Amongst the Student Government Associations' numerous hang-ups, the SGA's Ways and Means Committee are trying to find a way to move on beyond the petty griping and squabbling.

Ways and Means is made up of 16 members and headed by Chair Michael Taugher, whose job it is to allocate funds to agencies and RSOs on campus. They are responsible not only for the allocation of money to these organizations, but they are solely responsible for the $1.8 million budget from which these funds come.

"We serve as a mediator between the SGA and the agencies and RSO's on campus so that they fully understand what the money is being allocated for," Taugher said. "We are on a time line. The fall is a time to educate the SGA and for the agencies and RSO's to make presentations as to why they want that particular amount of money."

With the recent Judiciary Case; the distribution of funds from the budget would be greatly affected if all motions were to be thrown out. Although the Coordinating Council would take direct responsibility over all Senate run committees, the Ways and Means committee would be left untouched due to the fact that the Coordinating Council cannot allocate money, leaving this years budget at a halt.

"We serve as a mediator between the SGA and the agencies and RSOs on campus so that they fully understand what the money is being allocated for," Taugher said. "We are on a time line. The fall is a time to educate the SGA and for the agencies and RSOs to make presentations as to why they want that particular amount of money."

With the SGA Judiciary case having much influence over the outcomes and continuation of the SGA's committees Taugher explained that his committee does not have the time or ability to stop if the outcome of the Senate and its acts are ruled unconstitutional.

"My schedule is full through the end of the year. I will continue to meet informally if they choose to throw the elections and motions out," Taugher said. "I have discussed this with Chuck DiMare of student Legal Services and with Allen Brainerd Director of Business and Finance Services for Campus Activities and they agreed with me."

SAM WILKINSON/COLLEGIAN

There were few Senators left at a committee meeting held last night after the Senate failed to get through announcements before losing quorum. Senate Speaker Jim Eltringham is three from the left.

SHALINI MARTI/COLLEGIAN

Michael Taugher, chair of the SGA's Ways and Means

House Speaker Jim Eltringham expressed similar feelings when asked about the legality of whether or not the committee would be able to hold meetings if the Senate was to be declared unconstitutional.

"I've talked to Mike [Taugher] about this and I think they should continue their meetings. It would be informal, but people don't realize how much work goes into this," Eltringham said. "To say that they could accomplish everything they need to get done in a semester is unrealistic."

However, with so much controversy surrounding the SGA, many Senators have been left questioning the value of their position. With members leaving committee's and SGA meetings not making quorum, questions of member's dedication have fallen into play.

"This committee is about a group of people interested in the budget and the way there money is allocated," Taugher said. "Right now we are one of the only committees to make quorum on a weekly basis; everyone is very committed. We're behind the scene, but we're probably one of the most active committees in the Senate."

Taugher continued to explain aspects of the committee that they are striving to make happen in order to make the process of allocating fund understandable for both parties.

"We're setting up workshops for the RSOs and agencies, so that their members will know what is going on, because a lot of people are new to there job," Taugher said. "This way they will be able to ask questions and come to me if they have problems before hand."

The Ways and Means committee has had to face the lack of a key aspect of their overall process. For the past year they have had to address business without the help of the Secretary of Finance, a position that has been vacant and would oversee what the allocated money is being used for once put into the RSOs and agencies.

"The Secretary of Finance's job is to oversee that the money allocated is being used for what these groups claimed they needed it for," Taugher said. "Right now they could be spending money on clothes and pizza parties instead of office supplies, and we would not have a real way of knowing this."

Turn to JUDICIARY page 2

Sisterhood: campus sorority to sponsor tonight's 'Evening of Soul'

Food, Poetry and live music abound

By Rachael Devaney
Collegian Staff

The Ladies of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority present the "Evening of Soul," tonight on the 10th floor of Campus Center, where talented University of Massachusetts students will demonstrate diverse artistic abilities.

A meal of traditional Jamaican food, catered by Talk of the Town located in Springfield, will accompany the free expression, live music, poetry and open mic featured this evening. Admission is $2 at the door, and an additional $3 for cuisine will be charged.

According to Myra Peyton, a senior Communications Disorders major and member of Alpha Kappa Alpha, the sorority was founded in 1908 at Howard University, and was the first Greek letter sorority established by and for women of color.

"We foster the ideas of sisterhood, scholastic achievement, high ethical and moral standards, as well as uplifting communities of color through community service," said Peyton. "On a national level, we have national goals and focus on health, and how diseases disproportionately effect people of color."

Through education, the arts, family and economic empowerment, Peyton expressed that much of Alpha's mission has been fulfilled through different programs held in the past here on campus. Some of these activities have included a Breast Cancer awareness program, their participation in a walk-a-thon to raise money for the Comprehensive Breast Care Center in Springfield, and a week of free events called Skee Week.

"For Skee-Week, we held debt management workshops, a Skee-Tea social, focusing on meeting different people of color, and an afternoon of indulgence to raise money for the breast care center," said Peyton. "We gave free facials, and skin care advice, including a spirituality make over."

The group's latest project is a fundraiser called Save Homer Street School. This school, located in Springfield, is comprised of mostly African American and Latino students who are reading under grade level. Alpha

Turn to ALPHA, page 2

CONTRIBUTED PHOTO

The sisters of Alpha Kappa Alpha will host tonight's 'Evening of Soul' on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

■ Florida

Scott's plans bear fruit

By Ken Campbell
Collegian Staff

Turn to MONEY page 2

■ judiciary

■ alpha

Continued from page

What's so funny?
Ricardo Lagos, left, President of Chile, meets with Larry Ellison, chairman and CEO of Oracle Corp., prior to the signing of an agreement for Chile's first global Internet business-to-business (B2B) marketplace.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• (413) 545-3500 •
• Fax (413) 545-1992 •
• http://www.dailycollegian.com •

Adam White Editor-in-Chief
Sam Wilkinson Managing Editor
Shawn Binitch Business Manager
Sage Brousseau Production Manager
Alan Basque Editorial Production Manager
Eric Faber Advertising Manager
Sue Perrault Advertising Production Manager
Bryan Smith Senior Editor

Ryan Bettauer Arts & Living Editor
Loren Hudson Black Affairs Editor
Rob Schulte Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jeanne Gurkowsky Copy Librarian, Biannual Issues Editor
Sasha Senderovich Jewish Affairs Editor
Adam Martignetti Co-News Editor
Jesse Trentacle Co-News Editor
Michael Kolebianski Co-Sports Editor
Bryan Smith Co-Sports Editor
Melissa Hammel Co-Features Editor
Catherine Turner Co-Features Editor

Jared Barr Photography Editor
Chris Brennan Finance Manager
Joshua Szymanski Distribution Manager
Daniel Kirschner Promotions Manager
Sarah Wingardner Layout Manager
Position Vacant Assistant to the Managing Editor
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marry Pappas Classified Advertising
Brent Siniawski Assistant Finance Manager
Amy Gargiuta Assistant Business Manager
Katie Beith Assistant Advertising Manager

Interested in a co-op or internship for winter session or spring semester?

Well, it's not too late!!

Take the first step! Come to a Field Experience Welcome Session*!

Mondays
* 30 - 2:10pm * 14 Stockbridge
3 - 3:40pm * 103 South College

Tuesdays
* 10:40-11:30am * 334 Lederle GRT
* - 1:40pm * 14 Stockbridge
2 - 2:40pm 8 Isenberg SOM
4 - 4:40pm * 5 Marston

Wednesdays
2 - 2:40pm * 322 Lederle GRT
3 - 3:40pm * 3 Isenberg SOM
4 - 4:40pm 274 Bartlett

Thursdays
* 11:15 - 11:55am 274 Bartlett
3 - 3:40pm 103 South College
3:35 - 4:15pm 211 Marston

* through Thursday, December 7th

For more information call the Field Experience Office 545-6265 or see our website www-ccn.acad.umass.edu

The Office of the Chancellor and the Episcopal God and Science Project Present:
John Polkinghorne

What Can A Physicist BELIEVE?

Thursday, November 30
Campus Center Auditorium
8p.m.

Co-sponsored by:
Alliance Christian Fellowship, Athletes in Action, Campus Crusade, CLM Faculty Ministry, FBC Fellowship, Hillel, Intervarsity, Muslim Students Association, Navigators, Newman Center, Presbyterian Church USA, Religious Advisors at Amherst College, Smith College Interreligious Center, United Christian Foundation.

■ money

Newspapers declaring early Bush victory become hot collectors items

continued from page 2

By Brendan Loy
Daily Trojan (U. Southern California)

Amherst has netted $7,079,000 from PHEIP.

"Between 1988 and 1983, the percentage of the UMass operating budget funded by the state plummeted from 32 percent to 14 percent. UMass was malnourished and over extended," Scott wrote in a Campaign UMass informational booklet distributed through Whitmore.

Under his leadership, the University's budget for the Amherst campus has increased $48,889,560 since 1996.

Scott was not available for comment. His son, Jeremy suffered injuries in a fall over the weekend. Jeremy is currently hospitalized at Baystate Medical Center in Springfield. Scott's address to the Faculty Senate, scheduled for this afternoon has been cancelled.

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES - The Daily Trojan's Nov. 8 issue declaring George W. Bush the president-elect officially became a collector's item last week as two eBay users — one from across the country and one from "across the pond" — purchased copies of the paper on eBay.

A bidder from the United Kingdom identifying himself only as "EJ" paid $10 for the newspaper, whose front-page headline read, "At the eleventh hour, Bush wins." The Republican candidate's apparent victory over Democrat Al Gore was cast into doubt less than an hour after the Daily Trojan's press time.

Numerous other newspapers made the same mistake as the Daily Trojan in their Nov. 8 editions as well, inciting a collectors' buying frenzy on the popular online auction house site. The still-disputed election is now being decided in the courts.

"I am trying to obtain as many American newspapers for the 8th November 2000 (as possible), but as I am in the United Kingdom, I am finding it extremely difficult," the bidder, whose username is "ej111," wrote in an e-mail. "The reason why I am so interested for this particular day (is that) it was a very historical event and I would like to have a part of that day... so one day I hopefully may be able to show my grandchildren."

Web site records show that "EJ" has also paid for copies of the New York Post, the New York Times and The Ledger of Polk County, Florida, as well as a CD-ROM disk with several news web sites' homepages briefly declaring Bush the winner. He has also bid unsuccessfully in about two dozen other Nov. 8 newspaper auctions.

"EJ" barely outbid another eBay user, identified only by the username "daphatabbot," who has won 11 other Nov. 8 newspaper auctions. Jen and Andrew Helicher of Cedarhurst, New York won a less competitive auction for the Nov. 8 Daily Trojan, paying $2.25 for their piece of history. They outbid Mark Weissman of New York City, who was only willing to pay $2 for the paper.

"This is history in the making as we speak," wrote Weissman, who successfully bid on several other newspapers and unsuccessfully bid on many more. "We will be talking about it for years and decades to come."

"The 'Bush Wins' newspapers are part of that history. So, I see this as a chance to own a piece of history," Jen Helicher said in an e-mail that she and her husband Andrew first got into the election newspaper trade as sellers, not buyers. But in the process of selling copies of the Nov. 8 New York Post, which also declared Bush the winner, they "noticed that there were other towns across the country that had printed 'Bush wins' also," she said. "So my husband had the idea to make a collection of all the newspapers around the country."

The pair has created both a collection that includes Nov. 8 newspapers from locations as far flung as Maine, Alaska and London, as well as USC.

Helicher said that her father-in-law, who "collects everything," snatched up hundreds of copies of the first edition of the post-election New York Post early in the morning of Nov. 8 and gave some to them. The Helichers proceeded to sell some of their copies on eBay, getting as much as $55.

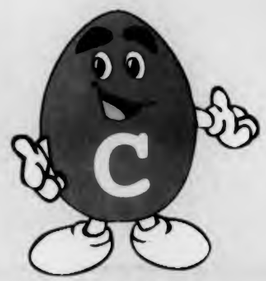
"It's a pretty good profit if you ask me," she wrote. "The paper only costs $.25."

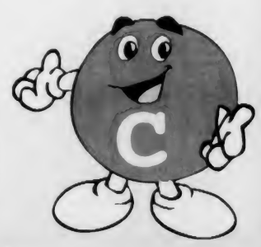
Some have been making far greater profits, however. Copies of the Post appear to have sold for as much as $1,000 on eBay, and three highly competitive auctions resulted in two $310 sales and a $300 sale. Another auction for an item titled "BUSH WINS - NEW YORK POST LOT OF 20! NO OTHERS!!" sold for $404.99.

Copies of other papers with "Bush wins" headlines, including the Miami Herald and the New York Times, have sold for more than $200.

While Nov. 8 newspapers seem destined to be the most potent collector's items, Tuesday's New York Times may be valuable to newspaper buffs as well. It was the first time, since Nov. 7, the morning of the election, that the Times did not plaster a six-column headline about the presidential race across its front page. The Times had run full-page headlines for 19 consecutive days, a highly unusual streak for the normally staid, old-fashioned newspaper.

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE!!
For Details
CALL
545-3500





MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
The Mullins Center
presents
SINBAD
Live in Concert!
Saturday, December 16, 2000 at 8:00 pm

Sinbad brings his energetic stand-up style to the Mullins center for a one-night only comedy performance! Don't miss this opportunity to see one of today's best loved and most versatile comedians.

Event features theatre-style set-up. Reserved seating tickets at $31.00 & $26.00. Available at the Mullins Center Box Office (413 -545-0505), all Ticketmaster outlets (including Filene's at Holyoke Mall),Ticketmaster Charge by Phone at 413 733-2500 and online at www.ticketmaster.com.
Visit our website at www.mullinscenter.umass.edu
ticketmaster

Sponsored by:
Coca-Cola
SUBWAY eat fresh.

www.dailycollegian.com

JAMAICA Spring Break

ONE LOVE. ONE HEART. ONE GREAT PARTY.
It's that time of year when thousands of students came to Jamaica and feel all right—for an unbelievable price.

YOUR SPRING BREAK PACKAGE INCLUDES
• Round trip airfare
• 7 nights hotel accommodations
• Round trip airport & hotel transfers
• Free welcome beach & evening parties
• Free admission to night clubs
• Discounts on restaurants, water sports & side excursions
• Packages available to Negril and Montego Bay
• Professional on site tour reps
• Complete weekly activities program offering optional sunset cruise, booze cruise, toga party & more
• Free bonus party pack
• Optional meal plan including 7 breakfasts and 7 dinners

Sun Splash Tours 1•800•426•7710 Student Travel Services 1•800•648•4849

Price is per person based on quad occupancy from select departure cities. Other cities may qualify for reduction or require surcharge. U.S. and Jamaica departure taxes (currently $68) and $12 handling charge additional. Rates increase $30 on 12/15/00. Peak week surcharges off-week discounts may apply. Restrictions and cancellation penalties apply. Limited availability. Subject to change without notice. Call for full details on hotel selection and availability.

BRUISED BODY?
Don't let the tow truck drag your wounded vehicle to their pet place. Demand Dana! We offer a lifetime warranty on all our body shop work.
DANA BODY SHOP
968 Bridge Road, Northampton, Mass.
586-7250

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION
Thursday, November 30, 2000
Ed/Op Editor • Rob Schulze
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com
4

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Shipp setting stage;
UMass in spotlight

The Massachusetts football team released its 2001 football schedule yesterday. On that schedule is a matchup with Division I powerhouse Marshall.

If UMass has visions of bringing Div. I football to the Pioneer Valley, it is moves such as this that will bring the program to the national stage. But before the Minutemen ever take to the field for that game with the Thundering Herd, standout running back Marcel Shipp will showcase his talents to a national forum when he plays in the Blue-Gray All-Star Game on Christmas Day and the Hula Bowl to be played in late January.

Shipp, one of the best players to ever take the field in a maroon and white uniform, will play in these games with players that come predominantly from Div. I teams. Shipp earned the honor by finishing his career in Amherst as the Atlantic 10's all-time leading rusher.

The New Jersey native ranks first on the UMass list in both points and touchdowns, having led the Minutemen to a I-AA National Championship in 1998.

More important than the individual accomplishments that have warranted Shipp's selection is that the players in the games get to wear the helmet of their school. The UMass football logo will be shown on network television, to the entire country, for the first time.

We at the Collegian would like to take this time to say thank you to Marcel for all that he has done for the athletic program at the University. He has played through injury and has never complained. He is the epitome of what the college athlete should be.

The Collegian thinks that Marcel's selection should spawn more interest in the community about the prospects of Div. I football. The positives far outweigh negatives.

Of course it would be a struggle if UMass were to move to Div. I football, but the strides are being made in the right direction in order for this to happen.

UMass brought in Head Coach Mark Whipple three seasons ago and he has turned the program around. The year that Whipple inherited the UMass squad his players had suffered through a 2-9 campaign. Now Whipple is being recognized on the national stage for the head coaching vacancies at both Rutgers and Maryland.

The Collegian feels that UMass football moving to Div. I football would be a great thing for the University. It would also allow the UMass/UConn rivalry to take plac eon a regular basis.

The Huskies made the move to Div. I this past season with relative ease, but there is resistance from the community.

There will never be better a time for the UMass program to make the move step up. Three nationally recognized events are more than UConn got and they were able to do it.

Write for Ed/Op...

Random thoughts

MATT FRASCELLA

Guess who's back? It has been about a year since I wrote one of these, but now a sufficient amount of stuff has gone on for me to complain about, so I thought I'd put in my two cents:

I think that the new "Laser" 99.3 really sucks. Western Mass. had one good radio station and now it has been swallowed up by some crappy retro station that plays dinosaur rock and too much AC/DC. Give me some Fuel "Hemorrhage (in my hands)" over Rush or Whitesnake any day.

I have given up on watching sports altogether. Every team that I want to win always seems to find a way to lose, and my luck in sports is starting to spill over into politics.

Speaking of that crazy election (Is it over yet? I am a political science major and I still don't know), I am glad that that crazy yahoo Nader and all his wacko liberal supporters couldn't muster 5% of the vote because all you people are ultimately responsible for having that idiot and mama's boy Bush hack (I say back because I think George Sr. is really going to be in charge) in the White House. Doesn't anybody remember Reaganomics?

In the spirit of Thanksgiving I have come to realize that I personally, and we as Americans take way too much for granted. The sad thing is that you never really know how special something is to you until it is gone far away.

What is the deal with college girls and that crappy bunch of girl "musicians" that call theinselves N'Sync? I wish those insolent bastards would just go bye bye bye. Ms. 13 year-old sister is crazy about N'Sync, and I thought it was just a phase until I realized that half the girls on this campus can't get enough of those little girls and their "music." And these are the same girls that call us guys immature. I mean, seriously.

No offense to those two people at Amherst College who aren't stuck up, but I can pick the rest of you out of a crowd as easily as I can spot those ugly Southwest towers from anywhere on campus. Just a little word of advice: next time you guys are out and about at those fine Amherst bars after having your weekly "Amherst grads will take over the world" meetings try not to let your noses scrape the ceiling. I hear that it hurts and that it might impede your quest to be masters of the universe.

I have recently added that new style of wearing a baseball cap with a straight brim at weird angles on your head to my list of things I will never understand. Now women, the honors program requirements, and skateboarding have same company.

A couple of weeks ago the Amherst police paid a visit to my fine establishment. I honestly had 10 people over and we were playing ping pong on my back porch. Apparently we were having a party and that this is a noise violation. How dare us college kids leave our cages? I have heard a rumor that if you build a statue to the great police states like Nazi Germany or fascist Italy they might be more likely to roll past you.

I think that SOM is a cult. Since I am not an SOM major I don't have access to all those great resources for job finding that those SOM kids have. People complain about Commonwealth College being elitist, but it is pretty sad when I have to compete against one of the schools on this campus to try and get a job. I have an idea, let's have a separate school for business majors where we can grab all of the Fortune 500 companies and not let any of the liberal arts majors even know what is going on. That is a stroke of elitist genius.

I think that Cristina Aguilera has that song "What a girl wants." Yeah, like it is possible to figure that one out. When you figure that out, Cristina, get back to me. I won't hold my breath though.

As graduation looms closer and closer the thought of leaving is both exciting and scars. I have already preregged for the last time and seen my last UMass football game as a student, and that is a little scary. At least I'll never have another class in that hell hole called Goessman and there are a few more Wednesdays to see the Guitar Dudes.

It is amazing to me how songs can penetrate deep inside us and speak to our souls. I can't believe sometimes how someone I don't know can write a song that captures exactly how I feel, all my feelings that I can't even find the words to express and articulate it so perfectly.

Before I graduate I still need to go to a party at Smith. It is on my list of things to do before I leave Amherst.

I saw a preview for that Bugger Vance movie. Will Smith is such a great actor and singer (Wild, Wild West deserved an Oscar and I can't get enough of my Will Smith CDs. It doesn't get much better than when he sings "Getting' Jiggy Wit' it"). Anyway, in the preview Matt Damon is sitting at the bar and some little kid asks him why he drinks. He responds that drinking kills brain cells. First it kills the sad ones and makes you really happy. Next it kills your hearing cells so you talk funny. Then it kills your eyesight so you can't see. Finally it kills your memory cells. Those are the hardest ones to kill. I think that is probably true, except I think that alcohol kills the memories you wish you could forget last of all.

One of the few things on this planet that is given out generously from everyone is advice. Advice is also one of those things that is a lot easier to give out than to take.

Matt Frascella used to be a Collegian Columnist.

Tower of Torture

On this particular afternoon, my weather-beaten sneakers squeak on the linoleum floor as I trek my way to the lounge, situated to the immediate left of the elevator. The rain clouds appear particularly threatening on this day, looming large and ominous over the cedar-brick tower, commonly phrased as the "tower of torture," but more often referred to as the Du Bois Library. Soiling the floor with mud and raindrops patterned by the underbelly design of my Nike sneaks, my footsteps prove to be slow and arduous as the workload before me begins to take on the form of an insurmountable task in my mind. The illuminating light of the study reflects from the books of many and, flooding through the entrance arch, draws me in. Upon finally joining the scholarly, but quieting, buzz of the room, I quickly take hostage of a small table in the far corner, estimating that this "hold up" is going to be for quite awhile. For, in the case of midterms, a ransom of any kind would not compromise my seat. Heaps of work lay before me, and like the wind that drives fast through this valley of buildings, ripping into this tower of torture, frustration and anxiety invade my concentration and tear through my confident exterior.

Bowing down to their work with solemn facial expressions, the scholars in my company could be perceived as worshipers to their work, and the surrounding tables might be mistaken for pews. In this chapel of study, the praise I witness each individual putting forth proves nothing less than note-worthy. Of course, there are always those few "church-goers" who let their eyes wander from time to time and their focus shift, however, it is not long before some hymn of inspiration enters these wandering minds and they, once again, become immersed in their studies.

SHARON STIMPFLE

Perhaps they are inspired by the ticking of the ill-famed clock, a time bomb known to blow up in the faces of those plagued with that most dreadful of epidemics: procrastination. Its ghostly face serves as a threatening reminder to even the most conscientious of students that time is of the essence. Why, isn't it ironic that the structure of our academic lives can rely so heavily on the mere position of two imperfect hands? Or, perhaps, they are themselves inspired by the workings of human hands: the neighborly jab on the shoulder to encourage refocus, or the usage of study sheets to perform a quick whack on the head, much like a church bulletin would lovingly graze the headtop of a turned child.

As I tend to seek inspiration through nature, it is typical that I, on this particular day, would look to the storm brewing outside as my driving force. Witnessing bolts of lightening flash across the night sky, I begin to realize that only one bright idea is needed, just one brilliant revelation in the area of my study to break, if not lift, the veil of confusion that shatters my understanding of the material. But when, I wondered, would it strike me? In the meantime, I will just gamble in the possibility that by some phenomenon the lightening would somehow find its way though the intricate wiring of the library and into the wiring of my brain. After all, isn't that what Einstein had in mind?

Once is awhile the sudden screech from a moving chair or a tapping pen will break the silence that envelops the room. And, in this case, startled reactions will rhythmically play off one another. For example, a gasp will escape a mouth, before this concerned only with silently sounding out the words to a Shakespearean play, or once seemingly entranced eyes will dart from side to side, nervously scanning the room. All in all, this eerie silence served as a reminder that this is an area reserved for those with intense focus. This area wasn't designed to support the irrational, not to say ridiculous, thoughts of wishful students like me, who are more likely to resort to nature's supernatural power than the capabilities of one's own mind.

Suddenly aware of my displacement in this "tower of terror" (or more like "chapel of study") I silently sneak my way back into the lobby, alas, a free woman, to reserve my place for the next elevator down. For just as a priest reserves a soundproof room in the back of a church for whining babies, the elevator remains a accessible for those who wish to whimper at their task at hand rather than value the beautiful complexities of it, perhaps as complex as the multi-dimensional stained-glass windows of a church.

Sharon Stimpfle is a UMass student.

LIFE IN HELL
©2000 BY MATT GROENING
LET'S FACE IT. THE WORD THAT SUMS UP THIS RELATIONSHIP IS "MISUNDERSTANDING"
WELL YOU KNOW WHAT THEY SAY! YOU CAN'T SPELL "MISUNDERSTANDING" WITHOUT "HUSBAND."
OH YEAH? WELL, YOU CAN'T SPELL "HARM" WITHOUT "HIM."
OH YEAH? WELL, YOU CAN'T SPELL "HOG" WITHOUT "HE."
HAR HAR HAR HAR!
HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!
HAR HAR HAR HAR!
HA HA
THANK GOD WE CAN STILL LAUGH TOGETHER.

I'm random and unoffensive today

SAM WILKINSON

If Larry King can do it, if Janet Burr can do it, then by God, so can I.

Campus Diversity issues? Tough place to play. If the Student Government Association oversaw a nation rather than this campus, the United Nations would have already sent in peacekeepers. Amherst College students have too much money but not enough sense. Get it?

WMUA might be the greatest radio station in the Campus Center Basement.

Chancellor Scott steps down and all the members of the Graduate Employee Organization are like balloons with holes at the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade: deflated.

"The Critic" was so much better than most people give it credit for being.

Animated television shows? Tough thing to do.

The whole problem with attending UMass is the annoying classes that get in the way of working at the Collegian. 4 Non Blondes was one of the worst bands ever, regardless of the fact that Ianeane Garofalo was its lead singer. Chicken Curry, very hot: perhaps the greatest food ever.

Hifi.com giving a discount to the Collegian? Huge effort by them. Just because somebody says that Bounce will be the greatest movie ever doesn't mean it will be.

I swear I'm not stalking anybody, and that's with a wink and nod to anyone who suggests differently. The Old-Timer burger, the chips and root beer? Could life get any better?

The weather, what's up with that?

Objectivity is totally within the eye of the beholder. Most people will suggest that the Collegian, by virtue of taking political positions around campus, is somehow not being objective. I would argue that the key to objectivity is knowing that it is impossible not to have opinions and then strive for objective coverage. Taking issue with our coverage because it isn't liked is very different from it being wrong. There is a very definite, albeit very subtle, difference there. In the same vein, let's be honest, do our reporters quote people wrong, or do people's quotes look bad when written down? One of the keys to writing is not to write as you would speak, similarly, it isn't natural for one's speech to be written down. Spoken English and written English are so wildly different that is nearly impossible for them to mesh.

Beyond that, there are some people who say some really stupid things and then expect not to be quoted. That is ridiculous. For a person to say that they've planned "stuff" and then get mad because the most they knew about their own plans was that it involved "stuff" is ridiculous. We do not sit at the office and look at our quotes and doctor them to make them all the more interesting. Quite often, they already are interesting enough without us having to add words, which we would never do anyway.

Where's the snow huh? This is ridiculous.

The New England Patriots. You people convinced me to support the Red Sox, but the Patriots suck. Good lord.

Canadian elections and they get a President.

Haitian elections and they will get a President by Thursday.

United States election in November and we won't have a president in December.

The Student Government Association elections in September and we won't have a Senate in December. Patriots versus the Student Government Association – who sucks more?

There's nothing like phoning in a column. Nothing like admitting that I don't want to write about anything serious because everything I do, there's hell to pay.

Maybe I'll just retire from writing. I can't write without getting in serious trouble. It's not worth it anymore. Being misunderstood constantly sucks.

www.dailycollegian.com? Tough place to work with.

Outkast's new album? Interesting. Wu-Tang's? Disappointing, albeit the fine singles. Pharcyde's? It isn't Bizarre, that's for damned sure.

So far, this week, I've skipped four of seven classes. At most points during this year, I've skipped 80 percent of classes ... average. This newspaper sucks the life out of workers.

A giant big steak, a potato and milk might not be the perennial favorite of Naderites, but it's good and tasty.

Let's be honest, Harry Browne won the election. C'mon people, the Libs were bound to win it.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the SGA Presidency. Adam Martignetti's running for Trustee.

I want a cookie. Oreos are better than Hydrox though.

"Third and 48"? Greatest column in Collegian history, and the only one with the possibility of ever being nationally syndicated.

Unbreakable: better movie if there's a good sequel.

Brooks Dorm? Underrated, even though I don't live there and I'd probably never go back.

Bill Fitch? Bad basketball coach, but he better watch out – here's comes Bruiser. What's the difference between a cat and a dog? Dogs are nice while there was a cat that once stuck me right in the eyeball.

Photographs, tough things to take. Photo Department at the Collegian, tougher place to work. Want to be photo editor?

The Minuteman's great, but the Collegian is better.

I just got $5 tickets for a Paul Simon show. It's on the same day as a party that I was looking forward to. Anybody want to go? I've got a photo pass. And without that, I'm bouncing. Maybe next week I'll care enough to write something serious. But I doubt it.

Sam Wilkinson is a Collegian columnist.

DINOSAURS OF ROCK

Chapter Eight
Jurasslookgoodinleather Period

Megadeth
(Usedtobecool.com)

Although forever to be known as "that guy who left Metallica's band" despite many excellent albums and approaching 15 years as a band (with eternally rotating personnel), Megadeth is the baby of Dave Mustaine. Former addict, supposedly former asshole, Mustaine has been clean for awhile but only recently has decided to record some really crappy music.

It hasn't always been this way. Rust in Peace is one of the best thrash albums of all time, and easily ranks on par with any of the first four Metallica albums; a FACT that I will gladly argue with any detractor. The band's first few albums also followed in the mid 90s with two excellent and straightforward metal albums, Countdown to Extinction and Youthanasia, before slowing down for a more classic rock feel for Cryptic Writings and Risk. Cryptic I stand by as a good album, but 1999's Risk was terribly boo and spelled the end for this version of the band. The songs were uninspired and uninspired or bad, and the crappiness evident in the album bled into the live show. One could blame the exit of fiery axeman Marty Friedman, but the current lineup has been together for a couple albums now, from two sources. One, the band appears it would rather be bathing in lava than performing, and two, the chosen setlists, with few exceptions, are atrocious. No one can argue with "Holy Wars...The Punishment Due" or "Peace Sells...But Who's Buying?," but for the most part the songs are new stuff no one cares about, or the same songs they play in nearly the same order every show. Megadeth has a very solid pool of good songs they haven't pulled out in years, and a current lineup that is a pretty happy representation. Megadeth's most recent album, the "greatest hits" disc Capitol Punishment, is perhaps the absolute worst retrospective ever released. Two awful new songs inexplicably begin the album, which then segues into crap from Risk before spiraling into the band's entire catalog in reverse order. Megadeth: Killing used to be Megadeth's business, but recently business has been far from good.

Dio
(Elfin Gnomeisa)

Forever diligent dwarf guarding the pot of gold, under-bridge dweller Ronnie James Dio has been casting his spell on audiences for a quarter of a century. Dio established his brand of fantasy-themed rock early with Elf and Rainbow before fronting Black Sabbath in the early 80s, a union that would be short lived, but would result in Sabbath fans and the metal community Dio returned to Sabbath in the early 90s for the unexceptional Dehumanizer album, but his work in the cleverly named band Dio throughout the last two decades is what the man who strikes fear into dragons everywhere is best known for.

There is no arguing or demeaning the worth of Dio's first two albums Holy Diver and The Last In Line. Just like anyone self or uneducated metal classics and people like myself or uneducated metal classics and them three times daily. Classic cuts from these two records are the main substance of Dio's only other good release, Inferno: Last In Live, which aptly captures the power and class of a live Dio show. Unfortunately, the rest of Dio's solo releases, some of which are actually pretty good, are all but unlistenable. His latest release, 2000's Magica, will most likely provide the base for much of Dio's upcoming concert at the Palladium in Worcester, the first MA stop for Dio in quite some time. Unfortunately, the album is a mess, a concept album that is about as "nowadays everybody wanna talk, but they got nothin' to say, and nothin' comes out when they move their lips, it's just a bunch of gibberish, and motherfuckers act like they forgot about Dio. My name is Rainbow in the Dark" as Dio's tired and cash a "Rainbow in the Dark" in Worcester on December 8.

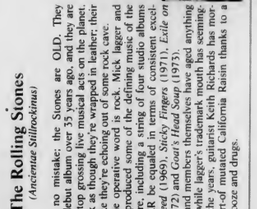
Chapter Seven
Early Prozac Period

The Rolling Stones
(Ancientae Shitrockinus)

Make no mistake: the Stones are OLD. They dropped their debut album over 35 years ago, and they are still one of the top grossing live musical acts on the planet. Their faces look as though they're wrapped in leather; their voices sound like they're echoing out of some rock cave.

But the operative word is rock. Mick Jagger and company have been playing it since the inception of the entire rock genre, including a string of four studio albums that will NEVER be equaled in terms of consistent excellence: Let it Bleed (1969), Sticky Fingers (1971), Exile on Main Street (1972) and Goat's Head Soup (1973).

The band members themselves have aged anything but gracefully. Jagger's once-boyish face has seemingly grown over the years into a wizened mask, resembled into a sort-of mutated California Raisin thanks to a steady diet of booze and drugs.



Elton John
(Rocketmanivore)

People love to root for the little guy; the underdog. In music, nobody better exemplifies this status than Elton John. The quiet introverted Englishman, who came into the world as Reginald Dwight, was transformed in the music megastar of Elton John with the release of his second single in America, "Your Song." From there he never looked back, selling millions of records and building a legend on his way to becoming the top selling artist of the seventies. Professional success continued throughout the eighties, despite the revelation of his bisexuality and constant struggles with drugs, alcohol, and a lack of confidence. Elton, so bored up, found love, and a wife, and a family. He seems

David Bowie
(Andmyownsaurusmajorsaurus)

Oddity", a song Bowie says was inspired by the first moon landing.

Bowie is most recognized for his Ziggy Stardust years, and his tendency to change his music style ever so often. Bowie has experimented with everything from glam rock to soul to electronica. His album Hunk released in early October of 1999 was not only reminiscent of some of his earlier work, but (with the exception of "The Pretty Things Are Going To Hell" from the movie Stigmata) was also for the most part a soundtrack for the computer game "Omikron: The Nomad Soul" which also included characters designed after Bowie, his wife Iman, and his band mates.

At the age of 52, Bowie is still touring and creating new music, while also having his own internet banking company, his internet banking company, his online art gallery and of course selling stock in himself. It is obvious that Bowie doesn't plan on retiring any time soon.

Daily Collegian Archaeological Survey

Adam White, Alan Basque, Sarah Wingardner, Mike Delano, Andrea Mangini, Regan McKendry

Oasis becomes Familiar to Millions by standing on giants' shoulder; Grinch and Bounce soundtracks exploit obvious commericalism

OASIS
Familiar to Millions
Epic

The humbly titled Familiar to Millions simply comes at the wrong time in the career of Oasis. Seen by all except the most stubborn as one of the best rock acts of the 90s, the brothers Gallagher are at a slump in their timeline, and a double live album is about the furthest thing from the remedy. The tanking of Standing on the Shoulder of Giants in the US was inevitable, since the masses here tuned out after the final chords of "Champagne Supernova," but the jejeune reception the album received overseas was worrisome. Two original band members leaving and the usual Liam and Noel tension left many to wonder if the album would even be made before the band collapsed, and the final product turned out to be solid but uninspiring. More trouble arose when they released less B-sides on the subsequent singles off the album and not only were the handful of them unable to stand next to classics like "Listen Up" or "Underneath the Sky," they were almost entirely sung by Noel leaving one to wonder if the rift between the brothers was more serious than expected.

Apparently, it was serious, as Noel left the tour for a few months during the year, returning for the UK shows, one of which is documented here, from Wembley Stadium July 21st. For the simple fact that it's Oasis live it's a great album, but there are problems with the timing and the album itself. First, at a point where the songwriting talent of the band is called into question ("Go Let It Out" is not a classic), strong new material would be the preferred antidote rather than an 18 track reminder that Oasis has written amazing songs in the past. But, if your memory of Oasis's brilliance needs to be refreshed, look no further, since the proof is here. "Wonderwall," "Live Forever," "Supersonic" – we don't even need to get into it, they're all here, complete with Liam and Noel swearing at the fans.

The set list could have been a little more adventurous, though Noel's acoustic set is gone, so everything rocks out in full electric, which is of interest to fans but does a disservice to a few tracks. Also, this would have been the ideal time for Oasis to pull out some of their classic B-sides, songs that people aren't as familiar with and could breathe fresh life into the set list. Alas, it's a fairly predictable run, chronicling the criminal omission of all but one song from Be Here Now that started on this year's tour, although adding two great new covers. A spirited cover of the Beatles' "Helter Skelter" seems to be the new "I Am the Walrus," and Noel's affecting take on Neil Young's "Hey Hey, My My (Into the Black)" will hopefully become a concert staple.

In the end, the album is an unsatisfying morsel thrown to those hungry for new (and hopefully improved) Oasis material, and certainly not the definitive live document that it could have been. However, it does serve as a helpful reminder of the golden road that Oasis walked to get here, and hopefully 2000 was simply a detour before getting back on path. (Michael Delanol

LIFEHOUSE
No Name Face
DreamWorks

If modern alternative radio is a sludge of homogeneity, then Lifehouse is the ultra-pale middle, where every contemporary influence swirls together. Imagine Three Doors Down and Matchbox Twenty collaborating on the songwriting, with vocals by Fuel and artistic supervision by Creed. The closest comparison, however, would probably be with Tonic, the only other band to achieve such a perfectly appealing blandness.

There is nothing overwhelmingly special about this band. The sound, the lyrics and the look are extraordinarily basic. They do not surprise or do anything remotely revolutionary; they just create music for the masses. Lifehouse won't be a band that will be remembered for creating one of the greatest albums ever. In the same sense, they won't be remembered for making one of the worst ones, either. In the world of mainstream rock, they make no attempt to stand out.

None of these songs is bad. The vocals are solid, if totally typical of the genre, and the songwriting does a commendable job of duplicating current trends in pop rock, with thick, well-balanced instrumentation and fine musicianship.

Holding Lifehouse back is their near-complete unwillingness to stretch people's expectations of what successful music can be. With every song sounding exactly the same, it seems like Lifehouse tries to be the Backstreet Boys of hard rock. The mandolin-driven "Trying," with its nicely arranged string section and almost REM-ish feel (vocals notwithstanding) comes close to true innovation; and most frustratingly, it's an excellent song, letting us know that Lifehouse has the talent to carry out greater designs than the radio pies it spends most of its time baking. Lifehouse is definitely a band to watch, but until they break free of the rut of their contemporaries its future remains far from certain. (David Troupes and Ryan Benhartis)

PIZZICATO FIVE
The Fifth Release
Matador Records

Nothing in the world compares to Pizzicato Five. They bring out the starved elegance in us all that just wants to sit in a barber chair and talk about posh dress, a la mode design and endless frivolous gossip all day long with our gorgeously homosexual hairdresser/entertainer from a choice cosmetology school. With our hairdresser we discuss the explosion of Pizzicato Five and the glory of Dee-Lite. We say to one another, "Why is Pizzicato Five's audience primarily gay"? We laugh to that.

As evident by the above bold header, this is P5's fifth U.S. release and maybe their most fluent. The record is a bold and unpredictable score, an ode to brilliance and elegance throughout the land. The musicianship is far above par if compared to the majority of today's bands. The compositions of mastermind Yasuharu Konishi float to greatness in the clouds and shine up there like the sun.

P5 stay true to their lounge/dance and candy coated sixties image pop craftsmanship. These songs make you move naturally and with ease. The music ranges in complexities that would make Frank Zappa say, "Nice work Konishi." Not to mention, singer Maki Nomiya's voice combines elements of jazz and Sade and mish-mashes them into her own wide range of soothing vocal presence.

significant 0 others

Out of Tokyo, Japan emerges a joy of true ambrosial fruit. P5 is hipper than your daddy's rock band and are the definitive instigators of sheik coulness, image, fun and superficiality. This aside they also are brilliant masters of music that can transform a day into a dream, into a career, or into anything you may need to kick out your tension and relax in reverie. (Aaron Pfannebecker)

8 STOPS 7
In Moderation
Republic Records

Pearl Jam knock offs are oh-so common amongst American rock music. Most of them have been utter flops. Names like Candlebox and Seven Mary Three come to mind as highlights of the sad phenomenon that has been caused by the Seattle band.

8 Stops 7 is a bit more than just a normal Pearl Jam copy band, although the influence is certainly present. The very first riff on the very first song, "Satisfied" is identical to the one used on "Once," the first track on Pearl Jam's Ten.

There are some very important standouts on In Moderation, that help make it significantly better than any cheap Pearl Jam mockings. The first single, "Would Be Savoir," had very small amounts of radio play, but is quite good.

The second single, "Question Everything," is excellent. After all of the awful songs that recent bands have used to reap the benefit of the "I hate my father" craze, like Papa Roach's "Broken Home," and Everclear's "Father of Mine," "Question Everything" refreshes with a different take on the subject. The song has the same overtone as the others, but presents it in a much more subtle and angry way.

Though it seems like the band's short run with success may be over, In Moderation deserves much more than just a quick overlooking. (Ryan Benhartis)

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Bounce Motion Picture Soundtrack
Arista

Soundtracks to romance movies are notoriously cheese-laden, and this is no exception. Admittedly, though, there's some reasonably high-quality cheese here, and fans of adult contemporary pop won't find much to disagree with.

Leigh Nash of Sixpence None the Richer kicks off the record with "Need to be Next to You," as typical a piece of glossy top-40 candy as you're likely to find, followed by Beth Orton's "Central Reservation (The Then Again Version)," another solid tune (although the original version found on her album of the same name is much better). Dido's breakthrough hit, "Here With Me," provides the album's strongest track.

The Lilith Fair crowd comes out in force with offerings by Tara MacLean, Sister Seven, Sixpence None the Richer and "Divided," the familiar Sarah McLachlan/Delerium collaboration.

This album has no soul, no depth; it is held together by a unifying commercialism. Next to such classic soundtracks as Blues Brothers, Pulp Fiction and Rushmore, it's hardly worth mentioning. Notions of artistic integrity aside, however, it's a convenient collection of radio singles that probably caught your fancy at one time or another. (David Troupes)

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Sole Christmas
Interscope Records

As if $100 million plus was not enough, one of the biggest movies of the year hits the record store with an original soundtrack.

The soundtrack to The Grinch brings artists together that just scream holiday cheer; Busta Rhymes, Smash Mouth, The Eels, Barenaked Ladies, and, of course, N'Sync.

With all cynicism aside, the album is not half bad. "Green Christmas," by Barenaked Ladies is puppy and enjoyable. "Lonely Christmas Eve" sounds as good as much of the best of Ben Fold' previous material, and N'Sync drivers sad Christmas melodies.

A lot of the album has clip from the film, and the original score was composed by James Horner, who's last effort was on the soundtrack to Titanic. The best songs of the album are the two to which Jim Carrey lends his weird musical talents. "Grinch 2000," a song with Carrey and Busta Rhymes doesn't exactly define a normal Christmas carol, but it works. Carrey also performs "You're a Mean One, Mr. Grinch," the most memorable tune from the original cartoon.

Personally, I'm hoping to see Busta Rhymes release an entire Christmas album, so move over Neil Diamond. Maybe we'll get lucky and Busta will remake "In Your Easter Bonnet," just in time for the big bunny to deliver the chocolate goodies later next year.

Go out and buy the soundtrack, just so you can put in on the shelf next to your Grinch cereal, Grinch nightshirt, Grinch vitamin, and Grinch hemorrhoidal cream. The soundtrack to The Grinch may not be on the top of your Christmas wish list, but, like the film, it will certainly entertain the kids. Well, the kids and Kurt Polesky. (Ryan Benharris)

Join the Collegian! We are a crazy bunch of students that bounce off the sides of the wall in the Campus Center Basementlate at night.

COME TO LIQUORS 44 AND SAVE A LOT OF "DOUGH! DOUGH! DOUGH!"
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink & Drive
EVERYDAY PRICING
1/2 KEGS $44.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS $45.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS $37.99 + dep
1/2 KEGS $82.99 + dep
LITE & LITE ICE 30 PACK $16.49 + dep
KEYSTONE LIGHT 30 PACK $11.49 + dep
BITTER CREEK 12 PACK ALL TYPES $9.99 + dep
Corona & CORONA LIGHT CASE $18.99 + dep
PABST BLUE RIBBON CASE $8.99 + dep
24 OZ. $3.99 + dep
WINES OF THE MONTH
Beringer $7.99
CARLO ROSSI WINES $6.99
TWIN VALLEY WINES $6.99
CITRA WINES $5.99
BOGLE MERLOT $7.99
CANYON ROAD CHARDONNAY $6.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM $18.99
TANQUERAY GIN $24.99
SOUTHERN COMFORT $18.49
JACK DANIELS $15.49
DEWARS WHITE LABEL SCOTCH $31.99
PHEASANT SPRING VODKA $8.99
AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555
SALE PRICES THURS. 11/30/00 THRU WEDS. 12/06/00

LAST CHANCE
jostens
TO PURCHASE YOUR OFFICIAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASS RING
A Jostens representative will be on campus Wednesday, Thursday, Friday. November 29th, 30th & December 1. 10am - 2pm Outside the University Store.
$50 DEPOSIT REQUIRED
MAJOR CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED

Low Student Airfares
Eurailpasses
More Than 100 Departure Cities
Study Abroad
studentuniverse.com
800.272.9676

Make A Pledge To Drive Safe and Sober
TIE A MADD RIBBON ON YOUR CAR TODAY
Always Remember To Designate a driver...

Not a target.
77 percent of Heavy Drinkers work or go to school fulltime.
HOW OFTEN DO THEY GET BEHIND THE WHEEL?
Get Your Ribbon at the Campus Center Concourse on Friday, December 1, 2000.
Sponsored by REAP (Residential Education Alcohol Program) and MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers).
This message is brought to you through donations from the UMASS Police Department

The Five College Area's Source for Discovering the Weekly Happenings of New England and Beyond

THE SOURCE

Another Fine Product of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian — Every Thursday!

This Week's Highlights:

The University Dancers will perform tonight through Saturday night at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program will include several pieces choreographed and performed by students and a variety of dance styles, such as modern, classic ballet, jazz, and jazz-ballet.

The University Dancers will also perform two works by Billbob Brown in a work entitled Bosnia, created for the University Dancers and the UMass Percussion Ensemble.

Tickets are $10 for the general public, $5 for students, elders and children under 18. They can be purchased in advance at the Fine Arts Center Box Office or at the door. Call 545-2511 for more information.

ART

Artsy Magazine: A fine arts and literary

Looking for female graphic designers, photographers and writers. Come to the 7 pm meeting Dec 11 at the Black Sheep in Amherst.

Reconstruction: bronze sculpture by James Salvatore: through Dec. 8
Opening reception: Dec. 4, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery

Idle Accessories: paintings by Lauren Piotrowski: through Dec. 8
Opening reception: Dec. 4, 5-7 p.m.
Augusta Savage Gallery

Blue, paintings by Jim Allen: through Dec. 12
Central Gallery

The Art of the Mezzotint: Two Contemporary Masters: through Dec. 12
Hampden Gallery

The Real Brazil, work from two Brazilian photographers: through Dec 15
University Gallery

Life's Opposite Ends, paintings by Janet Walerstein Winston through Dec. 14
Opening Reception: Dec 3, 2-4 p.m.
Burnett Gallery, Jones Library

MUSIC

University Orchestra
Dec. 1, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall
545-2511

Eddie Palmieri Band with David Sanchez
Dec. 2, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall
545-2511

Hard and Heavy 2000
Dec. 2, 2:30 p.m.
Skybox

Pilfers
plus Big D and Kids Table and Groove Selector
Dec. 3, 8 p.m.
Skybox

The Bewitched Child and A Hand of Bridge
by the Umass Opera Workshop
Dec. 3, 2 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

The Wailers
with Pressure Cooker
Dec. 6, 8 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

THEATRE/DANCE

University Dancers
Nov. 30 – Dec. 2, 8 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium
545-2511

Much Ado About Nothing
Nov. 30 – Dec. 2, 8 p.m.
Dec. 2, 2 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
545-0415

FILM

AMC Mountain Farms 4
Call for listings: (413) 584-9153
Hadley

Cinemark
Call for listings: (413) 587-4233
Hadley

Pleasant Street Theaters
Call for listings: (413) 586-0935
Northampton

Academy of Music
Call for listings: (413) 584-8435
Northampton

Tower Theaters
Call for listings (413) 533-3456
South Hadley

OTHER

Not Ready for Bedtime Players
Dec. 1, 8 p.m.
Bluewall

Mission Improvable
Dec. 2, 8 p.m.
Campus Center Room 163

Music in a Bottle
mixed media arts festival
by UMass students
Dec. 2, 3 p.m. – 1 a.m.
Bluewall

"The Legacy of Matthew Shepard" with Judy Shepard
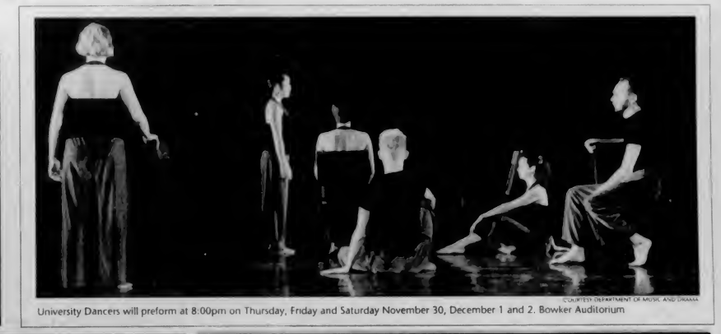
Dec. 4, 8 p.m.
Concert Hall

ATTENTION:

The Source is constantly looking for submissions. What could be better than free advertisement that reaches over 20,000—daily!? Bring your event's information down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement and drop it in The Source mailbox, or email us at sourcesubmissions@hotmail.com

The Daily Collegian is my source for entertainment listings, news, sports, and more.....



University Dancers will preform at 8:00pm on Thursday, Friday and Saturday November 30, December 1 and 2. Bowker Auditorium

COURTESY DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC AND DRAMA

UMASS The UMass Index Yearbook
ATTENTION!!!
CLASS OF 2001
SENIOR PORTRAITS BEGINNING NOV 27TH
Make your appointment now by calling 1-800-OUR-YEAR or log on to www.ouryear.com
School Access #147
(You need to know the access number when you make the appointment)
DAVOR PHOTOGRAPHY
Walsworth Publishing Company
Order Your 2001 Yearbook ONLY $50.00
Log on to www.walsworth.com or Call 1-800-929-1503
(Service Charge of $2.95 for orders placed by phone)

The Newman Center invites you to Participate in our annual Giving Tree
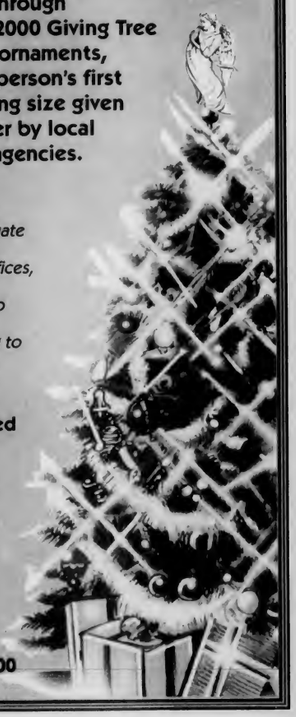
From December 3rd through December 15th, our 2000 Giving Tree will be adorned with ornaments, each baring a young person's first name, age and clothing size given to the Newman Center by local churches and social agencies.
Undergraduate and graduate students, fraternities, sororities, sports teams, offices, departments and families are welcome to take an ornament and give a gift of clothing to needy young person.
The Giving Tree is located in the Chapel of the Newman Center 472 North Pleasant St., Amherst
Please drop off gifts no later than Sunday, December 17, 2000
Call or stop by with any questions (413) 549-0300



Whoa Nelly...Furtado

By Michael Delano
Collegian Staff

NELLY FURTADO
Whoa, Nelly!
Dreamworks

LISTED
Crazy Town
Dreamworks

Nelly Furtado sang on the magical "Turn Off the Light," and what it seems Nelly Furtado wants us to do. Turn Off the Radio, a debut album that explores the realms of R&B, reggae and lanterns-her super-sweet, subtle voice is backed by super-simple instruments named Nelly Furtado. Nelly would simply appear to be another TRL groomed pop star with a freak leg of publicity to propel her to fame. Nothing could be further from the truth, and this album proves it. Combining Limited as the perfect time the best of all three worlds, Furtado has placed herself in a unique position, standing between Missy Elliott's Supa Dupa Fly, Madonna's Ray of Light and Sade's Lovers Rock. Furtado's debut album, Whoa, Nelly!, is not just another pop album, it is a musical experience that will leave you wanting more.

Furtado, a native of Canada and of Portuguese descent, Furtado's naked and unique voice is recall Fiona Apple. She seems to be having fun sounds throughout the album as Furtado flexes her vocal muscles. She also has a thing for lush orchestral arrangements- highly produced and basic. High-voiced singer-songwriter fans might cry foul at the looped samples and turntable scratches, but the variety of sounds only helps keep the album fresh and exciting, while never hindering Furtado's playful and confident voice.

In fact, Furtado has already recorded a song for the haters. While "Shit on the Radio (Remember the Days)" speaks to one particular detractor, the song, like the whole album, is a gleeful middle finger to those who demand their pop inaccessible, radio unfriendly, and forever sentenced to coffee shops and hazy clubs. Her talent simply is broader than the accepted boundaries of some of her artsier peers and the room she needs to explore musically wouldn't necessarily lead her to popularity, but her pop sensibility and catchy songwriting does. "I'm Like A Bird," is the perfect realization of this. Apologizing for the end of a relationship but embracing her free spirit she sings "I'll only fly away/ I don't know where my soul is, I don't know where my home is." Her soul is definitely in her music, and watching her search for it throughout the album is a pleasure.

Limited has the currently unoriginal mission of combining "rock and electronic" and ironically one of the biggest obstacles the band faces in elevating their strong rock talent is the pesky "electronic." The hooks and melodies of guitarist Eric Steinman and vocalist/guitarist Rex Osburn are strong enough to nullify any need for electronic assistance, and the lively rhythm section of drummer Matt McCord and bassist Rick Verrett often suffers the most due to the intrusion. Strong songwriting can't overcome the cumbersome electronic burden in songs like "Always/Never" and the sparse "Dangergirl," although the latter does prove that, like their friends the Deftones' "Teenager" emotional delivery accentuated goes a long way.

Osburn certainly takes a page from the Chino Moreno/Daryl Palumbo book of singing, as his drawn-out pronunciation and Lamesque sneer is affecting but can also become tiring over the course of the album. At the beginning of Tried • True when the band is at its peak, his lyrics deal simply and directly with relation-hips, most nakedly on the quiet "Drop." "Immune" fits much better here than it does in the company of Rob Zombie on the Mtv 2 soundtrack, and "Arrange" and "Way Thru" are maybe the two most unassuming and perfectly structured rock songs one is likely to hear this year. Despite sonic issues with consistency, Limited has produced an expertly confident debut that doesn't bow to any genre confinements or strive for commercial acceptability and any work with those characteristics and a pop sensibility is more than refreshing today.

Both artists have albums that are mixed bags, when they hit they hit spectacularly, but when they don't they just float on by, out of the listener's memory. However, Nelly Furtado and Limited are so full of potential and so close to perfecting their sounds that the wisdom of Furtado speaks volumes again when she sings "but the party's just begun."

Nelly Furtado poses for her new album "Whoa Nelly"

COURTESY OF STEVE RATH

Heyya...
Eddie Palmieri performs Saturday, December 1 at 8:00PM in the Concert Hall.

Giving UMass Flying Lessons; area students groove in the air

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Correspondent

It's an old story: local band trying to make it big. It bears hearing though, when the band is up-and-coming, local, and has strong ties to UMass.

Flying Lessons, a self-proclaimed "groove" rock band, is comprised of UMass students and graduates from nearby South Hadley, Massachusetts. They're equal parts Phish, blues, and the Jimi Hendrix Experience. Brian Chartrand (currently working on his honor- thesis for graduation) fronts the band with solid vocals and an acoustic guitar. John (Tomo) Tomaszeksi (UMass class of 1997) grooves on the bass. Drummer Rob Chateauneuf (UMass class of 2000) provides the beats and the rhythm. Add the talents of those three with the electric guitar wizardry of current UMass junior and computer science major Tak Yamashita, and Flying Lessons take off.

"We're straight ahead groove rock, there's no doubt about it," Chartrand explains. "Groove rock is the best explanation for what we play. We jam and funk it up a little bit."

The beauty of Flying Lessons is the diversity of the music that they can play. "Each member brings their own genre and their own experiences, musically to the band. What's great about the band we've got is that we can take our own influences and blend them spontaneously into a great song, at any time," Chartrand boasts.

In the last few years, Flying Lessons has tightened their set considerably, polishing it at local venues such as Amherst Brewing Company, Mike's Billiards, Westfield State College, Stoney's Pub, Mount Holyoke, and Grandstands.

Recently, I attended one of their shows at A.B.C., not knowing what to expect. When Flying Lessons plays live, they blend their music with showmanship, improvisation, and most importantly, fun. "I think we've got something to satisfy everyone," Chateauneuf says. "We're versatile; we cover the spectrum and play a little bit of everything."

There's no other good way to explain it: Flying Lessons is a fun band. They've got a presence on the stage, and get the crowd into their show with sometimes zany high jinks. At A.B.C., they kept up a steady banter with each other, the crowd and the employees. They also played a funky happy birthday song for a patron and offered to buy the man a drink, on the spot. Now that's showmanship.

Yamashita explains the band's philosophy. "When people come to our shows, we want to make them move. We want people to realize that there is some depth to our music. Since we span such a wide variety of dynamics, we can play to a myriad of listeners."

The future appears bright for Flying Lessons, as well. Recently, they released a three-song demo CD, which they have sent to a variety of record companies and bands in hopes of making it big. Among others, CD's were sent to places like the Iron Horse and Pearl Street and to bands such as Vertical Horizon. The first batch of CD's quickly sold out, and there's more in production on the way. Also, a website .www.geocities.com/flying_lessons, has been published to help those interested keep up with the bands gigs, among other things.

Many more shows are coming. In particular, early December is going to be busy for the Lessons. Flying Lessons is playing this Friday, December 1 (Hadley Pub, 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.), Sunday, December 3 (10 p.m. at The Fire and Water Cafe on Strong Street in Northampton) and next Saturday, December 9 (10 p.m. at Mike's Billiards on Route 9), so there are plenty of opportunities for you to give Flying Lessons a look in the next week or so.

"We want to showcase our music anywhere we can," Chartrand states. "We're all original - I hope people can appreciate the mix of music that we can play. We want people to enjoy it."

Sports Editors •
Bryan Smith
Mike Kobylanski
collegian_sports@yahoo.com

UMass looks to squeeze Orange

Both swim and dive teams slated for two meets

By Matthew F. Sacco
Collegian Staff

After a hearty Thanksgiving dinner, the Massachusetts swimming and diving teams are going on a strictly fruit diet. So this weekend instead of turkey and stuffing, UMass will be bobbing for oranges, as they take on Syracuse in a crucial home meet.

Competition starts tomorrow in the Joseph R Rogers Jr. pool in the Boyden Building. Diving will start at 3 p.m. and swimming is slated to begin at 6 p.m. The action continues on Saturday, with swimming at 10 a.m. followed by diving at 1 p.m. The meet concludes with the final swimming events, beginning at 3 p.m.

The Minutewomen are coming off a dominating 144-107 victory over St. John's to improve to 5-0 on the season. UMass' undefeated record is due in large part to the emergence of freshman Christen Dexter.

The Centerville native was recently named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for the second week in a row. Dexter claimed two victories in the Minutewomen's win over the Red Storm.

Another reason for UMass' untarnished success this season is the performance of an exceptional junior class. Third year swimmers Andrea Kazanjian, Becky Hunnewell and Anne Dettloff have all had a superfluity of achievement in the pool this year.

Kazanjian, a native New Yorker, has been able to take the top A-10 times in both the 50-yard freestyle (24.54 seconds) and the 100-yard freestyle (53.58).

Hunnewell also holds two conference marks in the backstroke. The Sandwich local recorded an A-10 leading 59.72 in the 100-yard backstroke and a 2:07.35 mark in the 200-yard backstroke.

Dettloff, who hails from Barrington, Illinois, currently possesses a conference best time of 1:55.72 in the 200 freestyle.

Massachusetts native Annie Turdyn leads the Orangewomen, who are 2-1 on the year. The freshman holds the school record in the 200-yard breaststroke 12:16.33) as well as a team season top time in the 100-yard breaststroke (1:05.09).

UMass' talented junior class is standing over the very thin line that separates victory and defeat. If the juniors continue their dominance, then oranges are on the menu. However, if they capsize, then the hopes of a Maroon and White victory will reside in Davie Jones' locker.

As for their male counterparts in the pool, the Minutemen head into the meet against the Orangemen with a 3-2 record, having lost two straight. UMass is trying to rebound from a 147-98 shellacking at the hands of Columbia.

From the outset of the 2000-01 campaign, the Maroon and White have been led by the inspired performance of senior Chris Arsenault. The Peabody native set a school record for the 100-yard butterfly against Central Connecticut State on November 4. His time of 49.02 is good for seventh best in the nation among Division I schools this season.

The senior has set three conference bests this season including the 100-yard butterfly (49.02), the 200-yard butterfly (1:54.31) and the 200-yard freestyle (1:41.46).

Arsenault was named Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week on November 16 for his performance against Boston University. In the meet against the Terriers, he won three events in a UMass rout.

The Minutemen will once again depend on a strong performance by Arsenault in all of his events. The key to victory however, will be the performance of his teammates, such as fellow senior Billy Brown and newcomer Ryan Fisher. Arsenault can shine but to come away with the win, the rest of the team must develop its own luster.

COURTESY OF MINUTEMEN MEDIA GUIDE

Recent Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week Chris Arsenault leads the men's swimming and diving team as they face Syracuse this weekend.

The Sport of Jesters? Ostrich racing just wrong

"Dritte und vierzig acht über den Zustanden" (better known to English speakers as "Third and Forty-Eight Across the Nation") was not featured in the Collegian last week well because that's ages ago, men decided to kill innocent turkeys. In response to this ghastly turkey massacre, we (the Third and Forty-Eight) personnel ask you (the Third and Forty-Eight) to shoulder to place this newspaper on the nearest level surface for about 30 seconds and remember the 2000 chicken world with a moment of silence, unless, of course, you ate turkey last Thursday ...enjoy the show, or perhaps, the ostrich.

Ostrich Racing/Cooking

We're not sure why they do it. We just know that they do it. We even know that they were doing it in 1950. But that doesn't make it right.

In some areas of the country, two wheel carriages are attached to the majestic bird while jockeys push the ostriches with brooms and other sticks. Sometimes the jockeys who have been know to dress like roman warriors, will simply ride on the ostrich's backs - this style is accepted as a regular win to partici pate in an ostrich race.

But it's just plain stupid.

"The only racing is done when you don't care about the bird or the rider" - said Madeleine Caldet President of the Blue Heaven Ostrich Ranch. "It's a dumb thing to do. They go 60 miles per hour and there is no steering."

What Calder does condone, however, is the consumption of her award-winning ostrich meat.

"This is an animal that is disease free," Calder said. "It's very low in cholesterol and it has no saturated fat. It's approved by the American Heart Association.

"My meat is so pure," she continued. "And it taster just like beef."

Ostriches are large. They come from the sandy plains of Africa and Arabia and are the largest of all existing birds attaining heights of up to 8 feet. If you see one, it will have a very long neck, long legs with two toes on each foot, and small, useless wings.

Good Health Never Tasted So GOOD!" That's what Calder exclaims on her website. From ostrich pasta to gourmet ostrich stuffed ravioli, this is one hell of a bird. There's even the amazing ostrich burger.

"I make these fat little burgers," Calder said. "Like beef, there's no shrinkage when you cook it. So when I make a burger that's 1/3 of a pound it comes out 1/3 of a pound."

In Indio, CA, ostriches are raced. This just isn't good.

"This were put on the planet for one reason," one of the cooks at Rubs BBQ in Sunderland said. "And that's to be consumed. I didn't even know that they raced them. I'll have to get some footage of that."

It looks like Calder, Rubs is also famous for its ostrich burger. When asked if a lot of customers order that fancy food, the aforementioned cook said, "Yeah it's ordered."

I'm anyone scared to have the large bird for dinner don't worry. The ostrich is one of the dumbest birds on the planet.

"[When preparing] there's less poop to scoop out" Calder said. "The ostrich lives eighty years and is less manure than the lamb/elk."

(Motel) Swimming

XIII Nov. Ga. - Before we went "on assignment" to cover this story in Athens, accommodations at a hotel were warranted (its, to the length of the visit. Knowing nothing about Georgia itself reservations were planned for a hotel that was supposedly on campus.

The University of Georgia's acclaimed sports programs are repre-

turn to HORN, page 10

Roadies dominating NFL

4th and inches with David Rose

We have hit the home stretch. In the 2000 NFL season... wait a minute, I should be saying that we have hit the ROAD stretch of the 2000 season, since apparently most teams have forgotten what it is like to win a home game.

This season, NFL teams have enjoyed their home turf about as I have enjoyed this Presidential Race. To put it more harshly, teams have enjoyed their home turf as much as I like getting paper cuts all over my body and then getting thrown in salt water. You get the point.

The home team in the NFL is 100-88 on the season. That is just 12 games over .500 and the advantage for the home team was just 8-7 last weekend. With this trend continuing, with the exception of Minnesota (6-0 at home), it looks like no one wants home field advantage throughout the playoffs in either conference.

The NFC had two blockbuster match ups last weekend, and wouldn't you know it, both ROAD teams won.

The New Orleans Saints went into St. Louis dead, without quarterback Jeff Blake and running back Ricky Williams. They came out of St. Louis alive, well and in first place in the NFC West. Aaron Brooks, in his first NFL start, took it to a Rams defense that has played like it has been on the road all season. He threw for one touchdown and ran for two more as the Saints controlled the tempo of a game that everyone thought they had no chance of winning.

The Rams defense has given up 367 points this season. The record for most points scored in a season is 556 by the Vikings two years ago. It is sad to say that the Rams defense is going to come pretty close to matching that figure.

While the Rams defense was sputtering again, the Saints defense had to dominate the game for the Saints to have a chance. It is safe to say, THEY DELIVERED. They sacked QB Trent Green six times and forced five turnovers. La'roi Glover had three of those sacks on Sunday, has 16 for the season and is a leading candidate to win NFL Defensive Player of the Year honors. The Saints are in first place going into December. If somebody had said that before the season, they probably would have been thrown off the ROAD.

The same thing would have happened if somebody had said that the Philadelphia Eagles would be doing what they are in the NFC East. The Eagles won a combined eight games in the last two seasons and all of a sudden are in the lead in the division with four weeks to go after a victory on the ROAD against the Redskins last week. Do you remember a couple years ago at the 1999 NFL Draft when a certain QB from Syracuse named Donovan McNabb was drafted second by the Eagles? Instead of being warmly received, he was unceremoniously booed by the Phills Fans.

Turn to NFL, page 10

All your International Soccer news

TOM FRAZER

ENGLAND – Terry Venables has admitted he is on the brink of deciding whether to end his football exile and become Middlesbrough's new manager. Venables has revealed he is "close" to ending a week of waiting for Middlesbrough chairman Steve Gibson and current boss Bryan Robson.

The most popular and successful National Coach of the past ten years was widely rumored to be in line for the National team job again after the resignation of Kevin Keegan. However, the Football Association, who selected Sven Goran Eriksson (presently boss at Lazio in Italy) as the first foreign coach of the National Side, resisted the populist appointment. It is still unclear what capacity Venables will exist in, particularly with regard to the future role of Robson.

Middlesbrough is sitting dangerously close to the bottom of the Premiership, with only one point from the last twenty-one. In what is familiar territory for many of the teams in or near the relegation zone, Boro needs to act quickly and decisively to ensure they do not get sucked into an end of season quagmire.

The situation at the top of the table is a familiar one, with Manchester United and Arsenal renewing what seems like a perpetual battle for the championship. United, however, faces an uphill task to maintain the momentum with which they have started the season, after their Trinidadian forward Dwight Yorke was sent off last week.

Les Ferdinand celebrated his return to first team action, and his cousin Rio's $25 million transfer from West Ham to Leeds United, with an unanswered hat trick against highflying Leicester. The transfer of the young international center-back makes him the most expensive defender in English soccer history.

SPAIN – The Primera Liga is again characterized by its closeness, with the top nine teams separated by eight points or less. Valencia is sitting pretty at the top of the table, but has a difficult period of games awaiting it in the next couple of weeks. Deportiva la Coruna, in second place, does not have an easier schedule, and is not troubled by the challenging upcoming European fixtures that await Valencia.

Celta Vigo's Russian midfielder Valery Karpin has won a landmark ruling that overturns restrictions on non-Europeans playing in Spain's top division. Karpin took his club, the professional football league and the Spanish Football Federation to court in an attempt to overturn the law, much as Jean-Marc Bosman did before him.

Karpin was frustrated at the lack of first team opportunities at the Primera Liga club due to restrictions imposed on non-European players. He won the case after it was proven that the European Union had signed accords with Russia, which effectively forbids discrimination against Russians working in the EU because of their nationality.

The Madrid court also overturned the present restrictions placed on the number of non-EU players who are allowed to turn out for Spanish clubs, decreeing it to be unjustified discrimination. The

Turn to SOCCER, page 10

Duck hunting
The men's hoop squad hopes they will look to put up as much of a fight as its mascot when they take on the Oregon Ducks Saturday night in Portland.

COURTESY OF AUGUSTA SAVAGE GALLERY

Reconstruction- An exhibition of Bronze Sculpture Premises at the Augusta Savage Gallery Dec 4-8pm.

GIFTS from GLASS to GOLD
starting under $20.00
The Finest silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324 M
Wed 10-6, Th 9-8 10-9, Sun 12-5
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324 M
Sat 10-6, Thurs til 7, Sun 12-5
800.729.8971 • www.silverscapedesigns.com

Marshall Steinbeck
Complete Auto Collision, Painting Service & Automotive Glass Service
(413) 256-8157
53 So. Prospect St. Amherst, Mass. 01002
STATE REG. RS #1212 MA LIC. #1398

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
6 University Drive
549-5758
Wine
Sutter Home Chard 750 4.99
Kendell Jackson Chard 750 10.99
M. Trinchero All Kinds 750 9.99
M.G. Vallejo All Kinds 750 4.99
Beer
Honey Brown 12 pcks 7.99 +dep
Pete's Sampler, 12 pcks 9.99 +dep
Dinkle Acker, 12 pcks 9.99 +dep
Sierra Nevada, 12 pcks 11.99 +dep
Spaten, Case 24 18.99 +dep
Special Spirits
Absolute Vodka 1.75 25.99
Kahlua 750 15.99
Jack Daniel IL 19.99
Jim Beam 750 9.99
REGISTER FOR PRIZES DRAWN WEEKLY
Welcome to The Site Of The New Millenium-- where MONEY and EXCITEMENT keep GROWING!
Tuition Help has arrived!
Brighten Your Holiday Play
Coming Dec. 15, 2000
Solveandwin.com
Come Unravel Our Web!..

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon
413-253-2322
• Excellent Cuts & Colors
• Facials • Aveda/Alterna
• Body Sugaring & more
Bring in coupon
Get $5 off Haircolor or Perm

Acapulco Cancun Jamaica Bahamas Florida Europe
SPRING BREAK 2001
Call For Group Rates
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES On-campus contacts:
1-800-648-4849 Josh @ 413-549-4514
www.ststravel.com

Where can you study Physical Therapy and work with world-class clinicians?
MGH INSTITUTE OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS
Graduate Programs, certificates, and classes in:
Physical Therapy • Nursing
Clinical Investigation
Communication Sciences & Disorders
Learn more at our next Information Sessions
6:00 pm, Fri., Dec. 15
Call 617-726-3140
or visit our website at www.mghihp.edu
101 Merrimac Street • Boston, MA 02114-4719
A member of the Partners HealthCare System
Top 10 Nationwide
U.S.News

NFL

continued from page 9

Two years later, he is using those same fans that booed him as the Bricks at the Indianapolis 500, running them over as fast as possible, just like he ran over Washington on Sunday with 125 yards rushing, including a 33-yard run in the fourth quarter that helped set up David Akers' game-winning field goal. The Eagles have no running back and no top-notch receivers.

But the defense is the key and Brian Mitchell on special teams gives the Eagles an instant threat.

Two games of major importance won by the visitors. That has been the story of the season. Heck, even the Tennessee Titans lost at home to Baltimore.

And speaking of the Titans, what happened to Al Del Greco? Here is Mr. Automatic from almost everywhere for such a long time, and now in the last four weeks, he has killed his team twice. He missed an extra point and a game winning field goal against the Ravens and this past weekend at Jacksonville, he missed a 29-yard field goal that would have given the Titans the lead. Is Scott Norwood available on the waiver wire? For that matter, how about Scott "Missin" Sisson?

The ineptitude of Del Greco led to the lags getting a field goal by Mike Hollis at the end of regulation to win the game. Nice win for Jacksonville, but the win over Tennessee came about 10 months too late for lag fans.

Enough about the road. I'm back home writing for the Collegian; here are my picks:

Give me Minnesota over Detroit, Atlanta over Seattle in the second worst game of the weekend, Arizona over Cincinnati in what might the worst NFL match up in the last 10 years, New Orleans over Denver, Philadelphia over Tennessee, Oakland over Pittsburgh, Tampa Bay in a rout of the Cowboys, Washington over the Giants or "The Worst 8-4 Team in NFL History."

Also, I like the Rams to bounce back from consecutive losses and beat the Panthers with Kurt Warner back at the helm. Give me San Francisco over San Diego, stopping their winning streak at one. the Jets over Indianapolis, Jacksonville over Cleveland, which they could do in their sleep. Finally, give me the Packers on Sunday Night over the Bears and the Pats on Monday Night to beat the Chiefs.

David Rose is a Collegian Columnist

soccer

continued from page 9

Spanish Federation will appeal the decision.

Beyond its Iberian peninsula, the ruling will have repercussions in Italy, as it comes only a month after Serie A side AC Milan brooched the same subject with their federation. Milan sent a letter to the Italian game's governing body, threatening legal action unless a "prompts" amended the rules limiting the number of non-EU players a club can field to three.

The letter was countersigned by the club's five non-EU players – Ukrainian striker Andriy Shevchenko, Croatian midfielder Zvonimir Boban and Brazilian trio Dida, Serginho and Roque Junior. Milan's complaints followed a Reggio Emilia court decision saying that any discrimination between EU citizens and non-EU nationals legally working in Italy was illegal.

WORLD In World Soccer news, Argentine president Fernando de la Rua called for a national Fiesta after Boca Juniors from Buenos Aires defeated Real Madrid in the Intercontinental Cup. The South American champions claimed the crown with a thrilling 2-1 victory in Japan, in what many international football experts consider more of a showpiece game than a serious competitive contest.

Boca is the first South American team to lift the trophy since Argentine rivals Velez Sarsfield beat AC Milan in 1994 and the president, a fanatical Boca fan, described his over-whelming joy at the victory. "Today is a 'fiesta' for all Argentina. It doesn't matter which team you support because this was an Argentine side that won," said de la Rua, speaking to double scorer Martin Palermo.

Former Boca captain and self-declared number one fan Diego Maradona praised coach Carlos Bianchi for both his intelligence and tactical brilliance after the victory. "I was sure Boca would win and win with style," said Maradona, who insisted the Spaniards had approached the game with equal intent to Boca.

"It really bugged me, these people going round saying Madrid wasn't interested in this cup. It's an outright lie. They were dying to win it," he exclaimed. "Oh, how I would have loved to have been there," said the 40-year old, currently undergoing extensive treatment to overcome his cocaine addiction. Maradona had been refused a visa into Japan because of his drug-related convictions.

Tom Frazer is a Collegian correspondent horn

continued from page 9

sented by its mascot, the Bulldog. With that said, it would have made sense for the university to have called its on-campus hotel "The Bulldog Inn." But no. Another entity stole that title, and that entity duped this reporter about the location of the hotel with its misleading name.

"No, we're not affiliated with the university," the night manager said. Then it could be assumed that the Bulldog Inn would not have an athletic program, despite its in-ground pool.

When one thinks about Georgia, thoughts of peaches and sunshine may come to mind. Especially the sunshine. The weather in Georgia was bitterly cold during our stay, but for most polar bears, that wouldn't stop them from going swimming. The management did.

"The pool?" said the night manager. "No, the pool has been closed for a while."

Strike One.

Okay, the pool was closed. We were 15 miles from campus, with no sense of direction and with nothing to do. How about athletic activities in the area?

"We get a good many swimmers here," the manager said; "but not here in the hotel."

Evidently, the swimmers who come to the hotel to swim don't come to the hotel after all. Try figuring that one out. Strike Two.

To make matters a little bit more confusing, the manager politely added: "No, we don't have any swimmers at the hotel." Okay – compare that last quote with the quote above it and figure it out for yourself.

To clarify matters, the manager added: "We don't have [water polo or diving] either. I don't think so at least." Strike Three.

Thankfully, the manager cleared up the issue of the pool by the end of the conversation.

"Our pool is open in the summer," he said.

It must be open for the swimmers who come to the hotel and for the swimmers who don't come to the hotel.

Obviously.

Archery

University of Texas student Brendan Beran is a very accomplished archer. In 1999, he was named the number one male archer in the country. Despite only starting three years ago, he has won bronze medals in San Diego and led his school to a third place finish in the world.

Beran recalls the match where his team beat Michigan St. "It was awesome. We won in a tiebreaker. We had the exact same score going into the tie breaker, and we won by one arrow."

Though Beran is an experienced archer, he said that he has never shot any animals with a bow. "I've been shooting with a gun though," he boasts. He can't shoot with his bow because he uses a recurve bow, and it's not exactly legal to tag a deer with one of those bad boys. Duh.

Beran is some sort of a renaissance man at the University of Texas. He has participated in Magic: The Gathering competitions that are called booster drives. His Magic days are behind him though. He stated, "Most people who go to those things are nerds."

In case anyone was wondering, he did mention that the feeling produced by winning a Magic: The Gathering tournament is nothing compared to winning a bronze medal in archery.

As if Magic and shooting aren't enough, Beran belongs a very elite club. The Longhorn Hell Raisers are a group of people who like to have fun. They don't actually "raise hell," like many of the satanic cults you've read about, but they go to sporting events and lead cheers.

There are three very simple rules to being in the Longhorn Hell Raisers: 1. You must be enrolled at the University of Texas. 2. You must not be a member of another social fraternity. 3. You must bleed orange! (Unfortunately the three people writing this column could not be hell raisers because we are not enrolled at UT and are all in other social fraternities). The Hell Raisers go to football, basketball and tennis matches. Tennis matches get very, very wild.

Eric Soderstrom, Ryan BenHarris and special guest Matthew Bencal are Collegian columnists.

COURTESY CNN.COM

Ostrich racing, though horrific in nature, is still popular in some sections of the county but cookin' 'ems better

Respect

How should we protect the rights of artists in a digital world? Get the online music debate from a different point-of-view.

ARTISTS AGAINST PIRACY

www.ArtistsAgainstPiracy.com

Planning for Winter Break?

Abt Associates in nearby Hadley is seeking reliable people with good verbal and typing skills to work as

RESEARCH INTERVIEWERS

